"The papers in this collection were presented at a symposium sponsored by the Conference on British Studies at the University of Delaware [in 1966. The] . . . theme is the lot of the ordinary individual in eighteenth-century society." (Publisher's note) Contributors are J. H. Plumb, Jacob Viner, G. R. Cragg, R. Wittkower, Paul H. Lang, and Bertrand Bronson. Index.

"In the best sense interdisciplinary, [this] comprises the views of six scholars . . . on widely varied aspects of the announced topic. J. H. Plumb of Cambridge on 'Political Man' and Jacob Viner . . . on 'Man's Economic Status' conclude from abundantly detailed contemporary evidence that despite flagrant abuses and injustices the average Englishman of the eighteenth century was at least better off than his counterparts on the Continent. . . . A summary of comments on the papers by other scholars attending the conference is provided by [the editor]. . . . This volume is surely required as well as pleasurable reading for anyone seriously interested in eighteenth-century England." R. B. Dooley

Sat R 51:29 J1 6 '68 280w

"[The contributors] raise a number of interesting historical questions. Professor Viner produces a dry and cautious estimate of the contemporary citizen's economic status. It contains some questionable, and some positively mistaken statements. . . . [Three other essays] consider the opportunities for self-expression through, respectively, the visual arts, music, and letters. The last of these . . . is mainly about the novel, and wanders pleasantly away into a discussion of the modern novel-reading public," with references to Saul Bellow, and Marshall McLuhan. Professor Wittkower confines himself almost entirely to painting, and so has little to say about the fields of architecture, interior design, china, and silver. . . . Professor Cragg's brief sketch of the place of the church in eighteenth-century life stands out for its lucidity and comprehensiveness."

TLS p1221 O 31 '68 900w

CLIFFORD, NICHOLAS R. Retreat from China: British policy in the Far East, 1937-1941 [Eng title: British policy in the Far East, 1937-1941]. 222p maps $7.50 Univ. of Wash. press

327.42 Great Britain—Foreign relations—East (Far East). East (Far East)—Foreign relations—Great Britain 67-12395

"Despite all British efforts, the U.S. refused to join in a consistent policy of opposition to Japanese expansionism [in the years preceding World War II.] And Britain in the 1930's did not have the military or naval resources in the Far East for independent action. Clifford has provided [an examination] . . . of the British problem . . . [based on] research in British and American sources." (Choice)

"Since the published memoirs and the published British records reveal little concerning British policy vis-à-vis China and Japan, Professor Clifford reconstructs British policy by a thoughtful analysis of the State Department's archives. Given this source, understandably his emphasis is on 'the role of Anglo-American relations,' and, ignoring Japanese sources, he explicitly excludes 'the making of Japanese policy' from this presentation. Within the restraints imposed by these considerations, [this book] is a judicious analysis of British travails and responses to Japan's China policy. . . . Assessments open to reservation include the contentions that the Chamberlain government displayed 'greater flexibility in dealing with the Orient than with Europe' and that Britain was 'even less ready to come to an understanding with the Soviet Union in the East than she was in Europe.' . . . These reservations aside, Clifford's central theme on Anglo-American relations is persuasive." J. B. Crowley

Am Hist R 73:1159 Ap '68 440w

"[The author's research] is meticulous and unobtrusive; his style felicitous. College libraries will want this book."

Choice 4:735 S '67 120w

"An account of British policy in respect of the Sino-Japanese conflict which is not likely to be superseded for a long time. [Clifford] writes lucidly and impartially, with a particularly clear impression of the difficulties with which British statesmen were faced, not only in the Far East, but in the world generally during these critical years. His assessment of the so-called appeasement policy is especially balanced and sensible." F. C. Jones

Engl Hist R 83:642 J1 '68 320w

CLINEBELL, HOWARD J. Understanding and counseling the alcoholic; through religion and psychology [by] Howard J. Clinebell, Jr. rev & enl ed 336p $5.95 Abingdon

616.86 Alcoholism

68-11710

This expanded version "of a book written . . . by a pastoral counselor . . . includes key developments occurring in the past decade and changes in Clinebell's approach to counseling with alcoholics and their families. One of the new chapters deals with the church's role in this area. The volume contains the findings of many studies. . . . The three parts deal with: (1) the problem of alcoholism which includes an understanding of the dynamics of the alcoholic; (2) specific different religions' approaches to alcoholism; and (3) the minister's approach. . . . This section includes the ethical side of the problem and the difficulties in counseling alcoholics." (Choice) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index. For the first edition see BRD 1957.

"The readable style and thorough coverage make the book suitable for lay or professional readers concerned with this problem."

Choice 5:1046 O '68 90w

"A new revision is welcomed! . . . Chapter 13, 'An Alcoholism Strategy for the Congregation' has been added. Brilliantly conceived, practicably focused, and readable, this chapter places the book again in the vanguard of those dealing with this subject. . . . [The author] has inserted a historical section summarizing some religious approaches to alcoholism—the Emmanuel Movement and Alcoholics Anonymous. . . . He outlines a minister's approach . . . giving techniques . . . involved in counseling alcoholics and their families. Mr. Clinebell understands alcoholics as individuals and uses a psychosocial therapeutic approach in his counseling and treatment. His book is of particular excellence. . . . Its usefulness is not limited to the ecclesiastic; [it] is serviceable to allied professions . . . to the informed layman and the general reader." P. W. Brouse

Library J 93:1647 Ap 15 '68 220w

CLINTON-BADDELEY, V. C. My foe outstretch'd beneath the tree. 192p $4.95 Morrow

68-25875

"R. H. Davie, a Cambridge professor and devotee of opera, comes upon a . . . situation in which a tape-recording of an English course and the murder of an ex-policeman seem to have little connection." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 28:210 Ag 15 '68 60w

Reviewed by A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk ■ p35 S 22 '68 90w

"The setting is England, and the atmosphere is the irresistible kind that makes us feel that other people enjoy themselves more than we do, and that it isn't fair. . . . Clues to the murder we are hoping for are already being strewn, although the doomed person, many miles away, suspects nothing, and is not even nervous, poor fool. . . . What a satisfactory tale of murder. Mr. Clinton-Baddeley, has given us, and with no effort, apparently,"

CLINTON-BADDELEY, V. C.—Continued

New Yorker 44:183 O 5 '68 380w

"[A] highly literate and lively venture into Academe," Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:44 S 28 '68 20w

"With its gastronomic appendix, this is essentially a story for those who look back with nostalgia to detective-fiction of the 1930s."

TLS p69 Ja 18 '68 70w

CLOUDSLEY-THOMPSON, J. L. Animal twilight; man and game in Eastern Africa. 204p il pl $6.95 Dufour

591 Wild life—Conservation. Hunting—Africa, East 67-20889

An "account of the past history and present condition of the wildlife of eastern and southern Africa, and a consideration of the job that will be required if this wildlife is to be maintained. . . . The necessity for conservation is described in terms of economics and ecology." (Natur Hist) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:643 J1 '68 170w

Economist 228:47 J1 6 '68 130w

"[The author] quotes copiously from other books, mostly old ones, to give all sides of the picture; he leaves the reader confused about the true situation. His main contribution seems to be the final chapter, in which he decides that African animals are not in danger of 'early extinction,' a vague conclusion. Some passages from other books are exciting but the overall effect is dulling, while footnotes and solid-type pages give the effect of a textbook. Many of the sketches are informative, but most of the photographs are merely average. The book is recommended for large reference collections; general circulation libraries should consider this only where books like [B. Grzimek's] Serengeti Shall Not Die [BRD 1961] are insufficient." C. P. May

Library J 93:2015 My 15 '68 130w

"[This book] deserves far more attention than it has yet received, perhaps because its glossy competitors look better on the coffee table. It is a well-balanced account. . . . [The] professor of zoology at the University of Khartoum in the Sudan draws on his scientific training, extensive field experience in Africa, and excellent ability as a writer to produce a volume that should be read by all who are interested in Africa. The review of historical sources about African wildlife is first-rate. . . . The analysis of the factors contributing to the decline of African game avoids the usual pitfalls, and takes into account the adaptable nature of the animals being considered." R. F. Dasmann

Natur Hist 77:66 Je '68 480w

CLOUGH, SHEPARD B. The economic basis of American civilization, by Shepard B. Clough and Theodore F. Marburg. 350p maps $8.95; pa $3.50 Crowell

330.973 U.S.—Economic conditions 67-23674

An amended and "up-dated version of Clough's American Way [BRD 1953]. . . . Major economic institutions are reviewed as is the quality of life made possible by our fantastic economic progress. . . . The roots of such progress are detailed and linked to six major elements (natural resource endowment, technology, 'saving and investment,' labor force, transportation and trade. . . . Clough and Marburg predict that America is on the threshold of achieving 'one of the greatest civilizations of all times.'" (Choice)

"[This book] retains both its descriptive strength and analytical weakness. . . . There is little effort to fit the American experience into a theory of economic growth. Throughout, the tone is optimistic. . . . Fifteen years separate the original from its revision, a time of tumultuous and profound change. Yet we read 'it can be said without danger of contradiction that Americans have managed to create a way of life in which they live in comparative harmony with one another.' . . . Notes, tables, and bibliography are highly recommended."

Choice 5:1008 O '68 170w

"[This edition] remains a workmanlike introduction to American economic history. Sophisticated undergraduates may regard the book as more of a polemic than a work of social science. Even though these two experts in history and economics have very carefully walked the fine line between objectivity and patriotism, their production has the imprimatur of the Establishment. They do not gloss over the basic American problems of racism, slums, maldistribution of income and so forth, but . . . [take the] position that democratic capitalism will eradicate or at least ameliorate all such evils. It is however, refreshing to read such an optimistic book in this too often pessimistic world. Recommended for high school and college collections." H. S. Camenson

Library J 92:4407 D 1 '67 160w

CLYMER, ELEANOR. The big pile of dirt; il. by Robert Shore. unp $3.95; lib bdg $3.59 Holt 67-19059

The author considers "the universal dilemma of slum children: no place to play. These children tried everything—roof, hall, street, stairs, but always some adult made them move on. When they discover a junk-filled vacant lot, all seems settled; they have someplace to go. However, the plot thickens when the mayor brings along some clean-up campaign ladies and promises to do something for those poor children. Soon a big pile of dirt is delivered to their makeshift playground, and for the kids this is a landfall indeed; they play for months undisturbed. When the lot is inevitably changed into a pocket park, no one is really sorry except the oldest child and narrator, Mike." (Library J) "Ages seven to eleven." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin

Book World p24 S 15 '68 170w

Reviewed by M. D. Hamlin

Christian Science Monitor pB7 N 7 '68 80w

"The author's sensitive understanding, apparent in My Brother Stevie [BRD 1967], shows through here in a more transparent story. And her fine ability for understatement occasionally falls into the special pitfall for this style of writing, it goes flat. Still, in pictures and story, this is an unusually perceptive rendering of the attitudes and problems of inner-city children and as such should be welcomed by all libraries." J. C. Thomson

Library J 93:3951 O 15 '68 170w

Reviewed by George Mendoza

N Y Times Bk R p20 Ag 4 '68 160w

"It's a simply told, almost wistful story that makes no issue of poverty but presents a milieu familiar to many urban children." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:43 Ag 24 '68 130w

COBBAN, ALFRED. Aspects of the French revolution. 328p $7.50 Braziller 944.04 France—History—Revolution, 1789-1799 68-24195

This collection of previously published essays and one new article consists of "ten studies in the substance of revolutionary history—the role of the Parlements in the ancien régime, local government during the Revolution, the political ideas of Robespierre, the role of the British secret service in France before 1792; and six on the historians of the Revolution and the ever-changing explanations of it they have produced." (New Statesman) Index.

Christian Century 85:1408 N 6 '68 60w

"The reader is treated to a hitherto unpublished paper concerned with the present state of revolutionary historiography. This paper will be of particular interest to specialists in the field because it contains Mr Cobban's reply to the critics of his Wiles lectures [published as] The Social Interpretation of the French Revolution [BRD 1965]. The articles in this book are well chosen for they include some of Professor Cobban's best known works. . . . The principal audience . . . will be scholars generally, specialists in the field; but it is also necessary reading for graduate students in history." Judah Adelson

Library J 93:3555 O 1 '68 170w

Reviewed by David Thomson

New Statesman 76:467 O 11 '68 750w

"In Cobban's miscellany are included a few pieces on specific episodes of the Revolutionary period, 'The Affair of the Diamond Necklace' . . . and 'The Beginning of the Channel Isles Correspondence, 1789-94.' But for the most part the articles are polemical—reconsiderations of the work of the great nineteenth-century historians of the Revolution, reviews of the contributions of Cobban's contemporaries. . . . The spectacle sometimes becomes quite bloody, and belies the collection's innocent title. . . . It all adds up to a good sampling of the life and works of Alfred Cobban, and will be read with enjoyment by those who relish his lively style and truculent assertions. Cobban [is] weakest when he [moves] into the area of intellectual history." Frank Manuel

Sat R 51:37 D 14 '68 1050w

COBBAN, ALFRED, ed. The correspondence of Edmund Burke, v6. See Burke, E.

COBBS, PRICE M., jt. auth. Black rage. See Grier, W. H.

COCTEAU, JEAN. My contemporaries; ed. and introd. by Margaret Crosland. 146p il $5.95 Chilton co.

920

68-31695

This volume contains personal reminiscences of Apollinaire, Radiguet, Proust, Gide, Modigliani, Picasso, Piaf, de Chirico, Colette and others.

"During 50 years of his life [Cocteau] wrote sketches, quite often succinct ones, concerned with the physical characteristics and personalities, intellects, and characters of creative people he knew . . . he called these writings portraits-souvenirs. . . . These charming pieces have all appeared elsewhere, principally as a series of articles for Le Figaro. They were later published as a book in France. This American edition is substantially a different book, since much of the original material is deleted and appropriate pieces from other works are included along with much helpful editorial comment. Recommended to libraries serving readers interested in the French cultural scene of the first half of the century." M. E. Kelley
Library J 93:3005 S 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by Claud Cockburn

New Statesman 73:721 My 26 '67 350w

"Miss Crosland's selection represents the more attractive, immediately approachable side of Cocteau's work. She has gathered together twenty portraits from a dozen or so of Cocteau's writings, giving his views on people as varied as Nijinsky and the Empress Eugénie, Pierre Loti and Charlie Chaplin. Everything is light, easy, and yet, for all that, penetrating. The showman, showing others, shows himself—and the image, after all, is surprisingly likable."

TLS p329 Ap 20 '67 70w

CODDINGTON, EDWIN B. The Gettysburg campaign; a study in command [maps by Samuel H. Bryant]. 866p il $15 Scribner

973.7 Gettysburg, Battle of, 1863 68-11538

A study of military strategy "beginning with Lee's decision to invade the North and ending with his ultimate and painful retreat to Virginia. In his . . . synthesis of the military events that took place from April through July 1863. Mr. Coddington interweaves his evaluations of the decisions and actions of the Confederate and Union commanders. . . . [He gives] considerable credit to General George Meade [the Union Commander] for the skill with which he handled his army after having command of it for only a few days before the battle began." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Using the usual published sources and extensive manuscript collections, the late Edwin Coddington, history professor at Lafayette College, has skillfully pieced together a long narrative. . . . The value of the book lies not in the story of the battle, which has been told many times, but in the evaluations. The book is recommended for large collections." John Buechler
Library J 93:1478 Ap 1 '68 230w

"[This] book demonstrates that assiduous endeavor can give freshness and flesh to even a familiar story. . . . [The author's] consideration of the state of the two armies is enlightening and relevant. Yet as Coddington continues his story, he sometimes forgets relevance. Bursting with knowledge about various facets of the war, he disgorges everything that he knows. Thus later we are treated to a description of arms procurement in both sections and of problems involved in loading a Civil War musket, important themes but not deserving of extended treatment in a book about Gettysburg. The wisdom of Coddington's deliberate approach is evident when he begins his account of the Gettysburg campaign itself. . . . His analysis of Hooker's psychology is excellent." T. H. Williams

N Y Times Bk R p8 J1 14 '68 1500w

COE, CHARLES. Young man in Vietnam. 109p $3.95 Four winds

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- 68-27270

"A veteran of the Marine Corps . . . [describes his] tour of duty in Vietnam." (Best Sell)

"The first-person style is sometimes monotonous, but as the book progresses the reader becomes accustomed to the style which seems to add to the simplicity of the tale. The war becomes more real, the suffering more intolerable, and doubts about the conflict keep growing. Abruptly the tour ends with the officer sustaining a wound, then the diary follows him to the day of his release from service. The book is not pleasant, but neither is war; young readers will understand this."

Best Sell 28:323 N 1 '68 100w [YA]

"Coe writes with disarming candor of his part in combating the swamp fire that is Vietnam. He is proud of the Marine Corps, its traditions and his having been a member of it. . . . The fear, the frustration, the anger, the sorrow, and the pain of the American fighting man in Vietnam appear clothed in a terse prose that has the greater impact because of the tempered, mature sensitivity of its author. All in all, this is a first-rate delineation of the tribulations of a civilian soldier." Richard Clark
Library J 93:3770 O 15 '68 120w

COE, RICHARD N. The vision of Jean Genet. 343p $7.50 Grove

848 Genêt, Jean

68-21998

"Intended neither as a biography nor as detailed analysis of any of the works, [this] is primarily a study of the symbols Genet uses in his novels and plays and of the development of [his] themes particularly as they have moved from the mystical and emotional towards the relatively socially oriented under the impact of Sartre's influence." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Thematic index.

"[This] is a useful supplement to [Jean Paul Sartre's Saint Genet: Actor and Martyr, BRD 1963] and Joseph McMahon's Imagination of Jean Genet [BRD 1964]. . . . [Mr. Coe] gives much attention to the imagery of veils and mirrors, the use of negative symbolism, and the dynamism of reversability and contradiction to create an art of warring antitheses, a vision of society based on 'Revolution' as 'a total concept.' This book is recommended for all but the smallest college and public library collections." Dorothy Curley
Library J 93:2872 Ag '68 150w

"One of these days . . . Genet critic is going to publish a book which does something more than rehash Genet's ideas and attitudes, one that actually shows me how the novels work as novels, the plays as plays, and I am going to understand what I have been missing all these years. [This] is not that book. Coe . . . is an obfuscator by trade, a man possessed by ideas, haunted by symbols, incapable of clarifying the one or illuminating the other. . . . The problem is that [he] is not really interested in the separate works. He treats them all as though they were part of a single work (The Vision of Jean Genet?) and jumbles quotations and references together as though the significance of a line or action lay outside its place in a particular novel or play. . . . He is repetitious and contradictory. His explanations are almost comically convoluted." Gerald Weales
New Repub 159:23 Ag 31 '68 2100w

"Genet is inevitably discussed in terms of existentialist dogma, and though this is often helpful, Sartre's brilliance can equally often be dazzlingly irrelevant. The best of Genet, I would argue, does not conform to any dialectic, however brilliantly constructed, and by imposing his, Sartre has muddled the critical water. Dr. Coe, for instance, though useful on Genet's symbolism, gets so excited arguing his highbrow philosophical case that he soars way above the text he fitfully illuminates. . . . [He ends] by giving an appearance of defensiveness, which is understandable enough, for Genet utterly rejects the values of the humanist tradition in which [Coe] teaches and writes." Julian Mitchell

COE, R. N.—Continued

New Statesman 75:622 My 10 '68 750w

"Dr. Coe's equation ('in the long run') between Christian humility and moral humiliation or degradation is highly questionable and seems to do justice to neither term. Furthermore, it is often difficult to follow his logic in anything other than its purely verbal formulation. . . . [He has not] adequately analysed the relationship between Genet's cult of evil and his strongly fascist political attitudes. . . . Despite objections of this kind, however, one must admire the revealing analyses and generous humanity that illuminate so many pages of Dr. Coe's book."

TLS p1026 S 12 '68 550w

COE, TUCKER. Murder among children. 177p $4.50 Random house

67-22674

Mitchell Tobin, "a tough ex-cop dismissed in disgrace from the New York City Police Force, . . . is persuaded by his wife to investigate on his own a gruesome multiple murder in Greenwich Village. He does so reluctantly, is warned away by the Police, has his own life threatened; but he relentlessly searches out clues to free the prime suspect, his young and pretty cousin [Robin], and to track down the real murderer." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 27:457 Mr 1 '68 80w

"Tobin's character is so well thought out that all of his actions and inactions are completely understandable; the others in the book are seen in equally sharp detail for shorter takes." Dick Adler

Book World p14 F 25 '68 170w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:99 Ja 1 '68 90w

"It's a strong story, in writing and plotting, with three special virtues: the portrait of Tobin; the vivid sketches of countless levels of Manhattan, from the Village to Harlem; and the pure abstract beauty of its construction as a whodunit-puzzle which deceived me completely." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p42 F 4 '68 280w

COGGINS, JACK. By star and compass: the story of navigation: written and ill. by Jack Coggins. 96p maps $3.50; lib bdg $3.23 Dodd

527 Navigation—Juvenile literature 67-22195

The author describes the growth of the art of sea navigation, "beginning with the primitive hunters and nomads through the development of printing and measuring devices and evolution of the sextant, to the present state of sea navigation which is mainly electronic in nature. [Index.] Grades six to eight." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. C. Waugh

Christian Science Monitor pB8 N 2 '67 50w

"Mr. Coggins tells an exciting story. . . . There is considerable material here for the more-than-casual scholar who wishes to explore the elemental mathematical aspects of the subject. Should the reader be adept with tools he can easily construct [the instruments illustrated]. . . . Mr. Coggins discusses compasses, maps, globes, the celestial sphere and knows how much to tell without laboring his subject." F. M. Branley

Library J 92:4620 D 15 '67 160w

"This book provides good answers to problems of navigation and measurement. From the tower of Pharos to radar and satellite control is a long haul. It is covered here in a style completely appropriate for youngsters."

TLS p1127 O 3 '68 70w

COGGINS, JACK. Hydrospace; frontier beneath the sea; written and ill. by Jack Coggins. 96p $3.50; lib bdg $3.23 Dodd

551.4 Oceanography—Research—Juvenile literature. Diving vehicles—Juvenile literature 65-27969

A survey of the past and prognosis of the future in underwater exploration and exploitation. Index. "Grades six to eight." (Library J)

"If the discussion is somewhat speculative and imaginative, it reflects our present state of knowledge. . . . A clear, not highly technical survey of projects, plans, and hopes." Norwood Long

Library J 91:3263 Je 15 '66 70w

"Diving bells, underwater television cameras, oil drilling, treasure hunting and new fishing processes are exciting themes, all sensibly depicted in a thoroughly recommendable book."

TLS p1164 N 30 '67 30w

COHEN, BERNARD L. The heart of the atom; the structure of the atomic nucleus. 107p $3.95; pa $1.25 Doubleday

539.7 Atoms. Nuclear physics 67-12871

The "director of the Scaife Nuclear Laboratories at the University of Pittsburgh analyzes the atomic nucleus. . . . In 13 chapters, he discusses the structure of the nucleus radiation, and nuclear reactions." (Library J) Index.

"Part of a series aimed, in large part, at a high school student audience. The approach is nonmathematical and only several reaction equations appear. Coverage is balanced, and many of the standard topics are treated. . . . The book suffers, to some extent, from an uneven level of presentation. It begins with the statement that the nucleus consists of neutrons and protons, but then does not find it necessary to explain why 'a statement of the four quantum numbers for an orbit gives its complete description.' However, . . . many ideas are treated in such a way as to communicate insight to the reader."

Choice 5:376 My '68 200w

"For the scientist and the informed layman. . . . This informative book is recommended for public and college libraries." G. L. Bleckman

Library J 92:3431 O 1 '67 100w

COHEN, DANIEL. Myths of the space age. 278p il $5.95 Dodd

133 Supernatural. Errors 67-25108

Some of "the 'myths' under consideration are the current astrology explosion; ESP, spiritualists and prophets of things and events to come; the flying saucer controversy; Velikovsky and worlds in collision; . . . beasts like the Loch Ness monster and the Abominable Snowman; and finally the evidences of pre-Columbian discoveries of America." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Cohen, an experienced science writer and editor, has written an entertaining résumé of some of the curious cults, fads, and lunacies . . . that tag along on the outskirts of science. The title is somewhat misleading, however, since Cohen chose to discuss the Viking versus Columbus dispute, includes some frauds, and brings in prespace age materials as well."

Choice 5:804 S '68 110w

"People are not scientific: this is the thesis advanced by Mr. Cohen, who backs it up. . . . In the brief bibliography he mixes the genuine references with the most nutty ones. [The author,] editor of a New York science magazine, admits that perhaps not all of these fields are equally 'mythical' (what he means is, that they are not equally untrue), but he has fun demolishing all. This is a quite sketchy treatment, and each of the topics has been better and more completely covered before." R. S. Potts

Library J 92:2594 J1 '67 110w

Reviewed by Colin Clark

Library J 92:4638 D 15 '67 90w [YA]

COHEN, JEROME ALAN. The criminal process in the People's Republic of China, 1949-1963; an introduction. 706p $15 Harvard univ. press

343 Law—China (People's Republic of China). Criminal law 68-14252

The first part of the book "is an introductory essay that provides an overview of the evolution and operation of the criminal process from 1949 through 1963. The second part, which constitutes the bulk of the book, . . . [presents] relevant excerpts from legal documents such as the Constitution, statutes, and other rules and regulations of the People's Republic; from official policy statements; . . . and from articles in Chinese law reviews, academic and popular journals and . . . newspapers . . . [There are also] written and oral accounts of persons who have lived or visited the People's Republic." (Pref) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"[Cohen] has excellent credentials for preparing this indispensable, albeit introductory study. . . . While the principal focus is the criminal process, the work has important implications for such larger questions as the nature of Chinese attitudes toward law, the relationship between traditional and contemporary attitudes toward law, and the role of law in Chinese Communist politics. The book can best be used by students of comparative law but it should be included in any basic library on Communist China. . . . The documents are effectively organized so that the issues they raise are clearly defined."

Choice 5:1037 O '68 180w

"[A] meticulously researched and highly intelligent discussion and analysis. . . . [The book focuses] on the patterns of action and interaction among the individual, the police, the procuracy, the courts, and the Communist party. . . . [It deals] with behavior at the operational level. . . . [It] does not explicitly set forth the comparative perspectives necessary to understand the Chinese criminal process relative to the criminal process in other countries. . . . [Specialists] will see the inferences to be drawn from the essay's many subtle descriptions. The nonspecialist, I fear, will tend as before to understand the American and Chinese systems as a dichotomy only slightly more refined than that of good and evil." R. M. Pfeffer

World Pol 21:152 O '68 7050w

COHEN, JERRY, jr. auth. The pied piper of Tucson. See Moser, D.

COHEN, KALMAN J., ed. Analytical methods in banking; ed. by Kalman J. Cohen and Frederick S. Hammer. 599p il $12.50 Irwin
332.1 Banks and banking 66-11816

"A collection of readings which apply an operations research approach to management problems in commercial banking and finance. The articles . . . deal with analytical methods for evaluating loan applications, managing bank assets, improving the efficiency of bank operations and portfolio selection. . . . [Some] of the articles have been published previously in various professional journals." (Choice)

"The three sections on trust department and bond department operations and 'Other Banking Problems' contain a substantial amount of material of relevance primarily to the large diversified metropolitan bank. . . . Notable contributions include Crane's simulation model of corporate demand deposits and Benson's study of economies of scale and marginal costs in banking, the latter being exclusively concerned with small banks. . . . At times, the book has overtones of a revolutionist's handbook. This is particularly true in those portions devoted to the trust investment function. . . . Michener and Peterson provide a well-reasoned and effective strategy for deciding on the optimal pursuit duration for collection of defaulted loans. . . . Eyerly demonstrates how Monte Carlo methods can improve scheduling of tellers. In each case the problem is of limited scope, and is well defined and constrained. . . . Cohen and Hammer have provided a very useful service in gathering together a wide variety of material relevant to bank management. . . . at the academic rather than the practical bank operating level." G. R. Morrison

Am Econ R 57:1369 D '67 1400w

"[These articles] frequently assume that the reader is familiar with linear algebra and elementary calculus. Editorial comments preceding and following each article provide an excellent introduction to and evaluation of its contribution. . . . Because of its unique emphasis on recent applications of analytical techniques to commercial banking, the book should provide a useful and frequently cited reference for advanced courses in banking and finance."

Choice 4:455 Je '67 130w

COHEN, LEONARD. Selected poems, 1956-1968. 245p $5; pa $1.95 Viking

811

68-22317

Some of these poems by the author of Beautiful Losers (BRD 1966) first appeared in Queen's Quarterly, Saturday Review, Tamarack Review, and other publications. Others have been selected from previously published volumes. Index of first lines.

Reviewed by Chad Walsh
Book World p4 J1 28 '68 290w

"Leonard Cohen, the Montreal poet, goes on from triumph to triumph. . . . [He] is a poet for all seasons and all readers—listeners, too, ■ it turns out. . . . Mr. Cohen demonstrates how wide ranging and impressive his talents are. He speaks with flowing and vaguely old-fashioned eloquence about such things as love, rebellion, suffering and joy; but always the wry smile appears—the twist in sense and feeling—that places the man—zap—right in the middle of the present day. . . . He is enthralled with ordinariness; and in this, despite a barely manageable struggle with post-romantic tendencies he is thoroughly up to date. It is scarcely a wonder, under the circumstances, that he has taken to the strumming of a guitar. Mr. Cohen can clearly expect further triumphs. His book is recommended for every poetry shelf." Peter Gellatly

Library J 93:2663 J1 '68 300w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 93:4741 D 15 '68 80w [YA]

"In these poems, Cohen is the troubled free spirit, worrying the burden of the past and uncomfortable in the mechanized present. He prowls through the blasted stumps of tradition looking for signs of regeneration but not really expecting to find them. . . . Although [this book] contains seductive lyrics and passionate lines praising 'the eternal moment,' Cohen finds his most authentic voice in anxiety and bitterness. . . . To hear Cohen at full throat, however, one must look elsewhere. . . . Beautiful Losers is his best attempt to fan his dark obsessions into a revelatory flame of pure personal style."

Time 92:100 S 13 '68 700w

COHEN, MARVIN. The self-devoted friend. 159p $5 New directions

67-30102

This fictive piece "takes the form of a series of episodes and asides strung . . . on the thread of the omnipresent 'friend'; and in these brief, flashing shreds and patches, Mr. Cohen contrives to hold a mirror up to the common lot of the common man, whether in that timeless, unresolvable conflict between disparate demands of mind, body and spirit, or in his modern confrontations with money, sex, art, psychoanalysis and the like." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Cohen's first novel, or anti-novel, is—or may be—a kind of wayout view of the passage of life, from amoeba to annihilation. . . . The narrative is built up of complex layers of word play, puns, clichés double-talk, non sequiturs, considerable quantities of wit and humor, and a not inconsiderable amount of chaff. . . . The only framework discernable in the novel is that its beginning coincides with 'My Friend's' birth, its end with his death. One fears that the book may have as much sequence and connected meaning as much of our modern life. An interesting experimental novel about which critical opinion is bound to be mixed." L. W. Griffin

Library J 93:1018 Mr 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by B. S. Johnson

New Statesman 74:685 N 17 '67 230w

"It is rare these days . . . to come across a work that not only reveals ■ striking, fresh talent, but stands outside current literary preoccupations. What Mr. Cohen has is his own: a joy in language, and an eye, at once innocent and shrewd, for the paradoxes inherent in the human condition. He puts both language and people through their paces . . . in what amounts to a tour de force of serio-comedy. . . . The book can be considered a novel only in the sense that it is fictive and that, as it draws to its close . . . the truth emerges that 'friend' and narrator are the double image of a single being." A. S. Morris

N Y Times Bk R p35 My 19 '68 850w

New Yorker 44:174 My 11 '68 110w

"Only a prolonged period of abstinence from all wit and humour of any kind at all could permit one to regard this as a comic novel. [It] is a long and unrelieved pseudo-comic dialogue between the narrator and his 'friend,' the friend being (of course) an ambiguous alterego. [A] flip pretentiousness . . . is typical." TLS p1053 N 9 '67 160w

COHEN, ROBERT. The color of man; with an afterword by Juan Comas; il. by Ken Heyman. 109p lib bdg $3.95 Random house

572 Color of man—Juvenile literature

68-10351

The author explains skin color, describing genetic inheritance and the variations in pigmentation. He discusses theories about the development of lighter or darker skinned peoples and differences in hair and eye color, the factors of migration, mutation, and social selection. A final section considers the problems of color prejudice and discrimination. The many photographs of peoples the world over are identified at the close of the book." (Sat R) Index. "Grades six to nine." (Library J)

COHEN, ROBERT—Continued

Best Sell 28:63 My 1 '68 190w [YA]

Reviewed by Robert Coles

Book World p30 (children's issue) My 5 '68 246w

"A low-keyed essay on skin pigmentation. . . . The superb photographs reinforce and amplify the excellent text. Even small children will enjoy the pictures and absorb some of their wisdom. The essay itself is thoughtful, matter-of-fact, wonderfully calm." M. L. Birmingham Commonweal 88:308 My 24 '68 60w

"There is no other book similar to this presently available for junior high readers. [It] will be an important addition to any library." Lois Ruby

Library J 93:2545 Je 15 '68 150w

"[This] is a welcome introduction to the question of color for parents, teachers, librarians—and even the adolescents who are its ostensible audience. In a matter-of-fact and easily comprehended manner, Mr. Cohen has distilled some of the theories of anthropology, biology, psychology and sociology to explain why people have different colored skin, hair and eyes—and why these differences are the basis of so much passionate discussion and debate. . . . In limiting his book to superficial yet significant questions of color, Mr. Cohen avoids pitfalls that have periled far more expert analysts. Ken Heyman's carefully chosen photographs subtly reinforce the author's strong conviction that human similarities are far more important than superficial differences. . . . Anthropologist Juan Comas focuses sharply on the dangers of prejudice, a theme which flickers fitfully through the text without wholly illuminating it." Gloria Levitas

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p5 My 5 '68 700w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:41 My 11 '68 90w [YA]

COHEN, RONALD, ed. Comparative political systems; studies in the politics of pre-industrial societies, ed. by Ronald Cohen and John Middleton; pub. for the Am. museum of natural history. 512p $6.95; pa $2.50 Natural hist. press

320.3 Political science. Society, Primitive 67-10406

"This anthology brings together both the classic and recent anthropological work on the politics of non-Westernized political systems, such as hunting and gathering societies, uncivilized societies such as villages, and state societies; and there is a strong emphasis on changing political systems." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. Some of these twenty reprinted items have appeared in such publications as American Anthropologist, Africa and American Sociological Review.

"The range of authors and of group complexity is greater than that of [this collection's] few rivals, but still almost half of the articles are concerned with African peoples; the same bias to be found in virtually all such readers. Cohen and Middleton have provided a useful introduction on the several approaches to the analysis of political activities. They might well have extended their efforts to include brief statements on the significance of the individual selections which would have been especially valuable to the casual reader. For librarians, [this] will be most useful in protecting journal sets from the depredations of a mass readership and supplying materials . . . not found in a small collection." Choice 5:128 Mr '68 150w

"The pieces vary greatly in quality, but the general reader will find most of them interesting and informative. For advanced students." R. B. Schachman

Library J 92:2662 J1 '67 50w

COHN, ANGELO. The wonderful world of paper. 141p il $4 Abelard-Schuman

676 Paper making and trade—Juvenile literature 67-23557

"The history of papermaking is discussed briefly. Then readers are given directions for producing a sheet of paper—an operation which can be performed in the kitchen. Following this practical demonstration of basic method comes a discussion of modern production methods. . . . Possible future uses of paper are also covered. The opportunities for careers and educational opportunities in the paper industry are surveyed. . . . Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

Reviewed by Pat Boozer

Best Sell 27:465 Mr 1 '68 60w [YA]

"An exciting account of an industry which promises to affect man's future in many ways. Ample illustrations enhance the text. . . . The author's enthusiasm is contagious and the book contributes much new material to the fund of information now in young peoples libraries on this subject." E. P. Hawley

Library J 93:2736 J1 '68 120w

COHN, ROY. McCarthy. 292p il $5.95 New Am. lib.

B or 92 McCarthy, Joseph Raymond. Governmental investigations 68-23035

This biography "gives the late Senator Joseph McCarthy's background in . . . 3 of the 20 chapters. . . . [The author] is concerned with the special Senate investigation into charges and countercharges involving himself, Robert Stevens, John Adams, H. Struve Hensel, Frank Carr, Joseph Welch, Stuart Symington, and Everett Dirksen. . . . Cohn, one-time chief counsel for McCarthy's Senate investigating sub-committee . . . tells this story based on personal recollections, tape recordings, and official transcripts." (Library J) Index.

"If you liked Roy Cohn on TV during the Army-McCarthy hearings, you will love him in print. . . . The wit in this book is Cohn's wit as we observed it on TV and in the press 14 years ago, the logic is his logic, the perceptions and judgments are his. . . . His defense of McCarthy will not change anybody's opinion of the Senator, not only because it is merely an unsipped rehash of history but because Cohn does not understand the art of literary persuasion. He does not give us any new insights into McCarthy's personality. . . . Cohn was a young man of twenty-seven when all this happened. But when that man reaffirms those follies in his maturity we are permitted to make a judgment on his character. In this book Cohn shows the same contempt for our intelligence that he did 14 years ago." Mario Puzo

Book World p5 Je 2 '68 850w

"[The author] admits his book is neither definitive nor comprehensive. [Cohn] is eminently qualified to tell this story. . . . Various little known behind-the-scenes aspects of the hearing are revealed, but because of Mr. Cohn's lack of objectivity his book is given only a qualified recommendation." W. C. Klessel

Library J 93:2232 Je 1 '68 160w

Reviewed by Isidore Silver

New Repub 159:36 J1 6 '68 700w

"[This] is dramatic, fast-paced—and, where it isn't full of holes, informative. Its motive may have been self-serving but I prefer to think it was a labor of love. Roy Cohn loved Joe McCarthy in the mildly patronizing way that a gifted child loves a bumbling but well-meaning parent. . . . It is a help in assessing Mr. Cohn's memoir to have at one's elbow for checking and cross-reference (as this reviewer did) such corollary works as 'Days of Shame' by Senator C. E. Potter [BRD 1965], a Republican member of McCarthy's committee; 'Senator Joe McCarthy' by R. H. Rovere [BRD 1960]; . . . and the chapters on McCarthy in such books as R. Donovan's 'Eisenhower' [BRD 1956] and this writer's 'The Truman Presidency' [BRD 1966]. They point up some astonishing contradictions and omissions, factual as well as interpretive, in Mr. Cohn's account." Cabell Phillips

N Y Times Bk R p7 J1 7 '68 1500w

Reviewed by F. Y. Blumenfeld

Newsweek 71:96 Je 17 '68 600w

"[This] is a fuller version of an article that ran in Esquire a few months ago. . . . Cohn's book is an advocate's plea for both attorney and client. He does not testify against himself; that might be self-incriminating. Mr. Cohn's view of McCarthy begins and ends with the assumption that the demagogue was a great guy and a great American despite occasional excess." Herbert Mitgang

Sat R 51:35 Je 15 '68 650w

COLAIANNI, JAMES. The Catholic left; the crisis of radicalism within the church; introd. by Donald J. Thorman. 232p $5.95 Chilton co.

282.73 Catholic Church in the U.S. Church renewal 68-29313

The author does not attempt to define the Catholic Left, "he simply presents it—holds it up to view. Much of the material he has drawn from the National Catholic Reporter (NCR), the voice of the Catholic Left. The last section of the book contains selections from the NCR, gathered into general subject areas including race relations, marriage and birth control, academic freedom, ecumenism, and liturgy." (Library J)

"[The author's] style is a bit jumpy and his tone a bit high-pitched. But an aw-come-on introduction by Donald J. Thorman puts Colaianni's observations in perspective, and anyone who doubts that Catholic aggiornamento is deep and wide will be informed and jolted by this book."

Christian Century 85:921 J1 17 '68 70w

"The Left that interests James Colaianni does not find expression in the 'modernizer,' who never really gets to the radical questions contenting himself instead with up-dating useless baggage from the past, with putting a new coat of paint over the old. The major concern of this book is more radical: it is with the underlying pathology of institution. For Colaianni, the Church is of course not merely the institution we have too closely identified with it. Rather, it is 'a community of persons living in an incarnational world, graced by the presence of God.' That is to say, it is the whole human race. This, however, does not exclude an interest in the institution, which still has tremendous influence." Mary Daly

Commonweal 89:222 N 8 '68 700w

"[The former Ramparts magazine editor,] long associated with the 'Catholic Left,' presents a montage of its writings on race, war, papal social encyclicals, authority and honesty in the church, Catholic schools and seminaries, and many other subjects. The index makes this volume especially useful as a source of 'Catholic Left' statements and concerns." Richard Walz

Library J 93:2991 S 1 '68 170w

COLAIANNI, JAMES F., ed. Married priests & married nuns; ed. and with an introd. by James F. Colaianni. (Ramparts bk) 230p $6.95 McGraw

253 Catholic Church. Celibacy. Monasticism and religious orders 67-26169

"It is the purpose of this book to provide a selected cross-section of clerical opinion on the question of [celibacy]. The contributors . . . range from an English archbishop to a priest-missionary in Peru. Included are the personal experiences of several married priests . . . and a treatment of other causes of the priest-shortage that threatens the Church; inadequacies in seminary education, extreme authoritarianism, . . . absence of grievance procedures, summary disciplinary action with no right of appeal, and the like." (Intro)

"For one like myself whose church resolved the celibacy question in the 16th century ('Marry if it serves better to godliness') and is still in trouble, this book seems peculiarly irrelevant. . . . It is hard to determine whether the root problem [of the contributors] was really celibacy or any of a multitude of other frustrations—chief among these being the use or misuse of authority and the over-sheltered education provided by seminaries and convents. All kinds of disillusionments are recounted, most of which would be normal for any young idealist who belatedly came into contact with the seamy side of life. Whether their pains would have been lessened by having a fellow sufferer in the form of a wife or a husband remains problematic." W. B. Carper

Christian Century 85:1476 N 20 '68 500w

"[This collection is] a strongly directed presentation of a positive case for the acceptance of married clergy. No opposing views are included, but the plea for understanding and the evaluation of the Roman Catholic Church's present position on the matter are offered in a clear and convincing manner. The case histories evoke a sympathy that might not have been felt in a strictly expository work; only the squeamish may find the intensely personal letters and experiences distasteful. The book is recommended for libraries with a large circulation in books on current religious controversy." Elizabeth Nelson

Library J 93:2663 J1 '68 120w

"The importance of the book is that it fills in the human background of the problem. . . . All kinds of emotions are frankly laid bare. . . . Probably many people will read this book for its more sensational passages, but it deserves to be read above all for bringing the problem of celibacy into the open. . . . Actually when the writers of this book try to rationalize their attitudes theologically, they show some confusion. . . . There are no quick solutions [to the problem of celibacy], and no solutions that will be universally acceptable. There will need to be much hard and honest thinking. Those who undertake this thinking will not be able to ignore the human factors set forth so candidly here." John MacQuarrie

N Y Times Bk R p63 S 29 '68 700w

COLBERT, EDWIN H. Men and dinosaurs; the search in field and laboratory. 283p il pl maps $8.95 Dutton

568 Dinosaurs. Fossils 68-12457

The author is curator of vertebrate paleontology at the American Museum of Natural History. "The subject is treated from the work of Mantell and Buckland in England in the 1820's to the Mongolian-Polish Expedition of 1964. The famous explorations in western North America, the important work in 19th-century Europe, the Tendaguru excavations in German East Africa, and the Central Asiatic Expeditions of the American Museum of Natural History all receive [attention]." (Science) Bibliography. Index.

"Colbert with great delight gives us the characters of the discoverers. . . . The illustrations are excellent and include anatomical drawings, portraits and caricatures, photos and sketches and primitive water colors (by American frontier diggers) of famous dinosaur digs. Any literate fool can enjoy the book and an earnest reader can learn lots about dinosaurs from it." H. C. Gardner

N Y Times Bk R p33 N 24 '68 310w

"A complete and balanced treatment which fills a scientific need in its field and makes fascinating reading far beyond the confines of paleontology. . . . [This] is a book of science as well as a book of history. In presenting the history of the ideas about dinosaurs the author has necessarily provided us with the information that guided earlier and present workers. The reader, whether a paleontologist or not, is led painlessly through a considerable quantity of technical data about the morphology, classification and paleoecology of dinosaurs. The only salient omission from the book is a discussion of the important contributions of the author himself." W. H. Wheeler

Science 161:348 J1 26 '68 300w

COLBY, ROBERT A. Fiction with a purpose; major and minor nineteenth century novels. 376p $9.50 Ind. univ. press

823 English fiction—History and criticism 67-13019

The author examines seven novels published between 1814 and 1872 in their sociocultural context: Waverley; Mansfield Park; Oliver Twist; Pevernells; Villette; The Mill on the Floss; and Middlemarch. "Each chapter contains a list of novels, now virtually unknown, that were more popular and had better reviews than the work which survived to represent 19th Century fiction. Professor Colby also discusses the social reforms, diminution of national characteristics, and female education as popular themes of the period." (Library J) Index.

"Though this admirable book is not a systematic history of the 19th-century novel, or a critical reevaluation . . . or an intense examination of temporally related novels, it is judicious, learned, and pleasantly written. The general reader (i.e. the undergraduate) will find it informative; the specialist, intermittently useful."

Choice 4:1238 Ja '68 140w

Reviewed by E. F. Waterman

Library J 92:1933 My 15 '67 110w

"Although Mr. Colby has clearly read widely in long-neglected authors and is able to make some interesting references, his control over his material is insufficiently rigorous; too often the illustrative accumulation of parallel cases is not pressed home to the point at which a proposition might be clearly proved. The study of a literary culture is more complex than he seems to realize. . . . [Although] ambitious in scope, [this] remains disappointing in performance. It may persuade us that it is worth trying to look at some nineteenth-century novels with the eyes of their contemporaries, but it can only offer us sketchy indications of what such a perspective might reveal."

COLBY, ROBERT—Continued

TLS p922 Ag 29 '68 600w

COLE, ALLAN BURNETT. Socialist parties in postwar Japan, by Allan B. Cole, George O. Totten [and] Cecil H. Uyehara, with a contributed chapter by Ronald P. Dore. 490p il $12.50 Yale univ. press

952 Socialism—Japan. Japan—Politics and government 66-21511

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by A. W. Burks
Am Pol Sci R 62:277 Mr '68 450w

Reviewed by D. C. S. Sissons
Pacific Affairs 41:102 spring '68 550w

Reviewed by Yasumasa Kuroda
Pol Sci Q 83:496 S '68 250w

COLE, ERNEST. House of bondage, by Ernest Cole with Thomas Flaherty; introd. by Joseph Lelyveld. 187p il $10 Random house; Ridge press, inc.

301.451 Africa, South—Race relations. Africa, South—Social conditions 67-21147

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Regina Minudri
Library J 93:895 F 15 '68 50w

Reviewed by David Lytton
New Statesman 75:620 My 10 '68 100w
TLS p366 Ap 11 '68 50w

COLE, HUBERT. Christophe: king of Haiti. 307p pl maps $6.50 Viking

B or 92 Christophe, Henri, King of Haiti. Haiti 67-13501

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman
America 118:617 My 4 '68 70w
Choice 4:1436 F '68 200w

Reviewed by Orlando Patterson
New Statesman 76:304 Mr 8 '68 300w

COLE, MARION, ed. Fogie: the life of Elsie Fogerty C.B.E.; comp. and ed. by one of her students from scraps of her memoirs and many other contributions from people who knew her. 229p $8.50 Hillary house

B or 92 Fogerty, Elsie 67-109098

A "portrait, by a former 'Fogie' student, of the famous British teacher of stage speech [who] . . . taught such luminaries as Olivier, Gielgud, Edith Evans, and Sybil Thorndike, and claimed ■ friends Bernard Shaw and John Masefield. Chronological and biographical in nature, this book is ■ series of glimpses, testimonies, and recollections of this [speech teacher who] . . . was one of the very first to practice systematically speech therapy [and] whose continued efforts helped to achieve the creation of the British National Theatre." (Choice) Index.

"A well put together portrait. . . . Recommended in particular to students of English theater."

Choice 5:642 J1 '68 120w

Reviewed by Arthur Marshall
New Statesman 74:782 D 1 '67 360w

"This extraordinary woman founded and dominated throughout her life The Central School of Speech Training and Dramatic Art. . . . Marion Cole's book is more of a memorial service than a memoir. It is skilfully put together from an unfinished autobiography left by Miss Fogerty and a number of tributes from those who knew her. Showered with girlish exclamation marks and quotations from Bin-yon, Masefield, Flecker and Sassoon, it is as defiantly of its period as those gas-lit rooms in the Albert Hall where the Central School began."

TLS p1186 D 7 '67 400w

COLE, THOMAS. Democritus and the sources of Greek anthropology; pub. for the Am. philological association. 225p $6.50 Western reserve univ. press

184 Democritus. Anthropology 67-26206

A study of Greek thought concerning man's origin and early history. Accounts of a theory "of cultural origins appear in widely scattered Greek and Latin authors. Professor Cole analyzes these accounts so as to show the . . . system of anthropological speculation which lies behind them. He then reaffirms the thesis that Democritus was the central figure in the creation of this system of thought. . . . [He includes] thinkers and texts, insofar as they are related to this Democritean theory of the progressive natural development of human culture: e.g., Plato, Polybius, Epicurus, Lucretius, Diodorus, Posidonius." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:540 Je '68 90w

"With erudition and close reasoning, Cole traces the peregrinations of this theory through the fourth century and later Hellenistic schools. . . . [He] successfully vindicates (and expands) Reinhardt's views of a Democritean Kulturgeschichte. Cole's use of Laws III and Epinomis to establish a fourth-century terminus ante is convincing. Especially interesting too are his treatment of the origins of language. . . . Though Cole confines his argument largely to specific texts, the range and implications of the material are great. The richly unraveled genealogies of this Kulturgeschichte, though necessarily conjectural and tenuous in places, are interestingly documented and cogently argued. The comparison of subtly different texts and attitudes hardly makes for easy reading; but no student of ancient theories of cultural origins can afford to neglect this scholarly book." Charles Segal

Class World 61:360 Ap '68 310w

"The scheme to which Professor Cole has devoted his book starts with the assumption that the earliest men were nomadic food-gatherers. . . . The first step forward came when men learned to take shelter and store food; the next stage encompassed the invention of houses, clothing, fire . . . [and] the growth of useful arts. . . . Finally came the 'nonessential arts,' astronomy, music, and writing. Cole believes that the scheme, in its basic outlines, was the creation of the fifth-century BC philosopher Democritus of Abdera. The suggestion is not a new one, but no one before has argued it with such care, learning, and conviction (and with no concession whatever to the Greekless non-specialist reader)." M. I. Finley

N Y Rev of Books 10:36 Je 20 '68 1150w

COLE, WENDELL. Kyoto in the Momoyama period. 166p $2.75 Univ. of Okla. press

952 Japan—History 67-15536

A professor at Stanford University "outlines the beginnings of the city and then discusses political, physical, religious, social, and artistic life during the last three decades of the 16th Century and first decade of the 17th Century." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Not for the specialist, the work is a modest, attractive, and inexpensive little book aimed at a general audience. It would appear that Cole used largely English language sources. . . . The book comes off well and should please the casual reader who has some interest in Japan. . . . [However] one map seems insufficient."

Choice 5:110 Mr '68 110w

"During the Momoyama the country was united through the efforts of Nobunaga, Hideyoshi, and Ieyasu. The arts prospered under the patronage of the new leaders, and developments in painting, drama, and architecture form an important part of the story. This well-written and well-designed book is recommended for public and academic libraries." C. W. Stucki

Library J 92:3996 N 1 '67 130w

COLE, WILLIAM, comp. A case of the giggles; with pictures by Tomi Ungerer. 2v unpag. $3.95 World pub.

817 Wit and humor—Juvenile literature 67-15220

"In a little slipcase, these two volumes offer samplings of four kinds of verbal fun (rhyme giggles, nonsense giggles, limerick giggles, and joke giggles)." (Horn Bk) "Grades three to five." (Library J)

"The ludicrous pictures amplify the preposterous elements in rhymes that are mainly traditional, with a sprinkling from Cole himself and from such other well-known versifiers of today as William Jay Smith, Ian Serrailier, and Shel Silverstein." V. H.

Horn Bk 43:741 D '67 60w

"The selections include both old chestnuts and originals, and, for adults who feel broad juvenile humor is no laughing matter, they are more likely to produce groans than giggles. Ungerer's satirical cartoons make excellent company for Cole's wisecracks, but the end product is more of a gift item, with miniature format and limited content, than the partner's Oh What Nonsense! [BRD 1966], which is more suitable for libraries." Elinor Cullen

Library J 92:3847 O 15 '67 90w

COLE, WILLIAM, comp. D. H. Lawrence: poems selected for young people. See Lawrence, D. H.

COLE, WILLIAM, ed. Eight lines and under; an anthology of short, short poems. 164p $3.95 Macmillan (N Y)

808.81 Poetry—Collections 67-19673

This anthology of verses by American, English and European poets is divided into eleven sections that are grouped by subjects such as love, animals, nature, women, wit, wisdom, death and other topics. Index of poets and titles.

"This is an attractive anthology, full of fresh discoveries. They are not all great but they are well worth knowing, as, for instance, the lines of Leonard Cohen, J. V. Cunningham, Frances Cornford and Andrew Young. . . . A fine anthology for both adult and YA collections." G. D. McDonald

Library J 92:2582 J1 '67 150w [YA]

"[This collection] charmingly arranged and selected with faultless taste, is bound to bring pleasure to everyone; the selections crackle and sparkle. Morgenstern, MacDiarmid, and Brecht show up in it; in fact, the majority of the poets included are contemporaries, the short poem having proved itself to be 'a particularly twentieth-century form.' With this little volume, about five by seven, more than two hundred and fifty poems from the sixteenth century on can easily be slipped into a pocket, and should be." Louise Bogan

New Yorker 43:136 Mr 30 '68 90w

COLE, WILLIAM, comp. Man's funniest friend; the dog in stories, reminiscences, poems and cartoons; sel. and ed. by William Cole. 237p il $5.95; lib bdg $5.28 World pub.

636.7 Dogs—Stories 67-23352

"Prose, poetry and cartoons about dogs, a little of everything from Perelman to Thurber to Nash, from Briggs to Syverson." (N Y Times Bk R) "Grade five and up." (Library J)

Horn Bk 44:185 Ap '68 140w

"[The editor] believes that dogs have a sense of humor. The choices prove his point, even for those who are not dog lovers, and illustrate the close bonds of affection and understanding between dog and owner. Almost all of the most noted modern humorists are represented. . . . A very funny and unusual addition to dog literature, this is especially recommended for use with both slow and reluctant readers." Terry Myers

Library J 92:4620 D 15 '67 80w

"[An] all-ages book. . . . It isn't all uproarious, despite the title, but neither are dogs." Hal Borland

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p6 N 5 '67 40w [YA]

COLE, WILLIAM, ed. The sea, ships and sailors; poems, songs and shanties; with drawings by Robin Jacques. 236p $4.95; lib bdg $4.53 Viking

$21.08 Sea poetry. English poetry—Collections. American poetry—Collections. Sea songs 67-24856

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Horn Bk 44:186 Ap '68 110w

Reviewed by Lenore Rosenthal

Library J 93:302 Ja 15 '68 70w

TLS p1368 D 5 '68 70w

COLE, WILLIAM E. Steel and economic growth in Mexico. 173p $6 Univ. of Tex. press 338.1 Steel industry and trade, Mexico—Industries, Mexico—Economic conditions 67-19285

The purpose of this study is "to present an industry study of iron and steel in Mexico and . . . to make some attempts to assess the impact of that industry upon some other sectors of the economy. Concomitant with both of these themes will be an analysis of the role of the Mexican government in promoting and regulating the steel industry. This will entail a description of Mexico's policy of infant industry protection and import substitution." (Introd) Bibliography, Index.

Reviewed by J. J. Villamil

Ann Am Acad 374:238 N '67 470w

"By focusing upon some of the backward and forward linkages between steel and other industrial sectors, Cole has produced this highly statistical history of the Mexican steel industry and its interactions with the rest of Mexico's developing economy. . . . In addition, Cole makes some projections of the future status of the industry utilizing elementary statistical tools. While it is easy to find fault with some of his statistical manipulations, the book is a wealth of organized data and facts. . . . Recommended as a reference source."

Choice 5:94 Mr '68 140w

COLEMAN, JOHN R., ed. The changing American economy. 275p $5.95 Basic bks.

330.9 U.S.—Economic conditions 67-15951

This book contains "half-hour radio talks [given] on USIA's Voice of America [and prepared by] . . . university professors and men in business. The general subject concerns the American economy, particularly as it has developed since World War II, what it is today, and the problems it faces in the future. Each part deals with different subjects: depressions and inflation, manpower, labor unions, automation, markets, foreign aid, disarmament, competition, consumers, corporations, agriculture, the role of the Government, and others." (Library J) Index.

"Has more up-to-date and specialized provocation than other books giving information and philosophy in the general area. F. Bohn and R. T. Ely's The Great Change [BRD 1935] can be compared. . . . [This book] is generally weak in bibliography. As might be expected in a collection of essays written by different people, the style and readability vary considerably. However, it is apparent that the writers have attempted to reach a rather wide audience and still remain fairly scholarly."

Choice 4:1288 Ja '68 140w

"Coleman has written introductory and concluding statements. Although this volume may be read by the average library patron, it is more likely to be used by economists, college students, and the above-average reader. Its greatest use will be in academic and large public libraries." D. E. Thompson

Library J 92:1476 Ap 1 '67 120w

COLEMAN, KENNETH. Confederate Athens. 214p il maps $6 Univ. of Ga. press

975.8 Athens, Georgia 67-27140

"The author devotes a chapter or two to each important element of the town's existence: politics and elections, problems of local government and town management, economic affairs, social and cultural activities, the organization of militia and local defense units, the support of soldiers and their families, and even a trace of invasion. At the beginning of each chapter he describes conditions as they were before warfare commenced. He then traces the changes that occurred as a result of the war; and he concludes with a discussion of conditions at the close of the Confederacy." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

COLEMAN, KENNETH—Continued

"Based on considerable newspaper and manuscript research, [this book] offers a competent factual survey with only minimal interpretation and generalization. There is too little discussion of the slave population, even conceding a relative dearth of information in the sources. . . . One of the major values of local history is to illustrate broader events or ideas in microcosm. This book makes no such contribution, either by direct comparison or by insight into the dynamics at work within its own narrow limits. Nor is the style more than adequate to the purpose. For these reasons, the book will be of little concern except to those interested in Athens, Georgia, during the Civil War."

Choice 5:861 S '68 120w

"Coleman's compact little volume, . . . written from a variety of sources ranging from Athens Hardware Company papers to Baptist church minutes, depicts the Confederate home front in microcosm. At this time Athens . . . dominated a region of diversified economic interests and was a representative behind-the-lines community. . . . [The book] gives one a different perspective on the Civil War from the storm-and-stress volumes on war and politics. Its most revealing feature was the constant normalcy that existed. The war and the Confederate government seemed remote and unreal. Certainly people did not feel besieged and seldom even endangered. . . . The questions that seem to remain are: Where are the disillusionment and disaffection that presumably undermined the South's war effort, were they too intangible to measure in Confederate Athens, or did they not exist there?" Buck Yearns

J Am Hist 55:403 S '68 340w

COLEMAN, LONNIE. King. 177p $4.95 McGraw 67-24435

This novel gives an "account of a boy growing up in a small central Georgia town of 500 people during the 1920's. Orphaned, the boy is being raised by his aunt and uncle; his dog King becomes the focal point of his life. Inseparable, they walk, hunt and play in the sleepy town, on the nearby farms and in the woods." (Library J)

"This realistic story of the love between King and the Boy—who is never named—is told without sentimentality; the boy is always the boy and the dog is always the dog. Perhaps this balance and reality are a part of the time and place in which the boy tells us they 'did their growing up.' . . . The characters are individuals, all well drawn. None except Miss Sallie really seems improbable; Tolliver rings true and so does the wishy-washy mother of Lamar and Johnny May. King is the chief character in his own right, but Uncle is the hero. . . . There is humor in this slice of life and sorrow and danger and disappointment as the Boy grows up and the world grows large and King grows old." Alice McCahill

Best Sell 27:343 D 1 '67 600w

Reviewed by Rita Estok

Library J 92:3658 O 15 '67 130w

"The dog King appears as the connecting link among various episodes in the central character's life. The author has a sharp eye for the details of small-town living in the rural South, reveals a lot about Southern habits of mind, and makes no apologies for the social structure there. The life of that era was simpler and less hurried than ours, but, perhaps, none too enviable for its lack of privacy, personal freedom, and mobility. The story of the boy, his dog, his aunt and uncle and their friends both good and bad has charm and can be appreciated by many young adult readers." Robert Bellinger

Library J 93:1334 Mr 15 '68 140w [YA]

"[Mr. Coleman's] nameless youth has everything Mark Twain would expect a country boy to have: good friends (white and black) and even a scurvy town loafer it is a pleasure to hate. The author's delight in the past animates one and all." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p54 D 10 '67 150w

COLEMAN, WILLIAM LAWRENCE. See Coleman, L.

COLERIDGE, SAMUEL TAYLOR. Poems of Samuel Taylor Coleridge; sel. by Babette Deutsch; woodcuts by Jacques Hnlzdovsky. 139p $3.50 Crowell

821

67-18512

"In addition to critical and biographical material, . . . short introductions are presented here for three major poems, 'The Rime of the Ancient Mariner,' 'Christabel' and 'Kubla Khan.' The other selections include both familiar and unfamiliar poems such as 'Reflections on Having Left a Place of Retirement,' 'To William Wordsworth' and 'Youth and Age.' Several of Coleridge's critical essays are also included." (Library J) Indexes of titles and of first lines.

"Miss Deutsch has collected mainly those writings which treat the process of creativity and the imagination. Of course, no edition of Coleridge would be complete without 'The Rime of the Ancient Mariner,' 'Christabel,' and 'Kubla Khan.' But Miss Deutsch's scholarly insights might have helped clarify for young people those poems, as well as 'The Eolian Harp' and brief prose excerpts on Coleridge's conception of poetry and organic form. Miss Deutsch has included few of the poems in which Coleridge deals with social and political events of his time, the ones most apt to be intelligible to younger readers on their own." A. L. Madsen

Book World p16 N 26 '67 120w [YA]

Horn Bk 43:761 D '67 40w

Reviewed by Julia Losinski

Library J 92:3861 O 15 '67 60w [YA]

"[A] handsome book with no tricks and no patronizing airs. . . . If [it] did not have [the] necessary school library look, [it] would be [a] perfectly adequate text for all but the mightiest scholars." Reed Whittemore

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p34 N 5 '67 150w

COLES, ROBERT. Children of crisis; a study of courage and fear. 401p col il $8.50 Little 301.45 Race problems. Social psychology.
Child study 67-14450

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Economist 227:50 My 11 '68 330w

Reviewed by A. F. Poussaint

Harvard Ed R 38:373 spring '68 1150w

TLS p479 My 9 '68 800w

COLES, ROBERT. Dead end school; il. by Norman Rockwell. 100p (Atlantic monthly press bk) $3.95 Little

68-14749

Jim is a Negro boy in the sixth grade. When his "class is to be moved from an old rundown school to an even older one, his widowed mother decides the time has come for neighborhood parents to make a stand—which eventually results in the children being bussed across the city to a new, well-equipped white school. Larry, Jim's cynical classmate, derides what he feels is a useless effort." (Library J) "Ages nine to twelve." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin

Book World p24 S 8 '68 170w

"Coles is a child psychiatrist who has studied the effects of segregation in schools in both the North and the South. He published his observations last year in 'Children of Crisis: A Study of Courage and Fear' [BRD 1967]. Now he pours his understanding of the courage and fear involved in getting an education in a ghetto school into a book. . . . Mr. Coles 'tells it like it is.' . . . [He] doesn't offer any unrealistic solutions, but by his flat almost laconic understatement he conveys for children of ghetto schools a sense that someone cares. And white children in the suburbs could well read this book to find out just why children are being bused to their schools." P. M. Daltry

Christian Science Monitor pB1 My 2 '68 200w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 88:304 My 24 '68 100w

Horn Bk 44:323 Je '68 190w

"The tensions and ugliness of the situation have been vividly though sparsely depicted. Through Jim's eyes readers see the rats, the garbage, the school and its personnel and his own family. This would be a good book to lead into a study of poverty or civil rights, as it gives a uniquely honest picture for middle grades of the appalling situations that can be encountered in big-city ghetto schools." M. E. Sandahl

Library J 93:2112 My 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by C. H. Simonds
Nat R 20:1280 D 17 '68 90w

"Jimmy would like to believe in his mother's and grandmother's prayers and marches for civil rights but he is troubled by his friend Larry's bitter assertion. . . . Jimmy predictably chooses to take the long ride into the white kids' world; Larry elects to stay exactly where he is. The story has much of the quality of a television documentary—authoritative and topical, but without the depth or scope one likes to find on the printed page. Norman Rockwell's illustrations provide an effective visual comment." Alice Fleming

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p32 My 5 '68
200w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:39 My 11 '68 200w

COLETTE. The pure and the impure; tr. by Herma Briffault; with an introd. by Janet Flanner. 174p $4.75 Farrar, Straus

848 67-22433

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:200 Ap '68 160w

Reviewed by Gillian Tindall
New Statesman 75:658 My 17 '68 500w
TLS p805 J1 25 '68 600w

COLLAER, PAUL. Historical atlas of music; a comprehensive study of the world's music, past and present [by] Paul Collaer [and] Albert Vander Linden with the collaboration of F. van den Brent; pref. by Charles van den Borren; tr. by Allan Miller. 175p $17.50 World pub.

780 Music—History and criticism 67-11433

An illustrated survey of music history. "There are fifteen full-page color maps showing the origin and dissemination of various basic musical systems since prehistoric times, the centers of music in recent periods, and the travels of Handel, Bach, and Mozart. Nearly 700 black-and-white drawings, engravings, and photos, annotated in the appendix, document the expository and historical text." (Sat R)

"Previous understanding and knowledge are necessary to appreciate the maps. The key is the text: it surveys musical history without defining; a fault due to lack of space. The novice will appreciate pictures of composers and their homes or tables and glossaries but he will tire of the name-and-date text. The selected bibliography illustrates the specialized approach. A curious book due to its crowded text and illustrations offset by its too few clean, informative maps (e.g. the organ in Christian Europe). Good for maps only."

Choice 5:460 Je '68 100w

"Better than most [books], primarily because of its inclusion of a brief section on primitive and non-Western music, numerous maps, and copious notes on the illustrations. The text, although relatively short, is quite good. Unfortunately, the discussion ends before World War II, and too little is said about American music generally. The illustrations are well chosen and well printed. The book, particularly valuable for the general reader, is recommended for larger public and college libraries." A. B. Skei

Library J 93:2501 Je 15 '68 100w

"[This book] is indeed a 'modest guide,' but a real treat for the serious music-lover." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:63 My 18 '68 80w

"[The] excellent black and white illustrations, drawn either from actual photographs of musical performance, ancient and modern instruments, and buildings, or from photographs of paintings, drawings and engravings, portraits, printed and manuscript music, vividly document performance practice in Western and non-Western cultures as well as the development of musical notation in Western music. The value of the illustrations is enhanced by the explanatory notes at the end of the volume. The text that accompanies this rich visual repertory is inferior. . . . Obviously suffering often from translation, [this book] is frequently too condensed for the layman or too opinionated for the scholar and, at times, is actually misleading. . . . This should not discourage the reader, however, from availing himself of the maps and illustrations."

Va Q R 44:[clxxix] autumn '68 280w

COLLEDGE, MALCOLM A. R. The Parthians.

243p il maps $7.50 Praeger

935 Parthia 67-28295

"The latest volume of the Ancient Peoples and Places series deals with the Iranian people which toppled the last relics of Seleucid Greek power in western Asia and which for nearly three centuries was Rome's eastern neighbour and rival, from the moment that Pompey annexed the province of Syria until in A.D. 226 they were themselves finally deposed and replaced by the rival dynasty of the Sasanians." (TLS)

"The limitations of Mr. Colledge's book are mainly inherent in the subject. His desire to present a 'rounded picture' is impeded by the lack of contemporary Parthian documents. . . . Although the book has historical and archaeological sections of approximately equal length, much of the discussion of history, religion, and economics is the result of inferences from archaeology. . . . [The author] has brought together much previously scattered material. One major weakness common to this series is the lack of specific citation from ancient sources. This reader would also have appreciated some evaluation of the modern bibliography." H. B. Wolman

Class World 62:28 S '68 340w

"Until the beginning of this century the Parthians were a relatively ephemeral people known primarily from the classical authors of the Roman empire and from a few Oriental sources. However, archaeological interest in the Iranian world has been developing since the 1930's, and a wealth of contemporary material has appeared to illuminate the culture and history of this brilliant people. Because the majority of modern writings on Parthia and the Parthians is extremely technical and specialized, the need for a good popular work on them has long been apparent. The present volume, well written and amply illustrated with excellent photographic plates (less successfully with line drawings), fills the need well." A. R. Schulman

Library J 93:2002 My 15 '68 110w

"Colledge has given a straightforward, workmanlike account of what we know of these people; and if there are many gaps in his story, it is because the record itself is full of gaps. . . . [He] concentrates on giving a simple, lucid account of what can today be said about this important but elusive people. This he has done with some success and, considering the complexities of their known dynastic history, a surprisingly light touch. Some of the drawings are unnecessarily crude, and a more detailed map of Armenia and northern Mesopotamia would have helped the account of Parthia's wars with Rome. But on the whole the illustration is well selected and presented."

TLS p571 Je 6 '68 700w

COLLIER, JOHN PAYNE, ed. Illustrations of early English popular literature. 2v $25 Blom.

820.8 English literature—Collections 65-16234

This is a reissue of a privately printed anthology that first appeared in London in 1863-64.

"[This] will be useful to students of the English Renaissance and 19th-century scholarship, for the 1863 edition and the original texts collected in it are difficult to come by. The editor was a notorious forger as well as a dedicated apologist for the Elizabethans, but his forgeries are not a problem here—although one can still shudder when he comments on the manuscript notes in an old pamphlet. Since Collier's editing was no better than average mid-Victorian, the rare originals or modern reprints—such as Sir Anthony Sherley's Travels (1933)—are preferable when available. Even so, this should be a useful acquisition for all but the smaller college libraries. . . . [However] an old-fashioned edition, concocted by someone like Collier, ought not be reissued without the advisory label of ■ modern introduction."

COLLIER, J. P.—Continued

Choice 4:1238 Ja '68 200w

"[Among the contents are] rare pamphlets published in extenso to illustrate a kind of sub-culture of the English Renaissance: horrid murders, scaffold speeches, shipwrecks and discoveries, moral interludes with hints on casting, biblical and historical narratives, furious diatribes against the sins of London, anti-Catholic propaganda, advice on the education of daughters, and model love-letters in verse not much better than Hamlet's. . . . The song lyrics, which Mr. Collier rates as popular, have a purity and grace much to the credit of the gentleman who reached for ■ lute to entertain himself while awaiting his turn at the barber's, if indeed these were the songs he sang. Among freaks it would be hard to match Thomas Churchyard's idiosyncratic spelling or R.B.'s rhymed hexameters. . . . Perhaps even more striking than the uniform stamp of an age on these remains is the variety they display."

TLS p1245 D 21 '67 280w

COLLIER, RICHARD. The river that God forgot; the story of the Amazon rubber boom. 288p il maps $6.95 Dutton

338.1 Rubber industry and trade. Hardenburg, Walter Ernest 68-12451

"At the turn of the century Brazil was experiencing a rubber boom that created millionaires almost overnight. It also resulted in private wars between rubber companies in which atrocities [were] committed against the Indians of the region. . . . [The author] has written here the story of Walter Hardenburg and his one-man crusade for justice for those Indians. Hardenburg began in the jungles and ended in the British Parliament before he was able to realize any success in his struggle." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by Saul Sosnowski

Best Sell 28:36 Ap 15 '68 500w

"Take a sensational investigation by a Select Committee of the House of Commons on Putumayo just before World War I. Add a substantial amount of legenda negra-type references to the ruthless rubber barons of the Amazon after removing any references to similar goings-on in the British rubber territories of the East Indies. . . . Garnish with the following patronizing statement; 'so much of my information was derived from personal memorabilia or came from archives in Spanish and Portuguese nowhere available outside the Amazon theater, that I have dispensed with a bibliography (and with notes).' Serve up in journalistic flashbacks so distracting as to induce nausea. And dispose of in a manner best calculated to avoid regurgitation."

Choice 5:359 S '68 140w

Economist 227:xix Ap 27 '68 600w

"Though an exciting story, written to read as fiction, it does have faults. Details tend at times to get in the way of the narrative; Mr. Collier's unclear transitions, too, often leave the reader confused. The value of the book, however, sufficiently outweighs its faults to recommend it for purchase." Phillip Marr

Library J 93:541 F 1 '68 200w

"The fantastic story of the rubber barons of the Amazon and one brave American engineer who fought the biggest one of them all is told so vividly that, despite an almost overwhelming amount of detail, the story moves dramatically to the inevitable crumbling of the rubber empire. . . . Young adults who like their history impassioned can take the supporting detail and enjoy this as an exciting story." C. L. Tefft

Library J 93:2134 My 15 '68 100w [YA]

"This amazing story of intrigue and violence is well told by British writer Richard Collier. The author has visited the scene of his story and is especially effective in suggesting the loveliness, the immensity and the inexorable challenge of an environment where only the birds, monkeys and tree-dwelling snakes are at home. Man's struggle against nature in the Amazon echoes through the book and greatly enhances the drama and power of the narrative." E. B. Garside

N Y Times Bk R p51 Ap 28 '68 600w

TLS p874 Ag 15 '68 330w

COLLIER, SIMON. Ideas and politics of Chilean independence, 1808-1833. 396p $11 Cambridge

983 Chile—Politics and government 67-15395

"This book is an attempt to describe the nature of the political ideas and attitudes which informed the procedures of the revolutionary creole elite in Chile from the start of the Spanish imperial crisis in 1808 to the effective stabilization of the new Republic under Diego Portales in the early 1830s. In Part I, the growth of revolutionary ideals is considered. . . . Part II is devoted to a general description of the ideas and attitudes which were common to all sections of the revolutionary leadership and the creole intelligentsia and it covers the whole period from 1810 to 1833. In Part III I take up the story from the final liberation of Chile in 1817." (Pref) Index.

"Collier has written a scholarly and interesting work which carefully covers the early history of Chile. He offers his readers more than a simple survey of the first 25 years of the republic's history; the book is actually a very balanced account of the intellectual and political elements and personalities that significantly appeared in the making of modern Chile. . . . [His] comprehensive analysis of Chilean intellectual life indicates the ultimate importance of ideas to historical movements. . . . A splendid addition to current Chilean historiography for students and scholars."

Choice 5:675 J1 '68 140w

Reviewed by Phillip Marr

Library J 93:2236 Je 1 '68 70w

COLLIER'S encyclopedia with bibliography and index; William D. Halsey, editorial director; Louis Shores, ed. in chief; Robert H. Blackburn, consultant for Canada [and] Sir Frank Francis, consultant for Great Britain. 24v il col il maps col maps $319.50 Collier

031 Encyclopedias and dictionaries 67-10222

This encyclopedia was "first published in 20 volumes as an entirely new work [BRD 1950]. . . . In 1962 the set was expanded to 24 volumes [BRD 1963]. Since then it has followed a policy of continuous annual revisions." (Booklist and S B B)

"[This] review compares the 1967 edition with that of 1962. . . . Revisions encompass a change of a word or sentence to a complete rewrite of an article. Approximately two thirds of the revisions . . . [do] not substantially change or add to the information already provided. The most consistently revised articles are those on cities and towns. . . . There are, however, some inconsistencies in the updating of statistics. . . . [Some science articles] could have been expanded: cybernetics, toxicology, water pollution, and information storage and retrieval. . . . [The 1967 edition] sustains the reputation of the set as a major general encyclopedia. . . . Librarians will find that in style, arrangement, and depth of coverage, it is particularly geared to the needs of high school and junior college students. Its articles, with some exceptions, are clearly written, factually correct, and sufficiently comprehensive for its intended readers. The set is very well illustrated and has up-to-date maps. While there are still a number of articles and bibliographies that should be revised, considerable revision has occurred since the 1962 edition."

Booklist and S B B 65:31 N 15 '68 4250w

COLLINS, LARRY. Or I'll dress you in mourning, by Larry Collins and Dominique Lapierre. 349p pl $6.95 Simon & Schuster

B or 92 Benítez, Manuel. Bullfights, Spain—Civilization 68-16136

This biography of ■ matador tells of his "rise to fame and riches from an impoverished childhood in war-torn Andalusia. . . . [The authors] describe the preparation for and details of his debut in Madrid and give biographical data gathered from friends and relatives." (Library J) Glossary.

Reviewed by M. R. O'Rourke

Best Sell 28:150 J1 1 '68 500w

"This is a beautiful and cruel book, and it is absolutely absorbing. It is 349 tall pages long, but I read it, fascinated, horrified, in one day. . . . The hopelessness and stomach cramps of Spanish poverty are in this book. The corruption and brutality of the tiny world of the bullfight is there. . . . There is much that is touching . . . the innocence of the lovers, the fierce love of Angelita Benitez trying to keep her brothers and sisters alive and together. Most of all the courage of Manuel Benitez is touching—it is most touching when it is most hopeless." Robert Daley

Book World p3 Je 2 '68 800w

"In this book, the authors have used the . . . technique that made their 'Is Paris Burning?' [BRD 1965] a bestseller. They cultivate everyone—surely—who ever knew Manuel—from his sisters and his parish priest to his picador and his banderilleros. They talked to fight critics and impressarios, visited ringside hospitals and chapels. By peppering the pages with quick details—news-magazines style—and cutting—soap-opera fashion—they may irritate the reader, but they keep him reading through flash-back within flash-back. Those who are revolted at the very notion of watching a man risk his life to kill a crippled beast may still see this book as a social document." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p9 My 27 '68 550w

"It is impossible to write sensibly about Spain today without a deep understanding of the country's history and the forces that history generates. The authors of this book . . . display no such understanding. But they make up in nerve what they lack in knowledge. In a tour de force of compression and oversimplification, they have taken one of Spain's outstanding pop-heroes, the bullfighter El Cordobés, and made him into a peg on which to hang a thin and hurried look at modern Spain. . . . [The book] provides a good insight into the graft and ballyhoo which go on behind the scenes of the arena. When it tries, however, to portray the atmosphere of the bullring itself and to evoke, in Hemingway fashion, the emotions it produces, it fails to convince." Desmond Fisher

Critic 27:88 O '68 950w

Harper 237:80 Ag '68 400w

Reviewed by Dorothy English

Library J 93:2134 My 15 '68 130w [YA]

Reviewed by C. M. Weisenberg

Library J 93:2478 Je 15 '68 300w

"An exciting picaresque adventure, this is the most complete study of a matador's life that I have ever read, as well as the most detailed, unvarnished, and unromanticized look at the elements and people that make up a modern bullfight. Yet it is far more than just a splendid book about a bullfighter. Woven into its fabric is the story of Spain during the last 32 years, of its terrible Civil War, and of its growing pains as it attempts to emerge from its feudal isolationism into the modern world. Insofar as a single volume could encapsulate so much history, it succeeds admirably and in the most readable fashion imaginable." Barnaby Conrad

N Y Times Bk ■ p7 Je 9 '68 1000w

New Yorker 44:80 Ag 31 '68 200w

Reviewed by Melveena McKendrick

Sat ■ 51:42 Je 8 '68 650w

■ Time 92:84 Jl 26 '68 260w

COLLINS, ROBERT O. Egypt & the Sudan [by] Robert O. Collins [and] Robert L. Tignor. 180p $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

962 Egypt—History. Sudan—History 67-14846

The first part of the book covers "ethnology, geography, and history to 1800 . . . subsequent chapters deal with the periods of Muhammad Ali and Khedive Ismail, the British domination of the Nile Valley (1882-1956), and the regimes of Abdel Nasser and the independent Sudan." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Choice 4:1299 Ja '68 100w

"Each author of this brief but well organized and balanced introduction to the subject is a well versed historian of 19th- and 20th-century events in Egypt (Tignor) and the Sudan (Collins). . . . Written sympathetically and coherently, [this] is recommended for any library up to the most specialized area studies university collection."

Choice 4:1299 Ja '68 100w

"In the bibliography, which I suspect may be the work of Professor Collins (for he is known as a scholar who firmly believes historical writing can risk colorful language), we get a frank appraisal of the major works on these two countries that is . . . unusually readable. The text itself is more objectively written, well documented, and, in the survey of the period from the 1950's, of more interest to the general reader." M. D. Herrick

Library J 92:1481 Ap 1 '67 210w

COLLINS, RUTH PHILPOTT. A world of curries; an international cookbook. 262p $5.95 Funk

641.6 Cookery—Curry

67-28077

"From her lifetime collection of curry recipes gathered from India, Pakistan, Indonesia, China, and even South Africa and Australia, [the author has selected an array] of dishes and adapted them to the American table." (Publisher's note) Index.

"No secrets remain about curries after one has read [this book] for the author has lived in the East, made her own curry powder, invented recipes, studied the whole effect of curries on different types of people and produced a good manual for any cook—professional or amateur. The arrangement of this complete cookbook follows a classic standard, a chapter for each category from soups to desserts. The foreword and author's note are valuable. Here is a book for all culinary collections since it brings a slightly unusual idea to the imaginative cook." K. T. Willis

Library J 92:3641 O 15 '67 100w

"I wish that [Mrs. Collins] had been less all-embracing about what you can do with curry spices and more specific about results. Her book contains much interesting and valuable information on curries. But she does not tell you the flavor differences between six basic make-yourself curry powders (with one exception, a fiery one) or if the Curried Pork of South India is mild or hot, or what a Singapore Curried Lobster is like, and so on and on. I am not capable of judging the final effect of the combination of unusual spices. . . . And I am certainly not embarking on a dish with ingredients that have to be assembled more carefully than those of ordinary recipes without having some idea what I am going to get." Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p24 Jl 2 '68 160w

COLLINS, THOMAS J. Robert Browning's moral-aesthetic theory, 1833-1855. 164p $5.50 Univ. of Neb. press

821 Browning, Robert

67-10663

"A study of Browning's early works—Pauline, Paracelsus, Sordello, Bells and Pomegranates, and Men and Women—in an attempt to point out the development of [his] moral-aesthetic theory." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Collins analyzes these major poems in detail, ending with Men and Women since he considers this work the culmination of Browning's aesthetic development. The approach is not new, nor is Collins' treatment of Browning's ideas on art and the role of the artist, and the work is necessarily limited because of its dependence on Browning's early works. Aimed at the nonspecialist."

Choice 4:1114 D '67 110w

"Mr. Collins has read all the Browning scholarship, and there is little in his book that does not derive from it. His description of Browning's thought, as found in the poems, is sober, colorless, 'painstaking'. . . . But the book does stake out the subject, if you have the patience to stay with it; and it does make sense of the confusing early poems—especially Paracelsus and Sordello." Robert Langbaum

Yale R 57:303 D '67 600w

COLLIS, MAURICE. Raffles. 227p 11 maps $5.95 Day

B or 92 Raffles, Sir Thomas Stamford

68-11295

This biography recounts how Sir Stamford Raffles "had risen to power in Penang at the age of 24, had done much in the capture of Java from the Dutch, and had then founded Singapore. A botanist of some standing, he also showed a great talent for linguistics. He fought the slave trade and . . . incurred the displeasure of the British, so much so that when he died the East India Company, for which he had made a vast fortune, was hounding him for repayment of sums they alleged he had spent in winning a new Empire." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] has given us a delightfully written and illustrated book, but, although it contains some new information, it in no way supersedes [C.E.] Wurtzburg's Raffles of the Eastern Isles. Heartily recommended for public libraries and history departments and for high schools where Mr. Collis may be easier reading than Mr. Wurtzburg." P. W. Filby Library J 93:185 Ja 15 '68 200w [YA]

COLLIS, MAURICE—Continued

Reviewed by D. J. Enright
New Statesman 72:592 O 21 '66 850w

Reviewed by D. G. E. Hall
Pacific Affairs 41:450 fall '68 260w

"[An excellent biography]. . . . The story is carefully, clearly, elegantly told, but it is presented in its setting. We are given what is relevant of the circumstances, we are never left uncertain of what year it is, what were the social, physical, historical conditions of the episodes of Raffles's career. The man is portrayed in the round, and in a manner which will certainly lead to a more general understanding of his life and achievements than has been possible before, although the author claims to have added but little to what is known. This is a book which, at a time when the British position in the Orient is once more in question, should be widely read."

TLS p42 Ja 19 '67 2300w

COLMAN, HILA. A career in medical research; il. by Edna Mason Kaula. 175p $3.95; lib bdg $3.86 World pub.

610.69 Medicine—Research—Juvenile literature. Medicine as a profession—Juvenile literature. Munroe, J. Spencer—Juvenile literature 67-23347

"The education and work of J. Spencer Munroe, M.D., Ph.D., and cancer researcher, are used to illustrate the training and type of work involved in a career in medical research. . . . Besides explaining Dr. Munroe's particular project, Mrs. Colman describes other areas in which his training would be applicable and also the jobs and training of members of his staff at various levels, thus placing different research roles in perspective. In addition, there is a chart tabulating careers in technology, nursing, rehabilitation, among others, with the number of years of training required for each. [Index.] Grades eight to eleven." (Library J)

"This volume is a stimulating and informative account on careers in medical research. Mrs. Colman begins with the pre-med student, application and acceptance by medical schools and, finally, a picture of the working of the medical schools themselves. The author opens just about every door to introduce the reader to different types of research, their values, the training required and ways of evaluating the fields. Young readers will appreciate the work and it is certainly one of the better books written for students concerning medicine."

Best Sell 28:63 My 1 '68 90w [YA]

"Though two doctorate degrees are not typical of workers in this field, Dr. Munroe's education is illustrative of the paths to both types of degrees, and reliable insight is offered into the choice of a hospital for post-graduate medical training. . . . Though the author's adulatory tone in describing her subject is occasionally excessive, the facts of his associated careers are made meaningful by relating them to a real person." N. E. Paige

Library J 93:2737 Jl '68 150w

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM, INCORPORATED. CBS news. Lenin and Trotsky, by the staff of CBS news; based on the CBS news television series "The twentieth century"; project ed. William E. Shapiro. 66p il $2.95 Watts, F.

947.084 Lenin, Vladimir Il'ich—Juvenile literature. Trotsky, Leon—Juvenile literature. Russia—History—1917—Juvenile literature 67-25100

"This book compares these two revolutionaries and discusses their differences, showing how they were influenced by and, in turn, themselves shaped, Russian history. [Index.] Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"Although many American students know something about Lenin, few have any familiarity with Leon Trotsky, without whom it is doubtful that the Bolshevik Revolution could have succeeded. . . . [This is a] useful supplement to more general treatments of the subject such as [Horizon Magazine's] Russia in Revolution [by E. M. Halliday, BRD 1968]." R. W. Barber

Library J 93:878 F 15 '68 60w

Reviewed by David Coit

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p26 My 5 '68 90w

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM, INCORPORATED. CBS news. Trial at Nuremberg, by the staff of CBS news; based on the CBS news television series "The twentieth century"; project ed. William E. Shapiro. 66p il $2.95 Watts, F.

341.4 Nuremberg trial of major German war criminals, 1945-1946—Juvenile literature 67-25102

This book outlines "the atrocities committed under Adolf Hitler, ruler of Nazi Germany . . . [and tells how.] in a proceeding without precedent, the leaders and major organizations of Nazi Germany went on trial." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grades nine to eleven." (Library J)

"This is a slender, interesting, profusely illustrated book. . . . [It] can serve as an introduction to the topic, but it is much too meager in detail to be anything more." E. J. Bander

Library J 93:1808 Ap 15 '68 50w

"[A] brief, bare, objective, well-illustrated book. . . . The trial at Nuremberg was an embarrassment to civilized mankind. It is outlined here formally and circumspectly." David Coit

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p26 My 5 '68 90w

COMBER, ELIZABETH. See Han, S.

COMMAGER, HENRY STEELE. The commonwealth of learning. 277p $6.95 Harper

370 Education—U.S. 66-20730

This collection of papers written over the past twelve years, some of which were delivered originally as lectures, is concerned with educational problems in the United States. "Commager examines contemporary practices in our schools and colleges and suggests some major reforms in curriculum, administrative management, financing, and purpose." (Library J) Many of these articles have been previously published in The Saturday Review, The New York Times Magazine, and other journals.

"The issues which move Dr. Commager and his method of expounding them sound terribly, terribly dated. Time has passed by his genteel liberalism so that the issues he raises no longer have relevance to the modern university scene. . . . The issue of academic freedom is no longer the issue it was when [he] was writing. . . . [And] there's no point in simply belaboring, as the author does, the leadership of the university in America—presidents, deans, trustees—and not mentioning the faculty. Dr. Commager ignores faculty culpability for administrative weaknesses in our universities." Arnold Beichman

Christian Science Monitor p7 Je 20 '68 350w

"Inherent in Mr. Commager's writings is the idea that the educator should give up the passive role of follower and implementer and take on the role of crusader and reformer. Certainly this is no academic proposal on his part. He has been a crusader in history and education for many years, and we have been so much the better for his work. Not only an excellent historian but an excellent writer, he presents ideas with a clarity and straightforwardness that few historians are able to manage. This book gives important information about education, provides insight, and important proposals for change to be pondered by all those who are deeply concerned with the future of American education." Howard Ozmon

Library J 93:1625 Ap 15 '68 320w

COMMENTARY on the documents of Vatican II: general ed. Herbert Vorgrimler; v 1. 345p $10 Herder & Herder

262.5 Vatican Council, 2d 67-22928

This volume "inaugurates a scholarly commentary on the solemnly promulgated texts of the Second Vatican Council. It has been planned on the model of exegetic commentaries, that is, with introductions, with the explanation of the texts in a consecutive order, and with excursions. It was only in this way that it appeared possible to ascertain precisely what the Council intended to say and to show, out of the history of the origin of the texts, what had intentionally been left open. . . . The arrangement of the commentary . . . [follows] the order in which the constitutions, decrees and declarations of the Council were promulgated." (Pref) The documents considered in this first of five projected volumes are: Constitution on the sacred liturgy; Decree on the instruments of social communication; Dogmatic constitution on the church; Decree on Eastern Catholic Churches. Subject index. Index of names.

"By every standard, this is the best book on the Council that has been published in the English-speaking world. Most of the authors were periti at the various sessions. They write with first-hand knowledge of the interesting interventions that were hotly debated before the final drafts were drawn." E. S. Stanton
America 118:622 My 4 '68 70w

Reviewed by Creighton Lacy
Christian Century 85:558 Ap 24 '68 120w

"This is a translation of the first volume of a learned German commentary . . . which is being published as a supplement to the ten-volume Lexikon für Theologie und Kirche (Freiburg, Herder, 2d ed., 1957-1967). The English translation contains only the commentary; the Latin texts and translations of the documents have been omitted. These commentaries are directed to the serious student rather than the general reader and contain numerous bibliographical footnotes. . . . All of the commentaries are careful analyses of the decrees in the light of the Council discussions and current theological thought, and they are recommended for all scholarly libraries on the Council." W. C. Heiser
Library J 93:756 F 15 '68 200w

COMNENA, ANNA. The Alexiad of the Princess Anna Comnena; being the history of the reign of her father, Alexius I, emperor of the Romans, 1081-1118 A.D.; tr. by Elizabeth A. S. Dawes. 439p $8.50 Barnes & Noble
949.5 Byzantine Empire, Alexius I Comnenus, Emperor of the East 67-5910

"In fifteen books [Alexius'] daughter, Anna, describes the history of Byzantium from before [the battle of Manzikert in 1071] to 1118." (Choice)

"One of the most important sources of the post-Macedonian epoch of Byzantine history, [this] is a stylistic masterpiece of the so-called Comnenian renaissance even though it is virtually a panegyric to her father. Excellent index. This reissue of the best English translation of a most important work should be in all libraries."

Choice 5:1206 N '68 150w

"This is the only complete English translation of a primary source of information about the reign of the Byzantine Emperor Alexius Comnenus, the Seljuk Turks, and the First Crusade. It was first published in London in 1928. . . . Although the translation is a literal one, it has considerable style. Anna's personality is revealed as an astonishing mixture of piety, filial devotion, pedantry, tenacity, and pride. The introduction, however, is brief (only one and a half pages) and disappointing. . . . Other minor criticisms might be that the print is rather small and that one reads for as many as nine pages in the same paragraph." J. E. Seaver
Class World 61:163 D '67 290w

COMOCK. The story of Comock the Eskimo; as told to Robert Flaherty; ed. by Edmund Carpenter. 95p il $4.50 Simon & Schuster

970.1 Eskimos—Juvenile literature 68-29757

This story "tells how an Eskimo named Comock, with his wife and several children, survived disaster on the ice of upper Hudson Bay, reached an island, lived there 10 years with the most primitive of equipment, and eventually returned to the Quebec mainland. . . . Ages ten to fourteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

"There is an epic sweep to the language [of this story], but . . . it is the pictures which are unique. They must be described as contemporary Cro-Magnon: the men and animals in these tiny, lively sketches are eerily like their ancestors of 20,000 years ago." D. B. Whitman

Book World p10 (children's issue) N 3 '68 160w

"This, in fact, is a book of exquisite art, a story of noble endurance to delight lovers of folk art, Eskimos, adventure tales, the Arctic, courage, and social history. It is for those, too, who simply relish good books, well-written and illustrated, handsomely printed. Children included, of course. . . . Mr. Carpenter's little book is a classic of environment made manifest." P. M.

Christian Science Monitor pB10 N 7 '68 260w

Reviewed by S. R. Morris

Library J 93:4727 D 15 '68 160w

"This is a kind of folk-tale-legend based on truth. . . . It is a story of human fortitude and tenacity, simply told and enhanced by drawings of Eskimo life by Eskimo artists. . . . The story is told with the economy we like to think is typical of the untutored storyteller. In this case, Comock's story was first shaped by Robert Flaherty . . . who heard it firsthand from Comock. The book has been revised and amplified by Edmund Carpenter, another student of Eskimo life. . . . [The story is] expertly put together. So expertly, in fact, that the Eskimo pictures, with their sense of truth and unretouched reality, make the text seem rather contrived in a good many places."

Hal Borland
N Y Times Bk R p42 O 27 '68 750w

COMPLETE science course for young experimenters [by Muriel Mandell and others]. 416p il col il $3.95; lib bdg $4.89 Sterling

507.2 Science—Experiments—Juvenile literature 67-16013

The aim of this book is "to provide an introduction to the major sciences . . . by harnessing natural curiosity and directing it through a series of 300 experiments. . . . Physics, anatomy, biology, chemistry and electricity are treated in turn and, since the book is planned as a progressive course, the scientific ideas explored become increasingly complex." (TLS) Each part has been previously published separately. Table of elements. Index. "Grades four to nine." (Library J)

"This array of interesting, tested, and graded experiments . . . will nourish the enthusiasm of beginning science students. Effective typography clearly separates the many scientific experiences into simple, easily recognizable units that can be performed at home or at school with inexpensive equipment and materials. Each new activity is simply and colorfully illustrated. Vocabulary and sentence structure are consciously limited, but the engaging style will be especially effective for the slow readers and learners. The excellent organization lends the book to both individual student browsing and teacher-stimulated pupil demonstrations in class." Oscar Wright

Library J 92:4249 N 15 '67 110w

TLS p1165 N 30 '67 80w

COMPTON, ARTHUR HOLLY. The cosmos of Arthur Holly Compton; ed. by Marjorie Johnston; with an introd. by Vannevar Bush; editorial advisory com: John J. Compton [and others]. 468p $10 Knopf

500 Science 66-11343

A collection of [forty-eight of] Compton's articles and speeches for the general public. "The contents include an autobiographical sketch, several articles on scientific topics written in a popular vein, brief biographical notes about other scientists, and numerous essays concerning the relationship of science to the rest of human civilization." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index. The late scientist received the Nobel Prize for Physics in 1927 and directed the work at Chicago that resulted in the first atomic chain reaction. Portions of this work have appeared previously in such publications as Saturday Review, Scientific Monthly and Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists.

"The book uniquely offers the reader the personal autobiographical relationships of Compton with many outstanding personalities of our time, along with his more formal insights into the realms of physics, philosophy, religion, sociology, and much more. Yet despite the depth and quality of his insights, the level of presentation is comparable to that of The Saturday Review or Atlantic Monthly. Though most of the book deals with the meaning of science, and the impact (past and future) of science on society, there is also a very lucid presentation called the 'Nature of Things,' which allows the nonscientist to grasp the significant physical problems and their unfolding in time. Throughout the book, one message is foremost; science is a humanizing and spiritual endeavor. It comes through loud and clear."

COMPTON, A. H.—Continued

Choice 5:643 J1 '68 170w

"All of the articles in the book are intelligible to the interested layman. Many of the author's favorite arguments and anecdotes are repeated from article to article ad infinitum; and this reviewer, who read from the galleys, feels that some editorial abridgment should have been made. For college, university, and large public libraries." J. W. Wiegel

Library J 93:90 Ja 1 '68 190w

"Rarely do all the important issues of an era come to a focus in a single life. This unusual concentration of significance did occur in the experiences of Arthur Holly Compton, whose writings, speeches, and actions reflect and in large measure engendered the atomic age. This book, which is a collection of essays from Compton's pen, is therefore more than a memorial to a distinguished scientist and man of letters: it is an authentic documentary of the events, the discoveries, the human involvement, and the deep anguish of a sensitive soul in our recent past. . . . Many readers will enjoy the biographical reflections. There are recollections of Michelson, Millikan, Richardson, Rutherford, Stearns (a student and collaborator of the author's), Einstein, Davison, and Lawrence, all personal friends of Compton's. . . . [The book] is monumental and will stand among the great personal documents of all time." Henry Margenau

Science 159:865 F 23 '68 800w

Sci Am 218:144 Ap '68 200w

COMSTOCK, ANTHONY. Traps for the young; ed. by Robert Bremner. 262p $4.95 Belknap press of Harvard univ. press

364.1 Literature, Immoral. Gambling, U.S.—Moral conditions 67-17306

The author was the "founder and leading spirit of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, and premier anti-vice crusader in American history. . . . [In this book which was first published in 1883] he deals with the menace of 'evil reading,' presents a raid-by-raid account of his crusade against lottery and policy operations, examines dangerous tendencies in 'classics,' and denounces all efforts to repeal or modify the anti-obscenity laws he lobbied for and succeeded in having enacted." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Jean Stafford

Book World p12 Ja 14 '68 850w

"This reissue of Traps in handsome format (with cartoons reflecting the contemporary attitude toward Comstock) is welcome to document an era (1872-1915) in which Comstock was first accorded almost complete approval; later in his career he was viewed with a very skeptical eye. Libraries should have this book, not for its literary style (though one can marvel at that!) but for its value in reflecting attitudes toward censorship (here specifically of the reading matter of young people)."

Choice 5:620 J1 '68 180w

TLS p915 Ag 29 '68 480w

CONDIT, CARL W. American building: materials and techniques from the first colonial settlements to the present. (Chicago Univ. The Chicago hist. of Am. civilization) 329p il $10 Univ. of Chicago press

624 Civil engineering, Building. Structures, Theory of 67-30127

This book describes "the materials of building, their physical properties and appropriate structural forms, technical innovations, the challenges offered by the geography of the continent [and] the great engineering works that successfully met the needs of industry. . . . The book's four main divisions correspond to the chief social and economic phases of American history. . . . The author examines the growth and interrelations of primary structural techniques, beginning with timber and masonry construction, progressing through iron and steel framing, arched and suspended forms, and reaching a culmination in the welded steel frames, concrete shells, and hydroelectric dams of the present day." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

Am Lit 40:438 N '68 50w

Choice 5:942 O '68 130w

Christian Century 85:594 My 1 '68 50w

Reviewed by R. W. E. Perrin

J Am Hist 55:626 D '68 500w

"Suitable for college, university, and public libraries, this excellent book should appeal not only to scholars but to the informed layman and general reader." D. R. Ficht

Library J 93:3122 S 15 '68 160w

"Condit has already published two books covering much of the same ground—the monumental, two-volume American Building Art [BRD 1962] and the Chicago School of Architecture [BRD 1965]. But this new work, at once broader in scope and simpler in construction . . . may well have a wider audience and greater cultural impact. . . . [Condit] examines structures not normally considered by anyone working in this field. He discovers and exposes the hidden structural realities of well-known monuments. . . . A careful reader can of course point to some errors . . . but these are small flaws. . . . The illustrations in the book are excellent, many of them rare pictures of little-known structures. . . . [This book] is certain to have a salutary effect on civil and structural engineers, all of whom should study it as professionals or students. It constitutes an important document to be read in tandem with histories of American architecture." J. M. Fitch

Science 160:642 My 10 '68 1300w

CONDON, E. U., ed. Handbook of physics; ed. by E. U. Condon [and] Hugh Odishaw. 2d ed $32.50 McGraw

530 Physics

66-20002

The first edition was published in 1958. This volume covers mathematics and the various branches of physics, including atomic and nuclear physics. The material in this edition has been one-third "totally revised, one-third fair to considerably revised, and one-third essentially unchanged. Several new topics have been added (linear spaces and operators, numerical analysis, relativity theory, plasma physics, superconductivity, [and] magnetic resonance)." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"The book [includes] 'what every physicist would like to say he knows.' A very good book for professional physicists and advanced students, primarily as a review or an afterview, not as a preview or a first encounter with a topic; its usefulness for undergraduates is very limited. For many, however, its value should increase with use. Recommended."

Choice 5:325 My '68 150w

"Here is the poor (but not insolvent) man's one-volume condensation of the immense Encyclopedia of Physics. . . . A handbook is useful: sometimes for numbers, if I have some feel for what is there; sometimes for basic ideas. . . . but mostly to give me some feel for what the topic is all about, in an interesting way, without committing me either to being an expert or to an institution. . . . [However, this] magnificent collection is starting to show its age, and hence to lose its value, in spite of the revisions. Some of the presumably more stable areas are well revised—for example, mathematical topics and nuclear physics. But many really fast-changing areas are out of date: mechanical control mechanisms; fluid mechanics, including waves therein; and so forth. . . . Nevertheless, these represent a minority of the topics, and the book is valuable for several years yet as a reference." D. J. Rose

Science 160:1440 Je 28 '68 500w

CONDON, GEORGE E. Cleveland, the best kept secret. 372p $5.95 Doubleday

977.1 Cleveland

66-20930

The author's intention is to show what kind of a city Cleveland is "and how it developed its distinctive character. He does this mainly by sketching the stories of people who left their mark on the city . . . together with accounts of city history, geography, activities and institutions." (Library J) Index.

"[This] book is sure to be a big seller in that Lake Erie city. It is filled with anecdotes, jokes, and lively patter well calculated for bedtime reading. . . . The high point of the book is a wonderful collection of stories chronicling the growth of the Cleveland newspaper business. . . . [However] one can scarcely imagine a less useful work for the serious student of American city life. . . . There is no sense of historical development. [It] deals not at all with urban government and institutions. It handles questions of economic growth, welfare, and city planning in the sketchiest manner. Recent racial tensions are glossed over. . . . Unless one is going to Cleveland to deliver an after-dinner speech, there is little reason to read this book." D. R. Beaver

J Am Hist 54:907 Mr '68 400w

"Mr. Condon writes with such skill that the story is interesting even to non-Clevelanders. Leading actors in the fascinating cast of characters include John D. Rockefeller; Mark Hanna; Tom Johnson; Artemus Ward; Cyrus Eaton; the Van Sweringens; and Elliot Ness, Cleveland's safety director made famous in TV's 'The Untouchables.'" G. D. McDonald

Library J 92:2766 Ag '67 140w

CONE, CARL B. The English Jacobins; reformers in late 18th century England. 248p il $6.95 Scribner

942.07 Great Britain—Politics and government—1714-1837 68-17341

A "study of the English reformers of the late eighteenth century, called 'Jacobins' by their enemies who feared a repetition of the radical excesses of revolutionary France. Professor Cone describes the rise of reform organizations during the controversy in Parliament over John Wilkes in the 1760's, and he charts their progress until they were disbanded, temporarily, after the sedition trials of 1794." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"At no time did political Jacobinism threaten to overthrow the estates of the realm. . . . Was it only because England then . . . was a deferential society? Was it because the ruling classes of England, unlike those of France, never lost confidence in their capacity to govern their sceptered isle? Professor Cone directs himself with scholarship to these questions but it is for the reader to establish his own answers. What the author does make clear is that the late 18th-century reformers, with some few exceptions, considered reform or revolution a road to power not for the lower orders but for themselves. . . . There is a great sense of immediacy in the description of England as it passed through the American and French Revolutions en route to the Industrial Revolution." Arnold Beichman

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ag 31 '68 700w

"Through mastery of his sources and a lucid prose Dr. Cone has produced a compact history, with two representative documents printed fully and a bibliographic note. For collections in English history and political science." Sally Poundstone

Library J 93:2492 Je 15 '68 140w

CONFERENCE ON LIBRARY SURVEYS, COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY, 1965. Library surveys. See Tauber, M. F., ed.

CONFERENCE ON METHODS AND OBJECTIVES OF URBAN RESEARCH IN AFRICA, AIRLIE HOUSE, 1965. The city in modern Africa. See Miner, H., ed.

CONFERENCE ON PRE-SCHOOL EDUCATION, CHICAGO, 1966. Early education; current theory, research, and action; ed. by Robert D. Hess and Roberta Mayer Bear (papers presented at the Conference and sponsored by the Com. on learning and the Educ. process of the Social science res. council). 272p il $6.95 Aldine pub.

372.21 Nursery schools 67-17602

A compilation of articles by various educators in the field containing "reports of research now in progress on learning and development in the pre-school years . . . as reinforcement in pre-school and remedial education; material influences on early learning; effects of early stimulation on development of cognitive processes; and informal education during the first six months of the child's life." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The papers included are excellent. . . . A definite asset for those interested in keeping up to date on the research being done in the area of early childhood education."

Choice 5:1014 O '68 110w

Reviewed by T. J. Cole

Library J 93:2485 Je 15 '68 170w

CONFERENCE ON RECENT ANTHROPOLOGICAL STUDIES OF MYTH AND TOTEMISM. School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London, 1964. The structural study of myth and totemism [sponsored by] Assn. of social anthropologists of the Commonwealth; ed. by Edmund Leach. 185p maps $6.25 Barnes & Noble

390 Lévi-Strauss, Claude. Anthropology 167-96770]

Six papers "present the reactions of six anthropologists of the British-American functionalist and empiricist tradition to the thought of Claude Lévi-Strauss on myth, totemism, and, according to Lévi-Strauss, the universal logic underlying concrete thought and symbolism, whether primitive or modern. . . . The volume opens with Leach and Lévi-Strauss' . . . structural analysis of 'The Story of Asdiwal,' prototypic of his thought, here published for the first time in English." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies.

"More puzzling and more interesting monograph than preceding ones resulting from conferences devoted to major theoretical and methodological concerns of anthropologists by the Association of Social Anthropologists. . . . Most of the contributors agree to the 'splendor,' the facility, and, perhaps, the whimsy of the mind of [Lévi-Strauss], while remaining highly suspicious of his conclusions and their significance. Several of the criticisms are absorbingly ingenious themselves. . . . For anthropologists and folklorists the book is essential reading in what promises to be a continuing debate. Some of the papers will themselves provoke some lively controversy. Only one paper seems sophomoric and useless. 'Bibliography cross-reference' in place of an index, which, in this case, is no serious omission."

Choice 4:1181 D '67 210w

"[The] reports are lively and oddly variegated. . . . The editor says that at the symposium itself he endeavoured to sum up the whole proceedings, but he prudently attempts nothing of the kind in print. . . . [Nevertheless] the constant point of reference throughout the papers is not myth or totemism, it is Lévi-Strauss himself—and it is with this realization that the worries begin. . . . Only Dr. Fox dispenses with the genuflections and just gets on with the job. . . . It is most fitting to praise famous men, but degree of sceptical moderation is always proper too. In this case the din of approbation waxes so raucous as to suggest a lack of due discrimination."

TLS p445 My 2 '68 6600w

CONFERENCE ON SOVIET AGRICULTURAL AND PEASANT AFFAIRS, SANTA BARBARA, CALIFORNIA, 1965. Soviet and East European agriculture. See Karcz, J. F., ed.

CONFERENCE ON THE ECONOMIC PROBLEMS OF HOUSING, DITCHLEY PARK, ENGLAND, 1965. The economic problems of housing. See International economic association

CONFERENCE ON THE MATHEMATICAL THEORY OF ELEMENTARY PARTICLES, DEDHAM, MASS., 1965. Proceedings; ed. by Roe Goodman and Irving Segal. 188p $6 Mass. inst. of technology

539.7 Nuclear physics 66-27212

Gathered here are thirteen "mathematical lectures given by prominent mathematicians and theoretical physicists. . . . Topics are discussed relating to unitary symmetries, axiomatic field theory, homology envelopes, nonlinear relativistic equations, etc." (Choice)

"These are aimed at research workers in the field and some advanced graduate students. . .

CONFERENCE ON THE MATHEMATICAL THEORY—Continued

Students will profit more from the longer and more pedagogic summer school lectures, e.g. the Brandeis, Colorado, and Les Houches lectures."

Choice 4:1138 D '67 70w

"The book under review presents conference papers by members of the school that seeks a workable mathematical foundation prior to an application to the real world. In some ways there is as much diversity of approach within this school as between schools, and such a conference serves the double purpose of exposing the contributors' research to each other as well as to the outside world. . . . It is a comforting thing to read reports where the conclusions are at least a logical consequence of the assumptions. The co-editors are to be complimented on their undertaking and execution of a topical conference of this nature." J. R. Klauder

Science 156:926 My 19 '67 800w

CONFERENCE ON THE RUSSIAN REVOLUTION, HARVARD UNIVERSITY, 1967. Revolutionary Russia. See Pipes, R., ed.

CONNELLY, MARC. Voices offstage; a book of memoirs. 258p pl $5.95 Holt

B or 92 Connelly, Marc 68-12204

In these memoirs the author of the play The Green Pastures (BRD 1930) "gives an account of his work as a youthful newspaper man in Pittsburgh who wrote for local amateur groups in his free time. He goes on to tell how he went to New York, worked on a succession of papers and wrote lyrics for musicals, short stories, and verse as a sideline. . . . He writes of the many people he has known in the world of the arts and publishing and of the Algonquin Round Table of which he was an early member." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. M. Hamernick

Best Sell 28:301 N 1 '68 400w

Reviewed by J. K. Hutchens

Book World p12 O 20 '68 700w

"Obviously Mr. Connelly has had an interesting life and has known many of the most interesting people of his times, particularly in the literary and theatrical worlds. He is often extremely amusing about those worlds and the people in them, including himself, but one comes away from the book—or stops anywhere in the middle—feeling that it's very nice superficial storytelling, the work of an excellent anecdotalist, but one has no sense of knowing the people—well, shall we say, in depth? . . . But when [Connelly] talks of his theatrical collaborations with George Kaufman and especially of his production of Green Pastures he is on his own ground, and as the narrative gains unashamed involvement on Mr. Connelly's part, the reader, too, becomes involved." K. G. Jackson

Harper 237:111 O '68 210w

"A genially nostalgic collection of recollections which is recommended for general purchase and for theater collections." W. H. Matthews

Library J 93:2998 S 1 '68 150w

"A rather stilted recollection of what must have been glorious, exciting years. . . . Even so, bypassing the otrotund, Mr. Connelly has a great deal to offer, especially to theater buffs. He has opened the lid of his trunk and spread the contents on the attic floor for all to rummage through and it is an engaging rummage if you're the type for whom a faded theatrical poster is a magic carpet." Robert Berkvist

N Y Times Bk R p50 O 20 '68 440w

Reviewed by P. D. Zimmerman

Newsweek 72:108 N 4 '68 420w

Reviewed by Stephen Draper

Sat R 51:63 N 23 '68 420w

CONNELLY, THOMAS LAWRENCE. Army of the heartland; the army of Tennessee, 1861-1862. 305p il $8.50 La. state univ. press

973.7 Confederate States of America. Army. Confederate States of America—History, Military. U.S.—History—Civil War

67-21373

The author "considers problems, potentialities, personalities, and political conditions confronting Confederate leaders. The impact of personality, geography, and politics upon the formulating and conducting of military policy are . . . evaluated." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by R. C. Black

Am Hist R 73:1647 Je '68 400w

"Students of the Civil War have recently paid greater attention to the conflict in the Western theater. Comprehensive works explain Northern military activities in this vital area, but heretofore the Confederate side has not received such detailed treatment. . . . [This is a] well researched, readable volume. . . . Although the interpretations of battles and men will be challenged, the judgments always have a factual basis. Highly recommended to librarians, who should note that Connelly is preparing a sequel."

Choice 4:1312 Ja '68 200w

"This book is an important new study. . . . Thomas Connelly adds a new dimension to the study of the war in the West by supplementing Stanley Horn's earlier work [Army of Tennessee, BRD 1941] with fresh interpretations. His is a story of frustrating Confederate leadership facing a superior enemy force in an isolated region, the 'Heartland,' whose significance President Davis never understood. . . . The reviewer thinks that the author was a bit too harsh on Stanley Horn and others who have written on the war in the West. One might also question Connelly's boundaries of the Heartland or even whether such a region really existed. But he presents his case well. . . . His narrative is well conceived, brilliantly written, and thoroughly documented." Robert Hartje

J Am Hist 54:896 Mr '68 500w

CONNERY, DONALD S. The Irish. 304p il $5.95 Simon & Schuster

914.15 Ireland—Civilization. National characteristics, Irish 68-16137

"Pointing to Sean Lemass, who succeeded de Valera as Prime Minister, as the architect of the new state, Mr. Connery traces . . . the many changes which have brought Ireland into the mainstream of the Twentieth century." (Best Sell)

"The author wastes no time on the romantic or the picturesque. This is a description of contemporary Ireland, a country belatedly and rather nervously taking up industrialization, modern economics, and twentieth-century ideas, and it is a sensible, useful, sometimes humorous report." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 221:124 Je '68 40w

"Mr. Connery, an American journalist, has presented a reasoned, objective study of the 'new Ireland' which has emerged within the past decade. . . . Mr. Connery writes with charm and humor of Irish character, of Irish conversation, of the arts, of the beauties of the Irish countryside, and of the complex business of courtship and marriage; and he includes a most revealing chapter on 'The Neurotic North.' Anyone interested in what has been happening in Ireland during the past few years will find 'The Irish' a most rewarding reading experience." S. P. Ryan

Best Sell 28:119 Je 15 '68 320w

Choice 5:1353 D '68 170w

Reviewed by Roderick Nordell

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 6 '68 290w

"This is one of the best books about Ireland to appear in some time, good for the traveler and for those interested in a quick look at Ireland's past and some knowledge of her present economic standing. . . . [Connery] writes in lively journalistic style, and in no way does he offend sentimental lovers of Ireland but strives for a true picture of Ireland as it is today. . . . To him the Irish personality, even more than the beautiful landscape, makes the country unforgettable. This book is enthusiastically recommended." M. H. Zipprich

Library J 93:2496 Je 15 '68 140w

TLS p673 Je 27 '68 300w

CONNOLLY, WILLIAM E. Political science & ideology. 179p $5.95 Atherton

320 Knowledge, Sociology of. Political science 67-18273

"Connolly (Ohio University) challenges the . . . ideal of a 'value free' empirical social science on two grounds—its possibility and its desirability. Examinations of pluralistic (Dahl) and elitist (Mills) explanations of American democracy lead Connolly to the . . . conclusion that ideological biases have crept into research at crucial points. Employing the methods of 'perspective' and 'group bias' developed by Mannheim, Mills, and G. H. Mead, the last chapter pleads for the creation of 'responsible ideology' by political scientists." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] defines ideology as 'a set of empirical claims not fully tested, and for practical purposes not fully testable, which functions both to orient political activity and to preserve from destruction values and higher level beliefs cherished by its authors and supporters.' Conceived in this way, ideology serves as the essential link between an individual's values and his view of reality. Connolly engages in a provocative and rewarding discussion on the nature and need of ideological detachment and involvement. If he had, however, applied his thesis to his own ideology, which is implicitly reflected throughout the book, and how it protects values which he strongly embraces, his case would have been even stronger. Professor Connolly by no means lays to rest the opposition or the issues; nevertheless he offers a strong, and often penetrating, argument that should be taken into account." Peter Bachrach
Am Pol Sci R 62:599 Je '68 700w

Reviewed by D. R. Segal

Am Soc R 33:638 Ag '68 500w

"This little volume is a healthy reaction to the widespread belief in the political science profession that ideology is not, and cannot be, a proper and legitimate object of useful scientific analysis, except in a purely historical or descriptive manner. . . . The last chapter, 'Toward Responsible Ideology,' is the most interesting in the book. The author rejects the notion that the view of value preferences as 'emotive expressions' settles the problem of the role of the social scientist in dealing with values or ideologies. . . . On the whole, Professor Connolly's book is a worth-while effort in a difficult area." William Ebenstein
Ann Am Acad 376:209 Mr '68 550w

"Most noteworthy is the [author's] attempt to develop the concept of 'responsibility,' a misunderstood and generally neglected but vastly important area for normative theorizing. . . . Well written and characterized by competent analyses and careful (if narrow) research, the book's hesitant movement away from 'facts and values' is commendable and the distillation of Mannheim is certainly worthwhile—all of which will enhance its value as an undergraduate teaching aid. But it contains little that is new and is conceptually weak: the meaning of 'ideology' shifts, huge epistemological questions are casually dismissed, and 'responsibility' whets the appetite while the method of achieving it dulls the palate." Choice 4:1176 D '67 230w

CONNOR, PATRICIA, jt. auth. The Dorak affair. See Pearson, K.

CONNOR, TONY. Kon in springtime; poems. 46p $3.75 Oxford 68-89292

A collection of poems by a British poet, whose previous collection Lodgers was reviewed in BRD 1966.

Reviewed by T. E. Luddy

Library J 93:2881 Ag '68 170w

"Connor has a tough and serviceable line in domestic nastiness and a sequence on National Service which has a certain historical interest now." Anthony Thwaite
New Statesman 75:659 My 17 '68 210w

"Numerous young English poets . . . make a sort of living out of unfun and uncharm nowadays. Tony Connor is one of these. . . . Connor is an honest and competent northern English poet who unobtrusively deploys substantial technical skills to describe junk piles. . . . a child picking its nose, the lassitude, introversion and sourness that have taken over more and more of England's quotidian life. . . . Yet in several lyrics, . . . he finds ways of sharing in the solitude and disappointment of his fellow-countrymen without a sellout and without hardening into cynicism." Julian Moynahan
N Y Times Bk R p10 D 22 '68 140w

"Connor, one of the more interesting poets to come into view in England during recent years, has been steadily developing the idiom of his own awareness, a style true to the perceptions of ordinary life but true also to the inward self, intense and dissatisfied, doing the perceiving. . . . The poems are direct contemplations of common experience: a period the poet spends at home when his wife is away, family close-ups, . . . nightmares and subconscious visions and imaginings—these last still within the ordinary range of experience though not usually of discussion. . . . Connor is striking in the intensity of these contemplations and in the way he expresses the usual sense of being existentially trapped . . . only to step out of the predicament through the sheer force of an original spirit and of his feeling for language." M. L. Rosenthal
Sat R 51:72 Je 22 '68 340w

"Tony Connor does not invite reading aloud. His is a very quiet domestic voice. . . . Humility demands outspokenness, so spots and nose-picking and masturbation are given their due, small, place. But mostly the poet's problem of arranging and understanding is taken as an existential paradigm. Within his self-elected narrow field Mr. Connor operates with great skill."

TLS p499 My 16 '68 160w

Va Q R 44:clii autumn '68 170w

CONOT, ROBERT. Rivers of blood, years of darkness; the unforgettable classic account of the Watts riot. 497p $6.95 Morrow

301.451 Los Angeles—Riots, 1965. Negroes—Los Angeles 68-31983

An hour-by-hour account which probes into the lives of the people involved and describes the events leading up to and during the riots. In the 'battle between the Negro ghetto and the police, who were aided by 14,000 National Guardsmen, 34 persons died, 4,000 were arrested and property damage totaled $35 million." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"A chilling and accurate history of the event. . . . What is so important about this volume is the excellent study of the causes of the contemporary riots and of what should be the rather obvious steps that must be taken to avoid them in the future. . . . Mr. Conot's book has not been written to point the accusing finger at America. He is explaining to his fellow-Americans why the riots were necessary and what our response must be. . . . By investigating the lives of the people directly involved, Conot dramatizes the causes of the current Negro revolt. . . . [This book] now challenges us to do something about poverty, illiteracy and disease. [It] is 'must' reading for anyone who loves his country and who wants it to have a bright future. Public libraries [and] academic libraries will want this book." Charles Dollen
Best Sell 28:187 Ag 1 '68 400w

"This book is about much more than Watts and should be read by every white American who has been stunned by recent incidents of racial conflict. Mr. Conot not only opens a door to an understanding of our country's most important problem, but he makes it apparent that understanding is not going to be enough. The book would have benefited by the inclusion of maps and an index. Mr. Conot . . . presents a wealth of data in a framework of good writing. There are some questionable areas, but this is by far the best work on the subject." C. M. Weisenberg
Library J 92:2938 S 1 '67 200w

"One of the virtues of Conot's highly detailed account is its unhesitating definition of events in Los Angeles as an insurrection. . . . Most whites are conveniently ignorant—at so late a date—of the wretched lives led in the ghetto. For them, Conot's account—in spite of its journalistic clichés, its mass of irrelevant detail, and its gratingly inept metaphors—should be required reading. The book is a catalogue of injustices, of those petty indignities which relentlessly gnaw at the humanity of any ghetto dweller. . . . [However] Conot loses few opportunities to ridicule the (occasionally odd) ideas of black nationalists: this may be his privilege; to ignore their relevance to the uprising is not." Louis Kampf
Nation 205:117 Ag 14 '67 1250w

New Yorker 44:215 O 12 '68 120w

Time 90:74 Ag 11 '67 430w

CONQUEST, ROBERT. The great terror: Stalin's purge of the thirties. 633p il $8.95
Macmillan (N Y)

947.084 Russia—History—1925-1953 68-17513

An English scholar, poet and novelist presents a survey of state killings in Russia "that began with the murder of S. M. Kirov on December 1, 1934. . . . [He describes] the arrests, the interrogations, the public and the secret trials, the secret executions, the labor camps from which most prisoners never returned, the scope of the whole operation, and its effect on Russian and world history." (Book World) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl
America 119:566 N 30 '68 50w

Reviewed by J. L. Earl
Best Sell 28:339 N 15 '68 700w

"For many readers who have not followed the story as it came to light, [this book] would be a shattering revelation. It is a book that could not have been written until very recent times. . . . Conquest cites about 200 volumes that he judges to be reliable after checking one against another. . . . [His comprehensive story] starts with the contention that Stalin was directly and completely responsible for what happened. . . . Conquest implies that all the victims were innocent of the crimes for which they were executed. That is different from saying that none of them deserved their punishment. . . . [He estimates] a 'figure of 20 million dead.' . . . I am qualified only by ignorance to argue with such figures, but in candor I have to report that they seem to me large and loose." Malcolm Cowley

Book World p1 S 22 '68 450w

Reviewed by Arnold Beichman
Christian Science Monitor p12 O 31 '68 1000w

"A masterpiece of historical detection. . . . Not the least merit of Mr Conquest's study is that, while preserving commendable objectivity and restraint, he draws the only moral possible in the circumstances. He pays respect to the martyred millions, especially to those who, whatever their own sins, showed courage and honesty by resisting their tormentors. Still more relevant is his eloquent warning of the continuing threat to civilised values represented by totalitarian rule."

Economist 229:59 O 19 '68 700w

Reviewed by Oleg Ivsky
Library J 93:4552 D 1 '68 320w

"Up till now there has been no one book to which the general reader could turn for a comprehensive and fully documented study of what the Purges involved. [This] is just such a work, impressive alike in its narrative sweep, its meticulous scholarship and the clarity with which Mr Conquest has organised and presented an immense mass of highly complex material. At every stage he cites chapter and verse, and he assesses the value of his sources with exceptional care. . . . There are also nearly a hundred pages of notes and specialised appendices. The author is, in short, as far as a layman can judge, the complete master of his subject, but at no point is the book allowed to sag under the weight of its scholarship: the style throughout is crisp, civilised and restrained. . . . Mr Conquest leaves us to draw our own political conclusions." John Gross

New Statesman 76:397 S 27 '68 2100w

Reviewed by G. F. Kennan
N Y Times Bk R p2 O 27 '68 1900w

Reviewed by F. Y. Blumenfeld
Newsweek 72:102B O 21 '68 850w

Reviewed by H. E. Salisbury
Sat R 51:52 N 9 '68 1150w

"Mr. Conquest has done an excellent job . . . by piecing together the bits, both those furnished by official Russian sources and those provided by emigrés and defectors. . . . The jigsaw is, nevertheless still far from complete. Mr. Conquest's account of the fate of the major purge figures and of the mechanics of their destruction, not to say self-destruction, is relatively full. But there are many blanks. . . . Mr. Conquest's book draws attention to the lesser inconsistencies, the implicit and explicit retractions, and the invincible figures such as I. N. Smirnov who held out against confessing to the major charges against them. He shows how the purge trials were merely the outward and visible part of a sustained terror which struck at Party and non-Party people, at all sectors and age groups of the population and at all areas of Russia."

TLS p1095 O 3 '68 1550w

CONQUEST, ROBERT, ed. Justice and the legal system in the U.S.S.R. 152p $5
Praeger

347.9 Law—Russia. Justice. Administration of [68-118819]

A discussion of "the development of the Soviet legal and judicial system; the judiciary and the organs of judicial administration; criminal procedure; crime and punishment; the role of party controls in socialist legality; and [an evaluation of] the practices of law codification and of crime statistics. . . . The book also provides an evaluation of the functioning of the Soviet legal system by Western standards of justice. . . . [This is a] discussion of the civil and criminal law as opposed to the handling of political crimes." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Lucid summary of the theoretical principles and of the actual machinery of the Soviet law. . . . The factual statements and assertions are carefully documented. . . . The treatment supplements and in part updates H. J. Berman's Justice in the U.S.S.R. [BRD 1964], and G. C. Guins' Soviet Law and Soviet Society, Recommended for advanced undergraduates." Choice 5:1220 N '68 140w

"The 'Soviet Studies Series' is an extremely valuable one which should be added to the shelves of academic libraries. Public libraries except very small ones cannot afford to miss it. While rigorously scholarly, [this] short book is simply written (but never simplistic), very concise and to the point, quite aware of slow historic changes, while thorough and up-to-date. . . . [It] combines the best features of a research paper with that of a journalistic account. At $5.00 a throw it's a steal. Don't miss it!" Oleg Ivsky

Library J 93:2884 Ag '68 40w

CONQUEST, ROBERT, ed. Religion in the U.S.S.R. 135p $5 Praeger

274.7 Russia—Religion. Church and state in Russia 68-17377

This book describes "various Soviet antireligion efforts, from the ban on religious education to the establishment of government atheism bureaus and 'voluntary' citizens' organizations. . . . It deals primarily with the Orthodox Church—the largest in the Soviet Union—but separate sections deal with creeds whose confrontation with the Soviets has been special: Islam, Buddhism, Catholicism, Protestantism, and Judaism." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"The fluctuations in the intensity of governmental oppression policies are well described and carefully documented. The lack of ultimate success in eradicating religious feelings and influences among the populations is pointed out. . . . This brief book serves well as an updated summary introduction into an important aspect of Soviet life which has been covered in greater detail in . . . W. Kolarz' Religion in the Soviet Union [BRD 1962] and [N.] Struve's Christians in Contemporary Russia [BRD 1968]."

Choice 5:1146 N '68 150w

"In explaining the fate of religions and their organizations Mr. Conquest follows strictly chronological presentation from World War I to Khrushchev's fall. . . . He furnishes numerous footnotes and several pages of bibliography to support his statements. There is little equally up-to-date material in English available. Recommended for most larger institutions of learning and public libraries." H. H. Bernt

Library J 93:758 F 15 '68 100w

TLS p234 Mr 7 '68 140w

CONQUEST, ROBERT, ed. Soviet nationalities policy in practice. 160p $5.25 Praeger

320.947 Labor and laboring classes—Russia. Russia—Economic policy 67-28180

This "account of 50 years of Soviet policy . . . [toward] industrial workers is divided into chapters on 'Employment,' 'Wages and Norms,' 'Labor Discipline,' 'Working Hours,' 'Leave and Labor Protection,' and 'The Trade Unions.'" (Library J)

Reviewed by J. A. Armstrong
Ann Am Acad 337:173 My '68 470w

Choice 4:1442 F '68 140w

"The book is pleasantly short, and the bibliography is helpfully long."

Economist 225:526 N 4 '67 20w

"Extensive quotations and citations from documents, serials, and secondary sources are the chief features of the volume. . . . [The editor] has presented the material in a well-organized manner, and he covers the subjects [comprehensively]. The book lacks an index. Otherwise it would be a good reference work. . . . For college and research libraries." P. E. Leinbach
Library J 92:3046 S 15 '67 50w

"[This book] is directed to the intellectual; and, though a good deal of second-hand material has been used in compiling [it], care has generally been taken to get the facts right. But the facts selected are, broadly speaking, those likely to discredit the Soviet regime in western eyes, so that the general impression is hostile and one-sided. Subject to this limitation [it is] efficiently done, and provides useful and sometimes out-of-the-way information."
TLS p1027 N 2 '67 40w

CONQUEST, ROBERT, ed. The Soviet political system. 144p $5 Praeger

320.0947 Russia—Politics and government—1917—68-17378

A "survey summarizing and evaluating the past developments and the present structure of the formal institutional and the real power elements in Soviet politics. The constitutional framework, territorial-administrative structure, electoral system, organization and functioning of the Supreme Soviets, Councils of Ministers, the Communist party and its relationship to the state administration are [discussed]. . . . The functioning of political institutions at various levels is described, and an . . . evaluation of the interrelationship and the relative importance of the several agencies is given." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies.

"A systematic, well documented brief survey. . . . The book, comparable in length and coverage, updates well . . . [J.] Armstrong's Ideology, Politics, and Government in the Soviet Union [BRD 1968] and [L.] Schapiro's The Government and Politics of the Soviet Union [BRD 1965]."

Choice 5:680 J1 '68 160w

"[The editor's] long sojourn in Russia has undeniably helped his understanding of the subject matter, the discussion of which is mainly, though not exclusively, based on Soviet publications. . . . He furnishes numerous footnotes and several pages of bibliography to support his statements. There is little equally up-to-date material in English available. Recommended for most larger institutions of learning and public libraries." H. H. Bernt

Library J 93:758 F 15 '68 100w

"[This book] is crisp, well arranged, and accurate in its presentation of facts. . . . Theory is rarely discussed except to dismiss it curtly as fiction, or to explain how practice diverges from it. This is very often true; but it is not the whole truth."
TLS p629 Je 13 '68 230w

CONRAD, EARL. Billy Rose, Manhattan primitive. 272p il $5.95 World pub.

B or 92 Rose, Billy 67-26957

This biography of the Broadway showman includes "accounts of Billy Rose's rise to fame, his Broadway theater and night club productions, his 'Aquacades' at various fairs and expositions, his song-writing triumphs, his acquisition of theaters and rare paintings, and some of the scandals of his marital experiences." (Library J)

"[This book] makes for compelling reading. Going through Billy Rose's life is like reading a wilderness of tabloid headlines, a fact dictated by Rose's life itself and not Earl Conrad's book, which is extremely interesting fare. . . . [Mr. Conrad's] subject rises from the paper clearly, accurately (one assumes), forcefully, and . . . grotesquely. Having read the biography, I can't think offhand of many who tolerated Billy Rose, let alone liked him; but thanks to Earl Conrad I can't think of many who wouldn't want to read about him either." H. T. Anderson

Best Sell 27:434 F 15 '68 350w

"The story of Billy Rose is that of the old American favorite of the poor boy from the tenements of New York who rises to fabulous fortunes. His story has the added filip of show girls, glamorous surroundings, scandal-laden marriages and divorces, and associations with many of the world's best-known figures.

One feels in reading Mr. Conrad's biography of the showman that more of all this color could have been infused into the book. . . . [However Mr. Conrad has captured] . . . some of the brassiness of the Prohibition era." Paul Myers

Library J 93:179 Ja 15 '68 140w

"Earl Conrad's book is a devastating attack. Rose is portrayed therein as a power-driven, cruel, greedy, ruthless, lying, dishonest conniving villain. Conrad writes with venom in a lean, tough, journalistic style. He paints Rose's portrait not in oil but in mud. . . . In spite of his muckraker's spleen, he looks for the social and psychological explanations. He tries the Napoleonic Complex on for size. . . . Ultimately, Mr. Conrad concludes with a neo-Marxian explanation, namely that Billy Rose was, en fin de compte a child of capitalist society." Maurice Zolotow

N Y Times Bk R p8 Mr 17 '68 600w

Reviewed by P. D. Zimmerman
Newsweek 71:78B F 5 '68 350w

Reviewed by Robert Hector
Sat R 51:59 Mr 23 '68 290w

CONROY, FRANK. Stop-time. 304p $5.95 Viking

B or 92 67-25922

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Leon Kling
America 118:269 F 24 '68 50w

Reviewed by Peter Shaw
Commentary 45:84 Je '68 1800w

Reviewed by Julian Mitchell
New Statesman 75:339 Mr 15 '68 300w

Reviewed by Susan Lardner
New Yorker 43:110 F 3 '68 800w

Reviewed by Thorpe Menn
Sat R 51:43 F 24 '68 600w

TLS p363 Ap 11 '68 600w

CONSERVATION OF HUMAN RESOURCES
STAFF, COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY. Manpower strategy for the metropolis. See Ginzberg, E.

CONSTABLE, GEORGE. All the abandoned children. 200p $4.75 Harcourt

67-19195

Novel set in a suburb of Baltimore which concerns six characters: a crazed operator of a radio station who makes clandestine broadcasts about morality; Teddy, a five-year-old genius who has learned all he knows from watching television; his sister Cathy, aged twelve; Jessie, a young girl who works in an office and plays all kinds of games; Jay, a young motorcyclist; and Mrs. Ethel Price, a schizophrenic young housewife who hates her husband.

"[This] is a disturbing book about life today . . . written by a brilliant young man who is probably closer chronologically to youth's problems than the people who will read his book and be frightened by it. Mr. Constable is telling some kind of truth about life. If his characters represent human motives, and I think they do, they are either distorted, or the world as he sees it is a terrible place. As terrible as it is and as fantastic as some of it seems to be, it is convincing. . . . The style is on a brilliantly high level with a cryptic control of possibly all the clichés known to man, that makes you realize what a mad world we live in. The sense of comedy (pure criticism) is beautifully balanced with seriousness of purpose. What Mr. Constable has to say is overwhelming because he is a keen observer and his mind is a fertile one." C. M. Siggins

Best Sell 27:246 O 1 '67 650w

"After a thoughtful reading of this first novel, it seems to me, although I cannot be certain, that Mr. Constable is dealing with the hurt and disillusionment of life suffered by a child in the process of growing into an adult in our loveless contemporary madness. . . . All the characters have unreal qualities. . . . Perhaps Mr. Constable, who reveals in his writing some of his own ugly scars of childhood, meant his characters to be beyond the spectrum of credibility in order to focus our attention on the terrible adjustments one must make in growing to meet his world. In any case, the matter as presented in this novel isn't worth speculating about because the whole work is too burdened with hate to be appealing." R. F. Cayton

CONSTABLE, GEORGE—Continued

Library J 92:2602 J1 '67 230w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p62 O 8 '67 170w

Time 90:102 S 15 '67 250w

Va Q R 44:xv winter '68 110w

CONSTABLE, GEORGE. The imaginocrats. 181p $4.50 Harcourt

68-12569

The imaginocrats of the title are "the men who, living in a world of imagination, have helped to create an America that escapes from the present realities by immersing itself in a meaningless world. [The main characters] are Ace Dynamo and WANL Teevie. Ace is preoccupied with becoming one of the few men who really run the world. . . . [His invention] Manipulife allows a person to live the life of any famous man or woman of history. . . . WANL operates on a different level. He is in TV and is universally hailed as a genius. His most important show deals with the adventures of a young boy who saves democracy by getting advice from the presidents sculptured on Mt. Rushmore." Best Sell

"[Constable] seems to be making an attempt to bring novelists back to an awareness of social rather than personal reality. His book depicts a vision of society that is at once funny yet very sad. . . . Although the novel starts slowly and the characters at times bore the reader, the intriguing climax and the many perceptive social comments make this a book well worth reading." Fred Rotondaro

Best Sell 28:25 Ap 15 '68 300w

Reviewed by J. M. Carroll

Library J 93:570 F 1 '68 180w

"[This] is the work of an author of rich talents casually employed. Its characters are the offspring of Dick Tracy and (arf!) Little Orphan Annie, with technical advice by Oswald Spengler. . . . Though Mr. Constable's scaffolding is collapsible, his imagery crackles with intermittent brilliance; the confrontation scene that spills out of Hector's Cafeteria into Times Square, for instance, is a clever rendition of an up-to-date Inferno. What we need next from this author is a novel to surround his apocalyptic visions." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p45 Mr 31 '68 200w

"A pop-novel blend of comic-book action, B-movie characterization, and TV dialogue. The story leaves us at its flaccid climax with slight admiration for the absurdity of Mr. Constable's vision of contemporary America, and considerably less than whelmed by his ability to present it." Joseph Haas

Sat R 51:47 Ap 13 '68 300w

CONSTANTELOS, DEMETRIOS J. The Greek Orthodox church; faith, history, and practice; foreword by Archbishop Iakovos. 127p $3.50; pa $1.95 Seabury

281.9 Orthodox Eastern Church 67-11468

"An interpretative exposition of the essential teachings and ethos of the Church intended for the educated layman." In keeping with this . . . thesis, [this book] points out the major doctrinal, ecclesiastical, and administrative differences between the Orthodox and the Latin Churches. Furthermore, the name of the church, the Mysteries (the Seven Sacraments), and the traditional practices in Orthodoxy are explained. . . . [The author] traces the historical development of the Orthodox Church, stressing the importance of the Fathers and Sacred Tradition. The last two chapters present the Orthodox Church as one of optimism and hope and deal with its role in America." (Choice) Bibliography.

"This book is too brief to cover adequately the proposed topic and reflects apologetic attitudes. . . . Useful for the interested layman; of limited use in college courses in religion."

Choice 4:1396 F '68 120w

"In presenting a warm portrait of one of the oldest and theologically most vital strains within Christendom, Father Constantelos has performed a valuable service. His well-written, authoritative work is recommended for public libraries, and non-Orthodox church libraries."

S. W. Wojtowicz

Library J 92:1163 Mr 15 '67 90w

CONSUMER REPORTS. The consumers union report on life insurance; a guide to planning and buying the protection you need. 128p $3.95; pa $1.95 Consumers union; for sale by Harper

368.3 Insurance, Life

67-28197

This book includes the material covered in the series How to Buy Life Insurance, originally published in Consumer Reports, January, February and March, 1967. Some sections, notably the one on social security, have been expanded. Contents: The product and its sellers; Policies and how they differ; Who in the family needs insurance; Social security is life insurance; Figuring out how much to buy; Should your policy be a savings account; The premium versus the price; Reading the fine print; Using and misusing this book; Life insurance planning worksheets.

"This excellent book deserves to be widely read and pondered. [It] clarifies the issues and adds to the consumers' range of informed choice." P. H. Douglas

Book World p6 My 12 '68 340w

"This book is for consumers and those who teach consumers. It is to help in the planning of your life insurance protection needs. CU [Consumers Union] is concerned with protection, not investment.' Therefore, CU does not have too many nice things to say about any kind of insurance except term insurance. Ordinary life, 20-pay life, all of the investment type policies are not very good investments for the money, say the authors. . . . The fact that most of the material here first appeared in three issues of Consumer Reports should not keep libraries from buying the book." R. L. Waters

Library J 93:2000 My 15 '68 130w

CONVENTION OF FRIENDS OF AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION IN 1871. An early view of the land-grant colleges [ed: Richard A. Hatch]; pub. for the Com. on the centennial of the Univ. of Illinois. 147p $5.50 Univ. of Ill. press

378.1 Colleges and universities. Agriculture—Study and teaching 67-20999

This volume reprints the proceedings of The Convention of Friends of Agricultural Education, held in August, 1871. "Participants in the convention included university presidents and regents, professors of agriculture and chemistry, university farm superintendents, agricultural journalists, and officials of state departments of agriculture. . . . They discussed common problems of land grant colleges: the place of experiments and of farm-labor on their campuses the advisability of coeducation, . . . of military training, . . . and of student self-government in dormitories." (Choice)

Choice 5:1013 O '68 130w

"To the lore of the land-grant college movement in American higher education the little volume under review is a rewarding addendum. . . . It illuminates and comprehends the whole range and influence of the movement in this country, and, in many of the developing nations overseas. . . . One may regard this account of that long-ago convention as a kind of 'Federalist paper,' historically important to an understanding of the land-grant college tradition." J. L. Morrill

J Higher Ed 39:417 O '68 330w

COOK, ALBERT, tr. The Odyssey. See Homer

COOK, FRED J. What so proudly we halled. 282p $5.95 Prentice-Hall

973.923 U.S.—Politics and government—1961-68-20495

In his discussion the author includes a review of the "events that led to American participation and escalation in Vietnam. . . . [He suggests] that some of the reasons . . . proffered by President Johnson and Secretary of State Rusk and former Secretary of Defense McNamara were contrived and unrealistic. Mr. Cook . . . attacks the Senate as unrepresentative and unconcerned for the welfare of the people. He blames Congress as a whole for fostering poor distribution of wealth through inequitable tax laws, and proposes . . . a vigorous program for using the minorities in active creation of wealth for the whole national economy." (Library J)

"Cook poses hard questions on some of American society's tear-stained problems. . . .

[If he] has a single answer, it is enlightened leadership. And this, he feels, is not embodied in President Johnson—as far as the Vietnam war is concerned. Pro-Johnson arguments will have to be found elsewhere; few state the dove position as eloquently as Mr. Cook. . . . Would [he] feel Hubert Humphrey would do better? This book may have mentioned his name, but I don't recall it on first reading and couldn't find it on a quick second look." C. R. Sheldon
Christian Science Monitor p11 J1 3 '68
450w

"[This book is] similar to other recent anti-Vietnam books, but . . . adds some small new dimension to what has been said before. . . . Well written, public and college libraries will find [it] representative of strong current public opinion." Marco Thorne
Library J 93:2666 J1 '68 120w

"Given different circumstances Fred Cook might have produced the most valuable political book of the year, packed as it is with information, comment and fine analysis. But much can happen between gestation and publication, and he was unlucky. Cook, who wrote his book before the end of 1967, can't be criticized for erring in the matter of Lyndon Johnson's future—but his references to George Romney, Hubert Humphrey and Robert Kennedy unfortunately seem rather dated. [However] the issues propounded [here] haven't changed. . . . Cook, as readers of The Nation would expect, has written a lively, provocative but, above all, a relevant book. His insight is sharp, his comment always to the point. He is a great one to prick bubble reputations and to explode myths. The Great Society has taken a body blow in this one." Sean Cronin
Nation 207:182 S 2 '68 1450w

Reviewed by M. L. Coit
Sat R 51:28 J1 13 '68 600w

COOK, RICHARD I. Jonathan Swift as a Tory pamphleteer. 157p $6.95 Univ. of Wash. press

828 Swift, Jonathan 67-21199

A professor of English at Kent State University examines "the political tracts that Swift composed as chief publicist for the administration of Harley and St. John between 1710 and 1714. . . . [He seeks to demonstrate that the tracts] deserve close examination, first, because of their intrinsic merit as examples of persuasive discourse; second, because of the light they shed upon Swift's use of satirical and rhetorical techniques during a formative period in his career; and, third, because of their . . . relationships with his more famous works." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by R. J. Allen
Am Hist R 73:1523 Je '68 650w

"The value of this book lies in the six . . . essays reprinted from journals [which discuss] Swift's audience (country squires), his general rhetorical approach to it, his main devices of abusing the Whigs, his use of 'characters,' his methods compared with Defoe's, and his notions of written history. The other three chapters, on Swift's politics and on his works before and after the Tory years, are too summary to be worth much. . . . For all college, university, and big city libraries."

Choice 5:774 S '68 140w

TLS p707 J1 4 '68 400w

COOKE, ALISTAIR. Talk about America. 310p $5.95 Knopf

917.3 U.S.—Civilization. National characteristics, American 68-12678

A selection from the author's B.B.C. radio broadcasts made over the past twenty years. These forty-one talks discuss manners, morals, paradoxes, peculiarities, institutions and personalities in the United States today.

Best Sell 28:309 N 1 '68 110w

"[Cooke] deserves attention on both sides of the Atlantic. . . . The witchery of the book, and a large part of its value, is the perception that throws astonishing sidelights on familiar objects. Some of these are charming as in his wonderful appreciation of H. L. Mencken, and others are appalling, as in his eyewitness account of the murder of Robert Kennedy, but all are interesting and to a vast number of Americans highly informative. Cooke is never weak, but he is least effective in his discussion of race relations in this country. All that can be said for him is faint praise because nobody has done well." G. W. Johnson

Book World p4 N 24 '68 550w

Christian Century 85:1437 N 13 '68 20w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor pB10 N 29 '68 700w

"Along the same lines, but a little more mellow [than] his 'One Man's America' [BRD 1952]. . . . Mr. Cooke has fluency, an observing eye and ear, and confidence in his opinions. Whether he is writing on Robert Frost or Lyndon Johnson, John Glenn in space or a lost submarine, Alcatraz or a Vermont town meeting he displays an interesting familiarity with intimate details about personalities, places, and usages. . . . He's heavy-handed on President Kennedy. . . . His points seem sometimes labored. Not an essential book, but polished and plausible on timely topics." John Carroll
Library J 93:4124 N 1 '68 160w

Reviewed by Jonathan Elsin

New Repub 159:33 D 14 '68 900w

Reviewed by Hugh Brogan

New Statesman 76:636 N 8 '68 270w

New Yorker 44:251 N 23 '68 110w

"[This] book can be unreservedly recommended. . . . As a guide to the seven lively arts in America, Alistair Cooke has had no rival, inside or outside the United States. But for his native land his greatest service has been the weekly 'Letter from America' on the B.B.C. . . . [He] has brought sympathy to the description and assessment of his adopted country with a brilliant style and an admirable sense of topics that are worth his use of them. . . . There are admirable 'think pieces', on the Negro (or the Black) in the Courts, in the Deep South, in Watts. . . . American life is a seamless web, and Alistair Cooke firmly refuses to believe that the web is coming apart. Such is the seduction of the style and the knowledge that one is convinced that this is true, for the moment anyway."

TLS p1191 O 24 '68 440w

COOKE, DAVID C. Vietnam: the country, the people. 147p il $4.50; lib bdg $4.14 Norton

915.97 Vietnam—Juvenile literature 68-16572

This account of the country's "legend, history, family life, villages, geography, religions, language, food, traditions, and superstitions" discusses how the people of this . . . land differ from other people in Asia and how they differ from people of the Western world. [Index.] Ages ten to fourteen." (Publisher's note)

Best Sell 28:323 N 1 '68 70w

"The various forms of religious beliefs (from those of the Cau Dai and the Hoa Hao to what might be described as the all-purpose Buddhist) are discussed in the simplest of terms. The old legends, such as that of the Kindly Dragon who married a fairy princess and populated Vietnam, are presented with a smattering of both ancient and modern history. Cooke gives us intimate insight into the cultural background of the Vietnamese. . . . He also gives us an interesting look at the belief of the Vietnamese in astrology and palmistry. [This book] will help the young reader better understand what Southeast Asia is and who its people are." Robin Moore

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p48 My 5 '68
250w

COOKE, HERWARD LESTER. Painting lessons from the great masters; pub. in coop. with the Nat. gallery of art. 239p il col il $19.50 Watson-Guptill

751.4 Painting—Study and teaching. Painting—Technique 67-21788

Eighty-five masterpieces from the fifteenth to the twentieth centuries are reproduced in color. "Comments by the Curator of Painting on one aspect of each work—use of line, methods of achieving an illusion of three-dimensionality, etc.—are accompanied by diagrams and details." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"To the sensitive student, to be told what he is to see, and in what order ('optical pathways'), will surely seem pedantic. There is good advice, to see the pictures at firsthand, for example, and a particularly appropriate aphorism from Georges Braque (not represented among the reproductions), 'In art there is only one thing of value, that which cannot be explained in words.' Index.

COOKE, H. L.—Continued

Choice 5:334 My '68 130w

"Mr. Cooke knows the value of history and is not prone to give oversimplified advice. The word 'probably' occurs frequently in his text, and his A-B-C-D diagrams of painting details do not propose to reveal everything there is to say about art. One of the marvels of this book is that all of the illustrations are from works in the National Gallery, a truly impressive display. And the quality of color printing is beautiful indeed, especially in some of the Renaissance work which depends upon subtlety of tone for its effect, rather than bright, shiny hues. This book is a treasure, if you need a how-to-do-it book, and well worth the price." R. A. Beale

Library J 93:980 Mr 1 '68 150w

COOKE, RUPERT CROFT— See Croft-Cooke, R.

COOKRIDGE, E. H. From Battenberg to Mountbatten. 313p il $6.50 Day

920 Mountbatten family 68-11292

This history of the family of "Earl Mountbatten of Burma, Philip Duke of Edinburgh, and Prince Charles [begins in 1851 with the] origin of the House of Battenberg when Hesse Prince Alexander made a morganatic marriage." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This story never lags. . . . The general reader will be overwhelmed by the Mountbattens and by the Battenbergs of earlier years, but the author includes Earl Mountbatten's helpful genealogical table of several years ago. As period history this is romantic reading, but the reader will note that not all of the hundreds of descendants of Prince Alexander were as daring as he. This book is for all general history and biography collections." K. T. Willis

Library J 93:179 Ja 15 '68 110w

Reviewed by Desmond MacNamara

New Statesman 72:524 O 7 '66 160w

"A keyhole historian of some pertinacity, the author spent four years, we are told, researching the names he drops so lavishly and the stories he tells so apocryphally. Some interesting new material is also presented, but, in general, the Mountbattens deserve better than this. A truly dreadful book, it is bound to win the hearts of all who dote on the social pages."

N Y Times Bk R p26 Mr 31 '68 270w

New Yorker 44:135 F 24 '68 100w

COOKRIDGE, E. H. The third man. 281p pl $5.95 Putnam

327 Philby, Harold Adrian Russell. Spies [68-84736]

Kim Philby is the third man in the disappearance of "the British diplomatic officers, Maclean and Burgess, who, suspected of Russian espionage activity against both Great Britain and the United States, reappeared five years later as 'defectors' to Moscow. Philby is the man who recruited them into the Soviet espionage apparatus and later gave them the 'tip' to disappear." (Best Sell) Index.

"[This] book by one who knew many of the personages involved may or may not make matters clear in summation. . . . The story of the 'Unholy Three' as the author terms these double-agent spies, may be the greatest spy story of the century. This does not make the book readable. Repetitious, muddled in time sequence, concentrating more on the flamboyant activities of Burgess and Maclean, the book never brings Philby 'center stage.' . . . The style is pedestrian. . . . There is much irrelevant documentation and detail, some of which renders the professed 'inside' information suspect." C. J. Maguire

Best Sell 28:36 Ap 15 '68 500w

Reviewed by Norman Horrocks

Library J 93:2249 Je 1 '68 60w

Reviewed by Anthony LeJeune

Nat R 20:505 My 21 '68 550w

Reviewed by David Wise

New Repub 158:36 My 25 '68 410w

"[The author has] produced a clear and coherent description of the background and course of the Philby episode, which includes also a great deal of detail about the cloak-and-dagger people in this country, about the Communist cell which existed in the 'thirties at Trinity College Cambridge, and of course about Burgess and Maclean. There is a certain amount of guesswork by Mr Cookridge, but it is almost always intelligent guesswork, and the few factual mistakes I was able to spot from my slight knowledge of Philby are not important. If there is anyone who still wants to find out what it was all about, The Third Man is a good introduction." Bickham Sweet-Escott

New Statesman 75:144 F 2 '68 400w

"Some of [the book's] confident assertions are hopelessly wrong. . . . [But] in one area at least [the author] gives valuable personal evidence. As a Social Democrat in Austria, he was personally involved in the Putsch of 1934 by which Dollfuss destroyed the Social Democratic party and established his own 'bourgeois' dictatorship. On that occasion he met Philby, who was then acting with the communists. Since Philby contrived afterwards to bury his communist past, this glimpse of the only period in which he openly revealed his loyalty is of great importance, and Mr. Cookridge's otherwise shaky book seems to me worth reading for this episode alone." H. R. Trevor-Roper

N Y Rev of Books 10:6 My 9 '68 1050w

Reviewed by Christopher Felix

N Y Times Bk R p8 My 26 '68 750w

Reviewed by K. S. Giniger

Sat R 51:29 Ag 3 '68 250w

Time 91:108 Je 7 '68 160w

"Mr. Cookridge has personal experience of intelligence work, he met Philby more than once at crucial points in his career and, by personal investigation and the use of a wide circle of relevant acquaintances, he has been able to produce a well-written and plausible narrative. Though his title is taken from the currently most newsworthy member of what he calls the Unholy Trinity, he deals equally fully with the first and second men, Burgess and Maclean. . . . [The story] is well narrated . . . with much vivid and disagreeable detail."

TLS p271 Mr 14 '68 550w

COOLEY, LELAND FREDERICK. Condition pink. 259p $4.95 Doubleday

67-11735

"Mr. Cooley tells what happens when General Hugh Trotter, Q.M. Corps (Ret.) learns that California is about to be invaded from the south by hordes of Chinese Communists. Actually, the U.S. Marines are on maneuvers and the opposing forces are called the Blues and the Reds. The General learns of the 'Red forces' and his imagination runs wild. He orders out his volunteer army, called Counterforce, and this 38-man force, including the Women's Auxiliary, stands ready, in a canyon armed with bow and arrows, shotguns, and air pistols." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:339 N 15 '67 70w

Reviewed by Stanley Swanson

Library J 92:2603 Jl '67 110w

"[A] wild tale of a head-on clash between a civilian militia and the U.S. Marines. 'General' Trotter, vociferous leader of a citizens' group in a small southern California community, interprets the rumors from the nearby military base as a confirmation of his firm belief that America faces immediate destruction by enemies from within and without. . . . [In this] comedy of errors, Trotter's chief antagonist is the level-headed teen-age admirer of one of the 'General's' female recruits. Some of the language is rough, but most YA's will enjoy the broad satire and amusing situations." Dorothy English

Library J 93:313 Ja 15 '68 140w [YA]

"A mousetrapping maneuver that begins as satire and ends as burlesque, when it tangles with the bona fide military. Mr. Cooley's good humor never fails him in this tolerant spoof of superpatriotism." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p68 N 26 '67 90w

COOLIDGE, ARCHIBALD C. Charles Dickens as serial novelist [by] Archibald C. Coolidge, Jr. 256p $6 Iowa state univ. press

823 Dickens, Charles 67-12135

Based on a doctoral dissertation, the main thesis of this study is that "Dickens was not only a symbolist 'poet,' but a technician whose work involved a large element of mechanical arrangement. . . . [The first half] is a general treatment of the art of the novel." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Coolidge fails to provide all the evidence to support [his thesis] . . . and also falls short of the high standards set by [J.] Butt and [K.] Tillotson's Dickens at Work [BRD 1958]. The best part of the present study, by far, is the first half, which . . . should be required reading for all students of the novel because it truly provides some fresh insights into the subject. The analysis of Dickens as serialist is curiously hurried, impressionistic, and often not germane to the topic at hand. Too many assertions remain undeveloped, and too often the author supplies the reader with a cliché rather than an insight. Useful appendices on installments, stock characters; descriptive bibliography. Recommended, with reservations."

Choice 4:1240 Ja '68 110w

"In his preface [the author] records that he discovered some dozen years ago that Dickens's techniques were related to the fact that his novels were serialized, a discovery resulting from the collection of 25,000 separate facts. . . . In all he claims seven discoveries, or, as he calls them, 'firsts'. Mr. Coolidge traces the influence of earlier writers on Dickens's technique; he relates metaphors and symbols in the novels to the patterns inherent in writing for serialization; he analyses plots. . . . But in all this there is little new."

TLS p1265 D 28 '67 350w

COOLIDGE, OLIVIA. George Bernard Shaw. 226p il $3.95 Houghton

B or 92 Shaw, George Bernard—Juvenile literature 68-14292

A biography of the "famous British playwright, music critic, novelist, essayist, Fabian socialist, wit and egotist. . . . Grade seven and up." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 28:154 J1 1 '68 40w

"It would be hard to overpraise this book, which so skillfully places Shaw—all ninety years of him—against the society he set out to improve. . . . I read this biography with pleasure and so could most people. But teenagers, to whom it's directed, will find it especially exciting. . . . Mrs. Coolidge reminds us that the plays were but one side of a double effort; the other, the Fabian Society, dragged a reluctant England into a reappraisal of government's responsibility to its people. Shaw wished to be used. It would delight him if young protesters today should take courage from this intelligent account of his life." E. B. Hungerford

Book World p10 (children's issue) My 5 '68 250w [YA]

Reviewed by S. D. Long

Horn Bk 44:435 Ag '68 300w

Reviewed by B. L. MacDuffie

Library J 93:4412 N 15 '68 130w

"The author is a professional and knows all the tricks of the trade, but she makes no compromises in telling the story of Shaw for young people. In fact, except for the modest length, one would not know her book is intended for young readers if it were not so labeled by the publisher. This is a first-rate account of Shaw's life, works and achievements. . . . The growth of [his] art and thinking is more coherently traced here than in some of the longer books on Shaw. The high-school student should find this book readable, and the college student will be surprised by its usefulness. I strongly recommend it for all adult readers too." G. W. Allen

N Y Times Bk R p22 Je 23 '68 220w

COOMBS, CHARLES. Motorcycling. 96p il $3.50; lib bdg $3.32 Morrow

796.7 Motorcycles—Juvenile literature 68-23911

This guide to motorcycling concentrates on "safety factors (helmets, handlebars of the right size), the essential steps in learning how to operate a two-wheeler and the importance of checking over an unfamiliar machine thoroughly before trying it out on the road. . . . Ages eleven to fifteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[This is] a large-print, generously illustrated volume pointing young readers along safe paths to two-wheeled adventure. . . . [It] makes the point that close attention to the other fellow's driving may make the difference between winning or losing a race, between enjoying a spotless highway record or tragically marring it. . . . Tips are given not only on how to shop for a machine but also on how to drive." F. H. Guidry

Christian Science Monitor pB11 N 7 '68 190w

"[This is] an excellent book for an impulsive teen-ager, especially one wearied of parental words of advice, for it says the things a wise parent might say, with the added authority of the printed word. It wastes little time on technical points. . . . [Included is] a horrendous list of highway hazards awaiting the cyclist. . . . It should impress even the coolest beginner; impressionable parents had better skip it to assure their nightly rest." Paul Walker

N Y Times Bk R p38 S 8 '68 210w

COOMBS, DAVID, comp. Churchill: his paintings. See Churchill, W.

COOPER, BRYAN. The battle of Cambrai [Eng title: The ironclads of Cambrai]. 243p il maps $6.95 Stein & Day

940.4 Cambrai, Battle of, 1917. Tanks (Military science) 68-14860

In this history of one of the battles of the first World War, the author describes the development of the tank and "its contribution to the [victory of the British]. . . . Cooper has consulted German sources and official documents." (Choice) Index.

"No recent monograph has been published to compare with the present book, but works on armored warfare by Fuller and Liddell Hart confirm conclusions reached by Cooper. . . . [He] has overdrawn the heroism of tank crews, but his emphasis on the role of the tank in battle is justified. Recommended for large and small libraries."

Choice 5:854 S '68 110w

"In this popular account, . . . the focus is upon the . . . newly invented tanks, introduced by the British, heralding the revival of mobile warfare. . . . Mr. Cooper, a British historian, is guilty of hyperbole, however, when he proclaims that the tank 'showed that forever afterwards, horses would be replaced by a new kind of cavalry—an armoured cavalry on wheels and tracks.' We are way ahead of that now: mobility is achieved by the air cavalry of Vietnam. . . . [However, he] has told an interesting story well. [This] is a book which should interest the general reader and one that merits consideration for acquisition by public libraries." E. G. Hamann

Library J 93:992 Mr 1 '68 210w

TLS p244 Mr 15 '68 320w

COOPER, BRYAN. North Sea oil—the great gamble [by] Bryan Cooper and T. F. Gaskell. 178p il maps $5.95 Bobbs

622 Petroleum. Gas, Natural. North Sea 66-28029

An "account of the current search for gas and oil that is taking place under the North Sea. . . . Descriptions are given of the various searching methods and equipment used to select promising drilling site. Drilling towers, equipment, and some of the problems encountered are also related. Geological history pertinent to the understanding of oil and gas formation is presented in nontechnical terms." (Library J)

"A dramatic account. . . . The content lies between engineering and economics. Will appeal to limited readership in the U.S., but should provide entertaining reading on an important frontier in technology. Cooper and Gaskell, an experienced petroleum scientist and a professional writer with petroleum experience, have produced a 'men against the sea' adventure book with brief but accurate supporting information regarding geology, engineering, and a segment of the British economic pattern. Appendices, tables, and maps provide information on companies, exploration bases, and activity sites in the British sector of the North Sea."

Choice 5:646 J1 '68 100w

"People involved in some aspect of the North Sea oil scramble or those interested in the overall picture will find this book of great interest. Recommended for economic geography and petroleum collections." R. E. Swinburne

Library J 92:1024 Mr 1 '67 200w

COOPER, DAVID. Psychiatry and anti-psychiatry. 128p $4.50 Barnes & Noble 616.89 Schizophrenia 67-79673

The author proposes that the schizophrenic "person should be looked at in his natural human context rather than as a mental patient. [He] states that usual psychiatry progressively makes the person conform to the identity as a patient and his acts are then systematically ruled as invalid. Cooper relates his orientation to the schizophrenia problem by reference to family studies. . . . [He includes] a description of an experimental therapeutic unit for young schizophrenic patients based on a family oriented ideology." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[The] quite impressive results [of Cooper's study] will cause most professionals to look again at their theoretical commitments. For the nonprofessional an exciting humanistic approach in psychotherapy of pioneer thinkers is afforded. Interesting reading and a challenge to conventional psychological theory of schizophrenia and its treatment."

Choice 5:1046 O '68 200w

"Dr. Cooper, the noted British psychiatrist and colleague of R. D. Laing, discusses schizophrenia and its therapy via two approaches, the existential and the phenomenological. . . . This reviewer follows Dr. Cooper in decrying the use of . . . dehumanizing . . . techniques, but [his] sardonic undertone tends to diminish his critical probing. . . . In his reading list, [he] does not include such authors as H. S. Sullivan, F. Fromm-Reichmann, and most important, Karen Horney. Much of what Dr. Cooper discovers to be novel is essentially rediscovery. However, his book has an exuberance and a freshness that make it well worth reading for any worker in psychiatry, psychoanalysis, clinical psychology and allied fields. Recommended." Louis De Rosier
Library J 92:2590 J1 '67 250w

COOPER, KENNETH H. Aerobics; with a foreword by Richard L. Bohannon; and a pref. by William Proxmire. 253p $4.95 Evans, M.&co; for sale by Lippincott

613.7 Exercise. Physical fitness 67-27297

"'Aerobics' refers to that form of exercise which forces the body to consume large amounts of oxygen, exercises which must be vigorous enough to produce a sustained heart rate of 150 beats per minute. The concept presented in this book is the result of research and experiment by Dr. Cooper in connection with his work with Air Force pilots and astronauts." (Library J)

"Cooper's book is the latest and best in the long series of 'run for your life,' publications which have in effect popularized the principles of exercise for the sake of the heart. . . . Cooper's contribution consists primarily of establishing a point system by which different exercises can be compared and equated on the basis of their anaerobic training effect. The book is written in an informal, anecdotal style which makes for easy reading."

Choice 5:996 O '68 120w

"[The author] states a convincing case for the value of his approach. The case histories are impressive, citing benefits to the physically unfit including those with pathological conditions. A valuable book for public, college, and high school libraries." M. L. Garvey
Library J 93:2513 Je 15 '68 130w

COOPERMAN, STANLEY. World War I and the American novel. 273p $6.50 Johns Hopkins press

810.9 American literature—History and criticism. War in literature 66-28506

The aim of this study "is not merely to 'criticize' a literary period, but rather to experience it, to get at something of the essence which made of the twenties so vital a decade in American letters. . . . This book, in short, represents an attempt to view literature as a dynamic 'echo of meaning' within and part of cultural process. . . . The organization is thematic rather than chronological. . . . While the focus of attention remains on the fiction, [other] sources—memoirs, historical studies, military critiques—[have] been utilized." (Foreword) Parts of this book have been previously published in various literary periodicals. Bibliography. Index.

"A chapter on the criticism not only places many earlier analyses in clearer perspectives but also shows very plainly the differences in tone and feeling that preceded and followed World War II. . . . [This is] a rich contribution to our understanding. A possible limitation of this study is that the thematic approach requires the return to a particular novel or novelist in chapter after chapter; but on the other hand Mr. Cooperman writes with great charm and spirit and reads with an impressive discrimination and taste. He says essential things about the works he discusses, and . . . has given us an exceedingly interesting and useful book." C. C. Walcutt

Am Lit 40:98 Mr '68 800w

Reviewed by D. J. Dooley

Canadian Forum 48:18 Ap '68 1200w

"This well-written and thoroughly researched book offers an intensive scrutiny of the causes for American involvement in World War I. . . . [Mr. Cooperman] has evidently read every novel, newspaper, journal, and piece of criticism produced in this (to him) benighted period, and his service lies in getting it all under one cover while being only occasionally repetitive and shrill." R. J. Thompson
Library J 92:1491 Ap 1 '67 200w

Reviewed by H. R. Wolf

Nation 206:834 Je 24 '68 500w

"[This] book shows many signs of battle fatigue. Mr. Cooperman often writes like a dogged infantryman determined to soldier on to the end of the paragraph. . . . [He does not say] anything particularly new about war or literature, but his earlier chapters on American rhetoric at the start of the war are well done, and informative."

TLS p247 Mr 14 '68 220w

"The major theme of this monograph is not very original. It is well known that writers like Hemingway, Faulkner, Dos Passos, and Cummings depicted the First World War as inglorious, unromantic, inhuman, and absurd. . . . Cooperman writes well, and this quality, together with copious illustration . . . gives the subject fresh interest from a cultural standpoint. But Cooperman's criticism adds little to our understanding of the important writers mentioned above. And the book suffers from formlessness. . . . A good job of editing would have helped the book."

Yale R 57:XXVI O '67 200w

COOVER, ROBERT. The Universal Baseball Association inc. J. Henry Waugh, prop. 242p $4.95 Random house

68-14517

"Henry Waugh is an accountant who has devised a baseball game which he plays with dice in his squalid apartment over a delicatessen. The Association is an eight-club league. Each team plays 84 games a season. We get in for the 56th season. . . . [Henry] keeps financial ledgers for each club showing attendance, receipts, . . . and so on. . . . [The players] aren't a particularly attractive lot, the Sycamore Flyns and Swanee Laws and Witness Yorks of the Association. They are as Henry made them, mostly boozy, lecherous and selfishly scheming, and they constantly intrude on his other life even when he is drinking in Pete's place or lechering after a gap-toothed B-girl named Hettie. (To Henry, Pete is really Jake Bradley, one of his old ball players.)" (Book World)

Reviewed by Richard Conlin

Best Sell 28:179 Ag 1 '68 170w

"Mr. Coover's ingenious invention gives us a believable picture of a lonely man hagridden by his hobby and loving the hag. There is a mildly amusing satire on the reverence with which some players, some sportswriters and some fans regard statistics. . . . A little fantasy goes a long way, though, and after an imaginary beanball kills an imaginary player named Damon Rutherford, the author never finds the strike zone again. It all becomes a smothering bore. The prose style is the frenetic staccato of an emotional sportscaster. . . . In moments of excitement this can be fairly effective, but the author never stops shouting. . . . [He is] dedicated to the ruthless stamping out of the simple declarative sentence." Red Smith
Book World p4 J1 '68 650w

Reviewed by J. A. Phillips

Library J 93:2520 Je 15 '68 150w

Reviewed by Richard Gilman

New Repub 159:35 Ag 17 '68 900w

"Baseball and theology might seem to make strange bedfellows. But, like a medieval schoolman who could make theology out of just about anything, Coover has spliced the two together and produced a species of baseball scripture. . . . It would be a pity if the baseball buffs were put off by the mythology, or the mythology rooters dismayed by the baseball. Coover has in fact written a fine baseball novel, the best I can remember in an admittedly thin field, and based obviously on a study of the texts. His atmosphere is turn-of-the-century early Lardner. . . . The language is just right—colorful but not fancy. . . . Not to read it because you don't like baseball is like not reading Balzac because you don't like boarding houses." Wilfrid Sheed

N Y Times Bk R p5 J1 7 '68 1150w

Reviewed by P. L. Sandberg

Sat R 51:25 Ag 31 '68 600w

"Among other things, [this novel] is a humorous evocation of the characters and the ambience that have given baseball its mythic quality. Bernard Malamud's The Natural [BRD 1952] was a strikingly effective allegory of the baseball hero as a contemporary Sir Percival who in the end is destroyed by the myth-hungers. Coover is morally emphatic. He does suggest that God cannot forestall man's doom, and that man can destroy himself when he relinquishes reality for illusion. Coover's first novel, The Origin of the Brunists [BRD 1966], dealt with the corrupting influence of religious fanaticism. Baseball is more ambitious but is flawed by the fact that Coover's fantasy characters are too detailed to stand as metaphorical figures."

Time 91:32 Je 28 '68 760w

Va Q R 44:cxlv autumn '68 90w

COPLEY, FRANK O., ed & tr. On old age; and, On friendship. See Cicero, M. T.

COPP, DEWITT S. Incident at Boris Gleb; the tragedy of Newcomb Mott. 280p il $4.95 Doubleday

327.47 Russia—Foreign relations—U.S. U.S.—Foreign relations—Russia. Mott, Newcomb 67-22444

"In 1965, Newcomb Mott, a young American tourist, apparently strayed across the Russian border. He was arrested, tried, convicted, and he allegedly committed suicide while in custody. . . . This book is an account of young Mott's story, and an investigation of his death. . . . [The author] believes Newcomb Mott was murdered. He offers . . . evidence in support of this thesis, and presents several theories regarding possible reasons for murder" (Library J) Index.

"The book is readable and interesting, and much of what Mr. Copp says is plausible. However, it is marred by two things. Mr. Copp's treatment of some incidents is semi-fictional, and he includes irrelevant material, some of which is derogatory to Russia and Russians in general. His arguments may be valid, but this kind of treatment does not add to their credibility. As an account of the case, the book may be useful to some libraries." J. S. Robotnam

Library J 93:547 F 1 '68 220w

Reviewed by Larissa Rulofson

Library J 93:1823 Ap 15 '68 100w [YA]

Reviewed by W. J. Gill

Nat R 20:755 J1 30 '68 900w

"Copp relates this strange case from the point of view of Mott's parents, who feel, not unnaturally, that their Government somehow failed them and their son. Mr. Copp, a free-lance whose previous works have indicated his faith in flying saucers and Chiang Kai-shek, writes in a mixture of Steve Canyon jingoism and Walter Lord fascination with irrelevant detail. But he makes clear the dignity of Mott, the agony of his parents and the callousness of governmental machinery. He makes a convincing case, too, that Mott did not commit suicide but was murdered—though precisely by whom, where and why remains a mystery."

N Y Times Bk R p26 Mr 17 '68 300w

"The U.S. State Department does not fare too well in this pathetic, angry narrative, which [carries] the endorsement of the parents [of Newcomb Mott]." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:43 Mr 30 '68 90w

CORBETT, EDWARD M. Quebec confronts Canada. 336p $8.95 Johns Hopkins press
917.1 Canada—Politics and government. French-Canadians 67-24631

The author "devotes the first part of his study to an analysis of the ferment within the French-speaking population of Quebec during the postwar period. . . . [In the second part] he considers the political, economic, and social implications of separatism, with particular regard to the proposals for adapting the Constitution to Québécois demands." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:1212 N '68 70w

"For anyone interested in finding out what is going on in Quebec these days, there can scarcely be a better source to turn to than this book. . . . [The author] examines Canada's 'French fact' with a thoroughness and a dispassion that throw much new light on the perennially vexed problem of biracialism in Canada. . . . Of particular interest to librarians is a section on the culture of Quebec, in which French-Canadian writing and publishing are shown to be of greater consequence than is generally realized. . . . If this valuable study does nothing more, it is sure to convince the reader that le Québec libre is in existence right now, and will continue to exist. . . . For all collections serving the general reader, informed layman and specialist—and in Canada certainly." Peter Gellatly

Library J 92:4016 N 1 '67 270w

CORBETT, SCOTT. What makes a plane fly? pictures by Len Darwin. 58p $2.95 Little 629.132 Aerodynamics—Juvenile literature. Flight—Juvenile literature 67-19793

"The author describes the ways in which the shape of an airplane and the design of its wings affect performance; the structural and operational control of flight deviations; the parts of an airplane, and the physical forces that affect flight." (Sat R) Index and glossary. "Grades three to six." (Library J)

"All aspects of flight are described in an accurate text that includes discussions of the operation of propellers and jet engines. The many diagrams are relevant and helpful. The book requires no background in the subject and will be useful as a first book for children interested in aviation." P. W. Alley

Library J 93:1797 Ap 15 '68 70w

"Simple experiments selected by the author help to illustrate . . . clearly [the forces acting on bodies in motion]. The principles discussed apply to airplanes flying at less than the speed of sound, not to the supersonic ships of tomorrow."

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p52 My '68 60w

"Clear, simple diagrams and easily readable type-face augment the lucid and well-organized text to make a difficult and complicated subject clear in brief, logical steps." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:39 Mr 16 '68 70w

CORE, GEORGE, ed. Regionalism and beyond. See Stewart, R.

CORITA, SISTER. Footnotes and headings; a play-pray book. 49p col il $6 Herder & Herder 818 67-27568

In this collection of serigraphs, Sister Corita "has also written a continuous text, a kind of prose poem interspersed with quotations. Through the first nine pages, this text is superimposed on the graphics; then it is placed beneath them in the form of extended footnotes. Words and phrases from the text reoccur in the graphics, headlined and jumbled, and the process is sometimes reversed. Quotations spring up from all sides: from Rilke and the OED, Martin Marty and a senior editor of Look. . . . A variety of themes . . . [including] selfhood and social concern, eating and celebration, community and communication. . . . hippies, St. John's bread, Wonderbread, Camels and the Bible [appear] side by side." (America)

"Sister Corita's serigraphs are deservedly well known. They are original and beautiful in their color, form and use of lettering. She makes us see the commonplace in a fresh context; a work or letter, an ad, even a cliché, takes new shape turned sideways, upside down, stacked or splashed on her brilliant backgrounds. Her work communicates the wonder and concern of a dedicated Christian talent. Throughout, [she] uses a conscious and complex interplay of pictures and word, meaning and imagination. . . . In future editions, I hope the subtitle, 'A Play-Pray Book,' is dropped. No point is made by using labels for a book that fits none of them. Even Marshall McLuhan's The Medium is the Massage [BRD 1967] is not comparable. It was a provocative brain-teaser; this is a work of art." J. F. Cotter

CORITA, SISTER—Continued

America 117:386 O 7 '67 500w

Reviewed by Nancy McGinley
Critic 26:75 D-Ja '67-'68 300w

"While we have lately had the Singing Nun and the Flying Nun, Sister Corita is a new kind of nun altogether: a Pop-Art Nun who combines collage layouts taken from hard-sell billboard ads with her own semi-poetic humanitarian jottings. Her short book reads like a turned-on Baltimore Catechism with jazz accompaniment. Although the authorities cited in the blurb—Robert Lowell, Marshall McLuhan, Ben Shahn—are adulatory, as is Daniel Berrigan in his poem of introduction, Sister Corita's mixed-media pitch strikes one as just a little too effulgent, a little too uncritically lovey-dovey. The format here is ingenious and as modern as tomorrow, but it is still a capitulation to vulgar fashion." R. J. Thompson
Library J 93:83 Ja 1 '68 120w

CORKRAN, DAVID H. The Creek frontier, 1540-1783. 343p pl maps $5.95 Univ. of Okla. press

970.3 Creek Indians. U.S.—History—Colonial period. U.S.—History—Revolution 67-10143

The author of "The Cherokee Frontier: Conflict and Survival, 1740-62 [BRD 1963], traces the history of the Creeks from initial white contact through the American Revolution." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"In telling the story from the Creek point of view . . . [the author] emphasizes the influence in policy making of such institutional factors as the iron-clad character of the clan tie, the prestigious influence of the elders, and the tribal expectation that the young men conduct themselves with boldness." Although he does not call it such, Corkran's is in essence a study of Creek foreign policy. . . . In his last two chapters the author tells of Creek reaction to the American Revolution. . . . One of the book's best features is its assessments of the contributions of individual leaders to Creek statecraft" W. N. Franklin

Am Hist R 73:584 D '67 340w
Choice 5:401 My '68 200w

"[This is] essentially a diplomatic history of the Creek 'nation' from the founding of South Carolina in 1670 to the end of the Revolutionary War. . . . Specialists in Creek history may, of course, find omissions and problems unsolved or unrecognized. . . . Most readers, however, with an interest in American Indian and colonial diplomatic history will, and should, heartily appreciate this thoroughly researched and well-written book." K. W. Porter

J Am Hist 54:634 D '67 550w

"Highly detailed, this study sometimes overwhelms the reader, but it is clearly the most thorough exposition of the subject available. Corkran is free of the sentimentality which afflicts some historians of Indian affairs, and he recognizes the benefits and the problems resulting to the Creeks from white contact. This is a book by a scholar and for scholars." W. T. Hagan

Library J 92:2154 Je 1 '67 100w

CORLISS, WILLIAM R. Mysteries of the universe. 216p il $5.95 Crowell

520 Astronomy 67-23019

"Eleven chapters, each on a separate topic, form the basis of this book. Subjects such as quasars, stellar evolution, and lunar luminescence are . . . discussed in a straightforward and scientific manner." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"The book is well written and up-to-date. Corliss is careful to point out what is known and what is hypothesized about each topic. There are several interesting discussions on the role of fact and theory in scientific progress. The level of the book makes it suitable for supplementary reading for an introductory course, and it brings together material that would otherwise be hard to find."

Choice 5:643 JI '68 110w

"Here, several of the most interesting aspects of current cosmological research are discussed for the adult layman. Among topics covered are: the 'Big-Bang' and 'Steady-State' theories, . . . the relativity theory, radioactivity dating, Martian 'canals,' and the possibility of life on other planets. Mr. Corliss, a science writer, is particularly good at illuminating the history of various scientific controversies, including those that continue today. . . . [He] fails to reveal that his solution of the 'twin paradox' in special relativity theory is a minority view. . . . Otherwise, his errors are trivial, and the work as a whole merits purchase by public and college libraries." J. W. Weigel
Library J 92:2794 Ag '67 180w

CORMIER, ANNE DENIEUL. See Denieul-Cormier, A.

CORNELL, THOMAS C., ed. A penny a copy; readings from The Catholic worker; ed. by Thomas C. Cornell and James H. Forest. 271p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

261.8 Catholic Church. Church and social problems 68-18870

A collection of articles dating from 1933 to the present from the monthly organ of The Catholic Worker movement.

Reviewed by W. L. Lucey
America 119:563 N 30 '68 50w

"The Catholic Worker movement . . . is still going strong. Its co-founder and moving spirit, Dorothy Day, has never written systematically about theology or political science, yet she has probably had a greater impact upon her church's social thought and action than any other American of her times. For over the years, the Catholic Worker movement has inspired Catholics to innovation in the trade unions, the black freedom struggle, ecumenism and both the pacifist and the peace movements. . . . The articles collected in this book brilliantly catch the mood and genius of this undefinable, utopian and utterly relevant community." Michael Harrington

Book World p4 S 1 '68 750w

Reviewed by Anthony Towne
Christian Century 85:1575 D 11 '68 700w

"The sponsors [of] the Catholic Worker, a little paper begun in the depths of the Depression, were a small group of zealots, their mission to the poorest and most despised. Today's hippies are hardly austere and self-sacrificing enough to qualify as their spiritual descendants but they should read this book. . . . The contributors are a mixed group who vary in writing ability with some well-known names among them: Dorothy Day, Thomas Merton, Jacques Maritain, John Cogley. In each of the articles the sincerity of the writer comes across; many of their early utterances merit being called prophecies, especially on the subjects of pacifism and Communism. This is a book that deserves to be read, and libraries should buy it." M. L. Garvey

Library J 93:2016 My 15 '68 150w

Reviewed by James Finn
New Repub 159:35 S 28 '68 1250w

CORNMAN, JAMES W. Metaphysics, reference, and language. 288p $7.50 Yale univ. press

160 Analysis (Philosophy) 66-21512

"Assuming that philosophers' questions about reality are different from non-philosophers', [the author] argues for an inductive approach to metaphysical problems, exemplified in the mind-body problem. . . . As a basis for his theory, [the author] investigates various theories of linguistic reference (Carnap, Ayer, Wittgenstein, Nowell-Smith and others), attempting to break the stalemate these impose by certain modifications which he terms 'supplementation by ostensive indication,' a form of 'legitimate' assumption." (Choice) Index.

"A somewhat similar approach is made by Jerrold Katz, The Philosophy of Language [BRD 1966]. . . . Cornman addresses himself primarily to scholars, and while many may not agree with certain generalizations he makes, they will find the precision, clarity, and thoroughness of his analysis fruitful notwithstanding. The question remains whether undergraduate students will have the patience to follow the numerous though necessary distinctions made. Adequate footnotes and index; no bibliography. Of benefit to students with some background in the philosophy of linguistics."

Choice 4:298 My '67 150w

"Cornman's choice of jargon gives him an elegantly stated problematic, but at a price. A further disadvantage is that manipulating various pieces of this jargon produces some longueurs; one sometimes feels that too many nails are being pounded into the same coffin. But this is a minor defect in an intriguing, carefully argued, and valuable book. Cornman's criticisms of many fashionable paradigms of philosophical argument are conclusive and damning. His survey of the various approaches taken by linguistic philosophers to the mind-body problem (his chief sample of an ontological question) is comprehensive, subtle, and enlightening. The book is full of insightful analyses of the presuppositions and tactics of various schools of analytic philosophy. No one who reads it will be able to avoid some healthy self-questioning about his own metaphysical assumptions." Richard Rorty
J Philos 64:770 N 23 '67 1750w

CORNWALL, JAMES MARSHALL. See Marshall-Cornwall, J.

CORNWELL, DAVID JOHN MOORE. See Le Carré, J.

CORSON, WILLIAM R. The betrayal. 317p $5.95 Norton

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- 68-15753

The author criticizes American strategy in Vietnam. "As a marine lieutenant colonel he developed a . . . pacification program disposing his command of 1200 marines over nearly 100 hamlets and fighting 'the other war' to build and rehabilitate rather than to kill and destroy. . . . Corson feels [Americans] have lost the real war [despite] . . . overwhelming firepower [because of] the confused morass of fuzzy moral and political attitudes, ignorance of the real issues involved, and the inability to cope with our South Vietnamese allies. . . . [He here] recounts, both historically and thematically, the concatenation of events that have led us to our present position. [In conclusion he suggests ways to enhance the stated political objectives of the United States]." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. D. Hayes

America 119:191 S 14 '68 650w

"There is liveliness of style [in this book] but not originality; [it is] marked principally by the insertion of many trite cliché phrases. . . . The book may have some sense in it here and there; but it is so loaded with vituperation that it distracts the serious reader. The author's serious program for a way out of the imbroglio is a patchwork of proposals sandwiched in with the official Joint Program of 1962 and the Manila program of 1966. . . . For the Army generals Mr. Corson has no good words, in fact ridicules General Westmoreland; but two Marine generals he thinks superb." Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 28:164 J1 15 '68 1200w

"A remarkably well-balanced, judicious and factually accurate book. Highly recommended for libraries." E. J. Cutler

Library J 93:2665 J1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Z. B. Grant

New Repub 159:28 O 26 '68 1750w

Reviewed by Charles Mohr

N Y Times Bk ■ p20 S 1 '68 1400w

"[The] bitter title sums up how [the author] feels about our mistakes and misdeeds in South Vietnam. It is, by turns, a passionate, accusing, ironic, and caustic dissection of what ails us in Vietnam, but the book is also a detailed, closely reasoned analysis of these same problems by a scholarly man of action who cares deeply enough about his country to lay it on the line. . . . [Like W. Lederer in Our Own Worst Enemy, BRD 1968,] Corson assails U.S. policymakers for adhering rigidly to a strategy that has been, from the very beginning, an unmitigated disaster. . . . The Betrayal is a devastating indictment of [the] . . . establishment mentality that is moved only by ■ desire to protect itself and to prove that it is now and has always been right. Stung by Corson's allegations—even before publication of his book—the Defense Department has threatened him with punitive action. . . . Official reactions to [the book] are not surprising. Corson does not mince words." Hal Dareff
Sat R 51:26 J1 13 '68 900w

COSER, LEWIS A. Continuities in the study of social conflict. 272p $7.95 Free press

301.2 Social conflict

67-25330

This collection, a supplement to the author's The Functions of Social Conflict (BRD 1957), contains twelve essays, most previously published in sociological journals. "A wide range of topics—reference group, deviance, race riots, colonial revolt, dictatorship in the new nations, the break-up of the Soviet camp, military secrecy—are related to the theory that conflict is necessary for societal adaptation." (Choice) Index.

Reviewed by V. K. Dibble

Am Soc R 33:631 Ag '68 1800w

"Cosser has written a brief introductory note for each paper, identifying its current theoretical and practical applicability. . . . Cosser's amplifications of Simmel tend to be anecdotal rather than systematic; on occasion, his illustrations are even of questionable accuracy. His overviews of world events are consonant with generally available information—his generalizations seem to go beyond the events. Similarly, in microanalysis his examination of interrelationships is . . . convincing—until he gives illustrations which turn out to be, at best, oversimplified. . . . Questions of the applicability of theoretical notions of conflict . . . are raised—but never answered. The book is loaded with interesting ideas—but the evidential base seems weak. . . . The book is marred somewhat by an excessive number of typographical errors. . . . However, it is essential reading for any student of conflict phenomena." A. D. Grimshaw

Ann Am Acad 337:204 My '68 500w

"This provocative, albeit unevenly written, set of essays . . . is a 'must' for any undergraduate library. . . . An excellent interpretation of Marxian sociology is followed by an oversimplification of Durkheim. . . . No bibliography, but footnotes contain many current standard works which are critically discussed in the essays."

Choice 5:1050 O '68 130w

COSGROVE, MARGARET. Bone for bone; written and il. by Margaret Cosgrove. 128p $3.95; lib bdg $3.69 Dodd

596 Vertebrates—Juvenile literature. Anatomy, Comparative—Juvenile literature 68-12809

An examination of the skeletal structure of vertebrates from mouse to man. "By seeking out basic patterns found in flipper, wing, and arm; by comparing . . . major classes, part for part, system for system, the similarities and differences are revealed. . . . Three methods of discovering relationships are explored: comparison of today's vertebrates; study of fossils of yesterday; and the embryological approach." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Index. "Grades six to eight." (Library J)

"A clear account. . . . Students of the biological sciences will find this volume to be an excellent introduction to comparative anatomy and the simplicity of approach will enable the student to handle more difficult materials."

Best Sell 28:112 Je 1 '68 70w [YA]

"Page for page and bone by bone, this is the most complete introduction to comparative vertebrate anatomy available for younger readers and beginning biology students. Teachers attempting to teach the elements of the evolutionary process to this age group should find the book a valuable aid. Miss Cosgrove delves into paleontology and embryology for a carefully correlated presentation with a minimum number of technical terms. Most of the space is given over to bones and skeletons, but there are also comparisons of the other anatomical systems of various animals. The drawings are schematic and helpful in further explaining the statements of the text." A. C. Haman

Library J 93:3976 O 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Philip Morrison

Sci Am 219:128 D '68 270w

COSMAN, BERNARD, ed. Republican politics; the 1964 campaign and its aftermath for the party; ed. by Bernard Cosman and Robert J. Huckshorn. 276p $6.95 Praeger

329.6 Republican party 68-16082

A collection of essays presenting an "analysis of the Republican Party's 1964 campaign and its residual effect. . . . Contributors include Karl Lamb, Philip E. Converse, Aage R. Clausen, Warren E. Miller, Robert L. Peabody, and

COSMAN, BERNARD—Continued

John F. Bibby. . . . [The first part of the book] deals with the ways in which Goldwater conservatives carried the message to the electorate, the campaign staff and strategy, and miscalculation of reality. . . . It concludes with an analysis of party finances. The second part contains articles concerned with the rebuilding of the party after its . . . defeat and the internecine dissension among leading Republicans." (Library J) Index.

"A group of Republican-oriented scholars discerningly examine the campaign of 1964. . . . The book is directed more to party leaders and organizers than to the rank and file." W. L. Lucey

America 118:612 My 4 '68 110w

Choice 5:1038 O '68 170w

Christian Century 85:594 My 1 '68 50w

"Should be of special interest to students of government. This study, containing eight essays complements the several other books in this field, particularly in its delineation of the struggle between the conservative and moderate wings within the party. . . . Charts and graphs are included for the statistical-minded reader and there are detailed notes for the academician. Although too scholarly for the average reader, this book is a necessity for the political scientist in understanding the Republican side of the picture in the 1964 presidential campaign and its post-electoral results. Recommended for college and large libraries." W. C. Kiessel

Library J 93:1490 Ap 1 '68 210w

COSTELLO, DAVID F. The world of the ant; text and phot. by David F. Costello. 160p $5.95 Lippincott

595.7 Ants

68-14128

"A botanist and plant ecologist, who for 30 years worked in the research branch of the U.S. Forest Service . . . describes the general characteristics of various ants, and their behavior at different seasons of the year." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] is well qualified to write about ants. He provides a fine text and superb photographs. . . . Although there are other books about ants, this book is highly recommended as being most readable and suited to many types of libraries." G. F. Dole

Library J 93:2679 Jl '68 140w

"This book should constitute, when Christmas time approaches, an excellent gift for any young niece or nephew who seems 'scientifically inclined.' Since the work is not written for children and is hence uncontaminated by the garbage of educational psychology, it presents a natural-history subject in a way which will allow a young reader to appreciate for himself the importance of detailed and painstaking observation and of attention to 'the simple occurrences of nature for their own sake.'" Va Q R 44:clxxx autumn '68 90w [YA]

COSTELOE, MICHAEL P. Church wealth in Mexico; a study of the 'Juzgado de Capellanias' in the archbishopric of Mexico, 1800-1856. 138p $5.50 Cambridge

254.8 Catholic Church in Mexico. Church and state in Mexico 67-18310

A 'study of a portion of the fiscal machinery of the Roman Catholic Church in Mexico from 1800 to the eve of the Juarez era. . . . The study focuses particularly on the Juzgado de Capellanias, a kind of bank which received and invested revenues in each diocese." (Choice) Bibliographies. Index.

"Since the role of the church was one of the prime issues in the Reform years of the late 1850's, Costeloe makes a needed contribution to understanding the nature of ecclesiastical economic and financial power. . . . Although the subject under review here concerns only the archdiocese of Mexico, the fiscal machinery of the metropolitan see was typical of other parts of the country. A new treatment of subject matter is found in the book's discussion of relations between church and state with reference to collection of tithes and loans of church funds to various agencies of government. . . . Although this volume deals with a very specialized area of Latin American history, it is recommended for all who teach in the field."

Choice 5:675 Jl '68 200w

"Costeloe, assistant lecturer in Spanish and Portuguese, University of Bristol, has used source material which has until now been unavailable to historians. For this reason his book will be of special interest. Highly recommended for college libraries." Phillip Marr
Library J 93:2236 Je 1 '68 70w

COSTER, CHARLES HENRY. Late Roman studies. 308p pl $8.95 Harvard univ. press
937 Rome—History—Empire, 30 B.C.—476 A.D. 67-22863

These studies are concerned with the landed aristocracy; the author "describes the position of the senatorial aristocracy . . . examines [the career of Boethius] . . . [discusses] the reaction of the . . . [Christian church] to the barbarian invasions . . . [and] deals with the economic condition of Cyrenaica in classical times. Mr. Coster contends that . . . considerable elements of classical civilization were preserved by those individuals who carried their culture and administrative talents with them into the Christian episcopacy." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[These] essays range in date from 1938 to 1965. . . . The conflict between Christianity and classical culture, as the ancient world began to pass into the Middle Ages, is well drawn. The nature of the book means that only snippets in this late Roman period are presented, but they are in the main attractive snippets, warmly told. Recommended only for undergraduate libraries where there is a special need for books in this area."

Choice 5:772 S '68 130w

TLS p1144 O 10 '68 60w

"This book is a potpourri of not very closely related articles, many a quarter of a century old or older, reprinted from periodicals and Festschriften not widely available. . . . [It] will not hold much interest for persons not already passably familiar with the period, nor has any effort been made to give it unity. . . . Still, the book represents a great deal of highly competent scholarship, and is notably well written."

Va Q R 44:clxxx autumn '68 180w

COTE, ALFRED J. The search for the robots [by] Alfred J. Cote, Jr. 243p $5.95 Basic bks.
001.5 Robots 67-28501

This book "covers the history of an attempt to apply the science of the computer to the reproduction of the physiological function of the biological being. . . . treats with the result of both the science and the philosophy of science to produce a machine with rudimentary intelligence, [and] describes some of the actual machines which have been created." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Deals more with physiology and philosophy than with science. . . . An interesting reference written at a level that the layman can understand."

Choice 5:613 Jl '68 150w

"First, [Cote] looks 'at some of the biological creatures whose performance intrigues the automata engineers'; then, 'nerve fibers and man's various attempts to emulate them'; the development of neuresistors; machines that 'learn'; visual recognition in animal and machine; speech recognition; and, finally, he deals with various activities in the general field of artificial intelligence. His book is recommended for the inquiring layman and for the specialist in science." Clifford Johnson

Library J 93:1642 Ap 15 '68 200w

COTTAM, RICHARD W. Competitive interference and twentieth century diplomacy. 243p $5.95 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations. International relations 67-13925

The author is "a former overseas envoy in the U.S. Foreign Service. This book is based on two assumptions: (1) the U.S. will indefinitely face serious continuing challenges from Russia and China; (2) but the growing prevalence of nuclear weapons means that even low level small wars are too risky because they could easily spread into major holocausts. [Cottam] concludes that enemy nations will increasingly grapple with each other through a variety of complicated techniques. These techniques, by means of which one nation can dabble in the affairs of another in an effort to shape the nature and policies of the other nation, are what [he] generally means by 'competitive interference.' However, he feels the U.S. is seriously handicapped in this regard because American values are ordinarily opposed to interference in other nations' affairs." (Choice) Index.

Reviewed by R. G. O'Connor
Am Hist R 73:1104 Ap '68 600w

"This excellent and thoughtful book . . . is oriented toward conflict and the author tends to overlook the extent to which the phenomena of interference are also found in non-conflict situations. . . . In addition, he seems to give undue attention to covert forms of conflict and does not seem to be aware of the extent to which non-covert forms of interference . . . are susceptible to the same style of analysis. . . . Professor Cottam [tries] to analyze power in terms of 'leverage' and he develops a typology of levers. This effort seems less successful to this reviewer than his analysis of competitive interference. The book as a whole is somewhat disjointed. These shortcomings, however, do not prevent it from being valuable. The author has a strong analytic mind and gravitates toward problems of significance. He has said new and useful things about an important subject." Andrew Scott

Am Pol Sci R 62:304 Mr '68 650w

"Whatever the reader's taste, he will find things to criticize in this book. It is pretentious. Definitions are poorly drafted, and the logic is often faulty. Assertions are frequently made about empirical matters with slight if any supporting evidence. The heralded solutions turn out to be rather commonplace. Professor Cottam served as an American foreign service officer in Iran, and he is an established academic authority on that country. The vignettes on American policy concerning that country, interspersed throughout the book, are among its better features. Given his wide experience, though, Professor Cottam should know that the predictive capacity of social science is far too weak and decision-makers and citizens of other states are far too untractable to sustain his prescriptions." H. K. Jacobson

Ann Am Acad 337:167 My '68 390w

"With uneven success the book tries to do two things: (1) a theoretical and often highly abstract analysis of the emerging nature of prosecuting conflicts between nations; (2) a critique of the style of U.S. foreign policy, with recommended reforms. An imaginative, challenging, and in some respects brilliant book, it is recommended for all college and university libraries."

Choice 5:120 Mr '68 260w

Reviewed by E. P. Stickney
Library J 92:2787 Ag '67 180w

COTTRELL, LEONARD. Great leaders of Greece and Rome; il. by W. T. Mars. 63p $3.50 Prentice-Hall

920 Greece—Biography—Juvenile literature.
Rome—Biography—Juvenile literature
66-23364

"Brief sketches of eight classical figures, four Greek (Leonidas, Themistocles, Pericles, Xenophon) and four Roman (Horatius, Scipio, Julius Caesar, Agricola) are presented in chronological order." (Library J) Pronunciation guide. Index.

Reviewed by E. F. Ridington
Class World 61:220 F '68 50w

"Few biographical details are given in the attempt to explain each leader's contribution in a short chapter. The result is simplification to a point which drastically limits the book's usefulness." Dorothy Gray

Library J 92:333 Ja 15 '67 60w

COUFFER, JACK. The concrete wilderness [il. by Paul Darrow]. 212p $4.95 Meredith 67-20852

"Exiled to Manhattan after the death of his park ranger father, 13-year-old Archie is a loner. Martin is a free lance photographer and amateur naturalist looking for a story. The two meet; a tenuous relationship forms and then Martin discovers Archie's secret—a wild dog living in the subterranean storm drains. Eventually, the pressures of the city lead to violence and the destruction of a dream." (Library J)

"Most of this novel, with its close-up descriptions of birds, animals, and insects, and its study of the alienated boy and his strange pet, is fascinating. As the story moves to its climax it becomes weak in motivation and reveals the author's ineptitude in presenting ordinary human beings. The book ends poorly, but its first 150 pages make it well worth while." W. B. Hill

Best Sell 27:302 N 1 '67 350w

Reviewed by Jane Manthorne
Horn Bk 44:84 F '68 150w [YA]

"Most of the yarn revolves about some exceptionally fascinating animal life in the 'concrete wilderness,' and the love of the boy for the dog. Mr. Couffer's style is bland, and he makes his photographer-hero Martin a slight stereotype of Jack Armstrong armed with a camera. Still, there is plenty of action and Mr. Couffer is to be credited for an obvious understanding of both photography and nature. It is a perfectly suitable novel for young people and for the library patron who is fond of children and dogs but shies away from what some LJ reviewers care to call the 'sophisticated novel.' Recommended for general fiction collections." Bill Katz

Library J 92:2804 Ag '67 150w

"An outstanding and moving story of survival in the city." Janice Kelly
Library J 92:4636 D 15 '67 80w [YA]

Reviewed by Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk R p48 O 1 '67 150w

COULTER, JOHN WESLEY. The drama of Fiji; a contemporary history. 230p il maps $3.50 Tuttle

919.6 Fiji Islands 67-14279

This book "is a compilation of . . . facts and statistics on the human and physical geography of the islands and their ethnic groups." (Choice) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Coulter purports to shed light on the severe conflict between the indigenous Fijians, the colonial Europeans, and the descendants of Indians brought to the islands as indentured laborers over 50 years ago. . . . This story needs to be told in its social, economic, and political aspects. However, the manuscript of the book was obviously finished in 1963—the statistics are pre-1963 in most cases, and even at that are not the best available in 1963, and the long bibliography contains nothing since 1963. . . . It is unfortunate that Coulter's long experience in the Pacific was not better served editorially and typographically. The unusual grouping of entries in the index is more confusing than helpful."

Choice 4:1301 Ja '68 230w

"Professor Coulter, an internationally recognized geographer and expert on South Pacific affairs, discusses the problems and prospects of granting independence to Fiji. . . . This book is highly recommended not only because of the paucity of general information about problems in Fiji, but because it is well written and factual. Recommended for academic and public libraries." M. M. Jackson

Library J 92:2767 Ag '67 320w

Reviewed by K. A. MacKirdy
Pacific Affairs 40:431 fall-winter '67-
'68 400w

COURLANDER, HAROLD. Olode the hunter, and other tales from Nigeria, by Harold Courlander with Ezekiel A. Eshugbayi; il. by Enrico Arno. 153p $3.75 Harcourt

398.2 Folklore—Nigeria—Juvenile literature
68-13370

The twenty-nine stories in this collection are mostly from the Yorubas of Western Nigeria, though several from the neighboring Ibo and Hausa are included. "Many of the tales illustrate proverbs, others are how and why stories. [Glossary and pronunciation guide]. Grades four to six." (Library J)

"Mr. Courlander has assembled . . . an assortment of tales ranging from creation myths to the problems of finding an affluent wife. Some, like 'Kigbo and the Bush Spirits,' 'Ijapa Cries for a Horse,' are unique in their comic inventiveness, and some are fables with an Aesopian flavor, a little on the bland side." Helen Renthal

Book World p14 (children's issue) My '68 200w

Reviewed by Virginia Haviland
Horn Bk 44:414 Ag '68 230w

COURLANDER, HAROLD—Continued

"All [these stories] are beautifully retold with the simplicity of true folk tales which brings out the universality of the themes. . . . Superb etchings by Enrico Arno makes this a perfect combination of text and illustration." Dorothy Gunzenhauser

Library J 93:308 Mr 15 '68 100w

"For all the Yoruba's attachment to town . . . the ties of these people with the land and with the animals and spirits of field and forest have never quite been broken. It is this interplay of town and bush which gives the book one of its most distinctive charms. Notes explaining the individual tales and the oral tradition appear at the end where they will not distract those who read for pure pleasure. There are bound to be some young readers, however, who will want to know more about the Yoruba. . . . For their sake one might wish Mr. Courlander had expanded his notes to cover a wider frame of social and historical reference." Olivia Vlahos

N Y Times Bk R p30 Ap 28 '68 200w

COURTIER, S. H. Murder's burning. 162p $4.50
Random house

68-14531

"Six years after the fact, Stewart Hamilton [the narrator] returns to Paladin Valley in the Australian bush—returns after the fact of a searing brush fire that incinerated the Shelton Ranch and nine persons, including Hamilton's friend Pat Carruthers, teacher in the Valley school. Some peculiarities about the fire and the testimony of survivors have begun to bother Hamilton, and he spends a week in the lonely valley raking the debris off a grisly conspiracy." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[Hamilton's] lonely daytime excursions and nights spent over records and writings by lamplight in his tent, his sense of being watched, have one jumping with twig-snapping nerves and one's flesh crawling at real and imagined dangers as he tries to piece together from his friend's letters and the remains of the fire the motivations of the people who once lived there. In spite of the contrived device of the letters it makes a very readable and credible enough tale and a very vivid picture of that remote piece of geography." K. G. Jackson

Harper 237:101 S '68 230w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:2694 J1 '68 60w

"An enjoyable mystery with a different background for insatiable fans." Jane Foster

Library J 93:[3335] S 15 '68 100w [YA]

Reviewed by A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p18 J1 28 '68 70w

"The set-up of Mr. Courtier's latest Australian story is first class. . . . What [the narrator] discovers is so gothically macabre, so House-of-Usherish, that belief gradually, sadly, dissipates. It is very hard to carry excellent beginnings to excellent ends and this at least is a gallant attempt."

TLS p1242 D 21 '67 90w

COWAN, MICHAEL H. City of the West: Emerson, America, and urban metaphor. 284p $6.50 Yale univ. press

818 Emerson, Ralph Waldo 67-24492

"In examining how Emerson interpreted and evaluated urban civilization, [the author presents five chapters] entitled 'City of the West,' 'The City of God,' 'The City of Man,' 'The Organic City,' and 'The Freedom of the City.' . . . [In the title paper] he chooses to emphasize Emerson's attention to taming or urbanizing influences. . . . [He then] explains the relation of the cities of his last four chapters to the City of the West." (Yale R)

"The latest of a long line of books, beginning with Henry Nash Smith's Virgin Land [BRD 1950], which have attempted to reinterpret American literature in terms of 'myth,' 'symbol,' 'metaphor,' 'quest,' or 'dream.' . . . I have emphasized the familial relation of [this book] to other recent American studies, because advance notices have somewhat overemphasized its 'originality'; and I have compared it in detail to The Machine in the Garden [by Leo Marx, BRD 1965], because the close relationship of the two is not fully suggested by Mr. Cowan's 'Bibliographical Note.' Yet this book is genuinely original in that it describes a fresh 'angle of vision,' and it is valuable in that it analyzes Emerson's metaphors and rhetoric in relation to the logic (or illogic) of his philosophy. . . . It is a thoughtful study which helps to clarify that large complex of ideas which underlies Emerson's 'American Dream.'" F. I. Carpenter

Am Lit 40:238 My '68 500w

"Organized, written and documented like [a dissertation], footnote citations and a brief bibliographic note represent pretty thoroughly recent scholarship in the history of ideas. Limited budget libraries could forego this specialized study and apply the money toward purchase of [Emerson's] Journals [BRD 1961, 1962, 1964-1967]."

Choice 5:339 My '68 100w

Va Q R 44:lx1 spring '68 300w

"Mr. Cowan's aim is not merely the quibbling one of 'proving' that Emerson did not dislike cities. In reminding us that Emerson lived over half his years in cities, earned his living lecturing in cities, and observed firsthand the rapid spread of towns in the American West, Mr. Cowan is setting the stage for his fresh and illuminating reading of Emerson. . . . [He] has discovered a new means—the city as metaphor—of explaining or interpreting Emerson to us. . . . [This book is not] a book for pedants only. Uncommonly well written and undeniably original, it can be a pleasurable introduction to Emerson as well as to a talented young scholar."

Yale R 57:XIV Mr '68 800w

COWARD, NOEL. Bon voyage. 212p $4.95 Doubleday

68-14174

A collection of four short stories set in fashionable "society, that probe the ambiguities of lust and death, of longing and despair." (Publisher's note)

"Coward prefers in this collection to focus on his characters as they begin a rapid descent into some situation which offers little possibility for escape. In each of these stories Coward's principal interest is characterization. His approach is witty, urbane, often rather cruelly satirical. His point, perhaps, is that since many of his characters lack compassion they deserve none in return. In any case, 'Bon Voyage' is a totally competent piece of work." Peter Corodimas

Best Sell 28:158 J1 15 '68 270w

"The wit, dialogue, and charm readers expect from Noel Coward are not in evidence in this group of short stories. 'Solali' is a lightweight tale of love and death; 'Mrs. Ebony' never imparts the loneliness felt by an aging woman upon the death of her companion; and 'Penny Dreadful' is just that! Only the title story is close to vintage Coward. [It] brings a varied group together at the Captain's table for the three-week crossing from San Francisco to Hong Kong. . . . Not the best Coward but worth purchasing." M. R. Kohn

Library J 93:2258 Je 1 '68 170w

Reviewed by Stanley Reynolds

New Statesman 74:773 D 1 '67 100w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p33 J1 21 '68 200w

COWARD, NOEL. Suite in three keys; A song at twilight, Shadows of the evening, Come into the garden Maud. 282p il $4.95; pa $1.95 Doubleday

822

67-11022

These three plays were first presented in April 1966 at Queen's Theatre, London. The themes vary, "but are all played out against one background, a luxury hotel suite in Lausanne, Switzerland. Each has three principal characters, a man and two women." (Publisher's note)

"The one-act plays are ordinary and inconsequential although written in Coward's usual smooth, glib fashion with an expert handling of plotting and staging techniques. The two-act play, A Song at Twilight, which concerns an aging writer, his wife, a former mistress, and letters which reveal an earlier homosexual affair . . . possesses clever and skillful dialogue and much humor, but, in addition, it makes a serious statement about one phase of the human condition. Moreover, the play has depth in characterization, an uncommon quality with Coward. Thus, this volume is recommended to college libraries."

Choice 4:1129 D '67 150w

"Come Into the Garden Maud is not particularly convincing or interesting. Shadows of the Evening brings together a man confronting death, his mistress, and his discarded wife. It's a passable morality, worth reading and playing, but no bravos. . . . Despite its unpleasant situation, characters, and revelations, [A Song At Twilight] is one of Coward's best. There has always been a touch of important fantasy about Coward's work: Peter Pan in the House of Lords. Here the players are the same, but the pretty pretense is gone, the words real." Irving Wortis

Library J 92:1175 Mr 15 '67 140w

Reviewed by Robert Mazzocco
N Y Rev of Books 10:29 Mr 14 '68 2000w

COWIE, LEONARD W. The Reformation; drawings by Elizabeth Hammond. 112p maps lib bdg $3.29 Day

270.6 Reformation—Juvenile literature 68-11309

"After tracing the factors of medieval European society which contributed to the urge for change, Dr. Cowie . . . covers the reforming efforts of Wycliffe and Huss and then treats . . . the major schisms effected by Luther and Calvin. . . . The Counter Reformation and resulting missionary activity are also [discussed. Chronology. Bibliography. Index.] Grades eight to ten." (Library J)

"[This book] offers the fullest coverage of the period presently available in a juvenile book. Particularly helpful is the comparison of the English Reformation with its Continental counterparts. . . . The author's emphasis on cause-and-effect relationships brings order to what is often apt to seem a confusing subject." R. W. Barber

Library J 93:2737 J1 '68 110w

Reviewed by Zulfikar Ghose
New Statesman 76:598 N 1 '68 40w

COWLES, VIRGINIA. 1913: an end and a beginning [Eng title: 1913: the defiant swan song]. 264p pl $10.95 Harper

901.94 Twentieth century. Civilization, Modern 68-28189

This chronicle of a year in seven world capitals—London, Berlin, St. Petersburg, Vienna, Rome, Paris and New York—describes "the sunset of the Gilded Age and the dawn of a new era signaled by the Marconi Scandal, the start of the Ford Motor Company, the first victories of women's suffrage, and the first publication in English of the work of Sigmund Freud." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by Richard Freedman

Book World p14 N 10 '68 600w

"The contents are rather like the book itself: it is forcefully but not very attractively designed; is badly proof-read; and has plenty of well-produced illustrations . . . and an enchanting cover. . . . It is rather too much an account of life seen from the point of view of the reader of the Tatler; gossip comes first. . . . After gossip and high society come the drama and somewhat pre-digested politics. There is no mention at all of the poor or of any economic question. The contemporary photographs are plentiful, always informative, but a mixed lot. Rather too many are purely documentary, and pretty dull. . . . But Miss Cowles is a skilful writer, and this is one recipe for pleasant and easy reading. There are no particular morals to be drawn, except one; that in 1913 . . . it was very pleasant to have a lot of money."

Economist 224:793 S 2 '67 390w

Reviewed by Sally Poundstone

Library J 93:4650 D 15 '68 150w

"This book has excitement on every page and some stunning pictures. . . . Miss Cowles, whose 1941 memoir 'Looking for Trouble' [BRD 1941] is still one of the liveliest ever written, has produced what may well be the liveliest picture gift-book of 1968." Anne Fremantle

N Y Times Bk R p7 N 3 '68 1150w

New Yorker 44:245 D 7 '68 120w

COWLEY, MALCOLM. Blue Juniata: collected poems. 149p $5.75 Viking

811 68-28027

Most of these poems were published in the author's first collection, Blue Juniata (BRD 1929); others are collected for the first time.

"The book is divided into seven sections, five of them preceded by prose 'Notes' intended to suggest the mood of the time. The arrangement is chronological by theme or subject matter, not by date of composition." (Publisher's note) Index of titles and first lines.

"In the most exciting collection of poetry I have read in years, Mr. Cowley traces his responses to his life, his friends, and his times. . . . Mr. Cowley's poems are more than a record of the changing scene. With powerful sensitivity, they communicate his responses to changes, and to the people who participated in them. The poems reprinted from earlier collections are thoroughly selected to give this volume unusual unity. . . . This volume fully merits the attention it will surely receive." Walter Waring

Library J 93:4147 N 1 '68 120w

Reviewed by Kenneth Burke

N Y Times Bk R p8 N 17 '68 1450w

"[These poems begin on a] roughly pastoral note; . . . a series of latter-day bucolics. . . . [The second section] written in a sentimental light verse, [is] a letdown. . . . The third section brilliantly recreates the Europe of the early 1920s. . . . [In] Section IV ('The City of Anger'), . . . the poems grow both brisk and bitter. . . . [Section VII] comes to its natural conclusion in 'Here with the Long Grass Rippling' . . . the book's deepest, most disturbing poem, [which] is nevertheless an affirmative one. From a technical standpoint [this collection] contains little to arrest the appraiser of contemporary poetry. There are none of the syntactical tricks, the surrealist disruptions, the superimposed 'concrete' typographical displays currently in fashion. The rhythms are fairly regular but not rigid; rhyme is used colloquially and even lyrically; the images are those of a firm fine-edged individuality." Louis Untermeyer

Sat R 51:60 N 23 '68 800w

COWLING, MAURICE. 1867: Disraeli, Gladstone and revolution; the passing of the second Reform bill. 450p $13.50 Cambridge

942.07 Great Britain—Politics and government—19th century 67-13801

"This book sets out to solve an historical problem: why did Disraeli in 1867 pass a reform bill which seemed more extensive than the bill which Gladstone failed to pass in 1866? Mr Cowling explains how far the Act of 1867 gave advantages to the Conservative party and to conservative interests, and follows in detail the passage of the bill up to the point at which Disraeli was certain of passing it. He describes Parliament's attitude to its own place in the social system, and analyses the party and personal problems faced by the leading M.P.'s, showing how these affected their attitude to parliamentary reform. . . . Mr Cowling's view is that as almost everyone was acting in a party political context, they all displayed as much concern for party advantage as for the substance of policy." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Cowling's narrative of the events of 1865-1867 entirely supports his conclusions—for good reason. It is based upon a formidable mass of primary materials, largely private letters. . . . [However] his sources have obviously, as Cowling is well aware, predetermined his conclusions. He has deliberately chosen to rely on letters written exclusively at the moment of action rather than parliamentary debates or memoirs, because he is only willing to credit what is immediate, personal, explicit, and observable. . . . Cowling knows perfectly well what he is doing and does it with uncommon intelligence and verve. The assumptions and methods of this book are as overt as his conclusions, and they are identical with those informing his earlier books on Mill [and Liberalism] and on [Nature and Limits of] Political Science [both BRD 1964. The title is] . . . peculiarly inapt for a book that sees no substantive difference between Disraeli and Gladstone and concerns itself not at all with the question of 'revolution' (except, by implication, to deny meaning to it)." Gertrude Himmelfarb

Am Hist R 73:821 F '68 650w

"This book is very self-consciously a contribution to a Conservative tradition of historical interpretation. It asserts, and by implication approves, fundamentally Conservative attitudes about the limitations of human political capacity, the virtues of empiricism, above all, about meddling 'doctrinaires.' Mr Cowling is by no means above a bit of healthy scurrility at the expense of ces gens-là admirers of Mill and advocates of progress. . . . People of whom Mr Cowling disapproves, 'something between prigs on the one hand and doctrinaires on the other,' tend to 'peddle' their doctrines. It is almost like Time magazine: while Lord Derby and Mr Disraeli stride purposefully down corridors, their opponents scurry. . . . He is not easy to read, but his case is most powerfully presented, and the sources and details are handled imaginatively. Above all, the grasp of the parliamentary scene is firm and the argument derived from it beautifully articulated."

COWLING, MAURICE—Continued

Economist 224:329 J1 22 '67 1800w

"Mr. Maurice Cowling has devoted to these six months of Parliamentary history a work of 450 pages of unequalled diligence, lucid, readable and, so far as human nature permits, impartial. . . . Disraeli characterized the 1867 Act as the Serboman bog of British constitutional history; the avidity with which Mr. Cowling . . . has tackled this terrifying task succeeds in imparting itself to non-academic readers whom the overwhelming mass of trivial detail could normally be expected to repel."

TLS p783 Ag 31 '67 2300w

COX, ARCHIBALD. Civil rights, the Constitution, and the courts [by] Archibald Cox, Mark DeWolfe Howe [and] J. R. Wiggins. 76p $2.95 Harvard univ. press

342.73 Negroes—Civil rights. Freedom of the press 67-20874

Two legal scholars and a newspaperman "discuss aspects of the current civil rights movement and concern for equality in the courts. The three lectures . . . were originally delivered in the 1965-66 Massachusetts Historical Society series of Special Evening Gatherings on the Law and the Common Man." (Publisher's note)

"These two prestigious legal scholars . . . and the well respected newspaperman . . . present searching, but not overly technical, analyses of the nature, role, effects, and limits of civil disobedience in particular and of demonstrations in general. . . . Strongly recommended for the general reader. A marginal purchase for a college library."

Choice 4:1442 F '68 130w

"This book is a valuable addition to literature on civil disobedience as a tactic for social and political reform. . . . These addresses deserve study. They should be read by all who claim to speak for partisan social and political segments of society." J. J. Marke

Library J 92:4021 N 1 '67 230w

"Mr. Wiggins' 'The Press and the Courts,' stands considerably apart [from the other two lectures]. Although it sets out to 'take a close and critical look at the coverage which the press gives to the courts' it never discusses the rationale behind such coverage, particularly coverage of trials. . . . Mr. Wiggins writes clearly and forcefully. But his essay seems to me depressingly typical of the negative attitude prevalent, although by no means universal, among editors. . . . Professor Howe's paper on 'Federalism and Civil Rights,' one of his last published articles, brilliantly exemplifies, in its clarity, good humor, and seriousness, his happy knack for applying the techniques and methods of legal history to the solution of present problems. . . . The singular paper among the three to raise serious moral issues is Professor Cox's readable essay on civil disobedience." H. B. Zobel

New Eng Q 40:565 D '67 1300w

COX, ARTHUR M. Prospects for peacekeeping. 178p $3.95 Brookings

341.13 United Nations. Peace 67-30590

An examination "of the U.N.'s experience in international military operations, up to but not including the Middle East War of 1967. . . . American, Russian, and neutral attitudes toward peace-keeping are analyzed . . . as well as the legal and organizational ramifications of such attitudes. . . . Problems in the U.N.'s use of national military forces [are described]. The book concludes with suggestions for strengthening the U.N. in the task of keeping the peace." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"By peacekeeping [Cox] means 'the use of soldiers not to fight and win, but to prevent fighting, to maintain cease-fires, and to provide order while negotiations are being conducted.' . . . The author's presentation is pedestrian [and] frequently repetitious. . . . He is vague about the relation of the Vietnam war to the peacekeeping process. Yet his prognosis is convincing: namely, the balance of terror between the superpowers makes the impartial peacekeeping machinery of the United Nations increasingly useful to both, if for different reasons. His proposals for strengthening the present machinery are both modest and sensible." L. S. Kaplan

Am Pol Sci R 62:961 S '68 650w

"[An] extremely valuable and well written compilation . . . [which] complements [L.] Bloomfield's International Military Forces [BRD 1964], and is an essential part of any library collection on U.N. organization. . . . The tone of the book is optimistic, perhaps too much so . . . yet the author has not neglected any part of the relevant experience, and his optimism may yet be justified. A valuable appendix summarizes all U.N. field operations to 1967."

Choice 5:868 S '68 140w

COX, EUGENE L. The Green Count of Savoy: Amadeus VI and Transalpine Savoy in the fourteenth century. 400p il maps $11 Princeton univ. press

944.48 Amadeus VI, Count of Savoy. Savoy—History 67-11030

An assistant professor of history at Wellesley College presents a biography which describes how "Amadeus VI succeeded in establishing more modern and effective social and political institutions in Piedmont-Savoy in a period of rapid transition. In addition, he expanded the boundaries of his territory to create a larger and more economically and politically viable state." (Choice) Genealogies. Bibliography. Index.

"The author has excellently portrayed the Count's constant preoccupation with internecine wars and invasions by the mercenary companies from France. . . . [However] a separate chapter on the economic life and resources of the regime and its people should have been offered." H. C. Krueger

Am Hist R 73:1502 Je '68 400w

"In addition to the rather untrustworthy medieval chronicles upon which he has had to rely to a certain extent, Cox has extensively used archival material from Turin, Chambéry, and Dijon. Considering the incomplete nature of the available evidence, Cox has presented us with a surprisingly real picture of 'the green count' (so called because of his preference for green clothing and accoutrements). . . . Much of the material in this book appears for the first time in English; moreover, French and Italian works have not utilized the surviving archival material to anywhere near the [same] extent as Cox."

Choice 5:396 My '68 180w

COX, HARVEY, ed. The Situation ethics debate; ed. with an introd. by Harvey Cox. 285p $3.95; pa $1.95 Westminster press

170 Fletcher, Joseph Francis—Situation ethics. Christian ethics. Love (Theology) 68-11991

"Joseph Fletcher's nondogmatic Situation Ethics [BRD 1966] created its own whirlwind of controversy; various viewpoints in the debate are . . . represented in the present anthology which includes the editor's introduction, scholarly reviews of Mr. Fletcher's book, journalistic accounts of it, sermons about it, and a chapter entitled 'Reflection and Reply' by Mr. Fletcher himself." (Library J)

"After the section on informal and lay reactions there are longer excerpts, confusingly classed either as the work of 'reviewers and pundits' (shorter pieces, maybe not quite as complicated?) or as 'essays and estimates' (heavy stuff?). The true buff will run across the Fletcher foes he has already read (Gustafson, Bennett, Ramsey, etc.) and will find some things here that are going around for the third time in print. Still there are good pieces he might not have seen before (by Seward Hiltner, Edward LeRoy Long, Jr., James B. Nelson and others). As always, Prof. Fletcher, in his reply to the critics, makes some doughty points. . . . On the whole, however, his reply does not seem as lively or as well argued as the one he wrote for Storm Over Ethics [by John C. Bennett and others, paperback], a much more successful effort in general than [this book]." James Sellers

Christian Century 85:790 Je 12 '68 490w

Reviewed by William Gerber

Library J 93:1146 Mr 15 '68 140w

COX, HARVEY G. On not leaving it to the snake. 174p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)
241 Ethics. Christianity 67-26056
For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Cora Brady
America 118:265 F 24 '68 50w
Reviewed by R. L. Rubenstein
Commonweal 87:720 Mr 15 '68 1750w
Reviewed by Richard Horchler
Commonweal 89:360 D 6 '68 130w
TLS p851 Ag 8 '68 650w

COX, MARK. Quarterbacking. See Starr, B.

COX, NIGEL S. M., ed. Organization and handling of bibliographic records by computer [proceedings of a seminar sponsored by the Computing laboratory and the Lib. of the Univ. of Newcastle-upon-Tyne] ed. by Nigel S. M. Cox and Michael W. Grose. 187p il $12 Archon bks.

029.7 Libraries—Automation. Information storage and retrieval systems 67-30792
"Apart from an introductory section and a final summary session these Proceedings cover five areas; Processing systems, Structure of libraries, Information retrieval, National catalogues, and Specific processes." (TLS) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"The seminar made no concessions to the uninitiated, and enough of the technical detail is included in the published volume to make it useful. Not that all of the discussion is technical. 'Why Libraries Differ—and Need They?' by J. W. Jolliffe, M. B. Line, and F. Robinson is an excellent article which might well be required reading in an introductory library school. . . . B. C. Vickery, in 'The Library as a System for Information Transfer,' stresses again the need to study the use made of bibliographical records. . . . Of special interest are the proposals for using MARC tapes in a 'United Kingdom MARC Record Service.' R. E. Coward makes a strong case for going international. . . . The most serious drawback to the volume is its poor readability. Long lines, averaging about 75 characters, and seven lines to the inch place a real strain on a reader's eyes." M. J. Voigt
Library J 93:1599 Ap 15 '68 430w

"The importance of the Newcastle meeting . . . lies in the close identification of the Library and the Computing Laboratory of the University in their joint approach to these problems. A third, and no less essential element, is provided by the Computer Typesetting Research Project. Thus although the fifty-odd participants included many active British, and a few foreign, workers in this field, the 'Newcastle School' predominated with ten out of the sixteen papers presented. . . . The first area starts with 'The Newcastle File Handling System', by N. S. M. Cox and J. D. Dews. This is perhaps the key contribution, in that it formulates a general system applicable to the sort of document-handling operations that occur in libraries and information centres."
TLS p212 F 29 '68 800w

COZZENS, JAMES GOULD. Morning, noon and night. 408p $5.95 Harcourt 68-20064

"In this novel, the hero, Henry Dodd Worthington, of impeccable upper middle-class Puritan descent, . . . looks back on the 'morning-noon-and-night' of his life. From his viewpoint as a man over 60, he recalls isolated incidents in his younger life." (Library J)

"This novel is a tour de force of complex structure and challenging insights. . . . There is an overwhelming sense of the power of life to be found here, and of the vast richness that even the quietest individuals experience. The novel is a success from this standpoint alone. . . . [It also] becomes a memoir of a good part of middle class American society. The major events of the last several decades are seen only dimly, as they affect Worthington's life, and thus Cozzens suggests how gigantic events are microscopically reflected in individual problems. . . . But even here the novel's suggestiveness does not stop. Through the numerous literary references . . . Cozzens implies that the history of Worthington is, in its own quiet way, the history of Western Everyman. . . . whose very ordinariness has enabled him to endure." J. R. Lindroth

America 119:136 Ag 31 '68 600w

Reviewed by Stanley Kauffmann
Atlantic 222:119 S '68 2350w

Reviewed by H. T. Anderson
Best Sell 28:216 S 1 '68 390w

Reviewed by Richard Freedman
Book World p3 S 8 '68 800w
Choice 5:1304 D '68 140w

Reviewed by Alan Levensohn
Christian Science Monitor p13 S 19 '68 850w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson
Harper 237:109 O '68 480w

Reviewed by A. C. Ringer
Library J 93:2688 J1 '68 240w

"His concreteness and immediacy, his fidelity to . . . real life, are Cozzens' great achievements as a novelist, but they are missing from [these] recollections. . . . The loss of a distinct and palpable external world is . . . a serious weakness. It also leaves naked Cozzens' tendency to create rather lifeless secondary characters. . . . There is no action at all here, and the rhetoric is repulsively turgid, stuffed to bursting with badly chosen, misunderstood commonplaces from literature. [Cozzens'] works too often seem to be social and political tracts instead of literature. . . . This might have been a marvelous ironic presentation of an unusually pretentious and protected man. . . . But Cozzens always seems to take his heroes as solemnly as they take themselves." E. J. Kenney
Nation 207:218 S 9 '68 1550w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport
Nat R 20:1172 N 19 '68 450w

Reviewed by John Brooks
N Y Times Bk ■ p3 Ag 25 '68 1650w

Reviewed by John Updike
New Yorker 44:197 N 2 '68 2350w

Reviewed by Howard Junker
Newsweek 72:86 Ag 26 '68 500w

"Many people . . . will feel that the book is hard to get into, that it moves slowly, that there is too little action. They may also blame Cozzens for not proceeding in a straightforward chronological fashion and for spending so much time on minor characters. . . . Cozzens, I believe, can be defended against all these charges. He is writing the story of a reflective man, and he has to give him a chance to reflect and to set down his reflections. . . . Although Worthington begins by asking that most popular question of the present age, 'Who am I?', he asks it with none of the urgency that we feel in the fiction of Saul Bellow, say, or Bernard Malamud or Wright Morris. . . . [Cozzens] is a writer of integrity, thoughtful, scrupulous in his craftsmanship. . . . but there are other writers who . . . have more to say that is relevant. . . . I am less impressed by [this novel] than I was by Guard of Honor [BRD 1948] and By Love Possessed [BRD 1957], but it is good Cozzens, and good Cozzens is never to be ignored." Granville Hicks
Sat R 51:33 Ag 24 '68 2500w
Time 92:63 Ag 30 '68 500w

CRABB, ALEXANDER RICHARD. See Crabb, R.

CRABB, RICHARD. Empire on the Platte; il. by Ernest L. Reedstrom. 373p $7.50 World pub.
978.2 Nebraska—History. Platte River
67-15227

This "history of the Platte Valley of Nebraska during . . . [the] Civil War till the 1880's . . . traces the progress of the area from the coming of the transcontinental railroad . . . through the era of the cattlemen and their longhorns from Texas and finally the settlers from the East. It is the confrontation between the cattlemen . . . and the sod-busting homesteaders that forms the main part of the book." (Choice) Annotated Bibliography. Index.

"The actual participants in one of the most dramatic and tragic of [the cattlemen-homesteader] conflicts are described in great detail and make this much more exciting than many similar histories. The book is also valuable for its many photographs and a bibliography section that offers insight into how historical research is accomplished and how the author's ideas and theories are authenticated. . . . Especially good for undergraduates studying this period of American history, since it is more than just a history of a small geographical region."

CRABB, RICHARD—Continued

Choice 5:116 Mr '68 200w

"Twenty years of research . . . went into this book. It is well written and once started, difficult to put down. Highly and generally recommended." H. E. Smith

Library J 92:2177 Je 1 '67 140w

CRADDOCK, FRED B. The pre-existence of Christ in the New Testament. 192p $4.50 Abingdon

232 Jesus Christ 68-11715

The author investigates "the New Testament affirmations of Christ's preexistence . . . in order to formulate a meaningful Christology for our time. . . . The affirmations of preexistence in the NT background materials which furnish the religio-cultural milieu of the early church and the NT materials comprise the bulk of the book." (Choice) Index.

"While other comparable books contain a limited amount of material on the affirmations of the preexistence of Christ, Craddock devotes the entire volume to this subject. This book, therefore, must be regarded as pre-eminent in its field. It contains a comprehensive survey of the classical as well as the most recent literature available. Invaluable for future studies because of the amassed wealth of material, excellent treatment of sources, and methodology proposed. . . . Highly recommended."

Choice 5:637 J1 '68 200w

Reviewed by W. S. Sparks

Library J 93:3008 S 1 '68 110w

CRAFT, ROBERT. Bravo Stravinsky; phot. by Arnold Newman; foreword by Francis Steegmuller. unpag. $15 World pub.

B or 92 Stravinsky, Igor Fedorovich

67-15225

The 85-year-old composer is portrayed over a three-month period, from October, 1966 to January, 1967. "Arnold Newman, photographer, and Robert Craft, Stravinsky's friend and colleague, followed the composer about through weeks of work, concerts, plane trips, parties, and more work. While Newman took pictures . . . Craft asked questions, argued, listened, and took notes." (Atlantic)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 221:119 Ja '68 80w

"The pictures are splendid. . . . Stravinsky at 85 . . . his composing regalia; . . . the loose-leaf score of the major work composed in late 1966—when these pictures were taken—the Requiem Canticles, with the word 'requiem' reassuringly misspelled. The notebook is most moving; pages of score are interspersed with pages from Times obituaries of his friends—Edgard Varèse; Alberto Giacometti beneath a Stravinsky-drawn cross; Evelyn Waugh. . . . The photographer's spare, architectural, black-and-white technique is . . . perfectly suited to the subject. The text, if anyone cares—is another matter. . . . Relentlessly coy captions [with] some interesting tidbits. . . . A bonus is the complete holograph score of 'The Owl and the Pussy-Cat', composed . . . for Mme. Stravinsky, a great admirer of Edward Lear. One wishes Newman had been around to take such pictures of Bach." Richard Freedman

Book World p4 D 31 '67 370w

Choice 5:352 My '68 150w

Reviewed by Baird Hastings

Library J 93:182 Ja 15 '68 100w

"[Newman's camerawork] is deft, often brilliant and sometimes very beautiful. Nor does the commentary by Robert Craft, Stravinsky's closest friend, suffer in comparison. This handsome, revealing book belongs as much in the library as on the coffee table." D. C. Goddard

N Y Times Bk R p73 N 12 '67 80w

CRAGG, KENNETH. Christianity in world perspective. 227p $4.95 Oxford

260 Christianity and other religions 68-23577

"Cragg, an Anglican scholar . . . [bases this book] on eight of his lectures given at the University of Cambridge in 1966. His thesis is that Christianity has been so dominated and identified with Western culture and civilization that it has been almost impossible for Christianity to be in dialogue with other cultures. This is the 'perspective' Mr. Cragg discusses and considers in particular relation to the Christian church and Jewish destiny, Islamic worship, African religion, and what he calls 'the secularizing world.'" (Library J) Index.

"Jesus Christ exists for the whole world; he is affirmed by both potential and conscious believers; religious pluralism is not a deterrent to faith or missions. These and similar themes emerge in this volume . . . by a Christian world citizen [who writes] in a spirit of firmness mixed with empathy and love."

Christian Century 85:969 J1 31 '68 70w

"Especially recommended for theological collections." W. S. Sparks

Library J 93:3143 S 15 '68 110w

"A very distinguished examination of one of the most important problems of our time, the modern approach of the western world to the emergent nations. [The author] looks at it from the religious point of view, but what he has to say can very easily be translated into political or economic terms. . . . His examination of the African position, where he is an expert, is full of interest."

TLS p1085 S 26 '68 650w

CRAIG, EDWARD. Gordon Craig; the story of his life. 398p pl $10 Knopf

B or 92 Craig, Edward Gordon 68-23948

This biography of the late English stage designer is by his son. "He details Craig's life from his early days through his years with [Sir Henry] Irving, his productions at home and abroad, and on to his advanced years." (Library J) Discography, Bibliography, Index.

Reviewed by J. M. Hamernick

Best Sell 28:384 D 15 '68 700w

Reviewed by John Simon

Book World p4 D 22 '68 1200w

"Edward Craig . . . is naturally as much concerned with the man as with his work; both prove themselves too restless, fluid and extravagant to give him much chance of catching up with them and pinning them down. . . . [He] manages his mass of material ably—his narrative line, so to speak, is firm throughout—but the strain of coping with it leads him on occasions to adopt a breathless, gushing style which, at its worst, with its dashes, underlinings and exclamation marks, resembles a mixture of those of Mr Jingle, Queen Victoria and Gordon Craig himself."

Economist 229:xvi N 9 '68 470w

"Gordon Craig remains one of the prime movers of the modern theater. His own writings hand on to us his theories of stage techniques and principles. . . . [This new biography] is an important addition to the Craig literature. For many years, Edward worked as his father's assistant, and he has had access to a mass of family papers. . . . He throws new lights on Craig the man and gives a vast amount of valuable information about Craig's principles, work habits, and philosophy of life and art." Paul Myers

Library J 93:3549 O 1 '68 110w

"Writers of biography will envy the rich resources at Edward Craig's disposal. He has a unique collection—vast numbers of his father's letters, documents, intimate personal memoranda, prints and drawings, on all of which he has been able to draw for quotation and illustration in order to reveal the nature of one of the richest, most highly individual, but also most self-indulgent personalities of our time. . . . [Gordon Craig] wrote mostly in a style so individual that his writings possess a unique literary quality; they reflect his mind and personality exactly, and Edward Craig has inevitably filled his book with quotations from them. Fortunately, he has himself inherited much the same gift for immediacy in writing, and this makes his account of his father's life, at once so personal and yet also so objective, one of the really memorable biographies of recent years." Roger Manvell

New Statesman 76:433 O 4 '68 1100w

Reviewed by Harold Clurman

N Y Times Bk R p6 D 22 '68 1100w

Reviewed by Stanley Young

Sat R 51:62 N 23 '68 950w

CRAIG, GERALD M. The United States and Canada. (The Am. for. policy lib) 376p $7.95
Harvard univ. press

327.71 Canada—Foreign relations—U.S. U.S.
—Foreign relations—Canada 67-30826

The professor of history at the University of Toronto "uses history as the background for his discussions of the current problems faced by Canada and of the complex, ever increasing interrelationship between Canada and the United States." (J Am Hist) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by S. G. Brown
Ann Am Acad 378:149 J1 '68 500w
Choice 5:1212 N '68 110w

"The early chapters are sound in interpretation and are recommended to the non-specialist. [But] it is in the more contemporary sections that Craig excels. Even well-informed scholars in the United States need some enlightenment regarding the various economic ties between the two countries, as well as concerning such landmarks of interdependence as the NORAD agreement, the Canada-United States Defence Committee, the Defence Production Sharing Programme, and the Bomarc Crisis of 1963. This theme of the book is both cogent and up-to-date. The bibliography is comprehensive and contemporary, and it should be referred immediately to academic librarians for ordering purposes." J. A. Boudreau
J Am Hist 55:191 Je '68 600w

"Mr. Craig aims directly at the general American reader whose knowledge of Canada is limited to the usual clichés about Nelson Eddy and the Mounties. Hence, he gives over half the volume to background essays on Canadian history, geography, and economic development. The heart of his study, however, is his lucid analysis of the relations—economic, cultural, military and political—between Canada and the United States. He supplements these chapters by a useful series of statistical tables. . . . Highly recommended for libraries that serve the general reader." L. S. Fallis
Library J 93:559 F 1 '68 130w

CRAIG, M. JEAN. Dinosaurs and more dinosaurs; il. by George Solonevich. 95p $4.95; lib bdg $3.56 Four winds

568 Dinosaurs—Juvenile literature 68-27276

"Craig indicates what is known and unknown about the great and small reptiles which [disappeared] . . . a million centuries or so after they appeared. [Index of dinosaurs.] Ages six to nine." (Christian Science Monitor)

Reviewed by Ethna Sheehan
America 119:657 D 21 '68 40w

"Notable chiefly for the fantastic paintings by George Solonevich. They have a three-dimensional, massive style that eerily re-creates the 'terrible lizards' of the Mesozoic Era in unique fashion." Julian May
Book World p34 (children's issue) N 3 '68 40w

"[Written] in pellucid, kindly prose. . . . Solonevich's dramatic pictures in greenish monochrome are probably as realistic as most. . . . Some of the illustrations may seem terrifying to very sensitive children; some have a certain reptilian charm." N. M.
Christian Science Monitor pB12 N 7 '68 150w

CRAIG, RICHARD A. The edge of space; exploring the upper atmosphere; il. by Joyce A. Lake. 150p $3.95; pa $1.25 Doubleday

551.5 Atmosphere, Upper 68-10568

This "introduction to the mysteries of the Earth's high atmospheric layers . . . guides the reader from the discovery of the stratosphere in the opening years of the century to that of the van Allen belts of the satellite era. [Included are discussions of] atmospheric ozone, the ionosphere, the aurora, and airglow." (Choice) Index.

Choice 5:804 S '68 150w

"The book is intended for high school students—those who are potential scientists—and the more literate public. Readability has not been improved as far as one would like, but it is better than most, so it can be recommended as intended. It will probably be adopted as a text in many schools." R. S. Potts
Library J 93:762 F 15 '68 110w

CRAIK, WENDY ANN. The Brontë novels. 266p $6.50 Barnes & Noble

823 Brontë, Anne. Brontë, Charlotte. Brontë, Emily Jane

A lecturer in English at the University of Aberdeen has written a "piece of literary criticism, devoting a chapter to each of the seven Brontë novels: Emily's Wuthering Heights; Charlotte's The Professor, Jane Eyre, Shirley, and Villette; and Anne's Agnes Grey and The Tenant of Wildfell Hall. . . . Each of the novels is placed in perspective and compared with the others and with contemporary and prior works in the tradition of the English novel." (Library J)

"The book deals with Anne's novels, simpler and less sophisticated than her sisters', on their own merits; with Emily's full-blown masterpiece; and with Charlotte's progression and regression, Jane Eyre representing her peak. . . . This careful, somewhat austere, and enlightening piece of criticism will be valuable in scholarly collections." L. W. Griffin
Library J 93:3786 O 15 '68 130w

"In the present study of the Brontë novels, Dr. Craik is rightly determined to eschew, as far as possible, all criticism of identification. She concentrates on the criticism of content and form. . . . [She examines the novels] in considerable detail. . . . A number of interesting conclusions emerge. For instance she makes a convincing case for rating Anne as a serious novelist very much higher than is customary. . . . About Charlotte's Shirley, so often rated as her comparative failure, Dr. Craik has several penetrating observations. . . . Wuthering Heights . . . is obviously the hardest of the novels to analyse and, though much of what she says about it is fruitful, yet her analysis does not satisfactorily place the central drive of the book. . . . [It] surely has a moral grandeur which Dr. Craik misses." TLS p768 J1 25 '68 950w

CRAIN, ROBERT L. The politics of school desegregation; comparative case studies of community structure and policy-making by Robert L. Crain; with the assistance of Morton Inger, Gerald A. McWorter [and] James J. Vanecko. (Nat. opinion res. center. Monographs in soc. res) 390p $7.95 Aldine pub.

370.19 Segregation in education. Public schools—U.S. Community and school 67-27390

A comparison of the experiences in the northern cities of "St. Louis, Lawndale, Bay City, Newark, Buffalo, Baltimore, San Francisco, and Pittsburgh, each city with the other." (Library J) Events in New Orleans are compared to those in six Southern cities which desegregated peacefully. Bibliography.

"The differences in the experiences of Northern and Southern cities, and within each group, are discussed in terms of the attitudes of the school boards, the manner of their recruitment, the social, economic, and political characteristics of the cities, the ideology of the civil élites, and the extent and type of civil activity, with some surprising findings. Unfortunately, Crain's case studies are often too brief to enable the reader to judge the validity of his conclusions. Nonetheless, this book belongs in any library concerned with race relations, education, or community decision making. Obviously intended for a professional audience, although it can be read with profit by undergraduates with background in social research methods. Index." Choice 5:1014 O '68 150w

"It has taken this study to prove the existence of the political process in the decisions made by school boards North and South. . . . [This book] requires study. It does, however, have sections which can be understood by the general reader, and is recommended for most libraries." H. L. Roth
Library J 93:2859 Ag '68 170w

CRAMPTON, PATRICK. Stonehenge of the kings; a people appear. 171p il maps $7.50 Day 913.36 Stonehenge 68-24144

The author "suggests that society in Britain during the building of Stonehenge was a warrior society . . . and that Stonehenge was the capital city of the principal king." (Library J) The book was originally published in England in 1967. Bibliography. Index.

"[The author's] idea is so beguiling that one shares [his] candid regret at the way he is obliged to back it—roughly an ounce of evidence to a ton of speculation." Phoebe Adams

CRAMPTON, PATRICK—Continued

Atlantic 222:96 Ag '68 50w

"Mr. Crampton, amateur archeologist, has written a fascinating book. . . . Although his suggestions are plausible they are unlikely to be accepted by archaeologists until there is evidence to support his wide-ranging associations. He acknowledges the limits of his suggestions but an uninformed reader may still accept them as fact. His well-written book is for the informed layman. Its major fault is that Mr. Crampton frequently assumes a knowledge of British archaeology that the American reader . . . may not possess." G. E. Evans
Library J 93:3137 S 15 '68 150w

CRANE, R. S. The idea of the humanities, and other essays: critical and historical. 2v 311:332p $15 Univ. of Chicago press
001.3 Humanities. Literature and history
66-30214

These two volumes are a collection of treatises and essays by the late distinguished service professor emeritus of the department of English at the University of Chicago. Some of the pieces have appeared previously in such publications as Carleton College Bulletin and English Journal. Index.

"The shorter pieces are in the main interpretations of seventeenth- or eighteenth-century authors in whom Crane delighted, or concern problems of intellectual and literary history in that great period. . . . The bulk of the material in Volume II relates to literary history, literary criticism, and the opposition or likeness between them. It is an admirable mark of Crane's rugged intellectual honesty that the second essay in the book is in part a retraction of what he said in the first and earlier one." H. M. Jones

Am Lit 40:106 Mr '68 1300w

"Eminently enjoyable reading experience throughout. For graduate libraries and libraries supporting undergraduate studies in literary history and interpretation; those aspiring to either category should consider it accordingly. . . . For student referral purposes teachers will need to learn the interior geography of the set. Editing congenial; footnoting restricted, interesting."

Choice 5:184 Ap '68 180w

"It is good to have [these] essays. . . . The governing theme of Professor Crane's work is implied in the title: the idea of the humanities, its history and fate. Perhaps this concern might have been inferred from his other books, . . . but it is better to have it stated out in the open. Professor Crane gives it mainly in a long historical survey of the idea from Quintilian to the present. Sometimes he argues directly, more often by implication. What he conceives as the nature of the humanities emerges most vividly when he discusses the idea in Vives, Erasmus, Montaigne, Elyot, Ascham, Sidney, Bacon, or Descartes. . . . He is one of those scholars who make a difference, troubling the calm stream."

TLS p821 S 14 '67 900w

CRANE, STEPHEN. The complete novels of Stephen Crane; ed. with an introd. by Thomas A. Gullason. 821p $5.95 Doubleday 813 67-10369

This volume includes the final 1896 version of Maggie: a girl of the streets; The red badge of courage; George's mother; The third violet; Active service; and The O'Ruddy. In addition, "published in book form for the first time are the most important variant readings from the 1893 version of Maggie and the 1894 Philadelphia Press version of The Red Badge. An appendix gives the 'uncanceled' variant readings of The Red Badge." (Choice) Chronology. Bibliography.

Am Lit 39:590 Ja '68 50w

"Along with his The Complete Short Stories and Sketches of Stephen Crane, Gullason's present volume makes all of Crane's prose readily available in scholarly editions. . . . A lengthy, scholarly and readable introduction attributes Crane's interest in war, courage, cowardice, religion, art, social problems, and humanitarianism to the influence of his immediate family. . . . Recommended for undergraduate and graduate libraries."

Choice 5:48 Mr '68 180w

"Although I am grateful for the information Gullason has provided in his introduction, I deplore the many lapses in his style. . . . As for the six novels, one of them—The Red Badge of Courage—is familiar to everyone, and deserves to be. Two, Maggie and George's Mother, are known to Crane's admirers, and, though they have obvious flaws, are of literary importance. . . . [However] The Third Violet . . . contains scarcely a line that couldn't have been written by any one of the scores of hack writers who were contributing serials to the popular magazines of the Nineties. . . . Active Service is even worse. . . . The early chapters [of The O'Ruddy] are pleasantly lively, but Crane seems to have grown weary." Granville Hicks
Sat R 50:31 J1 22 '67 1100w

CRANE, WILLIAM D. Andrew Johnson: tailor from Tennessee. 208p il $4 Dodd
B or 92 Johnson, Andrew—Juvenile literature
68-12811

A biography of "the man picked by Lincoln for his running mate [who] was the only president ever to face a trial of impeachment. . . . [It describes how,] while a tailor's apprentice, Johnson taught himself to read. After opening his shop in Greenville, Tennessee, his ability as a debator quickly led to election to public office—as mayor, state representative, Congressman, Governor, United States Senator, and Vice President." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"An informative and interestingly written account of a President who was appreciated more by the people than by politicians. The account is sympathetic, but does not neglect some of the failings of Johnson." Best Sell 27:429 F 1 '68 70w

Reviewed by E. M. Portteus
Library J 93:879 F 15 '68 100w

CRAVEN, WESLEY FRANK. The colonies in transition, 1660-1713. 363p il maps $6.95 Harper 973.2 U.S.—History—Colonial period
67-28805

"This general history of the colonies from the Restoration to the end of Queen Anne's War is a . . . study of England's policies toward her developing American empire and of the colonial reaction thereto." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl
America 118:614 My 4 '68 70w

Reviewed by C. L. Ver Steeg
Book World p12 J1 28 '68 600w

"Too textbookish in quality, this book is a disappointment. A political history of these difficult years of transition is sorely needed. But Craven hardly does more than to summarize from standard secondary sources the familiar events of all aspects of American life, domestic and imperial, with the result that there is little fresh insight or new information. For better than four-fifths of the book, the account does not proceed beyond the Glorious Revolution, whereas the period of readjustment was 1690-1713. . . . Craven does not treat adequately the problems of intercolonial relations or the roots of American identity. This book, however, does provide a general, cross-section account of the second natural cycle in American history." Choice 5:676 J1 '68 180w

"When Professor Craven of Princeton writes a book, the reader expects it to be solid, well researched, and interesting. This book won't disappoint him. . . . Not only does Professor Craven summarize past scholarship, but he also provides fresh and original insights, as in his account of the granting of colonial charters. This book will be of value for, and of interest to, students of history and laymen. For academic and public libraries." Jerome Nadelhaft
Library J 93:185 Ja 15 '68 130w

CRAWFORD, DEBORAH. The king's astronomer: William Herschel; with a foreword by Willy Ley. 191p $3.50; lib bdg $3.34 Messner
B or 92 Herschel, Sir William—Juvenile literature
68-14941

A biography of the discoverer of the planet Uranus, "who fled a war to establish himself in England, first as a musician and later as a scientist. He devised the most powerful telescope of the time with the help of the Royal Society of London and King George III." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index. "Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:64 My 1 '68 70w

Reviewed by H. C. Stubbs
Horn Bk 44:446 Ag '68 190w

"This is an enthusiastic book by an obviously enthusiastic author who has given credible life to a cast of real people, with the aid of a great deal of completely plausible fictionization. It is an excellent account of the delicate and exhausting techniques of observational astronomy and the story of a kind, dedicated man and his amazing family. . . . This book can give students some understanding of the hard work required of an astronomer." James Pickering
Library J 93:1808 Ap 13 '68 110w

CRAWFORD, JOHN R. Witchcraft and sorcery in Rhodesia; pub. for the Int. African institute. 312p pl $9.60 Oxford

133.4 Witchcraft. Rhodesia—Social life and customs [68-31932]

The author's "discussion covers evidence and confession of wizardry; the nature of wizardry beliefs—witchcraft and religion, and misfortune; the making of the witch; familiars; nocturnal travels; medicines and so on; the allegation of wizardry and its consequences." (Library J) Crawford "questions the categoric catholicity of certain received ideas and suggests that additional refinements be made to others. Is it true, for instance, that beliefs in witchcraft and sorcery are so unequivocally an effective social sanction as is sometimes claimed?" (TLS)

Choice 5:1227 N '68 200w

"This book is particularly interesting because of its unusual approach to some of the problems of modern African witchcraft and sorcery in a comparatively primitive but politically viable area of the world. J. R. Crawford, a barrister with long experience in Rhodesia, has relied extensively on native informants but his 'principal source of information has been the records of the Attorney General of Rhodesia,' which offer a broader spectrum of cases than is usually presented in ethnologists' conventional and more limited approach. Of course, Mr. Crawford's method of research has some disadvantages too, but the quality of reporting is of high standard and the organization of materials is most satisfactory and useful for the further study of a widespread pattern of moral behavior. . . . A section on 'Divination in the Pentecostal Churches' will be of particular interest to the student of comparative religion." Lee Ash

Library J 93:2016 My 15 '68 200w

"The book is principally about [the Shona] people of Rhodesia. . . . The particular value of Mr. Crawford's work is to provide us with a study of wizardry in a contemporary context. . . . His work was based mainly on the records of legal proceedings in government archives. While he has certainly shown the importance of such sources and proved . . . that it is possible to compose a coherent and convincing study from such material alone—his work inevitably lacks that 'vitality' which makes the reading of certain field monographs such a pleasant task. . . . One could have hoped perhaps for a lengthier and more explicit confrontation of the author's findings and theses with those of similar studies. . . . The professional anthropologist looking for the last nuance on witchcraft and sorcery would be well advised to buy and read this truly 'professional' book." TLS p158 F 15 '68 800w

CREAMER, ROBERT, Jr. auth. Rhubarb in the catbird seat. See Barber, R.

CREASEY, JOHN. The famine; a new story of Dr Palfrey. 188p $3.95 Walker & Co. 68-13253

"Dr. Palfrey of Z5 (an international peace-keeping organization) has to cope with worldwide infestation by a race of rapidly breeding midgits (period of gestation nine days!) with gargantuan appetites, rather mysteriously produced by an accidental nuclear explosion in ■ South American republic." (TLS)

Best Sell 27:457 Mr 1 '68 70w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 93:574 F 1 '68 40w

Reviewed by Dorothy English

Library J 93:2132 My 15 '68 100w [YA]

"[This] is the best Dr. Palfrey adventure I've read, which is hardly extravagant praise. This time the world disaster is a horde of little people (1-foot tall), who are burrowing underground and eating the world's food supplies. As science fiction, it makes no attempt to be believable; but the narrative moves well, there's a good subplot of middle-aged love, and the Lozi (the little people) are the first of Dr. Palfrey's menaces to really scare me." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p36 F 18 '68 90w

"Dr. Palfrey is hardly impressive in his efforts to save Earth's rapidly devastated food supplies and the ethics of his solution are more than a little dubious. Credibility level low and writing lower still."

TLS p292 Ap 6 '67 140w

CREASEY, JOHN. So young to burn. 188p $3.95 Scribner

68-12492

"Suddenly all through London young lovers are being sprayed with acid. Is this some Puritanical movement aimed at wiping out young lovers sparking in parks and other likely areas? Superintendent West, involved in the case, is hampered by Inspector Moriarty who feels he could do West's job better and that West has missed the whole point of the crimes." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 28:34 Ap 15 '68 100w

"Except for an unfortunate display of heroics at the end, West behaves logically and sensibly. . . . Perhaps as a reflection of Mr. Creasey's recent forays into politics, the book touches lightly on social issues—the generation gap, juvenile delinquency, morality." P. M. Daltry
Christian Science Monitor p9 Mr 20 '68 400w

Library J 93:1507 Ap 1 '68 20w

"Interesting puzzle, in sociology as well as in crime, with fine sidelights on West's problems at the Yard. . . . and on the growing up of his likable sons." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p36 Mr 31 '68 100w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 51:50 Ap 27 '68 50w

CREASEY, JOHN. For other books by this author, see Marric, J. J.

CREED, ROBERT P., ed. Old English poetry; fifteen essays. 332p $10 Brown univ. press
829 Anglo-Saxon poetry—History and criticism 67-10212

This volume was "originally designed to celebrate the two-hundredth anniversary of Brown University, with contributions from various scholars variously related to Brown, plus a few others." (Va Q R)

"Each [paper] is interesting, though mostly lacking in originality, and one feels that the area of Old English studies is, like every other area, very much over-written. Some of the discussions are dangerously misleading because of their 'inventive' quality. Still the collection is excellent, though it will appeal mainly to scholars."

Choice 5:339 My '68 50w

"The essays represent high quality work by some of the best Anglo-Saxonists writing today. Especially important are the essays by Larry Benson on the vexing problem of Pagan and Christian concerns in 'Boowulf,' and R. E. Kaske's brilliant study of the eotenas. The editor's contribution, on formulaic aspects of the story of Isaac, reveals his usual wit and insight."

Va Q R 44:cxvi summer '68 130w

CREELEY, ROBERT, ed. Selected writings of Charles Olson. See Olson, C.

CREELEY, ROBERT. Words: poems. 143p $4.95; pa $2.25 Scribner 67-12213

811
For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Peter Davison
Atlantic 221:141 F '68 200w
Choice 4:1379 F '68 100w

CREELEY, ROBERT—Continued

Reviewed by John Thompson
N Y Rev of Books 11:35 Ag 1 '68 1400w
Reviewed by John Perreault
N Y Times Bk R p97 N 19 '67 250w
Reviewed by Frederic Will Poetry 111:256 Ja '68 700w

CRESSWELL, HELEN. The piemakers; il. by W. T. Mars. 142p $3.95 Lippincott

68-14618

"Although she toyed with the pleasant dream of being an actress, Gravella Roller knew very well that she would become a piemaker, for the Rollers of Danby Dale had followed that proud profession for many generations. No previous challenge could compare with the order her family had just received—a pie for the King! A pie for 200, a pie that called on all their skills and imagination, a pie that was as 'perfect as if it had been carved from stone by the chisel of a master.' Hushed, all assistants waited for the formal testing, and Tragedy Struck! The King's pie was saturated with pepper." (Sat R) "Grades four to six." (Library J)

Book World p16 Ag 25 '68 150w

Reviewed by Margery Fisher
Christian Science Monitor pB4 My 4 '67 100w

"The supposedly droll capers of the Roller family . . . in 17 chapters of frenetic piemaking will drug with an overdose of hyperbolic humor any audience out for a good story. . . . Like too much pie, this long caloric celebration, with Piemakers stewing over parsley, lard and onions, misses satisfaction and effects discomfort." Susan Roth

Library J 93:2536 Je 15 '68 200w

"The story of how the family regains its honor is an amusing one, with the sort of satisfying detail that remind one of the Borrowers [by Mary Norton, BRD 1953]; it builds a wholly conceived small world." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:31 Jl 20 '68 150w

"The Rollers discussing the technique of piemaking remind one of Pod and Homily talking about the finer points of Borrowing. There is the same practical approach touched with reverence. This is only one of the ways in which Miss Cresswell's writing resembles Mrs. Norton's. Not that it is in any way derivative. . . . one ventures at one's peril to make such comparisons between an established and unassailable master and a young newcomer, but the risk is worth taking. There is a warmth, a richness of humour, an inner truthfulness . . . which puts this apparently slight tale in the select company of books which make nonsense credible, which make the reader laugh and cry and glow warm with delight in a job exceedingly well done."

TLS p445 My 25 '67 900w

CRESSWELL, JOHN. Sea warfare, 1939-1945. rev & enl ed 343p maps $7.95 Univ. of Calif. press

940.54 World War, 1939-1945—Naval operations
67-17111

"The book begins with a survey of pre-1939 naval doctrine; progresses through the Blockade of Germany, the Norwegian Campaign, the period of Japanese Expansion, the Battle of the Atlantic, the convoys to northern Russia, the American advance in the Pacific, and D-Day; and concludes with the Bombardment of Japan. The foci are the British-German and the United States-Japanese confrontations at sea." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. The first edition of this work was published in 1950.

"[The choppy] organization of this volume, attempting a topical coverage within a chronological framework, makes its use . . . difficult. Certainly it cannot be considered thorough enough for the serious student of the complexities of World War II naval strategy or tactics. Even the coverage of specific battles is more catalogue than careful analysis. The saving aspect is a good final chapter that summarizes the major points to be made about new weapons, tactics, and strategy emerging from World War II experience." R. M. Rudoff
Am Hist R 73:1108 Ap '68 300w
Choice 5:104 Mr '68 100w

"This [revision] is admirably done except that one wishes that Captain Creswell had not, perhaps unwittingly, given new currency to the old fallacy that a cardinal function of the British Navy was to defend 'trade routes'. . . . The account of actual naval operations . . . is well done—in terms that the layman can easily understand; and the maps are adequate and clear. But the author does handle controversial issues, or describe events in which senior officers are widely held to have erred, in so gingerly a manner that he lays himself open to a charge of using at least a touch of the whitewash brush."

Economist 225:1150 D 16 '67 600w

"A solid, well-written survey of the operations and doctrines of the American, British, French, German, Italian, and Japanese navies. Captain Creswell shows clearly the vast arena of operations in the last global war and the strategic difficulties that confronted the combatants. Factual, and necessarily brief, the narrative is well balanced with an interpretation of the reasons for success and failure. Interested readers will definitely find the book a good starting point for further study of World War II naval operations. Highly recommended for specialists, students, and general collections." A. S. Birkos

Library J 92:3636 O 15 '67 90w

CREWS, FREDERICK. The Patch commission. 173p $3.95 Dutton

817 Parodies

68-9805

Because "the kids of the nation have gone to hell or, as the author puts it, 'a general breakdown in youth management might be to blame for all manner of disorder and criminal nuisance.' . . . there is appointed a 'Presidential Emergency Commission on Child Governance Priorities.' The three members of that commission [including] its chairman, Sterling Patch, M.D., . . . [conclude] that the reason our kids are revolting (in both senses) is that they were raised on Dr. Spock's permissive principles. [Various solutions are examined]. . . . As for Chairman Patch, he isn't sure what solution to favor, but whatever it is, its administration definitely belongs within the Federal Bureau of Infantile Resources Potential (BIRP), which he happens to head." (Book World)

"[Crews] has now turned his attention to Benjamin Spock, M. D., examining his famous pediatric manual, [The Common Sense Book of Baby and Child Care, BRD 1946, 1958] from the standpoints of bureaucracy, technocracy and industrial capitalism. Perhaps because there is less substance to these three absolutes than there was to the various critical approaches applied to Winnie the Pooh [in The Pooh Perplex, BRD 1963, 1964 and 1965], The Patch Commission is less of a success. Still, it's fun. . . . The difficulty is that Crews' three commissioners are only straw men, too easily demolished by the reductio ad absurdum of their individual fundamentalisms. Where the author is successful . . . is in the devastating one-liners he arranges for his commissioners to toss off on such subjects as academic commercialism . . . disarmament . . . and civil rights." F. C. Shapiro

Book World p12 Ag 25 '68 600w

"Crews' book is well-timed to fall into the generation gap and the credibility gap. Like a wedge, it is as humor a little too perceptive for comfort, but still a little too brittle to work as solder from either side of the rift." C. F. Ruffin

Christian Science Monitor p7 O 24 '68 370w

"[Crews' book] strikes this reviewer as a bit contrived and rather clumsily done. Actually very little is achieved even in the area of satire." J. C. MacCampbell

Library J 93:3560 O 1 '68 50w

Reviewed by L. C. Lewin

N Y Times Bk R p38 O 6 '68 700w

"Edsel Margin III is Author Crews's caricature of a conservative political commentator who confronts the world as if it were a meet between the Yale and Harvard debating teams. A member of America's processed aristocracy, the third Edsel not only has the courage of his convictions but the confidence of his accent and vocabulary as well. . . . Crews, 35, professor of English at Berkeley and author of such disparate books as The Sins of the Fathers: Hawthorne's Psychological Themes [BRD 1966] and the fluffy satire The Pooh Perplex, coaxes a respectable number of chuckles out of America's national preoccupation with youth."

Time 92:66 Ag 2 '68 430w

CREWS, HARRY. The gospel singer. 248p $4.95
Morrow

68-11425

The protagonist "is a silver-larynxed evangelist who is symbolically shadowed by an itinerant sideshow which exhibits geeks in action before the selfsame audiences. Liaison man between the freak show and the Gospel Singer is the singer's manager, . . . Didymus, who fulfills his name by being both a schizophrenic and a double agent. A superstitious man but not a godly one, the Gospel Singer keeps his franchise on the 'right to sin' by corrupting [Mary-Bell Carter] a girl from his hometown of Enigma, Georgia, to which he returns once too often for his transfusion of evil." (N Y Times Bk R)

"The influence of Flannery O'Connor can clearly be discerned in this first novel . . . [which opens] as Willalee Bookatee Hull, a Negro accused of the rape-murder of white Mary-Bell Carter, awaits a lynching in the county jail, [and] the town awaits the return of [the Gospel Singer]. . . . The story involves the reaction of his family (living in a $70,000 house where pigs roam the rooms) and the townsfolk to him; his reaction to learning of Mary-Bell's death; . . . and his appearance that night to sing in a Gospel tent. . . . Well aware of meaningful detail, Mr. Crews is especially effective in describing the townsfolk and capturing the spirit of a backwoods Georgia town. . . . [The book] satirizes popular taste in religion and captures something of the horror of religion misused and perverted. . . . Too, the book suggests, somewhere within man, the presence of something demonic whose countenance is not pleasant to look upon and that implies a question: Is not, in a sense, Enigma the dwelling-place of us all?" J. S. Phillipson

Best Sell 27:440 F 15 '68 700w

"[A] strange and haunting first novel. . . . Written by a Florida junior college English instructor, The Gospel Singer is a sort of religious Catch-22 [by J. Heller, BRD 1962], moving back and forth from reality to fantasy to make the point that when man worships man rather than God, he not only worships in vain; he courts disaster." R. P. Nelson

Christian Century 85:330 Mr 13 '68 460w

"A gripping story of the devastating effect of pseudo-religion upon a community of ignorant, superstitious, poor whites. The gospel singer's first convert, MaryBell, becomes his love, but when thwarted, her love turns to a fantastic, vengeful hate. This incident is an obscene story of sex perversion with religious undertones. The murder of MaryBell by a young Negro stirred by a misguided religious impulse, a threatened lynching, and mobs of sick people striving for healing contact combine to make a tensely dramatic tragic climax." R. W. Henderson

Library J 93:95 Ja 1 '68 240w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p46 F 18 '68 170w

CRICK, BERNARD, ed. Essays on reform, 1967: a centenary tribute. 222p $4.80 Oxford
309.142 Great Britain—Politics and government—1945- 68-74712

A consideration of the issues and problems facing English society now. "Parliament and other facets of government are treated in five of the 13 essays; education is the subject of three essays and economic reform and urban problems are dealt with as well." (Choice)

"The original volume of Essays on Reform in 1867 was devoted to the ramifications of a major extension of the franchise; the present volume is similarly devoted to a crucial process of rethinking but ranges over a wider spectrum of issues—illustrating the greater complexity of English society and of the problems facing it in the 1960's. . . . The authors are recognized authorities in their fields; the editor . . . contributes a stimulating essay on 'Parliament and the Matter of Britain.' . . . The essays have a certain similarity to some of those in Law and Opinion in England in the 20th Century edited by M. Ginsberg [BRD 1961], and are the sort of intelligent discussion one finds in the best monthly magazines. Recommended for libraries with large 20th-century British holdings."

Choice 5:834 S '68 110w

Reviewed by A. J. P. Taylor

New Statesman 74:404 S 29 '67 800w

"Of the essays on government the key contribution is that of Samuel H. Beer, Professor of Government, Harvard University: 'The British Legislature and the Problem of Mobilising Consent' . . . [He] shows very clearly how the decline of the legislature in favour of the executive is inevitable in a situation in which, increasingly, decisions are specific rather than general, that is, managerial rather than political in the strict sense, and how, at the same time, a new pack of watchdogs has arisen in the form of a multitude of organized pressure groups. . . . The theme is developed by other contributors. . . . Lord Annan's ideas on the diversification as well as the rationalization of higher education over the next ten or twenty years are stimulating and mostly realistic."

TLS p210 F 29 '68 1150w

CRIST, JUDITH. The private eye, the cowboy and the very naked girl; movies from Cleo to Clyde. 292p $6.95 Holt

791.43 Moving picture plays—History and criticism 68-24757

The majority of these film criticisms were published in the New York Herald Tribune and various magazines over the period 1963-1968. Index.

"Miss Crist is a critic of intelligence and wit, with a lifelong affection for the movies; she is also an experienced reporter and writer of clarity and perception. Reading through these reviews of such films as 'Cleopatra,' which she calls a Monumental Mouse, of 'Tom Jones' and '8½,' of 'Hud' and 'Sound of Music,' right up to 'Ship of Fools' and on to 'Bonnie and Clyde,' . . . refreshes one's own memory and judgment of the films. . . . [This book] will be most appreciated by the growing number of students of film . . . [and by] the average movie-goer trying to make fair and just judgment of the fare presented in the theaters."

Best Sell 28:309 N 1 '68 240w

"Judith Crist has been a popular film critic first in newspapers and then on television. . . . In several [of the articles] she has mounted her typewriter on a soapbox and pounded out denunciations of Hollywood-style sex and violence. In others she reminisces about her moviegoing youth. For the most part, though, these are film reviews aimed at general audiences. . . . [The author] evaluates rather than illuminates, and, even though her evaluations are intelligent and sardonic, they rarely make our filmgoing experiences much more meaningful. Casual moviegoers, however, will probably enjoy her breezy style and witty chatter." J. W. Palmer

Library J 93:3152 S 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by Janet Strothman

Library J 93:4741 D 15 '68 130w [YA]

"Crist ranks as a good, gutsy critic, a self-styled 'preacher' with a tendency to moralize. . . . Her thinking is grooved down the middle of the intellectual road. . . . I enjoyed most her deflationary reviews of . . . 'Spencer's Mountain,' [and] 'Hurry Sundown' (hilarious) but these are, after all, big flabby targets. With harder cases such as 'Persona,' '8 1/2,' or 'Blow-up,' she is somewhat less satisfying, tending to give the esthetic complexities involved a superficial dusting and then put them on the shelf among the other objets d'art. . . . Taken in well-spaced doses, however, these collected reviews are . . . of special interest to the presumably numerous moviegoers who are disciples of Crist." R. R. Lingeman

N Y Times Bk R p15 D 29 '68 440w

CROCKER, LESTER G. Jean-Jacques Rousseau; 2v; v 1. The quest (1712-1758). 372p $8.95 Macmillan (N Y)

B or 92 Rousseau, Jean Jacques 68-22818

This is volume one of a proposed two volume work. The author "makes use of the research of [modern] critics in writing this detailed psychoanalytically oriented biography." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book covers the same years as] volume I of J. Guéneno's standard work, [Jean-Jacques] Rousseau: 1712-1758 [BRD 1966]. . . . [The author's] style is lively and highly readable, which should make the book appealing to the undergraduate and to the general reader despite the detail." M. E. Kelly

Library J 93:2648 J1 '68 170w

New Yorker 44:204 N 2 '68 100w

"Crocker's is the latest in a long line of respect-worthy critical interpretations of Rousseau. . . . His style is straightforward and unadorned, so that occasionally one looks forward to quotations from Rousseau himself to excite and to stimulate. . . . [His] psychological explanations of Rousseau's conduct are more subtle and ingenious than the insights into his states of feeling, even though hypotheses are sometimes proffered with a certitude that might dismay a professional analyst. . . . Sometimes one becomes impatient with the moralizing and longs for a respite—a little more compassion. . . an irreverent chuckle. . . but no such breaches of scholarly poise are allowed. . . . The proper study of Rousseau is Jean-Jacques, and this is the basic presupposition of Crocker's thorough and illuminating book." F. E. Manuel

CROCKER, L. G.—Continued

Sat R 51:34 O 5 '68 2100w

CROFT-COOKE, RUPERT. Feasting with panthers; a new consideration of some late Victorian writers. 309p pl $6.50 Holt

920 Authors, English. Sexual disorders

[67-111181]

The author of Bosie: Lord Alfred Douglas, His Friends and Enemies, BRD 1964, discusses "the socially condemned eroticism of a large group of late Victorian English writers and artists, including Swinburne, Solomon, Gosse, Symonds, Fitzgerald, Lear, Lewis Carroll, Pater, Johnson, and Wilde." (Sat R) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 221:136 Ap '68 110w

Reviewed by Michael Holroyd
Book World p7 Ap 21 '68 750w

"[The author] has selected [these men] for the period 1857 to 1895, that is, from Swinburne's first meeting with the pre-Raphaelites to Wilde's trial and imprisonment. There are sordid facts here about a most unconventional group of men who could write lines of great beauty. However, even if Mr. Croft-Cooke is not a profound man, his account of these lives, which can also be called a series of case histories, makes fascinating, albeit pathological, reading, which will interest the psychologist and psychiatrist as well as the literary historian." Allan Angoff

Library J 93:1144 Mr 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Theodore Roszak
Nation 206:671 My 20 '68 600w

"'Feasting with Panthers' was Oscar Wilde's euphemism for dalliance with young 'renters' (male prostitutes). To Rupert Croft-Cooke it symbolizes all the related perversions . . . practiced in the literary shadows of late Victorian England. . . . I have been interested in the lives of the men remembered here rather than in their works.' Croft-Cooke declares, 'but in their lives only as they were interrelated with their writings.' Yet we learn little about such writings, and instead are offered a collection of tawdry tales about significant writers, and even more sleazy episodes about the insignificant ones. . . . Wilde's fall ended the feasting with panthers. According to Croft-Cooke the public saw instead, and approved, a burgeoning 'passion for healthiness' among writers. But the ones Croft-Cooke identifies—Rider Haggard, Joseph Conrad, Conan Doyle, Rudyard Kipling, Robert Louis Stevenson—had either achieved popular success before Wilde's trial or clearly would have done so." Stanley Weintraub

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ap 14 '68 1100w

"[This book] is an odd but rather satisfactory display of John Bull common sense, frank and unprejudiced. While there is nothing new for the student of the period, it is amusing to have it all put together. The point the author makes is that the intellectual fuss made about 'decadence' was silly; this sort of thing goes on all the time, as any police blotter can show. That is true, but is it not the important characteristic of the age that the writers and artists and their followers chose to make a fuss about it? Mr. Croft-Cooke almost grasps this when he praises Swinburne for using the insights into human nature his erotic perplexities revealed to him and condemns Wilde for not using his homosexuality to transform his talent into genius." Morse Peckham

Sat R 51:29 Mr 30 '68 250w

"Inversion as an aspect of 'Decadence' furnishes the main topic of Mr. Croft-Cooke's entertaining, occasionally shrewd, but superficial and inaccurate book. . . . Clearly Mr. Croft-Cooke enjoys the gossip he is supposed to be dissipating. . . . He entirely relies on what are sometimes badly chosen secondary sources, such as Thomas Wright's absurd romance which was published under the title of The Life of Walter Pater, and the autobiographies of that veteran of imprecision, Ernest Rhys. Mr. Croft-Cooke has himself a passion for inaccuracy which he relentlessly gratifies. . . . Where he corrects others, Mr. Croft-Cooke is himself in error."

TLS p636 Je 20 '68 210w

Va Q R 44:cxxi summer '68 390w

CROFUT, WILLIAM. Troubadour; a different battlefield; foreword by Robert F. Kennedy. 283p il $6.95 Dutton

780.92 Folk songs. Voyages and travels. Cultural relations 67-11385

An account of "the author's trips to Korea, Vietnam, Japan, Southeast Asia, Africa and India as a guitar-playing, folk-singing member of a United States cultural troupe." (Library J)

"Crofut's descriptions of the trials of giving concerts in the jungle make light, interesting reading, but his impressions of the countries he toured are superficial. His writing style is not polished, but it reflects the young author's spirit and conviction, which should attract his browsing contemporaries." Helen Jacob

Library J 93:1336 Mr 15 '68 100w [YA]

"Alone, and with Steve Addiss [a guitarist, Crofut] has strolled city streets, bounced over country roads, and flown or boated into the hinterlands of Korea, Japan, Cambodia, Hong Kong, Thailand, Burma, Indonesia, Singapore, Kenya, the Somali Republic, Ethiopia, Vietnam, and elsewhere. . . . He writes with frankness, warmth, and humor of these experiences . . . and of his personal struggle to rise from an unknown banjo-strummer to an internationally known entertainer. His cause emerges as a plea for person-to-person contact—the effectiveness and mobility of small groups, rather than unwieldy troupes, in promoting understanding between peoples. . . . Mr. Crofut's book deserves consideration." G. M. Collier

Library J 93:1473 Ap 1 '68 200w

"[This] is less an intimate memoir than an unusual the-young-will-go-anywhere travel book, detailing Crofut's exotic hops from country to country. . . . [The larger theme] is a plug for personal diplomacy and cultural exchange as an integral part of American policy—a plug directed artfully at a Washington socket. . . . Cultural exchange, he says, gives 'a new dimension to our foreign policy.' Maybe so. But it is up to the performer to decide if he really wants to be an instrument of that policy. Crofut waffles. . . . It is a curious moral aloofness this, perhaps common to all those who learn folk songs as showbiz rather than protest. . . . But the showbiz of Crofut is good, and he is a polished young man in prose as well as song. When he taps time with the musical rather than the political beat, he can be a delight. And a delight, finally, here at home." J. K. Sale

N Y Times Bk R p54 My 26 '68 400w

CROKER, JOHN WILSON. The Croker papers, 1808-1857; ed. by Bernard Pool. new & abr ed 277p il $10 Barnes & Noble

942.08 Great Britain—History—19th century [67-79835]

This is an abridgment of the original three-volume edition of letters and diaries edited by Louis Jennings in 1884. Croker, a Tory, was an active participant in early nineteenth-century literary and political events. Index.

"With an adequate index and illustrations, this edition gives a broad and sometimes sketchy eyewitness description of England in the early 19th century. . . . The main value lies in its behind-the-scene discussion and gossip. If a library lacks the 1884 edition, this . . . is a necessary acquisition."

Choice 4:738 S '67 50w

"Although many of his contemporaries found him an unattractive character, a number of top people—including George IV, Wellington and Peel—liked to unburden themselves to [Croker].

On the whole he set down the mass of political gossip that he picked up in a reasonably straightforward and objective way. And it is interspersed with comments and sidelights on the manners and goings-on of the society in which he lived that are often both illuminating and amusing. . . . Mr Pool has done an excellent job of selection. But one cannot help wondering for whom. Presumably not for the specialist who would rather get hold of the original three volumes. . . . For the general reader, there should surely be more extensive editing, in addition to the excellent introduction. . . . A few more [footnotes] would have made the book, especially the political parts, more interesting to more people. And [it] certainly deserves a better index."

Economist 223:xvii Ap 15 '67 500w

Reviewed by Paul Johnson

New Statesman 73:512 Ap 14 '67 450w

"Reading this admirably chosen selection from his journals and correspondence and the comments of Mr Pool we are conscious of two reasons for the loathing which Croker aroused. The cause of conservatism (of which he is said to have invented the name) was at the time both disliked and dreaded. The other explanation . . . is that when mankind is frightened, it is prone to focus its terror by magnifying the powers of an individual. . . . There does not appear in his published diaries and letters anything to justify this detestation by most of his contemporaries. . . . Mr. Pool, who shared with Croker a working life in the Admiralty, has produced a workmanlike compression of the text into a single volume. . . . Possibly it only amounts to about one-sixth of the original edition . . . but what is essential is all there. Naturally some decidedly enjoyable gossip has had to go. . . . [Mr. Pool] has improved on Jennings by including the letters in their chronological place in the diary instead of lumping them together at the end of each section."

TLS p307 Ap 13 '67 800w

CROLL, MORRIS WILLIAM. Style, rhetoric, and rhythm; essays; ed. by J. Max Patrick [and others]. 450p $12.50 Princeton univ. press

808 Style, Literary. Rhetoric 65-14310

The nine essays gathered here "are arranged in three general sections or parts: I. 'The Anti-Ciceronian Movement: "Attic" and Baroque Prose Style' (5 essays); II. 'The Sources of Euphuistic Rhetoric' (1 essay); III. 'Oratorical Cadence and Verse Rhythm' (3 essays)." (J Aesthetics) Index.

"Excellent edited, perhaps even 'baroque' editing in which the footnotes have footnotes, this selection of essays by Croll deserves publication for the mere fact of its making available in one volume his . . . essays on the development of anti-Ciceronian prose, the style of Montaigne and Bacon and, philosophically although not practically, the style of most modern prose. Croll's essays were written from 35 to 50 years ago, and they have not really been superseded; certainly they are one of the clearest explanations of the development of prose, and, as the editors ably point out, only the work of Richard Foster Jones modifies Croll's thesis. . . . Certainly useful for advanced undergraduates and necessary for beginning graduate students."

Choice 3:628 O '66 210w

"This collection of Morris Croll's more important published articles is indispensable for literary specialists of the Renaissance, and for critics of rhythm and prose style, both because of the intrinsic merit of the very articles and because of the editors' invaluable comments. . . . [The] positive spirit of Croll's scholarship is duplicated in the editors themselves, who, in their erudite forewords to the essays and in their countless footnotes, make rectifications of his references and critical positions, appraise his tenets and furnish them with up-to-date bibliographies, and occasionally suggest needed complementary studies." P. J. Mahony

J Aesthetics 26:547 summer '68 650w

Reviewed by Standish Henning

Mod Lang J 51:112 F '67 1000w

CROMER, RICHARD. The miracle of flight; Marlin Perkins' wild kingdom, by Richard Cromer and the staff of Don Meier Productions; with an introd. by Marlin Perkins; il. by Joseph Cellini. 159p $4.95; lib bdg $5.70 Doubleday

598.2 Birds—Juvenile literature. Flight—Juvenile literature 68-10112

An explanation of "how birds fly and how man has copied . . . their methods of flight . . . [It] explains the aerodynamics of flight and how the bird is physically structured for it . . . [and] describes a number of physiological processes that provide the bird with the large amounts of energy needed for flight." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"An excellent and detailed book on all methods of flight, from the earliest living things to airplanes. Beginning with gravity, this account explains and illustrates better than any other book currently available for this age level, such principles as thrust, the anatomy of a bird's wing, migration, and why man cannot fly without mechanical aids. Although the book is lengthy and detailed, the text is easily comprehensible by, and should prove interesting for, non-science students." Margaret Weber

Library J 93:3979 O 15 '68 90w

"Comprehensive, lucid and easy to understand, [this book] traces the evolution of birds from their clumsy reptilian ancestors up to the present. . . . Cromer also gives a fascinating account of how man has adapted and incorporated many of the features of birds' wings into his airplanes and space ships. The apt analogies of birds and planes and the graphic illustrations will answer the questions of any imaginative, curious youngsters who want to know how it is that birds and men can fly." Thomas Foster

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p18 My 5 '68 170w [YA]

CROMPTON, MARGARET. Shelley's dream women. 301p il $6 Barnes, A.S.

B or 92 Shelley, Percy Bysshe 67-16885

This biography examines "the lives of well-known figures—Harriet Westbrook, Mary Godwin, Jane Williams—and the less familiar ones—Harriet Grove, Elizabeth Hitchener, Emilia Viviani—and [evaluates] their importance to Shelley as idealized figures rather than as real individuals." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Any good biography of a poet that illuminates his career is welcome; this study of the women that dominated Shelley's life and inspired his poetry does just that. . . . Margaret Crompton helps the reader toward a further understanding of the elusive Shelley. Her book is as readable as it is informative. There are only a few minor flaws. . . . [She] has a tendency to dramatize at the expense of clarity. . . . Recommended for biography collections of college libraries and larger public libraries." Elizabeth Nelson

Library J 93:81 Ja 1 '68 150w

"Miss Crompton gives a few quotations to indicate that Shelley found time to write some poetry in the hectic years between the reign of his cousin, Harriet Grove, and that of Jane Williams . . . but she does not explore the situations in depth nor the characters of those involved. . . . [Furthermore she] does not follow through her ladies' careers as thoroughly as she might."

TLS p436 My 25 '67 700w

CROOK, JOHN. Law and life of Rome. 349p $8.50 Cornell univ. press

309.137 Rome—Social conditions. Law—Rome 67-20633

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Mason Hammond

Am Hist R 73:1117 Ap '68 380w

Choice 5:247 Ap '68 80w

Reviewed by F. C. Bourne

Class World 61:160 D '67 340w

CROSSLEY-HOLLAND, KEVIN. The green children; il. by Margaret Gordon. unp $4.50 Seabury

68-14087

This "story was apparently first written down 700 years ago by Ralph of Coggeshall . . . but 'for hundreds of years before that, it was passed by word of mouth from grandfather to father to son'. It is set here in the reign of King Stephen, and describes how villagers in Suffolk found and took care of two green children who appeared from out of the earth." (TLS) "Grades one to three." (Library J)

"The idea of two emerald green little children suddenly popping out of the ground and refusing to eat anything but green vegetables should be instantly appealing to the young. Beyond that, this adaptation of a medieval English tale is a little too mystifying; it offers only a casual explanation of the children's strange origin and an inconclusive ending. The narration carries a strong sense of the period, however, and the real and fantastic are very well integrated. The illustrations are bright, flat, posterish, but neither they nor the text tell a satisfyingly complete story." Elinor Cullen

CROSSLEY-HOLLAND, KEVIN—Continued

Library J 93:2727 J1 '68 100w

"A fine tale, told with authority and feeling. It is a pity that the illustrations lack the grace and authenticity of the text." Alice Low
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p47 My 5 '68 150w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:38 My 11 '68 100w

"[Interesting for] historically-minded children. . . . There is a short glossary (demesne, fitch, villain, and so on) and the illustrations, in brilliant colours, make full use of the contrast between the fat earthy peasants and the sad, ethereal children."

TLS p1088 N 24 '66 100w

CROSSON, FREDRICK J., ed. Philosophy and cybernetics; essays delivered to the Philosophic Institute for artificial intelligence at the University of Notre Dame: Frederick J. Crosson and Kenneth M. Sayre, editors. 271p $6.95 Univ. of Notre Dame press

001.5 Cybernetics 67-16858

A collection of papers which represent an attempt to explore "the interaction between computer technology and various philosophic conceptions of the nature of man." In the process, [the contributors] each discuss . . . the fundamentals of information theory and then go on to examine and compare the capacities of men and machines to transmit and receive information in the light of this theory." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[The contributors'] argument is couched in technical philosophic and mathematical terms beyond the capacity of laymen. Much of it turns on semantics, for instance, the subtle differences between such terms as choose and decide, follow and obey, differences so subtle that even the sharpest computer is sure to be baffled." A. L. Fessler

Library J 92:1935 My 15 '67 300w

"[Any 'interested laymen'] will have to be good linguists, for most of the essays are written in an idiom so remote from any normal tongue as to demand a name of its own; 'cybernetisch', perhaps. This combines abstruse mathematical symbolism with a habit of referring to ideas by arbitrarily chosen letters of the alphabet. . . . Professors J. L. Massey, an expert on electrical engineering and D. B. Burrell, a philosopher, contribute the most lucid of the essays, and though the former explodes in firework showers of mathematics from time to time, he makes his points with exactness and clarity, insisting that 'the proper function of the computing machine is to extend . . . human intelligence', that 'the most important aspects of human life are non-numerical'."

TLS p371 Ap 11 '68 400w

CROWE, CHARLES. George Ripley; transcendentalist and Utopian socialist. 316p $7.95 Univ. of Ga. press

B or 92 Ripley, George 67-26605

This biography recounts Ripley's life during the three main phases of his career: "leader in the philosophical argument between Unitarianism and Transcendentalism, . . . president of the Brook Farm community and a key figure in American utopian socialism, . . . [and] literary critic on the staff of Horace Greeley's New York Tribune." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"Because Mr. Crowe, of the University of Georgia History Department, has now provided a detailed and balanced account of Ripley's entire life, a very basic scholarly need has been supplied. Students of the Transcendental movement can be grateful for a sensitive interpretation of a long and active career. . . . [The] biography also provides valuable information on events and institutions. . . . At the same time, however, the very notion of Ripley as a passive reflector mechanism suggests the primary weakness of this biography. The author portrays Ripley's social passion and his concern for freedom in the church, but his strenuous philosophical and theological battles are drained of their fire. The propulsive force of his ideas and the impact of his advocacy are not given their due. . . . His changing relationships to Emerson's thought, his penchant for Parker, . . . his discovery of Fourier . . . and other related matters need far more careful thought than they are given here. . . . This work will, in any case, stimulate and facilitate further research and analysis." S. E. Ahlstrom

Am Lit 40:404 N '68 700w

Choice 5:1032 O '68 100w

"The book is based on extensive research in primary sources, but unfortunately the footnotes are relegated to the rear and identified only by chapter numbers. There is a fine biographical essay. The writing is competent, but there are a considerable number of typographical errors. All in all, however it is a valuable study." I. V. Brown

J Am Hist 55:131 Je '68 460w

"[This] is the only book of any sort on Ripley except for O. B. Frothingham's rather superficial and eulogistic memoir of 1882. . . . [This] deserves to stand as the definitive biography. . . . Sometimes the thread of Ripley's life gets lost in the contextual detail. Related to this tendency . . . is the fact that the biography as a whole stresses Ripley's public career somewhat at the expense of his private life. This is one respect in which Frothingham's book [George Ripley], thin and sentimental as it often is, compares favorably with Mr. Crowe's. Frothingham . . . consistently manages to convey a stronger sense of Ripley's personality. . . . [However], Crowe's Ripley should continue to stand for some time . . . as a significant point of reference for students of nineteenth-century American cultural history." Lawrence Buell

New Eng Q 41:461 S '68 750w

CROWTHER, BOSLEY. The great films; fifty golden years of motion pictures. 258p il $10 Putnam

791.43 Moving pictures 67-30265

The film critic of the New York Times has written a "history of the motion picture as seen through 50 great films produced between 1915 and 1967 around the world. . . . [He] traces the development of the movies as an art form through critiques and . . . anecdotes. Casts and credits are listed along with 300 stills from the films discussed." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"For libraries, this will be an important addition to the growing literature on the Film as an Art medium."

Best Sell 27:357 D 1 '67 110w

Reviewed by Marian Trahan

Library J 92:4638 D 15 '67 50w [YA]

Reviewed by Paul Myers

Library J 93:204 Ja 15 '68 120w

"[This] is a big, good-looking, well-illustrated layabout book, for all comers and all occasions. . . . Mr. Crowther says he has picked the 'breakthroughs.' Whether you agree or not that the 50 films he chooses are the 50 films that made the cinema, the important thing is that an important critic has made an authoritative choice. We should be grateful for an extraordinary exercise in critical decision. . . . There is on the face of it much to enjoy in a many-faceted book of this kind, and much to enjoy along the way in its author's warm, liberal and wide-ranging testament. His 50 films represent a classical choice. Give or take half a dozen, few serious film observers will greatly demur. But if you don't always agree, there also lies the book's interest. . . . In his account there are people I sorely miss. . . . Altogether, 'The Great Films' is a book to keep you cheerfully argumentative and appreciative—and for a long time." John Grierson

N Y Times Bk R p7 D 17 '67 1000w

CROWTHER, J. G. Science in modern society. 403p $8 Schocken

509 Science and state 68-22592

A British journalist examines the relationship between science and government in Great Britain and in the U.S. Bibliography.

"After examining lagging British and soaring American technology, Crowther zeroes in on his real subject: the ideologies and rationales that have attached themselves to the pursuits of science in the post-Christian era. Basic."

Christian Century 85:1306 O 16 '68 40w

"[A] popularly written book [which] stresses science, technology, and the state in Great Britain. Beyond that, however, [the author's] Marxist bias . . . is exhibited in his criticism of capitalism and his excessive praise of modern Chinese science. . . . [For] the informed general reader." George Basalla.

Library J 93:4153 N 1 '68 80w

CROZIER, BRIAN. Franco. 589p il maps $10 Little

946.082 Franco Bahamonde, Francisco. Spain—History 68-13880

A journalist attempts a reevaluation of the subject's life and career maintaining that "neither the Republican nor the Nationalist myth about Franco and about the Civil War stands up to scrutiny. . . . [The book is based on] books and documents. . . . supplemented by private conversations with both supporters and opponents of Franco. . . . [It] concludes with an] attempt to assess the importance of Franco in Spanish and world history." (Foreword) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman
America 119:570 N 30 '68 90w

Reviewed by B. D. Williams
Best Sell 28:47 My 1 '68 550w

"Two new biographies mark the first serious effort to assess the Spanish dictator and his place in history. George Hills [is] the author of the shorter book [Franco: The Man and His Nation, BRD 1968]. . . . Crozier's book is much the better of the two. He has placed the problems of modern Spanish history in clearer focus, and his treatment is better balanced in almost every respect. He also provides a searching and explicit final evaluation, which Hills does not attempt. . . . Both writers are cautiously favorable to Franco. Crozier's interpretations are more explicit, better documented, more fully reasoned, and they do not refrain from examining the negative aspects of Franco's leadership." S. G. Payne

Book World p4 Ap 21 '68 400w

Choice 6:669 J1 '68 250w

"It is certainly untrue, as Mr Crozier repeatedly emphasises, to call Franco a 'Fascist' dictator. But it would have been an advantage if the author had defined more carefully what he means by 'fascism,' especially in relation to the Falange. . . . [The] book is a very useful contribution to an understanding of Franco, the man, the general and the statesman. But it is probably truer to say that Spain has moved into the twentieth century under General Franco than, as [the author] does, that 'Franco moved her with characteristic deliberation into the twentieth century.' Economic and external political circumstances, especially since 1951, have played a larger part than Mr Crozier gives credit for, and the final assessment of this period cannot yet be made."

Economist 225:525 N 4 '67 800w

Reviewed by A. F. Peterson
Library J 93:2478 Je 15 '68 190w

Reviewed by Allen Guttman
New Repub 158:32 My 4 '68 800w

"Crozier's approach to Franco comes from an emotion shared by the two men; he writes that he and Franco 'both hate communism'. His book reveals the inadequacy of this emotion as a political principle. . . . [nor does he understand] the Spanish Falange sufficiently to picture Franco's role in the development of facism in Spain." H. R. Southworth

New Statesman 74:907 D 29 '67 850w

Reviewed by Raymond Carr
N Y Rev of Books 11:29 D 19 '68 350w

Reviewed by Frank Jellinek
N Y Times Bk R p6 Je 23 '68 1450w

"[The author retreads] much ground that has been admirably covered—with a fundamentally pro-Republican stance—by G. Brennan (The Spanish Labyrinth) [BRD 1943] and H. Thomas (The Spanish Civil War) [BRD 1961]. This biography is sketchy in its analyses of the mellowing dictator's 'Spanish Peace' and the pressures that are building up under his immobilism. [The author] tends to overrate the impact of ostensible 'liberalization' moves by the Franco régime, and to play down recent repression even of moderate dissent."

Paul Hofmann

Sat R 51:31 My 25 '68 480w

"By far the best book yet published in English on the Spanish dictator. [The author] is a convert, but a judicious one. . . . Having shed the veil of left-wing mythology, Mr. Crozier has not, however, reacted uncritically in the opposite direction. He has carefully studied the evidence—indeed, he has usefully re-examined the assumptions of even such experts ■ Professor Hugh Thomas—and he has arrived at reasoned, reasonable conclusions. . . . It is the great merit of [the author] that he has survived the process of disillusionment without becoming unbalanced, and . . . his approach is at once critical, sympathetic and understanding."

TLS p1002 O 26 '67 1200w

CRUICKSHANK, WILLIAM M. The brain-injured child in home, school, and community. 294p il $6.50 Syracuse univ. press

371.9 Exceptional children 67-15879

"This book discusses the symptoms of brain damage, recommends diagnostic procedures and personnel, and describes classroom and home techniques that have proved effective." (Publisher's note) Appendix: National, state and local organizations. Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Cruikshank is a well-known authority on exceptional children, but this book is not for specialists. Rather, it is designed expressly for parents and teachers of children with brain injuries. . . . Typically diagnostic procedures are discussed but, unfortunately, at a level which is sometimes too technical for the intended audience. Especially important is the discussion of numerous effective techniques for teaching these disabled children in classroom and home situations. A good case is made for a comprehensive and integrated educational and treatment program, including psychotherapy. . . . Parents and inexperienced teachers of these children will probably find this a very useful book, in spite of its unevenness in difficulty and clarity."

Choice 4:1180 D '67 140w

Reviewed by Juliet Woodbury
Library J 92:2398 Je 15 '67 130w

CRUSE, HAROLD. The crisis of the Negro intellectual. 594p $8.95 Morrow

917.3 U.S.—Intellectual life. Negroes 67-25316

The author contends "that, historically, Negroes have always veered either toward integration or nationalism, [that] the Negro intellectual has failed because he does not know his history and has not been able to reconcile these two impulses effectively, [that] the immediate failure of the Negro intellectual derives from the Harlem Renaissance in the 1920's when Negro artists and intellectuals made the mistake of not combining their cultural nationalism with comparable political and economic movements, [and that] Negro intellectuals persist in making the same error to this day." (Library J)

Choice 5:227 Ap '68 200w

"No mere tract for the times, this 594-page book is a historical review that merits reading not only by Negro intellectuals but by all who will profit from these Negroes' work ■ they make their way."

Christian Century 84:1496 N 22 '67 90w

Reviewed by Arthur Tobier
Commonweal 89:50 Mr 29 '68 1150w

"Much of this book is immensely informative, even profusely so. Often polemical, it is also poorly organized, prejudiced and weakly documented. In spite of these faults, Mr. Cruse's thesis is probably correct and with perseverance much can be learned from his book. For general readers, informed laymen, scholars and specialists." Edward Margolies

Library J 92:3433 O 1 '67 140w

Reviewed by Max Geltman
Nat R 20:300 Mr 26 '68 900w

"The most penetrating study of [the nihilistic tendencies latent in Black Power] is to be found in [this volume]. . . . Cruse is a radical, but his book gives no comfort to the 'radicalism' currently fashionable. It deals with real issues, not leftist fantasies. . . . When all the manifestoes and polemics of the Sixties are forgotten, this book will survive as a monument of historical analysis. . . . That it clears up ■ great deal of confusion should already be evident. Certain questions, however, remain. . . . Cruse does not seem to me to confront the possibility that black nationalism, which he realizes has always been flawed by its 'romantic and escapist' tendencies, may be inherently romantic and escapist. . . . The analysis of American Negroes as an ethnic group should properly include a study of the role of other nationalist ideologies, like Zionism or Irish-American nationalism, in order to discover whether they played any important part in the successful efforts of those communities to organize themselves. . . . There is the further problem of what Cruse means by 'culture.' These questions aside, Cruse leaves no doubt of the validity of his main thesis: that intellectuals must play a central role in movements for radical change, that this role should consist of formulating 'a new political philosophy,' and that in twentieth-century American history they have failed in this work." Christopher Lasch

CRUSE, HAROLD—Continued

N Y Rev of Books 10:10 F 29 '68 2100w

"Almost six hundred pages of polemic, this is an intellectual history of the American Negro in this century which dismisses practically every thinker as 'a retarded child.' (The few exceptions are nearly all dead.) Mr. Cruse is a Negro nationalist and revolutionary, very much influenced by Marxism in a deviant line running through Randolph Bourne, V. F. Calverton, and C. Wright Mills. He has little sympathy for the Black Power movement, which he regards as reformist where it is not Bakuninist; less for West Indians, because of their 'superior attitude;' and still less for Jews, whom he sees as exploiters of the Negro masses and befuddlers of Negro leaders. . . . A book that will infuriate almost everyone."

New Yorker 43:112 F 3 '68 150w

Reviewed by B. E. Olson
Sat R 51:82 My 11 '68 850w

CRUSE, HAROLD. Rebellion or revolution?
272p $6.95 Morrow

301.451 Negroes. U.S.—Race relations
68-29609

The author of The Crisis of the Negro Intellectual (BRD 1968) presents essays written from 1951 to date which discuss "the present racial impasse in America, examining the impact and relevance of such writers, thinkers and performers as James Baldwin, Albert Camus, Booker T. Washington, and Josephine Baker, and such subjects as Afro-Americanism and Afro-American culture, black nationalism, black power, Marxism and revolutionary nationalism." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by B. D. Williams
Best Sell 28:385 D 15 '63 230w

"[This] is a weak encore to [the author's previous book]. . . . Several articles (including one on Marxism and the Negro) are worth reading. Others deserve criticism, but criticism would have little effect: Cruse warns in the introduction that 'members of the established white American radical movement' simply are not perceptive enough to catch on to his radical theories. This self-exemption from criticism is one of Cruse's least attractive features."

Christian Century 85:1508 N 27 '68 80w

"This book along with [his first book] establishes Harold Cruse as one of the most interesting and original social thinkers in America today. An unorthodox Marxist, Mr. Cruse argues . . . [that] the Black Power movement . . . is essentially a democratic bourgeois nationalist movement deriving in large part from the ideas of . . . Booker T. Washington who wisely foresaw the need for a black capitalist class. Without the prior existence of such a class, Mr. Cruse argues, no further revolutionary transformation can be effected. The inability thus far of the Black Power leaders to gain mass support is largely attributable to their failure to enlist the revolutionary potential of black culture. There is much more that is rich and provocative in this book—and if the prose is something cumbersome, it is still worth plodding through for the freshness of Mr. Cruse's perception." Edward Margolies

Library J 93:3544 O 1 '68 180w

Reviewed by Jack Richardson
N Y Rev of Books 11:10 D 19 '68 700w

CSICSERY-RÓNAY, ISTVÁN. The first book of Hungary. 89p il $2.65 Watts, F.

914.39 Hungary—Juvenile literature 67-1527

"A general history of Hungary through the Hungarian Revolution of 1956 is given here, and an equal amount of space is devoted to language and literature, religion, folklore, sports, holidays, and the arts. [Index.] Grades four to six." (Library J)

"[This] book is especially to be recommended as it offers a discerning look at this proud, freedom-loving land. Its history, people, music, etc. are covered together with a straightforward discussion of the postwar scene, including the Communist take-over and the 1956 revolution." M. S.

Christian Science Monitor pB9 My 4 '67 50w

"Historical aspects of the subjects [treated] are especially emphasized." C. A. Gallant
Library J 92:4634 D 15 '67 40w

CUDDON, J. A. The companion guide to Yugoslavia [maps by Charles Green and J. F. Trotter; costume drawings by M. Heywood]. 480p $6.95 Harper

914.97 Yugoslavia—Description and travel—Guide books 63-19152

This book "covers all regions of the country starting . . . on the Dalmatian coast, moving through Montenegro to Macedonia, through Serbia, Belgrade, Bosnia into Croatia, and ending in Slovenia and Istria. Each section has detailed maps, descriptions of towns, villages and unusual places to visit. . . . [Appendices include] information on resorts, hotels, food, wine, entertainments, sports [and other topics]." (Economist) Important dates. Bibliography. Index of places. Index of persons and subjects.

"This detailed and interesting guide to Yugoslavia covers almost all subjects that the ordinary traveller to this beautiful country needs to know about. . . . None of the main tourist attractions is omitted. Like other guides in this series, it has beautiful photographs to whet the appetite. . . . The author has an obvious warm feeling for Yugoslavia which he admirably conveys to the reader; bazaars, mediaeval castles, old and new towns, local customs and festivals are all lovingly described. . . . The reader is shown that Yugoslavia is an exhilarating country to explore."

Economist 228:44 Ag 17 '68 380w

"[The author] has carefully put together considerable information in an anecdotal narrative that follows a definite itinerary. There is also a bibliography for those interested in reading further about the history and culture—but not the contemporary scene—of Yugoslavia. In both the arrangement and style there is a certain leisurely, appreciative quality rare in most American travel guides. . . . This book is for the man or woman who enjoys traveling comfortably without getting too far off the beaten track, but who possesses a friendly curiosity about new places and is not obsessed with either shortcuts or amenities. It should be useful in libraries." V. D. Newman

Library J 93:3558 O 1 '68 160w

"This is the most sympathetic and perceptive book about Yugoslavia since Rebecca West's Black Lamb and Grey Falcon [BRD 1941]. It is more than a guide book, although it has everything a guide book should have. . . . [Its real excellence lies] in the author's knowledge of the people and their language, their history and their legends. . . . He quotes and translates some of the most moving passages from the cycle of ballads composed about the battle [of Kosovo] and its aftermath, and the heroic deeds of the Serbian warriors. Then he pauses to tell us about Vuk Karadžić, who collected the ballads from the itinerant minstrels who sang them. Two parts of the book are particularly helpful: the introduction to medieval Serbian art and architecture, with a map giving the location of the principal Orthodox churches and monasteries, and the description of the Bogomils' tombstones, also with a map showing their distribution."

TLS p558 My 30 '68 450w

CULLINAN, GERALD. The Post office department; foreword by James A. Farley. 272p il $5.95 Praeger

353.4 U.S. Post Office Department. Postal service 67-22288

This "history and description of the postal service from the colonial times to the present . . . [includes] arguments for the automation of the post office." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book is] directed at the general reader and based on secondary sources. Cullinan, former . . . Post Office official, presents an interesting but superficial account of the department which he describes as the 'magnificent invalid.' . . . In the final chapter Cullinan deals with the current administrative problems and presents several policy alternatives for improvement of the service."

Choice 5:868 S '68 80w

"This is a readable, informative history. . . . Even allowing for the problems peculiar to the United States, Mr. Cullinan believes that the performance of the postal service falls short of what the citizens have every right to expect. His book is a suggested purchase for public and academic libraries." S. C. Wyllie
Library J 93:1647 Ap 15 '68 130w

CULLMANN, OSCAR. Vatican Council II: the new direction; essays sel. and arr. by James D. Hester. 116p $6 Harper

262.5 Vatican Council, 2d 68-11981

"Volume 19 of the New Directions series, an attempt at religious perspectives and the 're-discovery of man,' is a small collection of lectures and papers by a Protestant theologian who was an observer at Vatican II. Using the theology of salvation as the foundation for ecumenical dialogue, Cullmann appraises the decisions of the Council and the resulting climate of the Catholic Church. . . . defining, as well as limiting, the areas in which the ecumenical dialogue may make progress." (Critic)

Critic 26:78 Je '68 100w

"Among New Testament scholars Oscar Cullman, professor at the University of Basel, is almost unique in the respect he has been accorded by Catholic and Protestant theologians alike). . . . His book is beautifully written; he tries to avoid jargon and bias of any kind. Indeed, several of the essays have a journalistic objectivity about them. Nothing escapes his close attention—neither dogmas, personalities, nor party conflicts. [The book] is recommended for college, university, and public libraries, except the smallest." Jack Clarke
Library J 93:2244 Je 1 '68 200w

CULP, JOHN H. A whistle in the wind; a novel. 281p $5.95 Holt

"Beginning in Texas just before the Civil War, this is a . . . novel centering on Chafin, captured by the Indians but allowed to live because he runs a way station for Indian traders; Chafin's son, Roderick; and Cesre, a girl left with Chafin by her father. Roderick and Cesre grow up among the Indians, far from any other settlements, marry, and settle down to raise sheep until Cesre is forced to leave with a renegade chief in order to save the village. After her Indian husband dies, Cesre and her son wander through the land, and she becomes a legend to both settlers and Indians. When she returns to her former home, Cesre is unable to adjust to the town and goes off to the wilderness to die." (Library J)

"There is a lot of 'implied action' in the book, but little of it is described. Armies attack, people are massacred, the Indian population of the West is destroyed and the survivors put on reservations—but this gets little more than a sentence's mention. When, on occasion, the author chooses to write and describe what is going on, the story becomes exciting, the action urgent. But this does not happen often enough. The chase to rescue Cesre and a desperate fight to save a flock of Roderick's sheep in a sudden spring blizzard provide about the only really exciting incidents in the whole book." J. D. Foreman
Best Sell 28:205 Ag 15 '68 550w

Reviewed by C. D. Pipes

Library J 93:2019 My 15 '68 110w

"This is a realistic and moving novel. . . . As a heroine, Cesre is a strong, admirable character who should be popular with teenage girls." Regina Minudri
Library J 93:3994 O 15 '68 150w [YA]

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p33 Je 23 '68 270w

CULSHAW, JOHN. Ring resounding. 276p pl $7.50 Viking

782.1 Wagner, Richard—The ring of the Nibelungs 67-25921

The former classical music director of the Decca Record Company has written an opera-by-opera account of the seven years (1958 to 1965) spent in making a complete recording of Richard Wagner's Der Ring des Nibelungen. Appendixes include Ring chronology and The Recordings. Index.

Reviewed by Richard Freedman

Book World p24 D 3 '67 1200w

"This is an exciting narrative that will be greatly enjoyed by musicians, opera buffs, and discophiles. Appendixes include . . . the casts in the recordings; manufacturer's catalogue numbers; and timings of the four separate operas as well as timings of the individual sides of the 20 discs. Extensive index of proper names and titles."

Choice 5:494 Je '68 210w

"Mr. Culshaw's narrative, explaining in chronological sequence the problems and solutions, the discouragements and the triumphs, makes absorbing reading. Along with all of his other accomplishments, he writes well. . . . The book makes clear the different problems of recorded and staged opera, and Mr. Culshaw has interesting things to say about modern Wagnerian productions in the theater." P. L. Miller

Library J 93:82 Ja 1 '68 170w

"This book tells the backroom story in some detail . . . most of it generally entertaining and all of it of outstanding interest to anyone particularly concerned with opera or the gramophone. . . . A fascinating record then of a major undertaking, perhaps the greatest in the gramophone's history. But could it—should it—have been more than that? Has the author set his sights too low and written a narrative of a campaign and its problems where he might have given us a strategic treatise? There are frequent hints that he could have done this, with his considerable insight into Wagnerian problems and his sense of modern gramophone. . . . When it comes to the future of stereo Mr. Culshaw is more challenging but sometimes on shakier ground."

TLS p1204 D 14 '67 950w

CUMBERLAND, CHARLES C. Mexico: the struggle for modernity. 394p maps $7.50; pa $2.50 Oxford

972 Mexico—History

68-15891

A professor of history at Michigan State University "describes the economy and the religious practices of Aztec society, and the everyday life of the people before the Conquest. He takes account of the country's gains from the Spaniards, as well as the . . . toll of slavery and depopulation they exacted. The Independence movement, the regimes of Díaz and Juárez, the Cardenas reforms, the battles over oil and expropriation, are . . . interpreted. The Revolution itself Mr. Cumberland views as the inevitable culmination of four centuries of inequality and repression, and as the seedbed of Mexico's recent development." (Publisher's note) Political chronology. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[The book] is readable and scholarly, based on recent research and primary sources. It is a reasonably balanced treatment. . . . Major upheavals and changes—the conquest, independence, the reform, and the 1910 revolution—are emphasized; their meaning and significance interpreted. . . . This book should become the preferred text in English for undergraduate courses in the history of Mexico."

Choice 5:1356 D '68 140w

"To summarize in one volume the complex history of such a varied country as Mexico is not an easy task. [The author] has succeeded here, largely by writing what is basically an economic history. However, he does not neglect social and political factors. His style is excellent. . . . The book contains a number of clear maps and useful tables but no illustrations. It also contains a 21-page bibliographical essay that will be helpful to students. This book is an excellent interesting introduction . . . and is recommended to serious readers and especially to anyone contemplating a visit to Mexico. . . . A useful addition for both academic and public libraries." Jack Goodwin

Library J 93:2861 Ag '68 150w

"Cumberland abandons the conventional political-biographical approach to examine, with a firm grasp of monographical material, the elements that gave structure to the nation's history. In a precise and analytical manner he cogently summarizes and evaluates Spanish colonial policy. . . . His interpretation, clearly organized and richly documented, adds a new dimension to our knowledge of the colonial period. Unfortunately [he] permits his admiration for Mexico's capitalist economy to distort his picture of the 20th century. While he condemns the evils of the Porfirista dictatorship (perhaps unduly) and acknowledges the futility of the Revolution to 1924, he concludes with an evaluation of the last decades that lauds the progress achieved but offers only a cursory criticism of its shortcomings." R. E. Ruiz

CUMBERLAND, C. C.—Continued

 N Y Times Bk R p54 S 8 '68 600w

TLS p1291 N 14 '68 3600w

"For those with an economic approach toward history, this work may prove of interest. Unfortunately, Mexican history is more than facts and figures; it is a national history that is without parallel in the world. It is certainly far more varied and exciting than Cumberland brings out in this work. In large measure that is the fault of a style that manages to bury the excitement under a prose that is remarkably stilted and flat. The significance of the revolutions and the growth of Mexico from a Spanish colony into a developing twentieth-century nation does not come through at all."

Va Q R 44:clxx autumn '68 80w

CUMMINGS, RICHARD. The alchemists; fathers of practical chemistry; il. by Yukio Tashiro. 146p $3.50 McKay

540.9 Alchemy—History—Juvenile literature 66-13703

An "account of the evolution of alchemy from ancient times to the present as seen through the lives of nine alchemists of diverse professions, e.g., a magician, a scholar, a monk, a physician. [Bibliography.] Grade seven and up." (Library J)

"[A] lucid, entertaining account. . . . Pertinent alchemical knowledge included in each biographical sketch is explained clearly in layman's terms. This novel approach contrasts favorably with adult books on the subject, which, because they cover additional material, are more terse and less interesting. . . . The format is attractive and excellent drawings of alchemical symbols adorn the beginning of each chapter. Recommended for public and school libraries." Paul Goldstein

Library J 91:2702 My 15 '66 120w

Reviewed by Philip and Phyllis Morrison
 Sci Am 217:148 D '67 200w

CUNHA, GEORGE DANIEL MARTIN. Conservation of library materials; a manual and bibliography on the care, repair and restoration of library materials. 405p il $10 Scarecrow

025 Books 67-12063

"This volume provides an introduction to the various facets of conservation as well as bibliographical data. . . . In addition to being a critical description of the literature on the historic and technical aspects of the care, repair and restoration of books, prints, maps, and manuscripts and other important records, it is a manual of practical guidance for librarians, archivists, curators, conservators, restorationists and bookbinders." (Pref) Glossary. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Since the pioneering publication in 1931 of [H. M.] Lydenberg and [J.] Archer's slender The Care and Repair of Books [BRD 1931], there has been only one other monograph in English on scientific book conservation. . . . Despite the use of the term 'manual' in the subtitle, however, this book is primarily a literature survey. There are no detailed instructions for any operation. . . . Approximately two-fifths of the book are text; one-fifth is appendixes, and two-fifths are bibliography. The text is a mixed bag of useful information, balanced surveys, and sound evaluation, on the one hand, with unclear and disorganized writing, fuzzy thinking, and misinformation on the other. . . . That such a key to the field as this has been so desperately needed cannot . . . absolve the publisher from blame for such an incredibly bad job of editing, if indeed the manuscript was edited at all." P. N. Banks

Col & Res Lib 29:315 J1 '68 1150w

"It is good to welcome this work by a real 'pro.' While the typographic style of the book, and the lack of some needed illustrations won't win any graphic arts prizes, the substance of this book is pure gold. The table of contents reads like a course outline on the subject of care, repair, and restoration, and the content of the book follows through with succinct and appropriate information." J. T. Popecki

Library J 93:2218 Je 1 '68 360w

"The book's chief usefulness is in its extensive bibliography. Although Cunha labels it 'selective,' it has more than 2,000 citations, including ones that were published only a few months before this book appeared. It may seem ungrateful to criticize so valuable a contribution but the arrangement of the bibliography limits its usefulness. First, the user must learn that the bibliography is arranged in the order of the chapters and their subsections in the text. Then, he must lead through both the text and the bibliography to discover the section he needs. The index refers to section headings in the bibliography, but they are too general to be useful." Stephen Ford

LRTS 12:371 summer '68 440w

CUNLIFFE, MARCUS. Soldiers & civilians; the martial spirit in America, 1775-1865. 499p il $12.50 Little

355 U.S.—History, Military 68-22898

This history "covers the genesis of the American military tradition, its growth, its champions and opponents, its effects on civilian life, its more significant or flamboyant manifestations, and its role in the history of the United States [from the American Revolution to the Civil War]." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This study is] thoughtfully subtle and penetrating. . . . Cunliffe sees the American military ethos . . . as a 'triple heritage' . . . in the shape of three 'models'—the Quaker, the Rifleman and the Chevalier. . . . This [review] does not do justice to the intricacies of the analysis, nor does it suggest the scores of myths and cherished theories that are gently but firmly exploded. . . . [The] book is required reading for all Civil War buffs and historians. One can only wish that the author had devoted some of his attention to the 'why' of the matter. Why did America develop this peculiar military ethos? . . . One thing at least is clear—that anyone who does attempt to answer such questions will have to start with Marcus Cunliffe's book." C. V. Woodward

Book World p1 O 20 '68 800w

"The special appeal of this historical study lies in Cunliffe's painstaking analysis of the influences from outside sources on the American military establishment. . . . [He] brings to life in his candid treatment the outstanding personalities of each era. The book is intensely interesting; the documentation in itself is a real contribution to scholarship. Indispensable for United States history collections." E. R. Alexander

Library J 93:3134 S 15 '68 110w

"As the reader wends his way through . . . various subjects, he can easily become confused as to what Cunliffe is writing about. Is it . . . the American martial spirit? Or is it the American military character or military tradition? It is a weakness of the book that the author does not clearly state a theme. If one may be stated for him, it is that he is describing national attitudes toward military policy. His frame of reference is large and loose, but because it is so, he is able to put forward vast and sometimes unusual chunks of information and to offer shrewd and often original comments. He has read and researched widely, and he brings to his reflections a freshness that results perhaps from his foreign vantage." T. H. Williams

N Y Times Bk R p42 N 3 '68 1200w

CUNNEEN, SALLY. Sex: female; Religion: Catholic. 171p $4.95 Holt

282 Women and religion. Catholic Church in the U.S. Catholic Church—Doctrinal and controversial works 68-10075

An attempt to examine the attitudes of "American Catholic women concerning their church and the role they as women are permitted to play in it. . . . [based on a 1965 questionnaire sent to] United States and Canadian subscribers of Cross Currents, a lay Catholic quarterly. [Respondents were] . . . coded, quoted, and some of them interviewed in the course of the writing of this book. The opinions of non-Catholics were inserted when there was a need for contrast and comparison. Such chapter headings as 'From Woman to Person,' 'The Council Opens the Door,' 'Nuns in Evolution,' and 'Church Roles For Women' explore the real or imagined inequality of the sexes within the church." (Library J)

"An enlightening and unexpectedly poignant contribution to our understanding of this moment in Church history. . . . The answers [which the author] received were often quite moving. Nearly all the women were practicing Catholics, more than half of them educated in Catholic schools, and yet many felt isolated and neglected within the Church. They expressed a spiritual hunger that apparently goes unrecognized at the parish level. . . . They felt that the traditional teaching of the Church on sex and marriage has been inhuman and damaging. . . . Many things are written about Catholic women today. Sally Cunneen has let them speak for themselves and the result is a timely and significant book." Myrtle Passantino

America 119:82 Ag 3 '68 550w

"Cross Currents coeditor received hundreds of responses to a questionnaire she sent subscribers. Naturally, the respondents represent a Roman Catholic elite. But their answers begin to provide some hard data on the changing self-image of Catholic women in the U.S. Mrs. Cunneen is careful not to read too much into her findings, so the picture of these women in transition remains a bit tentative and fuzzy. One clear conclusion: they can't go home again to pre-Vatican status."

Christian Century 85:874 J1 3 '68 80w

Reviewed by Doris Grumbach
Commonweal 88:664 S 27 '68 1550w

Reviewed by Anne Fremantle
Critic 27:99 O '68 1250w

"Mrs. Cunneen says in the preface: 'Despite the help of the interviews . . . my material has come to resemble an extremely difficult jigsaw puzzle with a number of key pieces missing. I am not at all sure what the pieces that follow will "prove".' If the author is not sure, what of the reader? To this reviewer it seemed that there was a great deal of whining in the voices of too many of the women participants who answered the questionnaire." Audrey Cahill

Library J 93:1903 My 1 '68 250w

CUNNINGHAM, EILEEN. Classification for medical literature; 5th ed. rev. and enl. by Eleanor G. Steinke and Mary Louise Gladish. 267p $6 Vanderbilt univ. press

025.4 Classification—Books 67-17562

The first edition of this classification scheme "was produced in visible file form in 1929. The second and third editions, both in paperback, were published in 1937 and 1946 respectively. . . . [This] fifth edition, the first in hard covers, has a text of two hundred pages and an index of sixty pages (two columns)." (Col & Res Lib) Index.

"The system was designed to conform to the sequence of the medical curriculum, and was divided into four main parts: biologic sciences, organic systems of the body, pathologic and clinical subjects, and paramedical works of interest in medical collections. . . . [Its] major features are its close relationships between complementary subjects, its easy expansibility, [and] its simple symbolic notation. . . . [The] inclusion of new material has led to some major changes . . . which will require substantial reclassification by those libraries desiring to keep up with the new edition. [This] classification . . . has now become the only system other than that of the National Library of Medicine specifically designed for medical libraries and in use among more than a few such libraries. Because of the growing standardization of medical classification being brought about by the rapidly growing number of new medical libraries, the Cunningham and other privately originated medical systems will probably die out except in some of the large research collections (where the cost of reclassification would be prohibitive). Even if this happens medical librarians will remember the development and growth of the Cunningham System as a needed job that was well done." W. K. Beatty
Col & Res Lib 29:63 Ja '68 460w

"The classification scheme has a modern flavor and point of view. Even its title indicates a concern with a totality of literature not merely with books. It steers clear of Aristotelean hierarchical classes. Functional notions are preferred to anatomical regions as organizing principles, and the scheme struggles valiantly for consistency in its orientation toward physiological systems. Psychiatry is, therefore, part of the nervous system and ophthalmology a part of the class 'special sense' organs. Mrs. Cunningham's classification has been held in high esteem by medical catalogers and has been recommended as a good organizing scheme for physicians, libraries, and reprint collections."

Library J 93:55 Ja 1 '68 600w

CUNNINGHAM, RICHARD B. C. S. Lewis: defender of the faith. 223p $5 Westminster press

239 Lewis, Clive Staples. Apologetics 67-19299

"Based on the thesis Mr. Cunningham prepared for a doctoral degree at Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, this biographical sketch and evaluation of Lewis centers around apologetics." (Library J) Bibliography of books by Lewis and selected writings about him.

"In this scholarly approach, Cunningham shows how Lewis went from athelism to the Christian faith, then on to become one of the greatest contemporary apologists that this faith has produced. A keen analysis of the diverse kinds of literature that Lewis uses is presented to show how they are used as apologetic tools. . . . Among the numerous current books about Lewis' faith, Cunningham's is one of the best."

Choice 5:512 Je '68 90w

Reviewed by Shildes Johnson
Library J 92:3425 O 1 '67 80w

CUNNINGTON, PHILLIS. Occupational costume in England from the eleventh century to 1914 [by] Phillis Cunnington & Catherine Lucas; with chapters by Alan Mansfield. 427p il pl $10 Barnes & Noble

391 Costume. Clothing and dress 68-738

"The greater part of the book consists of chapters on the various categories of English worker—manual workers on land and sea, tradesmen, craftsmen, household servants and the public services and the medical profession are all surveyed in turn and the development of their distinctive dress, if any, considered chronologically. These accounts are followed by a discussion of the evolution of protective clothing, and of special relations of clothing to work, such as sartorial symbols and 'The rationale of irrational clothes.'" (TLS)

Choice 5:800 S '68 170w

"Well organized, abundantly illustrated, and philosophically interesting, this exposition of British dress will be a source of period information for limners, writers, and versifiers." S. C. Gross

Library J 93:1156 Mr 15 '68 140w

"In all, the book is a rather heavy pudding from which to pick plums. There are a great many illustrations but apart from the contemporary photographs and engravings, they are hard to read, and I can only recommend its many conscientious but muddling pages to a serious student of costume with time to spare." Janey Ironside

New Statesman 74:852 D 15 '67 700w

"[This] fills a very important gap in publications on the history of costume. . . . [It] is profusely illustrated with original miniatures, paintings, portraits, engravings, caricatures and photographs; numerous line drawings are taken from similar sources, and there are many quotations from original literary sources as well. Also there is a voluminous bibliography. The usefulness of this excellent and scholarly book will not be confined to historians of costume; there is material of interest to the social historian as well, and to producers of films and plays. It is an altogether useful, interesting and attractive publication which deserves every recommendation."

TLS p1246 D 21 '67 700w

CURLEY, ARTHUR, jr. comp. Modern Romance literatures. See Curley, D. N.

CURLEY, DOROTHY NYREN, comp. Modern Romance literatures: comp. and ed. by Dorothy Nyren Curley [and] Arthur Curley. (A library of literary criticism) 510p $12.50 Unear

879 Romance literature—History and criticism. Book reviews. Literature—History and criticism 67-14053

From periodicals and books the authors, two American librarians, have compiled "the commentary of . . . critics about [a number of] French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, Swiss, Belgian, and Rumanian authors. Most are 20th Century writers who have been selected because of their impact upon the English-speaking world. [To] excerpts from the critics, the

CURLEY, D. N.—Continued

Curleys have added . . . recommended reading lists for each author. Citations follow the excerpts." (Library J)

Choice 5:460 Je '68 80w

"[This book is] similar to Mrs. Curley's volume on modern American literature [A Library of Literary Criticism, by Dorothy Nysten, BRD 1961, and is concerned] to a great extent [with] the writers who appear in English translation." M. G.

Col & Res Lib 29:68 Ja '68 70w

"An index to critics extends the usefulness of this volume for both literary scholar and general reader. Strongly recommended for reference collections in academic and all but the smallest public libraries." J. R. Willingham

Library J 92:2387 Je 15 '67 120w

CURRAN, C. P. Dublin decorative plaster-work of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. 124p il col il $13.50 Transatlantic 693.6 Decoration and ornament, Irish 68-439

An antiquarian "has quoted from official records, historical papers, and letters and has searched out names of workmen and established proofs of their work in the history of the decoration of interior walls and ceilings in Dublin, chiefly in the 18th Century. The second half of the book consists of photographs of examples, some of which have already been destroyed." (Library J)

"Curran's text . . . displays the tireless research of an antiquarian who has staked a special field. . . . Although stucco decoration is now rarely employed except in restoration work, this detailed study is recommended for larger collections in history of architecture and interiors." Paul von Khrum

Library J 93:1131 Mr 15 '68 100w

"Much of the story rightly stresses the contribution made by two foreign stuccoists, Paul and Philip Francini who came to Ireland in the 1730s. . . . The second part of the story which emerges in precise detail not only in the main chapters but also in six long appendices, is the existence of several generations of skilled plasterers in Dublin from Elizabethan days. . . . A fair knowledge is . . . expected of the reader in expanding some of the titles in the careful notes and bibliography. . . . All one needs to know about this subject in the context of Dublin is here. . . . Four colour-plates are included, in addition to more than 170 half-tone illustrations. . . . The illustrations in this book are always relevant and for the most part are well produced."

TLS p284 Mr 21 '68 700w

CURRAN, C. P. James Joyce remembered. 129p il $4.75 Oxford

828 Joyce, James 68-20359

The author "first met James Joyce in 1899, when they were both students at University College in Dublin; and the two remained close friends until Joyce's death in Zurich forty-two years later. From his intimate knowledge of Joyce's Dublin background, . . . and from his direct knowledge of Edwardian Ireland's academic and literary worlds, Mr. Curran [attempts] to illuminate many of the particulars behind Joyce's fierce assault upon Irish tradition, his repudiation of family and country, and his conception of the function of the universal artist." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This book] is probably most valuable in putting into better focus the popular picture of the impossibly arrogant and Jesuitical undergraduate, though the information it contains about the intellectual atmosphere at University College, in which Joyce moved and talked, and about his background reading . . . is also more illuminating than anything that has previously appeared on these matters. . . . [Mr Curran is] a humane, enormously widely read and very independent-minded judge of literature and character. He is not a 'literary gent,' having made his career in the Supreme Court of the Republic of Ireland. But if all professional critics of Joyce were as sound in information and critical power as Mr Curran the study of Joyce would be the better for it."

Economist 227:67 My 18 '68 500w

"The book contains little new biographical material, but is valuable principally as it provides a different point of view on individuals and events otherwise known to us chiefly or solely through Joyce's writings. Seemingly interminable source-hunting, and frequent, occasionally confusing departures from the chronological sequence of events will try the patience of some readers, but this book belongs in any comprehensive collection on 20th-Century English literature." T. J. Galvin

Library J 93:2873 Ag '68 110w

Reviewed by Proinsias MacAonghusa

New Statesman 75:768 Je 7 '68 650w

"[The author] maintained a tepid sort of friendship with Joyce through the years. Mr. Curran knows very well what a pedant is but seems unable in his own prose to avoid being one. The insatiable reader of Joyceana will find much that is fascinating in Curran's pages—especially the passages dealing with the influences of D'Annunzio, Ibsen, and Flaubert on Joyce's style, but the less obsessed are likely to be put off by this author's ponderous way with an anecdote, and his rather obtuse defensive attitude toward Joyce's sweeping rejection of the church, state, and educational system that reared him. . . . Nevertheless, there are sidelights on Joyce's talents as a singer, on his insatiable curiosity, and on his immense discipline related with a play of intelligence that keeps this petulant little book interesting, if scarcely endearing." Paul Kresh

Sat R 51:23 My 25 '68 400w

TLS p526 My 23 '68 130w

Va Q R 44:clxi autumn '68 190w

CURRY, JANE LOUISE. Beneath the hill; il. by Imero Gobbato. 255p $4.25 Harcourt

67-2450

Young "cousins gather for a . . . summer vacation at Miggle Arthur's Pennsylvania farm. For a special excitement she plans a treasure hunt. . . . Everything goes wrong partly because of the very real danger to them and to the farm from the strip mining which is turning the nearby hills into masses of sludge. . . . and partly because of the creepy sense of evil that overwhelms them. . . . Not until their dog leads them by chance to the 'fair folk,' a group of Celtic 'children of the Dark Wood' who years before had come to America by mistake, . . . are they able to contain the evil." (Book Week) "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"Eleven- and 12-year-olds should enjoy this imaginative tale immensely and be enriched by the charming and ingenious echoes of Welsh fairy lore as well as excited by the adventures in a precisely described terrain (complete with an accurate map) and in the cavernous land of Nutaye under the mountains. The three older cousins have forceful and interesting personalities but their speech is monotonous basic American ('real good' and 'like he was'), hardly reflecting their family background." M. S. Libby

Book Week p32 (children's issue) My 7 '67 70w

Horn Bk 43:461 Ag '67 220w

Reviewed by Arlene Mosel

Library J 92:2020 My 15 '67 120w

Reviewed by Alan Garner

New Statesman 76:591 N 1 '68 20w

"[This] is a blissfully enjoyable book for any child of ten or upwards with imagination who also enjoys adventure. The children, Miggle, Arthur, Stevie, Trish and Kit are a splendidly real bunch and their excursion into the world of faery is so strange and yet inevitable that it carries the reader along in unquestioning suspension of disbelief to the end."

TLS p1113 O 3 '68 200w

CUTLER, MERRITT. The tennis book; written and il. by Merritt Cutler. 111p $7.50 McGraw 796.34 Tennis 67-18323

"Four-fifths of each page contains illustrated techniques; the remainder has short [captions]. . . . The book is written to help tennis players at every level, though the author . . . has confined himself to the essentials of stroke production and simple tactics. Contents include the grip, the forehand, the backhand, the serve, the volley, the lob, the drop shot, the smash, spin shots, and strategy for singles, doubles, and the all court game." (Choice)

"[Cutler] has researched tennis so thoroughly that we have a catalogue of crystal clear drawings on [its] fundamentals. . . . This book is concise and easy to understand. Where no tennis coach is available, one's next best bet is this excellent book."

Choice 5:524 Je '68 140w

"A former National Indoor Doubles Champion and professional illustrator, Merritt Cutler combines his artistic talents with a sound knowledge of tennis to present a handsome book of instruction in the style and tactics of the game. The combination of freehand drawings and diagrams provides the pupil with illustrations as clear as a two-dimensional medium will allow. . . . For those who believe in the efficacy of instruction by the book in athletics, Mr. Cutler's useful work should stand alongside the more standard manuals. Recommended for school and public libraries." E. G. Hamann

Library J 93:93 Ja 1 '68 140w

D

DAHINDEN, JUSTUS. New trends in church architecture [tr. by Cajetan J. B. Baumann]. 144p 227il $10 Universe bks.

726 Church architecture. Architecture, Modern—20th century 67-14876

In this book "the text, typography, format, verbal and pictorial illustrations are combined into a single theme to stress 'rejuvenation'—new, youthful ideas in church buildings in all lands. Mr. Dahinden encourages the church and its builders to conform to contemporary cultures, ecumenical cooperation, dialogue with politicians, and the restudy of vestments, color, music, liturgy, and art." (Library J) Originally published under the title Bauen für die Kirche in der Welt.

"The title of this book is misleading, since it is primarily concerned with the future direction of church design rather than with giving a pictorial survey of recent work. Justus Dahinden is a Swiss architect noted for his religious and secular work in Europe and Africa. The book contains illustrations of many of his works. . . . [with] carefully chosen photographs. . . . The layout of the book is clear and imaginative with an attractive balance of copy, illustration and space. With the exception of the last chapter, there is little technical jargon to discourage the amateur." Thomas Jost

America 118:271 F 24 '68 550w

"Inclusion of illustrations from Ancient Egypt and Greece up to and including contemporary folk, primitive, and modern art represents an ambitious scope, but one consonant with [the author's] textual development of the idea of 'sacred space' in a variety of eras and cultures. Illuminating diagrams, floor plans, and models; 227 illustrations, including excellent photographs. Unfortunately, no bibliography or index."

Choice 5:764 S '68 160w

"[The author] illustrates his own provocative ideas . . . and outlines his theories of architectural history with thoughtful prose. The book, full of his knowledge and enthusiasm, encourages the reader to see visions. The hopes of what the youthful spirit of the church could be are related to Vatican II. Public libraries, especially in suburbia, and academic libraries will need this book." G. M. Ruoss

Library J 93:1619 Ap 15 '68 190w

DAHLBERG, EDWARD. The carnal myth: ■ search into classical sensuality. 121p $6.50 Weybright & Talley

818

68-17750

In an "inquiry into the role of sexuality in classical literature and life, [the author] pours forth his pronouncements on the ancients, the moderns, and himself." (Library J)

"[Dahlberg's] argument is the misery of humanity's sexual condition—a complaint eloquently put, but about as practical as lamenting that the sun rises in the east. Warning: Mr. Dahlberg's mythological references should not be borrowed without checking against some less subjective authority." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:106 J1 '68 60w

"Any newcomer, even one experienced in biblical, classical and English literature, who comes upon Edward Dahlberg for the first time [here,] will find him heavy going. . . . The subtitle is misleading. . . . Of the 121 pages, the last quarter are devoted to Spanish pioneers and their defeat by the ruggedness of the terrain, a wonted Dahlberg theme; but not by sensuality. Besides, the author's sensual passages elsewhere could all have been excised without loss to his ever-growing reputation ■ a writer of distinction. . . . Dahlberg chooses for preference authors who were loners like himself. . . . But all this arbitrary election, based on personal experience, tends to make his observation and criticism subjective rather than objective, revealing rather than canonical. . . . Nevertheless, he is and will remain the joy of English professors and, maybe, of a Hippie age which welcomes a speaker equipped with his own new language." Ambrose Agius

Best Sell 28:118 Je 15 '68 370w

"[This] is a typically Dahlbergian book, containing further revelations of the principal growing myth, Dahlberg himself. A complete and original stylist who cultivates his addiction to classicism, Mr. Dahlberg in this volume often finds his topic so engaging that he forgets about himself—a rarity. . . . [A] fascinating inquiry." Duane Schneider

Library J 93:2500 Je 15 '68 90w

Reviewed by Raymond Rosenthal
Nation 207:504 N 11 '68 700w

Reviewed by Edmund White
New Repub 159:19 Ag 3 '68 1000w

Reviewed by John Wain
N Y Rev of Books 11:13 Ja 2 '69 440w

"[This] is the remaining part of a work originally planned as a whole. The earlier part was published . . . as 'The Sorrows of Priapus' [BRD 1958]. It appears to this reader that there is a significant difference between the two parts. . . . 'The Carnal Myth,' in fact, is mostly a challenge to dryness, reason, aridity. These are worse, [Dahlberg] most fundamentally believes, than licentiousness. . . . The stories of the explorers and conquerors [of America] are told beautifully, with a narrative sweep, with precision and poetry, with seriousness and without cant. He compares some of their adventures to Odysseus's own. . . . It is perhaps in [a] profound new appreciation of the primitive experience of America that Dahlberg rises [here] even above and beyond his early 'The Flea of Sodom.'" Victor Lipton

N Y Times Bk R p10 Ag 18 '68 1000w

DAHRENDORF, RALF. Essays in the theory of society. 300p $8.50 Stanford univ. press

301 Sociology

67-26526

"[These ten essays] deal with important issues on the borderline between sociology and social philosophy. [The author] . . . holds that the structures of power in which the political process takes place not only originate change and give it direction, but also produce the fertile conflicts that give expression to the fundamental uncertainty of human existence. . . . Through an examination of various concepts inherent in this dynamic process—power, resistance, conflict, change, freedom, uncertainty—a coherent theory of society emerges. The longest essay, 'Homo Sociologicus: On the History, Significance, and Limits of the Category of Social Role,' [was] first published in book form in Germany in 1959. . . . The volume also includes Professor Dahrendorf's critiques of functionalism, and his inaugural lecture at the University of Constance, given in June 1967, 'Sociology and the Sociologist.'" (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The values professed by the author are those of what he calls the perspective of modern liberalism. Dahrendorf articulates and probes the relationships between the sociological and the liberal perspective and the ways in which their moral and political implications intersect and reinforce or contradict each other. . . . While [he] makes an important case for the study of these problems, he is less successful in carrying out the task himself. . . . All too often his analysis is abstract and formal; it lacks the very historical depth and social structural focus he accuses others of lacking in their work. . . . Inevitably, a comparison of this book with C. Wright Mills's The Sociological Imagination [BRD 1959] comes to mind. . . . Most sociologists will also find Dahrendorf's careful, judicious tone preferable to Mills's caustic polemics. Yet I believe Mills's sharp cutting edge is supported by a historical and sociological richness and depth lacking in Dahrendorf's essays."

R. J. Werlin

Am J Soc 74:79 J1 '68 950w

DAHRENDORF, RALF—Continued

"Two of the essays are already accessible in English, and two or three of the shorter ones are only barely worth reprinting. . . . The interest of Dahrendorf's argument lies in its implications for current political and social-psychological theory. The long essay on 'Homo Sociologicus', plus its postscript, is the most important in this respect, and Dahrendorf makes clear that a main purpose of the whole volume was to make this essay available in English. However, despite the attention it has received in Germany, I am not sure that its relative neglect in the English-speaking world is altogether unjustified. . . . By contrast, Dahrendorf's remarks about inequality and conflict are at once more lucid and more challenging." W. G. Runciman

Am Soc R 33:633 Ag '68 1050w

Choice 5:377 S '68 170w

"[Professor Dahrendorf] covers a variety of related topics in sociological theory, including the role of value judgments in social science, utopia, liberty, and social inequality. He always writes clearly if not succinctly. . . . [He] is deeply concerned with the theory and practice of sociology and deserves to be read widely." John Neufeld

Library J 93:200 Ja 15 '68 120w

"Now, after ten years, [Homo Sociologicus] admirably translated by its author is available in the context of nine other essays, and it should do much to enlighten English-speaking sociologists both in its content and the incidental light which is widely shed on some of the recent developments in social thought in Germany. . . . This is one of the few books in social theory which demands a more than professional audience. . . . Professor Dahrendorf is very much in the tradition (of course) of Weber in his concern with moral and political issues and his awareness of the problems of values. . . . His sceptical affirmation of the necessary provisionality of our judgments in science and morals is not novel but it is fresh because it is clearly individual and thought out anew. . . . This book is one of the two or three works on sociological theory of the 1960s which matter."

TLS p531 My 23 '68 600w

DAHRENDORF, RALF. Society and democracy in Germany. 482p $6.95 Doubleday

914.3 Germany—Social conditions. Germany—History—20th century 67-19118

The author of Class and Class Conflict in Industrial Society (BRD 1961) draws upon German political, economic, social and intellectual history [to] present a picture of the elements which have influenced the nature and structure of the German state and mind. He also contrasts East and West Germany and discusses German reunification. Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:251 Ap '68 130w

"Although [Dahrendorf] says he is uncertain whether he has anything of real interest to say to non-Germans, he has plenty to say, and says it free of the jargon of the social scientist and of the convoluted language so beloved by Germans. His book gives Americans a chance to read what a German thinks about the German question—and to get the German answer. Mr. Dahrendorf tries to stimulate thinking. . . . He finds much to criticize in the Germany of today and yesterday. He is in favor of a liberal democratic system. . . . Some of his statements are not as convincing as his explanation of why liberal democracy did not flourish in pre-Hitler Germany. Nobody will agree with everything he says in the book, but everybody will profit from reading it. For college libraries and most public libraries." John Neufeld

Library J 92:3434 O 1 '67 210w

"[This] is the best general study of German popular and political opinion which has appeared since the war. It is irresistibly intelligent, easy to read, and not overburdened by the sections of sociological theory it necessarily contains. It is often amusing, and often brilliantly rude. It sweeps together and evaluates most of the important sociological work on Germany since the nineteenth century. . . . and defends throughout one consistent point of view. . . . [a] vision of liberalism [that] is distinctly Anglo-Saxon. . . . Conventional enough in America or Britain, it is just this ordinary middle-class liberalism which has been lacking in Germany. The symptoms and causes of this lack are the subject of this book. . . . The most striking chapters. . . . are those in which Professor Dahrendorf examines the effects of National Socialist and Communist rule upon German society. . . . This is a fascinating book, but it has its limits: . . . many of the sharpest perceptions and definitions are not [the author's] own, but have been merely drawn together and critically examined." Neal Ascherson

N Y Rev of Books 10:8 F 1 '68 1200w

"One of the many merits of Dahrendorf's presentations is his reliance on the wealth of empirical studies recently published in Germany. He is able to describe quite concretely the fate of various established élites in Germany, the circulations of 'service, wealth, and power' in German society, and the rôles of lawyers, teachers, and civil servants in both the maintenance and degradation of their professional guilds. Finally, on the crucial issue of National Socialism, Dahrendorf portrays the full and tragic irony of the Nazi madness. . . . [Karl] Jaspers' work [The Future of Germany, BRD 1963] represents the cumulative wisdom of Germany's older generation. Dahrendorf's book contains the insights of a younger scholar. Both contribute much, but it is undeniable that Dahrendorf's has given more answers to the German question today." R. M. Hunt

Va Q 44:132 winter '68 600w

DAIN, MARTIN J., jt. auth. On the beat. See Robinson, B.

DAIX, PIERRE. Picasso: the blue and rose periods; a catalogue raisonné of the paintings, 1900-1906 [by] Pierre Daix and Georges Boudaille; catalogue comp. with the collaboration of Joan Rossette [tr. from the French by Phoebe Pool]. 348p il col pl $35 N.Y. graphic

759.6 Picasso, Pablo

66-19492

In their text, the authors present an "analysis of the development of Picasso's art with special emphasis on his originality as seen, for example, in his pre-Fauvist period and in his assimilation, rather than imitation, of the styles of other artists. Of the 750 . . . reproductions, 61 are in color. Some of the works illustrated have not been previously published and 230 of them are not listed in Zervos's . . . catalog of the artist's work. Drawings are included if they are important to the dating or to the development of individual works." (Library J)

Reviewed by Burton Silverman

Book World p6 Je 9 '68 220w

Choice 5:474 Je '68 150w

"By redating and regrouping some of Picasso's early paintings, the authors have given us a new and more logical understanding of his formative periods. . . . Relevant documents further enhance this catalog, which will prove essential for future research on Picasso. Recommended for specialized libraries and for art collections serving the informed layman." Jacqueline Sisson

Library J 92:3986 N 1 '67 140w

"True, the authors tend to be verbose where they ought to be laconic, and their attitude toward their subject is anything but critical. . . . But this tendency to hero worship does not interfere with the task at hand, which is to establish the exact chronology of Picasso's production in the years 1900-1906. . . . [Picasso's] work was not original in these first years of the century, but it already had a strong character and profile. For an account of the ideas that nourished it. . . . Picasso: The Formative Years, by [Anthony Blunt and] Phoebe Pool [BRD 1963] is more useful than the sketchy intellectual materials furnished in the new book. (Miss Pool, incidentally, is the translator of the new book—a happy conjunction of translator and text such as one rarely finds in art publishing.) . . . It is one of the virtues of [the book under review] that it rescues the pictures of these early years. . . . from the sentimental adoration into which they had fallen [and] restores them to their proper position in one of the great artistic adventures of the century." Hilton Kramer

New Repub 157:32 O 21 '67 1200w

Reviewed by Robert Melville

New Statesman 74:914 D 29 '67 700w

"[The authors'] claim that their catalogue of the paintings is 'the most complete published to date' is certainly justified, though the publishers are perhaps less prudent in stating that it includes 'all the works of Picasso' (their italics) produced during the years in question. . . . The volume does, however, include a large number of works which were unknown to Zervos and which add substantially to our knowledge of the artist's early period. Those discovered since the French edition include several of great interest. . . . In a few instances the authors correct inaccuracies in generally accepted titles. . . . In a slightly different field, that of dating, they also make a valuable contribution. In many cases their emendations may only alter accepted dates by a few months, but with Picasso, particularly in his early years, even this difference may be significant, so rapid was his development and so varied his style. . . . One of the great merits of this book is . . . that it enables the reader to study drawings and paintings together to a greater extent than does any other work on the artist, although the arrangement of the drawings is not always consistent." Anthony Blunt

N Y Rev of Books 10:12 Mr 28 '68
2100w

"The authors have uncovered many unpublished works and, thanks to the painstaking collaboration of the artist himself, have been able to eradicate many old-established errors as well as to incorporate a quantity of new facts and precisions. . . . Miss Phoebe Pool's translation is sometimes uncomprehending, inexact or confusing. . . . [The authors] have concentrated exclusively on Picasso's work, of which they discuss the subject-matter, point out its personal relevance and then pass to an examination of the manner in which it is treated. This gives their book a special value. But unfortunately they claim to have produced as well an exhaustive catalogue of a precisely defined period, and on this score they lay themselves open to criticism. All the works included are authentic and the text of the catalogue is singularly free from factual or typographical errors. . . . [The volume is] unnecessarily bulky and difficult to use. . . . Nor have the authors bothered to provide any of those valuable indexes which one is entitled to look for in such publications, namely, a reclassification by numbers under subject-matter, names of owners, museums and cities as well as an index in which one can quickly find all other names listed in the provenance or literary references."

TLS p124 F 8 '68 1650w

DALAND, ROBERT T. Brazilian planning; development politics and administration. 231p $6 Univ. of N.C. press

309.181 Brazil—Economic policy. Brazil—Politics and government 67-17028

An "account of the evolution and impact of economic planning in Brazil since the revolution of 1930 . . . concerned with the efficacy of planning in a developing society. . . . The author also gives an analysis and recommendations made in successive plans . . . [including] Kubitschek's program of fifty years' progress in five, João Goulart's Three Year Plan, . . . and the 1964 coup's effort to stabilize the economy. . . . He concludes that 'planning in Brazil is politically useful, but not for the purpose of achieving development.'" (Ann Am Acad.) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] makes an illuminating contribution to the still regrettably small English language literature on politics and administration in Brazil. . . . [It] is informed throughout by sensitivity to the demands and constraints of Brazilian politics and administration. Thus Daland is able to sustain the significant point that while in the U.S. plan making (policy) is usually considered a political function, and implementation a technical-administrative process, in Brazilian practice 'plan-making has been technical, while implementation is patently political.' . . . The book will be of obvious value to many Brazilian specialists, and also to . . . scholars and professionals concerned with problems of development, regardless of geographic focus." J. T. Dorsey

Am Pol Sci R 62:245 Mr '68 1200w

"Daland's book is not about particular issues of economic policy-making but about the mechanics and style of plan-making. While methodological advantage is gained by thus restricting the scope of this study, severe problems in controlling the variables and identifying the relationships between them are engendered. . . . Despite the care with which the problem and research design have been formulated, its conclusions are not fully satisfactory. . . . As a study of the efficacy of plan-making, this study is insufficiently detailed and has inadequately discounted the influence of the economic and political conditions under which particular governments labored to be able to distinguish the discrete effect of plan-making upon the progress of economic development." P. I. Mandell

Ann Am Acad 376:173 Mr '68 850w

"The author has constructive suggestions about planning and its implementation in Brazil, taking into account the institutions, attitudes, and politics. A first-rate book that has been long in the making and reflects Daland's knowledge not only of Brazilian institutions but of problems of planning in other developing nations. Selected bibliography of Brazilian materials and his many references to the general literature on planning provide an excellent source of titles for libraries that are building a collection of books not only about Brazil but on economic planning in general. Highly recommended."

Choice 5:232 Ap '68 220w

"An interesting study of planning in Brazil. Those interested in hemispheric problems will find it a pioneering work in advancing conceptual bases for failure and success in planning in general as well as in Brazil. Covering a wide field of studies, analyses, and other basic sources, Dr. Daland's work goes to the heart of a very real problem: although Brazil has great potential for industrial development for some reason it has not realized this potential. Are known political, racial, or geographical factors responsible? . . . [Brazil] has made some progress industrially and economically without a coordinated plan that professional and technical planners consider adequate. This book is essential for pertinent collections in academic or large public libraries." W. L. Morin

Library J 92:1838 My 1 '67 190w

DALE, PETER. The storms. 56p $3.75 Dufour
821 68-3462

"The concerns of a man about his wife, his child, his teaching, visiting a sick parent in [the] hospital, finding [a] . . . dying bird—these are Dale's subjects [in this collection of poetry]." (TLS) Some of the poems have appeared in such periodicals as The Review and The Times Literary Supplement.

Reviewed by Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:2881 Ag '68 30w

"One respects sobriety and seriousness while deprecating the low temperature of its expression. At his best, as in Single Ticket, a poem about a railway journey, Dale is awkward, ingenuous and interesting in a Hardyesque way." Julian Symons

New Statesman 75:276 Mr 1 '68 60w

"One acknowledges the decency and scrupulousness behind [Dale's subjects]. . . . But his poems have a grim, forbidding, tight-lipped look, sometimes suggesting a parodied stance rather than the real thing. . . . Or they are flatly honest to the point of banality. . . . [His] tough-tender mood becomes trying as poem after poem seems to be spoken warily out of the corner of the mouth. There is a good deal of feeling here which needs richer embodying. It might get it if Mr. Dale relaxes."

TLS p155 F 15 '68 120w

DALTON, LAWRENCE. Those elegant Rolls-Royce. 319p il col il $15.95 Morrow

629.2 Rolls-Royce automobile 68-26908

More than six hundred and sixty "photographs illustrate the variety of coach work which was mounted on Rolls-Royce chassis from the first Silver Ghost in 1907 until 1939 when production ceased during World War II. Complete identification is given for each car illustrated and where possible, the present owner is listed. There is also a brief account given of each firm which made these bodies." (Library J) Index.

"The book is an elegant thing in itself, clearly the work of an informed devotee, and a tantalizing subliminal glance into one corner of a society the like of which we shall never see. Mr. Dalton provides a minimum of text, I suppose on the sound premise that readers who care about technical matters will know about them, and those who don't won't miss them. . . . I do object strongly to his title. These vehicles are Rolls-Royces, or they are Rolls-Royce automobiles." K. W. Purdy

Book World p6 O 20 '68 700w

DALTON, LAWRENCE—Continued

"Regrettably, only one photograph indicates the luxury and the finesse of the interiors of these cars. Antique car buffs and Rolls-Royce owners will be interested, but only libraries with highly specialized collections will wish to consider this book." Paul von Khrum

Library J 93:4278 N 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Eliot Fremont-Smith
N Y Times Bk R p20 D 8 '68 70w

DALY, MARY. The church and the second sex. 187p $4.95 Harper

396 Women and religion. Woman—Rights of women 68-11737

A "professor of theology at Boston College, traces the antifeminism and androcentric thought patterns in the church from ancient times." (Library J) Index.

"In a book that is notable for its even-tempered, scholarly approach to an emotional subject, . . . [the author goes] deeply into the historical background and present implications of the Church's attitudes toward women. . . . The misogynistic tendencies of the early Church have survived in various guises throughout the centuries. Dr. Daly culls some interesting samples from the writings of recent Popes, whose insensitivity to the problems of women has sometimes verged on the sadistic. . . . This is a thoughtful, honest, provocative [study]. It opens some windows that Vatican II overlooked. It faces squarely all the implications of offering full equality to women in the Church." Myrtle Passantino

America 118:646 My 11 '68 330w

"Well worth reading by both layman and specialist, Protestant and Catholic. In building her case against Rome's antifeminism, however, Dr. Daly indulges in a bit of overkill. Not only does she resist the idea that women are inferior, but she also denies that men and women differ in any significant way. . . . She overlooks a great deal of biological, psychological and sociological information which suggests that women are in fact different from men, that they are more . . . 'relational' in their orientation toward life. . . . Dr. Daly thinks 'relational' is a bad word; I think it a good word, one that could stand at the center of a new, positive self-image for women." Don Browning

Christian Century 85:944 J1 24 '68 500w

"This is a call to action for Roman Catholics to end the discrimination against women in the church. . . . Miss Daly sees the church as approaching a more Christian, intelligent attitude toward women, especially since Vatican II, but feels that birth control and divorce should be recognized and that women should be ordained to the priesthood. She writes as a loyal Catholic who wishes to reform the church from within." Genevieve Casey

Library J 93:1486 Ap 1 '68 230w

Reviewed by Walter Arnold

Sat R 51:26 Ag 3 '68 1200w

"A lively polemic. . . . [The author] is an avowed suffragette for female rights within the church. Her book accuses Christianity of contradicting its moral teachings by harboring 'oppressive, misogynistic ideas' about women. The roots of such prejudice, contends Dr. Daly, lie in the Old Testament. . . . Catholic theologians have argued that the church's devotion to the Virgin Mary enhances the stature of women. Miss Daly answers that Christ's mother in fact is 'glorified only in accepting the subordinate role assigned to her' in God's plan of salvation. . . . [The author] insists that the church continues to treat women as second-class human beings. Even reputable Biblical scholars take it for granted that God is masculine (he is sexless, she answers)."

Time 91:71 Ap 19 '68 210w

D'AMELIO, DAN. Taller than Bandai Mountain; the story of Hideyo Noguchi; il. by Fred Banbery. 185p $4.50; lib bdg $4.13 Viking

Noguchi, Hideyo—Juvenile literature

68-18487

This is the fictionalized biography of "a Japanese doctor and bacteriologist whose research in such diseases as general paralysis, Rocky Mountain spotted fever, trachoma, and yellow fever brought him renown during his adult life. . . . [The author tells] how a twelve-year-old boy 'with a deformed hand but a brilliant mind' discovered his own dedication to the cause of medicine." (Publisher's note) "Ages ten to twelve." (Sat R)

"Writing with simple clarity, the author succeeds in giving reality to a dedicated, compassionate, gifted man. In an epilogue, he distinguishes between what is fact and fiction in the book, gives reasons for what is imaginary, and presents a few highlights of Noguchi's career." Polly Goodwin

Book World p16 S 22 '68 210w

"Noguchi has been called the greatest bacteriologist since Pasteur and Koch, but little has been written about him for children. . . . Although D'Amelio's biography . . . dwells at greater length than seems necessary on Noguchi's early years than on his later more important accomplishments, this book is worth having because its subject has been previously overlooked for juvenile information. A. D. Schweibish

Library J 93:2538 Je 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by N. R. Campion

N Y Times Bk R p26 My 19 '68 120w

"The writing style is smooth, the fictionalization particularly adept, the facts inspiring. The biography ends with just a brief look at some of the highlights of Noguchi's distinguished career." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:43 Ag 24 '68 120w

DAMERELL, REGINALD G. Triumph in a white suburb; the dramatic story of Teaneck, N.J., the first town in the nation to vote for integrated schools; introd. by Robert J. Havighurst and Neil V. Sullivan. 351p $5 Morrow

370.19 Segregation in education. Teaneck, New Jersey—Public schools. Negroes—Education 68-12153

The author tells "a story in which panic selling creates a ghetto, the ghetto creates a racial imbalance in the school system, which in turn creates a battle for quality integrated education, and with the success of that battle the ghetto is broken up by whites buying back into it." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[This is] a detailed case history of Teaneck's confrontation with the problem of racial imbalance in its schools. . . . Mr. Damerell, a resident of Teaneck, is not a disinterested observer, and even the reader who feels he is on the right side might think the delineation between Good Guys and Bad Guys a little too severe. . . . And in view of the extensive research that went into the report, one wishes that some of the author's conclusions . . . were more substantive. But more important, Mr. Damerell realizes that one election does not a Utopia make." G. M. Costello

America 118:233 F 17 '68 600w

Christian Century 85:146 Ja 31 '68 40w

"Perhaps Mr. Damerell's account of the Teaneck experience is proof that the problem of open housing for all people can be solved through enforced legislation and well-planned programs in human relations. This book, Mr. Damerell's first, is highly recommended for public and academic libraries of all sizes." M. M. Jackson

Library J 93:1154 Mr 15 '68 260w

Reviewed by Janet Strothman

Library J 93:2552 Je 15 '68 110w [YA]

"[This] excellent reportorial account . . . is an important book, and a well documented one. . . . Interestingly enough, Negroes do not play a large role in the action. . . . [One] thing that plays a large role in the story is the nature of prejudice. Mr. Damerell illustrates the smallness of the number who are 'pro' and the small number of those who are 'con,' and the vast number waiting on the sidelines to be motivated one way or the other. . . . There are lessons to be learned in [this book]. . . . Mr. Damerell has written a guidebook for workable revolution." W. M. Young

N Y Times Bk R p6 F 18 '68 900w

DAMIANO, ROLAND, jt. auth. Crisis at St John's. See Scimecca, J.

DAMODARAN, K. Indian thought; a critical survey. 520p $7.75 Asia pub.

181.4 Philosophy, Indic 67-9104

"Damodaran, a Communist member of India's parliament, has written a history of Indian philosophy from its pre-Aryan origins to the present to refute two erroneous views perpetuated by existent histories: (1) that the Indian mind is traditionally otherworldly and life negating, and (2) that Advaita Vedānta represents the culmination of India's intellectual achievement. He insists that a life-affirming humanism has characterized India from the beginning, and that analyses identifying human existence with misery and natural process with illusion are deviations from normal Indian attitudes, arising from socioeconomic crisis situations." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Although quoting frequently from Marx, Engels, and Lenin, Damodaran is a heterodox Marxist, highly critical of dogmatic colleagues who fail to interpret Marxism as a 'guide to action' and are incapable of translating Marxist principles into Indian terms. He acknowledges his own indebtedness to Vivekananda, Gandhi, and Nehru. Except for [H.] Riepe's Naturalistic Tradition in Indian Thought which deals exclusively with the classical period, this is the only contemporary history of Indian philosophy with a naturalistic rather than an idealistic orientation, and in terms of establishing a correlation between socioeconomic history and intellectual development it can be compared only with Nehru's Discovery of India [BRD 1946]. It is clearly written, with an extensive bibliography."

Choice 5:635 J1 '68 300w

"[The] editor of Navayugam, a Malayalam weekly . . . surveying 5000 years of Indian thought, . . . argues for a classless, socialist society for modern India. His well-written and documented survey is recommended for collections on India." R. S. Dillon

Library J 93:555 F 1 '68 100w

DAMON, ALBERT. The human body in equipment design [by] Albert Damon, Howard W. Stout [and] Ross A. McFarland. 360p $11.95 Harvard univ. press

620.8 Human engineering

65-22067

The "objective of this book is to provide a guide for the designer of equipment involving human body size and mechanical capabilities. . . . In emphasizing the variation of human body size and mechanical capabilities of man, the authors . . . [present] data concerning body tissue and chemical composition, body circumferences, surface areas, center of gravity, force-field tolerance, and workspace measurements. . . . The book is organized into six chapters, with three primarily presenting basic body data, two considering what the designer should do and general principles and recommendations as to how it should be accomplished, and a summary providing detailed references." (Am Anthropol) Bibliography. Index.

"Specialists may take potshots at shortcomings, but these are for the most part minor and do not detract from this excellent work. . . . Because of the layout design necessitated by the data tables, the book is wider than it is long; some may find it awkward to handle, and continual use may place undue strain on the binding. However, the advantage is that the reader has all tables and graphs in the same plane as the printed material, which makes it easy to use. This book is highly recommended both as an important reference volume for the anthropologist and as a laboratory workbook for the student. It is instructive, clearly written, and well documented, and represents a major anthropological contribution to the area of applied equipment design." R. G. Snyder

Am Anthropol 69:539 O '67 1200w

"This comprehensive volume features a wide range of applications of the science of human measurements to the myriad products designed for human consumption. Tables and charts offer detailed descriptions of measurements according to specialized occupational groups, and general population, by age, sex, and race. Especially interesting and valuable are the sections on biomechanics and its relationship to the problems of equipment design for space travel. . . . Designers may find it more difficult to use because of the dearth of practical illustrations. Instead of a quick reference for the height of an office chair, one must make his way through lists of tabular data."

Choice 3:1006 Ja '67 200w

DANA, RICHARD HENRY. The Journal of Richard Henry Dana; ed. by Robert F. Lucid. 3v 1201p il set $35 Belknap press of Harvard univ. press

B or 92 U.S.—Politics and government. U.S.—Description and travel. U.S.—Social conditions 68-14264

Dana "began his journal in 1841, the year after certain great events in his life: his publication of Two Years Before the Mast, and the opening of his law office. . . . [He] continued the journal until the autumn of 1860." (Sat R)

"[This journal is] a fascinating and invaluable addition to our knowledge of the period of the flowering of New England. Dana knew everyone worth knowing in the literary and political activities of the period. He was deeply involved in the anti-slavery movement. He traveled widely both in this country and abroad—Niagara, the Maine woods, California, Japan, Hawaii, India, England. And he gives us vivid pictures of all he saw. (Surprisingly frank for a mid-Victorian, he tells of his frequent tours of the red-light districts everywhere.) The Dana journal has been faithfully transcribed and fully annotated." Walter Harding

Library J 93:2648 J1 '68 150w

"These [are] usable and important but pedestrian volumes. . . . [Lucid] presents the text with admirable care and illuminating annotations. . . . [Dana's] dominant quality was a stiff loftiness. . . . The political entries in the journal are numerous, important, and interesting, for Free Soiler Dana knew everyone worth knowing in politics. Nobody interested in the decay and death of New England Federalism, the battles fought by the Whig Party, the vicissitudes of the Free Soilers, or the rise of the Republican organization can neglect a careful reading of this journal. Of his legal cases he gives us all too extended and prosy accounts. And he seldom indulges in any display of feeling." Allan Nevins

Sat R 51:70 Je 22 '68 1200w

"Dana's 'Journal' has been carefully edited. . . . But since Dana wrote off the top of his head a work which would be scrutinized by his wife, and since his was a commonplace sensibility given to commonplace observations, . . . the efforts of editor and press seem misplaced. The 'story' in the 'Journal' can be better told by a biographer, or by Mr. Lucid in his perceptive introduction. I can think of no reason why we need a reprint of almost 1200 pages when an abridgment of several hundred pages should satisfy the needs of scholars and general readers." E. H. Miller

Va Q R 44:684 autumn '68 1700w

DANA, ROBERT. Some versions of silence; poems. 63p $4.50; pa $1.95 Norton

811

66-23984

"In these three series of lyrics Mr. Dana explores the intricacies of subjective experience." (Library J) Some of these poems have been previously published in various literary periodicals.

"Too quiet, perhaps, for most tastes, this volume of poems has a formal consistency and sureness of tone that set it apart from most first books. Dana is someone to watch, and most libraries will want this."

Choice 4:1379 F '68 40w

"These are well-wrought poems; the verse is unrhymed but not uncontrolled; the imagery is often apt, the perceptions occasionally striking. Strong admiration for Donne, Auden, Stevens, and Pound sometimes seduces Mr. Dana into excessive ingenuity; and a line here and there may be pretentious or awkward. However, on the whole it is an interesting collection and is recommended for poetry collections." M. A. Beebe

Library J 92:1497 Ap 1 '67 210w

Reviewed by William Heyen
Poetry 111:331 F '68 320w

DANIEL, BRADFORD, ed. The John Howard Griffin reader. See Griffin, J. H.

DANIEL, GLYN. Man discovers his past. 95p il maps $5.95 Crowell

913.03 Archaeology

67-15413

This "survey of archaeological findings over the last 300 years resulted from half-hour television programs given in 1966 over the BBC

DANIEL, GLYN—Continued

by Professor Daniel, fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. . . . [The] account of the advancements in archaeology . . . [includes] photographs of people, places, and artifacts . . . [and] covers sites in all parts of the world." (Library J)

Reviewed by F. D. Lazenby
Library J 93:3556 O 1 '68 100w

"As Daniel indicates, [1859] marks the beginning of modern research in prehistory and human evolution. He outlines subsequent advances such as the discovery of cave paintings in Spain and France, studies of the origins of agriculture, and some new excavating techniques developed since World War II. Like most books consisting of lightly edited television transcripts, [this] is repetitious in places and tends to be a bit sketchy in covering major developments, but it can be recommended as a stimulating introduction to archeology." J. E. Pfeiffer

Natur Hist 77:92 N '68 500w

DANIEL-ROPS, H. Our brothers in Christ, 1870-1959; tr. from the French by J. M. Orpen and John Warrington; ed. by A. Cox and J. Hetherington. (Hist. of the church of Christ, v 10) 496p $10 Dutton

270 Protestantism—History. Eastern churches—History. Church history—Modern period 68-86851

This volume is a translation of Ces Chrétiens nos Frères, which forms the third book of the sixth volume of the author's Historie de l'Eglise du Christ. In this volume "an account is given of . . . the most notable Christian churches, denominations or sects outside the Roman Catholic Church. . . . [The author describes a] number of religious communities into which Protestantism has divided from the sixteenth century to the present day. There is also a chapter of some 200 pages on the Orthodox Church, and the various Eastern heterodoxies, such as Nestorianism and Monophysitism. The narrative is historical and biographical." (TLS) Chronological table. Bibliography. Index. For volume nine, A Fight for God, see BRD 1966, 1967.

"The author has treated both institutional and theological matters, giving attention to the missionary and ecumenical movements which have emerged in recent Protestantism. The uniqueness of the book lies not in new information, but in that non-Catholic thought and structures are seen through the eyes of a very competent Roman Catholic historian. The author handles his materials sympathetically and fairly, without covering up his own preferences. . . . [The study is] very readable and informative and one which contributes substantially to the growing spirit of unity among Christian bodies."

Choice 5:791 S '68 180w

"Daniel-Rops's all-embracing charity and desire to give as complete an account as he can of all the leading Christian bodies not in communion with Rome lead him to describe some whose Christian character is often disputed—Jehovah's Witnesses, for example. But his best pages, because derived from personal experience, are those on French Protestantism, on deeply pious communities such as the Moravians, and the world-wide organization of Methodism. But he is not uncritical. . . . Individual church leaders and thinkers are treated biographically. Thus the pages on Kierkegaard ('the Danish Pascal'), Schleiermacher and Karl Barth are of the greatest interest. . . . [The author] moves with ease among the modern French and English writers who have been influenced by non-Roman Christianity, such as T. S. Eliot. . . . [This is a book] for all students of religion."

TLS p274 Mr 14 '68 750w

DANIELOU, JEAN. Prayer as a political problem; ed. and tr. by J. R. Kirwan. 123p $3.50 Sheed

261 Church and state 67-21913

An exploration of the ways "Christianity and contemporary technological civilization may be related for their mutual benefit. . . . [The author] sees the Church as sent primarily to the disenfranchised—the materially, politically, socially and intellectually poor. To fulfill such a . . . mission the Church must be profoundly rooted in the realities of civilization. This accounts for the title of this book." (Publisher's note) This is a translation of L'Oraison Problème Politique.

"Under a purposely provocative title, Père Daniélou asks an old question of a renewing Church. Should the People of God be limited to the angelic purists living heroic lives in an alien culture? Or should they be the Church of the poor—the Church of the masses? Père Daniélou is not on the side of the angels. This is the most rugged defense of the 'Christian civilization' concept I've seen since the advent of the secular city as a theological value. . . . It should be noted that Père Daniélou does not limit his vision to Christian prayer. But he does see Christianity as the revealed religion ultimately adaptable to all civilizations. . . . [This book] is not monumental. But it is a provocative, insightful study." P. J. Weber

America 117:386 O 7 '67 350w

"An abstract theological exercise in the cosmic verities, few of which have anything at all to do with the title of the book. Daniélou, a French Jesuit, has written several other works very similar to this one, notably Christ and Us [BRD 1962] and God and the Ways of Knowing [BRD 1958], both of which use the same analytic and Thomistic style. Although the book is quite short and contains no index, bibliography, or annotation, it nonetheless attempts to define the relationships between prayer, secularism, politics, civilization, the Church, ethics, humanism and God. The translation is adequate, and the work may have some limited value for the Roman Catholic seminary student."

Choice 5:791 S '68 110w

"Prayer is necessary to man's fulfillment, Daniélou argues. . . . It is, therefore, a responsibility of the state to provide access to religion and a function of the Churches to make prayer possible. . . . The book tightly argues the need of civilization for the Church and the need of the Church for civilization, and re-emphasizes the necessity of the Church to work through the framework of society."

Critic 26:84 F '68 140w

DANIELS, GEORGE. English & American watches. 128p il $5 Abelard-Schuman

681 Clocks and watches 66-15599

The author traces the history of "the technical developments of watchmaking in England from the 17th Century and in America from the beginnings of its watch industry in the early part of the 19th Century. . . . He also appends biographical notes concerning the individual craftsmen mentioned in the text. There are illustrations of 50 watches (35 English and 15 American), including . . . the 1966 electronic watch." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Clear reproductions show both case and mechanism. Although his book is intended for the layman, the reader would be well advised to have a dictionary at hand. Recommended for all collections on watches and watchmaking." Paul von Khrum

Library J 92:4166 N 15 '67 200w

TLS p58 Ja 18 '68 90w

DANIELS, GEORGE H. American science in the age of Jackson. 282p $7.95 Columbia univ. press

509.73 Science—History. Science—U.S. 67-28710

"This book is an attempt to understand the attitude of American scientists and science practitioners toward science during the period from the close of the War of 1812 to 1845. Daniels, associate professor of history at Northwestern University, has based his book on an analysis of the work of 56 leading American scientists [whose publications appeared in 16 journals] during this period. He believes that scientific thought passed through several stages resulting in at least a modicum of sophistication in the use of the inductive method." (Library J) Index.

"[This] well written work gives an excellent account of how Jacksonian science reached a springboard to break through to become an egregious part of American culture. A background is provided for the development of the broadening socio-scientific relationships of the early 19th century. For those interested in the changing methodology of science in America, this work is indispensable and unique. Most of the information was dug from American scientific journals of the period. The appendices contain: (1) useful biographical and bibliographical sketches of 55 leading American scientists of the period 1815-45 and (2) nine tables of data on American scientific journals 1771-1849."

Choice 5:364 My '68 170w

Reviewed by H. A. Meier

J Am Hist 55:129 Je '68 440w

"The book will be of value to scholars; students will find the appendix, 'Biographical and Bibliographical Sketches' helpful as a beginning for further research in this little explored field." R. J. Havlik

Library J 92:4514 D 15 '67 140w

"Very little is said about the actual science of the period, except by way of illustrating the influence of philosophical and religious presuppositions on scientific investigation. [Daniels'] extended analysis of the 'Baconian' philosophy of science in America—a complex of ideas and attitudes derived partly from Bacon, partly from the Scottish common-sense philosophers, and partly from Protestant natural theology . . . constitute a valuable contribution to American intellectual history and, more generally, to the history of the philosophy of science, a largely neglected subject. . . . [However, he fails] to distinguish clearly between two rather distinct scientific traditions, the tradition of natural philosophy and the tradition of natural history." J. C. Greene

Science 160:638 My 10 '68 1100w

Va Q R 44:cxxiv summer '68 100w

DANIELS, JONATHAN. Washington quadrille; the dance beside the documents. 370p il $5.95 Doubleday

917.53 Washington, D.C.—Social life and customs. Roosevelt, Franklin Delano 68-17820

The author describes the women who were the leaders of Washington society from the time of Abraham Lincoln through the F.D.R. years and shows how they influenced the man who ran the country. Depicted are Mary Todd Lincoln, Sallie Carroll, Clover Adams, Edith Galt Wilson, and others. Special emphasis is given to the women in Franklin Delano Roosevelt's life. Bibliography. Index.

"[The] editor of the Raleigh, N.C. News and Observer . . . got himself in hot water two years ago by devoting a scant two pages of The Time Between the Wars [BRD 1966], his gossip account of the years between the Armistice and Pearl Harbor, to the relationship of F.D.R. to Lucy Mercer. . . . [Here he discusses the heretofore] forbidden subject throughout the whole book. Some diehards will feel that Daniels' mountainous researches have turned up only a molehill of hard clues but a romantic heart and a warm imagination light his way through the murky passages of history. . . . If he introduces new characters to his richly populated tapestry, he has a way of stitching them into his main narrative by blood ties to ancestors or relatives of the protagonists that positively breath-taking. . . . His style, as someone described it in connection with an earlier book, is 'light, casual, skeptical and nimble ■ an Alpine gazelle.'" Anne Chamberlin

Book World p4 Ag 25 '68 950w

"That there is so little to be uncovered about an FDR-Rutherford romance is perhaps a tribute to their propriety, if indeed they felt anything warmer than friendship. . . . It must have been hard indeed to take a woman of Eleanor Roosevelt's stature, and discover only jealousy, and lack of understanding, warmth, and perceptiveness. But [the author] has accomplished this. . . . Mr. Daniels is the son of President Wilson's Secretary of the Navy who, the author said, always retained much affection for FDR. Mr. Daniels worked with Roosevelt, but does not appear to have inherited his father's feeling. . . . But somehow to refer to 'old Sara' and 'old Minna' (Sara Delano Roosevelt and Minnie Mercer) strikes a reader as distasteful if not downright impertinent. There are grammatical shortcomings, too, which make for unsmooth reading in places." N.E. Taylor

Christian Science Monitor p11 S 12 '68 340w

"Daniels lays a background of gossip and rumor concerning the private lives of the wealthy, patrician society of Washington and Virginia. . . . The ladies snipe at one another interminably. The old, whispered rumors, inevitable concomitant of presidential campaigns, familiar to those old enough to remember from the time of Wilson, are refurbished. From this mood-creating background emerges the main theme, the story of the lifelong friendship of Franklin Roosevelt and Mrs. Lucy Mercer Rutherford told in copiously documented detail. 'Documents' in the title suggests authentic sources, but many of Mr. Daniels's references are from . . . Town Topics, which he admits is 'more snide than significant.' Why then quote? . . . Was it a fine friendship, a 'beautiful story' or a 'scandalous tale.' Such titillating questions make a sure-fire best seller." R. W. Henderson

Library J 93:2861 Ag '68 180w

Reviewed by R. P. Corsini

N Y Times Bk R p6 S 15 '68 950w

DANIELS, ROBERT V. Red October; the Bolshevik revolution of 1917. 269p pl $6.95 Scribner

947.084 Russia—History—Revolution, 1917-1921 67-24060

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:112 Mr '68 200w

Economist 226:51 F 17 '68 360w

TLS p498 My 16 '68 600w

DANTE ALIGHIERI. Dante's lyric poetry [ed. and tr. by] K. Foster and P. Boyde. 2v 217;392p $20.20 Oxford

851 [67-84064]

In volume I the authors give us "all the lyric poetry definitely attributable to Dante, with the Italian on one side and [an] English prose version on the other. . . . Volume II is devoted to a [commentary]. . . . There is not only a . . . general introduction but also an introduction to each poem or group of poems along with metrical, grammatical, rhetorical, motific, and literary analysis, including comparison with earlier Italian and provençal lyrics in the same poetic tradition." (Choice)

"[These volumes justify] the editors' claims in that (1) the Anglo-Saxon world now has an absolutely up-to-date text illuminated by the speculations and achievements of the latest scholarship; (2) a step is taken beyond this to provide ■ more thorough commentary than even the Italians can boast at the moment, or at least a more broadly inclusive one. . . . Extreme care is taken with textual variants and with divers possibilities of construing certain lines with an eye to the opinions of the best editors and commentators . . . but always with clear and independent judgment. In general, the commentary performs the more or less successful tour de force of informing both the neophyte in Dante studies and the expert without being excessively cumbersome. It is a genuine education and a delight. Every library should possess several copies."

Choice 5:630 Jl '68 300w

"The editors did well to choose the Rime as their field of study. . . . The general reader, certainly the Anglo-Saxon reader, had no convenient and up-to-date help of the kind required. . . . Yet today much assistance ■ needed for a proper appreciation of these poems, and if 400 pages of learned commentary seem an intolerable deal of exegesis for 100 pages of lyrics, those who can only afford the paperback edition of volume one will nevertheless have to borrow a copy of the notes for any real understanding of poems which today often seem alien in conception and obscure in execution. The text used is that of Barbi with very few slight alterations."

TLS p913 S 28 '67 800w

DARLING, LOIS. A place in the sun; ecology and the living world; written and il. by Lois and Louis Darling. 128p $3.95 Morrow

574.5 Ecology—Juvenile literature 68-12690

"Taking the rich fields and woods of their own Connecticut home for demonstration, the Darlings explain the ecological relationships at work there and show how typical they are throughout the world. [The authors seek to show] that all life on Earth is interrelated." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:112 Je 1 '68 120w

DARLING, LOIS—Continued

"This book challenges readers to action against modern conditions which adversely affect the balance of nature. . . . There is good coverage of plant and animal life and their correlation with certain environments, and the diagrams throughout are excellent. The Darlings' [approach is] relatively subjective, sometimes wordy. . . . [The] book can serve as an adequate introduction for beginning, or less interested, science students." Darwin Jones

Library J 93:3979 O 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by Philip Morrison
Sci Am 219:128 D '68 70w

DARLING, LOUIS, jt. auth. A place in the sun.
See Darling, Lois

DARLING, RICHARD L. The rise of children's book reviewing in America, 1865-1881. 452p il US & Canada $8.75; elsewhere $9.65 Bowker
028.1 Book reviews. Children's literature
67-24986

Thirty-six literary, religious, children's and educational periodicals were studied by the author in this examination of "criticism of children's literature and trends in children's publishing." (Prologue) Bibliography of reviews. Bibliography. Index.

"Darling's definitive report . . . reveals a period rich in books of high quality, and reviewing that compares well with that of today. Literary monthlies from Boston to San Francisco have been carefully researched. Titles of the day have been selected—Hans Brinker, Alice, Little Women, Tom Sawyer, and others of equal fame—are evaluated and reviews quoted. A valuable book for the graduate student making a literary study of the children's book world in America at the mid-19th-century mark."

Choice 5:944 O '68 200w

Horn Bk 44:706 D '68 250w

"[Darling] has written an interesting dissertation that [makes] a genuine contribution to knowledge and . . . [is] a fascinating book. His success stems from a combination of solid scholarship and a felicity of style which never causes the reader to bog down in a morass of documentation. . . . [This volume] should provide the basis for revising the romanticized view of children's literature which has permeated the field for the past 50 years. . . . Readers who were vaguely dissatisfied with [C. L.] Meigs' A Critical History of Children's Literature [BRD 1953] will begin to understand why when they read Darling. The true gems of scholarship in Darling's book are missing in the Meigs. . . . There is more magic in Darling than any other American produced volume on children's books." D. M. Broderick

Library J 93:3218 S 15 '68 750w

DARLINGTON, ALICE B., jt. auth. African betrayal. See Darlington, C. F.

DARLINGTON, CHARLES F. African betrayal, by Charles F. Darlington and Alice B. Darlington. 359p il $6.95 McKay
916.7 Gabon 67-24783

"'Gabon has been betrayed by France, how this came about is the main story of this book.' Charles Darlington, appointed by President Kennedy in 1960 as the first United States ambassador to the newly independent country of Gabon, tells the story [of his term in that country]." (Library J) In the second half of the book Mrs. Darlington describes her experiences there as a diplomat's wife.

Choice 5:665 J1 '68 160w

"Within the limits of the responsibilities he still bears for the 'proper' diplomatic niceties . . . Mr. Darlington frankly presents the effect of French power and jealousy. . . . Mrs. Darlington's story will interest women readers because of the appealing picture she gives of the responsibilities of a diplomat's wife with the humorous situations that can and do develop. The Darlingtons found hospitality among the Gabonese people—extended by the elite in the capital and the natives in the rural settlements. They also found a potential for great development in the country itself. This is a readable and sympathetic account by two literate and kind people. Highly recommended for public libraries and for collections of Africana." M. D. Herricks

Library J 92:4422 D 1 '67 210w

"[Darlington] tells the story with appropriate dismay, though his pinched, old-fashioned diplomatic style never permits him the anger and disgust that any thoughtful reader will feel. The second half . . . presents the gee-whiz reactions of an American housewife to the difficulties of African housekeeping. Together with the personal details in her husband's half of the book, her description of the pettinesses in an ambassador's life makes one wonder how anything intelligent ever gets done at any Foreign Service post. Maybe, as in the case of Gabon—though not through any fault of the Darlingtons—it doesn't."

N Y Times Bk R p30 Mr 24 '68 280w

DARWIN, CHARLES ROBERT. Darwin and Henslow; the growth of an idea; letters 1831-1860, by Charles Robert Darwin and John Stevens Henslow; ed. by Nora Barlow for the Bentham-Moxon trust. 251p pl maps $6.50 Univ. of Calif. press

575 Beagle Expedition, 1831-1836 67-18368

"Darwin's theory of the origin of species by natural selection was profoundly influenced by his observations made during the voyage of H.M.S. Beagle from 1831 to 1836. That he joined this surveying voyage at all was due to his close friendship with John Stephens Henslow, Professor of Botany at Cambridge. Darwin corresponded frequently with Henslow about the collections—geological, zoological, and botanical—that he was sending back to Cambridge. [The letters show] the impact of these first travels upon his mind and the growth of a dedicated sense of direction. From extreme diffidence, under Henslow's guidance, Darwin soon gained a reliance on his own powers of deductive thought." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"One of the faults with this book is not entirely of Lady Barlow's making, although she does little to rectify it. Most of Henslow's letters have evidently been lost, with the result that the book is inordinately weighted on Darwin's side (of the 121 letters, only nine are by Henslow). . . . Why, one wonders, were [more of Henslow's letters] not included here, if only to help arrive at a more just balance? In fact one does know of letters by Henslow that could immeasurably have added to the substance of this volume, since they go to the heart of the problem: why did Henslow not accept Darwin's theory? . . . Excerpts from some of these letters appear in a memoir of Henslow written by his brother-in-law." Gertrude Himmelfarb

Book World p12 F 25 '68 1000w

Choice 5:76 Mr '68 180w

Economist 224:1001 S 16 '67 230w

"Nearly all of the 121 letters published in [this volume] were written by Darwin to Henslow, but to clarify certain points several of Henslow's letters to Darwin and to others are included. The letters show the development of Darwin's changing concept of species, although, in order not to annoy his friend, Darwin never emphasized his evolutionary views. The letters are accompanied by the usual scholarly apparatus including, in the appendix, Darwin published recollections of Henslow. The illustrations are well chosen and include maps of the voyage of the Beagle. The editor, Nora Barlow, is a granddaughter of Charles Darwin. She has added a great deal to our knowledge of her grandfather in her earlier books. In [this] she is continuing the good work." Conway Zirkle

Science 159:519 F 2 '68 290w

"[It would have been better] to have printed with each letter a footnote giving the whereabouts of the original manuscript, and bibliographical references to earlier incomplete (or rarely complete) publication of the text. The fact that one is obliged to turn for this information from a letter to an appendix at the end of the book is the only criticism that can be leveled at the present work."

TLS p837 S 21 '67 2050w

DAS GUPTA, ASHIN. Malabar in Asian trade, 1740-1800. 204p $10.50 Cambridge 332 Malabar, India—Commerce. Malabar, India. 66-44074

The author traces "the growth of the southern state of Travancore, under Martanda Varma, into a strong economic power; the decline of the Dutch who had to give up all hopes of commercial supremacy; and the collapse of the independent merchant class of the coast. The era closes with the Dutch withdrawal from Cochin in 1795, and the end of their association with Malabar." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] has described the complicated interplay of . . . developments in graceful English. Although there is much to praise in this slim volume, the chapter on 'The Medieval Merchant' will, for comparative purposes, be especially useful to students interested in the decline of Indian merchants in other regions at this time." J. R. McLane
Am Hist R 73:1223 Ap '68 400w

"The Malabar Coast of southwestern India played a vital role in 19th-century Asian trade. The riches of its trade attracted Arabs, Chinese, Dutch, and English and their rivalries and conflicts affected the fortunes of the indigenous mercantile class. The book is an authoritatively written history of six decades of Malabar's role in the Asian trade. . . . The materials used include Dutch, British, and Indian sources, many of them hitherto unpublished. Das Gupta writes with deep knowledge and skill with the result that the work is indispensable for those interested in a hitherto little known aspect of Indian economic history. Written largely for the specialist but will be very valuable for libraries serving area studies."

Choice 4:890 O '67 140w

Reviewed by C. R. Boxer

Engl Hist R 83:844 O '68 220w

"A very significant contribution to the economic history of India. . . . [However, this] work is of more than local importance and should not be overlooked by those whose interests in economic history lie in Europe or the Americas. . . . The book is essential reading for anyone who wishes to put the growth of European power on the Malabar Coast in proper perspective. For the reader with broader interests, the chapter on the monopoly (especially in pepper) of Travancore will be the centre of attention. . . . The Dutch Company does not come off well in these pages; its commandeurs on the Malabar Coast were not distinguished for perspicacity. . . . Das Gupta is so concerned to explain the decline of the Dutch that the rise of the English is more often implied than fully discussed. . . . [but he] has given a vivid account of the commercial life of Malabar, especially the role played in it by the Jewish merchants." Holden Furber
Pacific Affairs 40:418 fall-winter '67-'68 700w

DASMANN, RAYMOND F. A different kind of country. 276p il maps $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

309.2 Regional planning. Wilderness areas. Man—Influence of environment 68-11193

The author of The Destruction of California (BRD 1965) presents a "plea for diversity in man, in country, and in thought. He covers the wilderness areas in . . . detail, describing the ecology of each, stressing a sense of its variety. . . . He tackles man in his various environments (and environments without man), primitive, pastoral, and urban cultures. . . . [He seeks to] preserve what is left of the wild country through the balanced use of the land." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] frankly admits a bias . . . for the preservation of wilderness, for the non-use policy of the Park Service as opposed to the multiple-use policy of the Forest Service. He argues that man needs wildernesses, that a diversity of habitats preserves a diversity of biota; a diversity of biota is a storehouse of genes for the unknown future as well as a source of recreation, information, and inspiration for human beings. . . . Mr. Dasmann presents the case well." C. S. Johnson
Library J 93:564 F 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by Joan Dillon

Library J 93:2134 My 15 '68 200w [YA]

"This is one of the most quotable books I have read since Aldo Leopold's A Sand County Almanac [BRD 1949]. Dasmann says a lot of things you or I might not agree with. But we have to listen—not only because Dasmann is eloquent and passionate in his beliefs but also because in the end it will probably turn out that almost everything he says is true. Reading Dasmann can be an unsettling experience. The challenge of his point of view is clear. . . . Things that most of us have long accepted as easy answers (wilderness, preservation, national parks, and so forth) turn out, after Dasmann's analysis, to be hard questions. . . . The book is filled with irreverent views that become truths as we ponder them." Peter Farb

Natur Hist 77:68 Ag '68 1300w

"[Mr. Dasmann] manifests a nice concern for words and the attention span of his readers. Scholarly analysis is interwoven with personal reminiscence that is as light as it is illuminating. There is scarcely a page that is dull; there are many that are a delight to both ear and eye, for the illustrations, chosen and in some instances drawn by Mrs. Dasmann, are an outstanding feature of the book. . . . Where [the author] disappoints us is in allowing his loves to run away with his judgment. Thus, more than a third of the book is taken up with a single 'genus' of natural diversity, namely, wild land. . . . Some of Mr. Dasmann's opinions concerning what should be done to keep the world 'a fit place for the greatest possible human variety' disappoint us even more." G. H. T. Kimble
Reporter 38:36 My 2 '68 1700w

DAUDET, ALPHONSE. The brave little goat of Monsieur Séguin; a picture story from Provence; tr. and adapted from a story by Alphonse Daudet; il. by Chiyoko Nakatani. unsp $3.95; lib bdg $3.86 World pub.

Goats—Stories

68-14679

"Monsieur Seguin had never been lucky with his goats. All six of them had broken their ropes, run off to the mountain—and had been devoured by a wolf. If only his pretty new goat would be happy and stay with him. But, alas, Blanquette in her turn raced off to the mountain, reveling in her freedom, eating grass and flowers that tasted like nectar, racing up and down the slopes, making friends of the deer, afraid of nothing. Until night came and with it the howl of the hungry wolf. What followed, the bravery of Blanquette, has become a legend in Provence." (Book World) This illustrated adaptation was originally published in Japanese under the title Sugan San No Yagi. "Ages five to eight." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin

Book World p4 (children's issue) My 5 '68 180w

Reviewed by S. B. Kupper

Christian Science Monitor pB3 N 7 '68 100w

Horn Bk 44:314 Je '68 110w

"[A] book that has genuine suspense, atmosphere, and literary style . . . [and] unpretentious integrity . . . this should wear well for either reading aloud or storytelling." N. Y. Orr
Library J 93:3288 S 15 '68 120w

"A fine adaptation. . . . Miss Nakatani's pictorial paean to Provence is in perfect harmony with Daudet's bittersweet parable about a little goat who is not happy in an earthly paradise. A luxurious picture book, it raises hopes that pictures and words can be equal partners in 1968." S. G. Lanes

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p55 My 5 '68 50w

"In this adaptation the goat is brought home; in the original story she was eaten. Fairly faithful to Daudet's story, the translation gains in simplicity what it loses in style. The illustrations are enchanting, particularly the melting pastel hues of mountain scenes." Zena Sutherland

Sat ■ 51:32 Je 15 '68 140w

DAULTE, FRANÇOIS. French watercolors of the 20th century; foreword by André Dunoyer de Segonzac [tr. by Diana Imber]. 141p il col i $12.95 Studio

751.4 Water colors. Painting, French

68-18114

This volume discusses "the work of 30 French artists ranging from the late Impressionist period to 1967. . . . The text consists of a general history of contemporary French watercolor painting, a one-page analysis of each work illustrated, and a biographical and bibliographical section." (Library J)

"The first half of the book considers such masters as Cézanne, Matisse, Picasso, Bonnard, and Dufy; the second, a group of unknown mediocrities such as André Planson, Brianchon, Legueult, Rohner, and Ciry. The color plates, of which there are 40, are excellent, but the black-and-white ones are crude and muddy.

DAULTE, FRANÇOIS—Continued

The main text is superficial, while comments on individual paintings are generally informative and scholarly. This is the only book which treats this subject with such breadth. It is more suitable for suburban coffee tables than college library stacks."

Choice 5:1122 N '68 110w

"[This book] is beautifully illustrated. . . . Most of the paintings, which were chosen by Mr. Daulte, an authority on Impressionism and Neo-Impressionism, from private collections, are not often seen by the public. In fact, several of the watercolors in this book have not been previously published. Except for a few present-day artists the painters are all well-known. Examples of abstract painting are not included. . . . Mr. Daulte's inclusion of the artists' own statements, some appearing in print for the first time, saves an otherwise exoteric text from being useless for specialized libraries. The book is recommended for public libraries and for pertinent collections because of its heretofore unpublished material, excellent color plates, and reasonable price." Jacqueline Sisson

Library J 93:2996 S 1 '68 200w

DAVENPORT, BASIL, comp. Famous monster tales; foreword by Clifton Fadiman. 201p $4.75
Van Nostrand

Short stories—Collections 67-27991

This is a collection of thirteen tales by Arthur Conan Doyle, Ray Bradbury, Ambrose Bierce and others, presented with an introduction to each story.

Reviewed by Jane Manthorne
Horn Bk 44:208 Ap '68 100w [YA]

"These are tales to be told in the dark. Werewolves, vampires, and robots who can hold their own with TV late shows abound. . . . The reader will be surprised to find E. F. Benson and Heywood Brown in such grotesque company. Anyone looking for escape or for summer reading will enjoy this book." Edith Shumaker

Library J 92:3054 S 15 '67 100w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri
Library J 92:3209 S 15 '67 60w [YA]

"[These] are all first-class, starting with Fritz Leiber's dybbuk-like 'Smoke Ghost,' which yearns for propitiation, and running through Frank Belknap Long's 'Second Night Out.' All good reading, even if it may mean leaving on night lights for a while." Richard Shepard

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p39 N 5 '67 150w

DAVENPORT, MARCIA. Too strong for fantasy. 483p pl $8.95 Scribner

B or 92 67-23685

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:1293 D '68 170w

Reviewed by Arthur Marshall
New Statesman 75:486 Ap 12 '68 950w
TLS p363 Ap 11 '68 1400w

DAVENPORT, T. R. H. The Afrikaner bond; the history of a South African political party, 1880-1911. 431p 11 maps $10.60 Oxford

329.968 Afrikaner Bond. Africa, South—Politics and government 67-1861

"The Afrikaner Bond was the first political party in South Africa. . . . [The author has written an] account, first of the Bond as an exclusivist Pan-Afrikaner organization, then as a Cape political party that accepted British rule and used its parliamentary strength to secure cabinets sympathetic to its views, and, finally, of its merger in 1911 with Afrikaner-dominated parties in the Transvaal, Orange Free State, and Natal." (Am Hist R) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] has used rich sources—party records, newspapers, and private papers—with skill and detachment, showing how Afrikaners, like the South African British, were divided before 1899. In so doing he demonstrates once more the profound misjudgments made by Sir Alfred Milner and the pitfalls facing anyone who tries to reconstruct a political system from outside." Jeffrey Butler

Am Hist 73:562 D '67 470w

"Davenport assumes that his reader is familiar with existing literature on the subject, most of it in Afrikaans, and is frustratingly vague about the nature of his own conclusions. Chapters 10 and 11, dealing with the immediate pre-war period and the Anglo-Boer War, are among the best in the book, avoiding extremes of minute detailing and of telescoping. Coverage of the 1902-10 era needs the clarification of relevant portions of L. Thompson's scholarly Unification of South Africa, 1902-1910 [BRD 1961]. . . . Specialists making use of this study will appreciate the well organized bibliography, index, maps, and illustrations. They may find, however, that not sufficient distinction has been made between informative and simple reference footnotes in a format which relegates the latter type to the back of the book. Like the mines of his native land, Davenport's history of the Bond holds wealth for the academic worker prepared to dig and sift."

Choice 4:565 JI '67 190w

"Although Dr. Davenport has built up a scholarly and detailed portrait, using material, all scrupulously annotated, which he has gathered from many obscure sources, it must be said that he has provided the material for a book rather than the book itself. The wealth of detail is overwhelming; the writing so lacks momentum that the reader is left to push his way resolutely through a thicket of thorny facts. Nevertheless, the book is worth the reader's persistence."

TLS p366 Ap 11 '68 210w

DAVID, JAY, ed. Growing up black. 256p $6.50
Morrow

920 Negroes—Biography 68-26436

A "collection of excerpts from the autobiographies of nineteen American Negroes, from a slave owned by Thomas Jefferson, Frederick Douglass and Booker T. Washington to such modern figures as Ethel Waters, Richard Wright, Malcolm X and Dick Gregory." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by W. L. Lucey
America 119:562 N 30 '68 40w

"[This] should be a must purchase for every high school library."

Best Sell 28:323 N 1 '68 120w [YA]

"This book, the personal and often painful recollection of childhood moments by 19 prominent black Americans, is of inestimable value to us. The excerpts have appeared in previously published autobiographies but this collection in one volume facilitates a comparative analysis of the black child's experience which is essential to any true understanding of racism in America, past or present. The boyhood reminiscences of James Baldwin would have been a worthy inclusion in this truly revealing book." Edward Mapp

Library J 93:2842 Ag '68 150w

DAVIDSON, H. R. ELLIS. Pagan Scandinavia. 214p 11 $7.50 Praeger

914.8 Scandinavia—Antiquities 67-24530

"The aim of this book is to trace the history of religious cults and symbols in Scandinavia from the earliest archaeological records until the close of the heathen period." (Publisher's note) Contents: The threshold of religion; The sacred tomb; The advent of the gods; The great sacrifices; The dancing warriors; Powers of Asgard. Bibliography. Index.

"An important volume. . . . Disregarding minor mistakes and some place-name mixups, issue must be taken with two points. First, the constantly stressed inference that a small aristocracy ruled over a large, poor 'people-class' is not founded on archaeological evidence. . . . Second, neglecting to mention that symbols have plural associations, thereby producing what looks like convoluted ring-arguments to the nonspecialist reader. . . . The up-to-date bibliography is much better than could be expected; the index which mentions subject, archaeological site, and publisher is downright wonderful. This work is mainly aimed at a wider public, but specialists in any branch of Scandinavian studies will also benefit from it."

Choice 5:540 Je '68 150w

"Mrs. Davidson of Cambridge University has examined the museums of Sweden, Denmark, Finland, Russia, England, and other countries for relics of pre-Christian Scandinavia and has culled relevant data from old and new publications in several languages. . . . She has made an impressive historical reconstruction. . . . The line drawings and the photographic plates allied to her simple and elegant style greatly enhance the quality of this study. Even a nonspecialist is likely to find the book quite entrancing." Joseph Bram

Library J 93:1478 Ap 1 '68 200w

TLS p57 Ja 18 '68 1000w

DAVIDSON, LIONEL. Making good again. 308p $5.95 Harper

68-26786

James Raison, an Englishman, Johann Grunwald, a concentration camp survivor, and Heinz Haffner, a German, are the three lawyers involved with settling "a claim under the German Federal Indemnification Law on the Swiss fortune of [Helmut] Bamberger" a German-Jewish banker who has disappeared during the Second World War." (New Statesman)

Reviewed by Alice McCahill

Best Sell 28:366 D 1 '68 450w

Reviewed by O. A. Hagen

Library J 94:95 Ja 1 '69 130w

"[In this novel, Davidson] has gained a good deal in solidity of characterisation and construction but has lost something of the exuberance of the earlier adventure tales, The Night of Wenceslas [BRD 1961] and The Rose of Tibet [BRD 1962]. I found the plot tediously complicated. . . . But the portrayal of Grunwald . . . is sympathetic and memorable; and the brief love affair with a German girl enjoyed—or perhaps 'endured' would be the more accurate word—by Raison, the aptly named English lawyer, is handled with wit, perception and delicacy." Vernon Scannell

New Statesman 76:402 S 27 '68 180w

"As real as any character is the ancient ethnic climate of the Bavarian forest into which the lawyers venture with the deserved apprehension of Hansel and Gretel. The denouement of their search for restitution is a bit anticlimactic, but their journey is nonetheless rewarding for the reader." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p58 O 20 '68 200w

New Yorker 44:245 D 7 '68 70w

"An odd, quiet novel that contemplates the limits of private responsibility and public guilt. This moral terrain, though fascinating, is often overwrought in literature. And Davidson's low-key philosophic inquiry conducted in a wonderfully conversational tone and decked out with the trappings of an international suspense tale, runs the risk of seeming schematic or frivolous. . . . [Davidson] slowly turns the book into a rueful seminar on the possibilities that men have of ever 'making good again' after various sorts of failure. In the process, the word Wiedergutmachung [making good again] becomes a kind of pun that can be read on a number of levels, some hopeful, some somber." Time 92:112 O 11 '68 750w

DAVIDSON, MARSHALL B., ed. The American heritage history of colonial antiques. See American heritage

DAVIES, HUNTER. The Beatles: the authorized biography. 357p il $6.95 McGraw

920 The Beatles 68-9046

This chronicle of the English group covers its emergence as a group up to the present time as well as considering the backgrounds of the individual members.

Reviewed by B. J. McGurl

Best Sell 28:266 O 1 '68 1300w

"Those who always reckoned the Beatles' Svengali to be Brian Epstein prophesied disaster when he died a year ago. . . . Reading between the lines of [this] 'official' biography (and it is generally so slackly written as to afford plenty of room for the maneuver), one arrives at a different conclusion. . . . Their true Svengali was never anyone but us, the ever-loving public. Both Mr Davies and [Julius Fast in his recent book, The Beatles: The Real Story, BRD 1968] take the reader through the extravagant facts, in interestingly similar fashion. . . . Davies' compendious volume is far more informative and reliable than Fast's. . . . The better book is also rather moving and adroit in its reports on Beatle families and employees." John Coleman

Book World p6 S 29 '68 500w

Reviewed by David Sterritt

Christian Science Monitor p9 N 19 '68 410w

Reviewed by D. W. Harrison

Library J 93:4131 N 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by Collin Clark

Library J 93:4429 N 15 '68 160w [YA]

"The most interesting sections of Mr. Davies' affectionate but not uncritical . . . biography are the early ones, about who John, Paul, George, Ringo and their families were before the Beatles existed. Whether he intended it or not (he probably did, for he is very skillful), the author's wonderfully acute picture of their post-Beatlemania lives makes it clear that it's more sad than beautiful to become rich, famous and worshiped before you are 30." Sara Blackburn

Nation 208:28 Ja 6 '69 230w

"Davies has handled [his] assignment ■ a straightforward reporting job and obviously put a great deal of work into assembling and editing the material into a cogent narrative. . . . The main problem, one fancies, might have been the hours he was forced to spend in his heroes' company, listening to their endless drivel, for there must have been much more than he chooses to reproduce. . . . It goes on for page after half-baked page. The author rarely vouchsafes us an opinion other than the occasional comment that, for instance, 'Ringo is completely open and friendly, the sweetest of them all really'. . . . In short, the necessary qualities of judgment and analysis that would have made this book of real value, rather than merely a good gossip read, are almost entirely missing. . . . Of course the Beatles are a remarkable quartet; what Davies has failed to convey is precisely why and how they are remarkable." Philip French

New Statesman 76:432 O 4 '68 1050w

Reviewed by Joan Peyser

N Y Times Bk R p7 S 29 '68 800w

New Yorker 44:239 N 9 '68 100w

"For all their exposure in the press, the Beatles have rarely come across in three dimensions. . . . Davies does not swoon from gratitude at his good fortune [at being authorized to tell their story], nor does he eulogize the Beatles as latter-day saints. Instead, he capitalizes on his position of privilege to interview seriously John, Paul, George and Ringo, their friends, family and associates, with the sole object of putting together an honest account. His hard work and the obvious trust the Beatles have in him allow us to see the young musicians for the first time as interesting, fallible, corporeal creatures, each quite different from the others, each with his own history and hang-ups and hopes." P. D. Zimmerman

Newsweek 72:106 S 30 '68 500w

DAVIES, HUNTER. The other halves [Eng title: The other half]. 183p $4.95 Stein & Day 301.44 Great Britain—Social conditions.

London—Poor 68-17323

A "British journalist presents ten case studies of residents of London to illustrate the paradox of people existing and functioning in society but receiving status and remuneration above or below the level of their worth. . . . [The people] fall roughly into two groups. The first, or the 'New Poor,' includes a nurse, a social worker, a curate, a civil service employee, and a policeman. The second, or the 'New Rich,' includes a barrow boy (or street hawker), a male hair stylist, a news vendor, a prostitute, and a burglar. The evidence indicates that while the 'New Rich' live in comparative luxury, the 'New Poor' receive barely enough income to exist." (Library J)

"In each case Mr. Davies provides at the beginning a brief, flat description of setting and personality; otherwise, the people are allowed to speak for themselves, though the organization of the text indicates that questions were provided. He makes no attempt to moralize. . . . The book will be useful for sociology and psychology collections." R. G. McInnis

Library J 93:2016 My 15 '68 300w

Reviewed by Nell Dunn

New Statesman 72:639 O 28 '66 380w

"Money, it appears, is the prime concern, the love object of Davies's people. . . . Unfortunately, types rather than persons appear in [his] work. . . . The New Poor are equally ■ anomic as the make-out artists, differing only in their wealth of self-pity. . . . Though Davies has performed some service in capturing the words of the gray people, their thoughts have escaped him. I'm afraid this work is another anecdote in the ersatz saga of 'objective' journalism." Studs Terkel

DAVIES, HUNTER—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p18 My 19 '68 600w

"Neither the rich nor the poor are as easily identifiable as they were when Henry Mayhew walked round the streets of London to talk to them just over 100 years ago. Hunter Davies has had a very good idea—that he should talk to several people who are not necessarily what they seem to be in terms of either class or money, and let them speak for themselves in the manner of Mayhew's characters.

[The] case-histories [are] related in a flat almost objective first person voice, which is nevertheless revealing. It says a lot for Mr. Davies that these widely differing people should all have found it possible to talk so freely to him. And the result is something more than a collection of journalistic pieces: Mr. Davies's own definition, 'non-fiction short stories', is a good one. . . . The absence of moralizing and exhortation, together with a careful selection of the facts, leads to insight which is all the more powerful for being understated."

TLS p1005 N 3 '66 850w

DAVIES, J. G. The secular use of church buildings. 305p pl $5.95 Seabury 259 Churches 68-17844

This is "an historical study of the varied use that has been made of Christian places of worship. . . . [The author's thesis is that what is needed] is a multi-purpose building, a service centre in which the Church's total involvement in society is . . . expressed." (TLS) Index.

"A zowie cover photo of leotarded dancers in Coventry Cathedral leads readers to the less sensational rewards within these pages. . . . Davies' historical study shows that . . . [churches] have been used for dancing and eating, tethering animals and sheltering fugitives, and enough etceteras to fill 300 pages. Implicit in [his] story is the suggestion that secular use of churches is a good antidote for clericalism."

Christian Century 85:874 Jl 3 '68 90w

"[Professor Davies] seems curiously unresponsive to the complex factors—as much cultural as religious—which shaped the evolution of the Christian Church. . . . [He] does not give the impression that he thinks there may still be need . . . for places of silence, points of repose in a society that precisely calls . . . for a further dimension. . . . In all his industrious chronicling of church ales, vestry meetings, parish gatherings of every sort, Professor Davies never seems to recognize that all these happenings were . . . related to a sacred setting. And it is that setting he wants to eliminate. [His] thesis is an important one and it is impressively presented. Much of his research is new and of great interest, and in his concern to give to religion a vital role in society he has used his material to good, if selective, effect."

TLS p948 S 5 '68 850w

DAVIES, L. P. A grave matter. 190p $3.95 Doubleday

68-22620

"An account of the discovery of two small bodies in a hidden grave in Ashmead stirs vague childhood memories in the mind of John Morton, a successful young architect. Curiosity sends him to . . . Detective Sergeant Alec Derwent, C.I.D. Together they go to Maulden, a strange house dominated by Margot Lloyd where the three Cawdreys live, but are never available for questioning." (Library J)

"[This] is a classic English mystery by a classic mystery writer. Well plotted, well written. . . . No overtones of sex, no extreme of violence; it is a professional piece of suspense writing. The story builds steadily to a shattering climax. It is a real pleasure to read a straightforward mystery just for itself and its development."

Best Sell 28:372 D 1 '68 110w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 93:3024 S 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by A. J. Hubin
N Y Times Bk R p42 O 6 '68 120w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 51:58 N 30 '68 30w

DAVIES, L. P. The reluctant medium [Eng title: Tell it to the dead]. 191p $3.95 Doubleday

67-22468

A mystery story in which "because Matthew Rawson has confidence in him, David Conway, business consultant, feels that he will be able to take an objective view of the strange happenings at Rawson's home, Butchart House, and that he can prove that the ghostly sounds and sights are the work of a warped but very human mind in the house itself. But he lets himself get emotionally involved, and murder steps in and almost strikes him down." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:371 D 15 '67 50w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 93:99 Ja 1 '68 60w

"Is the vengeful ghost for real, or an attempt to extort money from a conscience-stricken tycoon? Ingenious gimmicks, exceedingly flat writing." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p16 D 31 '67 20w

"English industrial consultant turns private eye when ghosts (real or imagined?) start disturbing his neighbors; most of work, however, is done by Detective Sergeant Pearson, who doesn't even get jacket credit; homicides old and new are involved here. Agreeably spooky." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:36 Ja 27 '68 40w

DAVIES, R. T., ed. King Arthur and his knights. See Malory, T.

DAVIES, SAMUEL. The Reverend Samuel Davies abroad; the diary of a journey to England and Scotland, 1753-55; ed. with an introd. by George William Pilcher. 176p $5.95 Univ. of Ill. press

B or 92 Great Britain—Description and travel 67-12991

The author, a Presbyterian preacher, "of Hanover County, Virginia, traveled in England and Scotland on a fund-raising mission in behalf of the trustees of the College of New Jersey (now Princeton University). . . . Davies set forth the personal record of his journey in two small, bound volumes—separated and mutilated over the years—from which Professor Pilcher has prepared the present edition. . . . [The diary] comments on the British religious scene, and narrates [Davies'] successes, disappointments, and the fatigue and hardships of the journey." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by G. E. Hartdagen

Am Hist R 73:1622 Je '68 450w

"With delight we may read of a time (pre-secular) when sensitivity to spirit, providential leadings, awe, piety, and emotional candor mixed with blushing were the style. Good job here of introduction, footnoting, and indexing. . . . Will be valuable for the student in American history, American studies, and American church history, whose specialization has matured to the degree of minutiae studies herein presented. Recommended for purchase by libraries with early American history collections."

Choice 5:357 My '68 180w

"The outstanding preacher of the Great Awakening in Virginia, Davies was at the end of his short life president of Princeton. But perhaps his most important contributions came on a trip to England and Scotland where he successfully won rights for dissenters and together with Gilbert Tennent, founder of American Presbyterianism and the Log College, raised enough money to make struggling Princeton College financially solvent. His candid journal of this journey is a remarkable digest of English Presbyterian and Independent thought."

Va R 44:xxviii winter '68 140w

DAVIS, ALLEN F. Spearheads for reform; the social settlements and the progressive movement, 1890-1914. 322p $7.50 Oxford

362 Social settlements. Reformers. Cities and towns—U.S. U.S.—Politics and government 67-25457

An account of "the activities of settlement workers in New York, Chicago, and Boston. Typically organized, it examines the English and American origins of the settlement house idea, and then studies the impact of the settlement workers on education, housing, the labor movement, woman and child labor, the immigrant, the Negro, and politics. A final chapter considers the post-World War I settlement house. . . . [The author attempts to show] that, both as students of social problems and framers of reform proposals, Jane Addams, Robert Woods, and their cohorts deeply affected the reform efforts of the Progressive Era." (Choice) Index.

"Davis is well informed about current historiography and relates his findings to its concerns. Specialized scholars who may find here food for thought and leads for research include historians of urban life, education, housing, planning, immigration, Negro affairs, labor, municipal politics and reform, and even art and mass culture. The main theme is how events led the settlers from neighborhood service to politics, and how their political frustrations at the ward level led them to engage in city-wide and finally national contests. There are instructive chapters on each of these phases; it is curious that the connection with state politics receives no emphasis." James Leiby

Am Hist R 73:1252 Ap '68 400w

Reviewed by A. E. Fink

Ann Am Acad 337:211 My '68 230w

"[Written] in a clear, straightforward style. . . . Despite an occasional overstatement of the settlements' influence, Davis' work admirably supplements [R.] Lubove's The Professional Altruist [BRD 1966] and [C.] Chambers' Seedtime of Reform [BRD 1964]. Very full footnotes testify to the author's careful search of materials. . . . Recommended for college libraries."

Choice 5:402 My '68 190w

"Though his main coverage throughout the book is restricted to three large cities, (Davis is most effective in his relatively extensive portrayal of all social reformers in politics. In a perceptive chapter on the ward boss, he spells out with clarity the reasons for the meager success achieved by settlement workers. . . . [He] has a commendably clear style of writing. His vignettes of the principal settlement house leaders of the three cities are particularly sharp." D. W. Disbrow

J Am Hist 55:161 Je '68 470w

DAVIS, BURKE. The Billy Mitchell affair. 373p pl $7.95 Random house

B or 92 Mitchell, William. Aeronautics, Military 66-21474

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by F. C. Pogue

Am Hist R 73:934 F '68 550w

Choice 5:676 Jl '68 180w

Reviewed by Elinor Langer

N Y Rev of Books 10:27 F 15 '68 2500w

DAVIS, CHARLES. A question of conscience. 278p $6.95 Harper

262 Catholic Church 67-21556

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Leon King

America 118:268 F 24 '68 60w

Reviewed by Brian Wicker

Encounter 31:74 S '68 400w

Reviewed by Richard Ginder

Nat R 20:509 My 21 '68 700w

Reviewed by Magdalen Goffin

N Y Rev of Books 11:30 Ag 22 '68 850w

Reviewed by E. B. Fiske

N Y Times Bk R p22 F 4 '68 340w

DAVIS, DOROTHY SALISBURY. God speed the night [by] Dorothy Salisbury Davis and Jerome Ross. 224p $4.95 Scribner

68-17330

"Gabrielle, novice from a convent in Nazi-occupied France, gives her identity papers to a young Jewish girl who is trying to reach the Spanish border with her husband. Following an emergency appendectomy the girl dies. The nuns bury her as Gabrielle and Gabrielle accompanies the husband, working with a harvest crew and posing as his wife. In three days the crew is close enough to the border for him to cross. Gabrielle returns to the convent, having made the supreme sacrifice of her chastity to insure his escape." (Library J)

Reviewed by C. M. Siggins

Best Sell 28:232 S 15 '68 340w

"[The story] gives a vivid picture of the horror of the time and place and probes the nature of faith and courage—or its lack. Characters are well drawn as are their reactions to the exigencies of terrible situations. The story's sustained suspense is underlined with a deep compassion." Maybelle Lacey

Library J 93:3576 O 1 '68 150w

"[This] is not a suspense novel, although suspense is bountifully present. It is not a spy story, though spying enters in. It is more a picture of the rewards and costs of deep religious belief, and it is certainly a book you will not readily forget."

N Y Times Bk ■ p47 S 15 '68 130w

"The plot is incidental, really, to the characterizations and to the locale, a small village in Vichy France in 1943. A Graham Greene or a John Le Carré could get away with this but would not try to, because this isn't the way suspense books are written. . . . The effects of the young nun's faith and naïveté on Darian's cynicism, her own awakening to life in an uncloistered world, the uncovering of Moissac's suppressed carnality and his relationship with his elderly, widowed mother, all placed against a well-realized background of French village life, make this a suspense novel of more than usual substance. But, without managing to grip the reader or to provide sufficient surprises, it stumbles over its ambition." Joseph Haas

Sat R 51:32 O 5 '68 380w

DAVIS, JOHN GORDON. Hold my hand I'm dying. 433p $6.95 McGraw

68-20719

This novel tells the story of Joe Mahoney, a member of the white minority in Rhodesia, his affair with Suzanna de Villiers, and his growing concern with his country's racial problem.

"This is another big, supercharged novel of violence. . . . [There are] several really sensational sex orgies; and [the book ends] with a violent, bloody, and tragic denouement. This book is a good example of its type with several memorable episodes. Mildly, by current standards, pornographic." Harold Lancour

Library J 93:3798 O 15 '68 130w

"Hold your head as you make your way through this trackless jungle of a novel. Its twistings and turnings are enough to make the brain reel. . . . As [Mahoney's] consuming love affair sputters away, Mr. Davis depicts the larger agony of Rhodesia, aflame with civil dissection. When he writes about the Rhodesian scene, he is both passionate and even-handed. It is this sensual appreciation of his birthplace that justifies the rest of the novel." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p82 N 17 '68 220w

"A stimulating if windy and unkempt novel. . . . The case [for Rhodesia] is stated whenever . . . Mahoney can take time out from an endless and irrelevant program of erotic adventures. Further, and this is what makes the book worth reading, Mahoney (or Davis) offers not so much an apologia for Rhodesia's master-racism as for that unique and tragic figure . . . the 'white African.' . . . While it's hardly a literary sapphire, [this book] merits recommendation. Despite the author's maudlin Ruarkian style (some may say because of it), the slow, deadly ticking of Rhodesia's time bomb is audible and believable." Charles Miller

Sat R 51:33 O 19 '68 550w

TLS p53 Ja 18 '68 90w

DAVIS, KENNETH S. The politics of honor: a biography of Adlai E. Stevenson. 543p il $10 Putnam

B or 92 Stevenson, Adlai Ewing. U.S.—Politics and government—20th century

67-15107

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman

America 118:618 My 4 '68 100w

DAVIS, K. S.—Continued

Reviewed by Allan Nevins
Sat R 51:22 Ja 20 '68 1100w

Reviewed by J. J. Kilpatrick
Sat R 51:23 Ja 20 '68 340w
TLS p567 Je 6 '68 900w

DAVIS, L. J. Whence all but he had fled; a novel. 247p $5.75 Viking

68-11417

Robert Probish, "a young artist, tries to survive in the Lower East Side melting pot under a severe handicap: he inspires unprovoked hatred. He skips from one pad when his Ukrainian neighbors want to lynch him; he vacates another with four Latins lying in ambush; still later, he alienates his Jewish landlord, when an uninvited pot party is held on his premises. Even among his peers, Robert Probish, a fugitive from Jamaica (Queens), is abnormally goof-prone. Friends set his place afire, poison him with drugs, send him off on a wild-goose chase in Dutchess County." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by J. J. Murray
Best Sell 27:400 Ja 15 '68 420w

Reviewed by Gerald Kersh
Book World p16 Mr 24 '68 700w

Reviewed by W. J. Smith
Commonweal 88:242 My 10 '68 430w

Reviewed by Irving Howe
Harper 236:83 My '68 1250w

"The boy's experiences, which include an LSD trip, a visit to an art critic's bizarre home, and an affair with Nancy, a real slob, culminate in a wildly ridiculous party in his room. The emptiness of these people's lives is terrifying, their existence is meaningless; like Probish they have no real souls. This is a first novel but Mr. Davis, a former creative writing student of Wallace Stegner, has rendered Probish's fight for a personality of his own in a comic, crude style which gives the novel some substance. The comedy, while grotesque and grubby, tells me that Mr. Davis has writing talent. It is hoped that as he develops his talent he also learns to allow his characters more depth and to be more explicit in developing his theme. Purchase recommended only after thoughtful consideration." R. F. Cayton

Library J 93:95 Ja 1 '68 270w

"The author weaves [Probish's] hapless interludes into an East Village bildungsroman that has a nice comic flair. He inclines toward heavyhandedness in depicting the generation gap; and he is vague about such memory-lane items as the difference between Warm Springs, Ga., and Hot Springs, Ark. For the current scene, though, Mr. Davis has an accurate ear and a keen eye." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p40 Ja 14 '68 140w

Reviewed by Susan Lardner
New Yorker 44:188 Ap 20 '68 1250w

"Probish is a familiar sort of dropout. It is easy enough to see why he wants to run away from his dreary parents, but I can't quite believe that he would have nerve enough to go to Manhattan and set himself up, at eighteen, as a painter. . . . Probish faces the familiar problem of identity: is he what he seems to himself to be or what he becomes in responding to this person or that? Since he is surrounded by a company of grotesques, his transformations are spectacular. . . . Along the way there are some comic scenes and a good deal of witty writing." Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:19 Ja 20 '68 320w

Va Q R 44:1vi spring '68 90w

DAVIS, LOU ELLEN, jt. auth. Careers in computer programming. See Barnett, L.*DAVIS, NUEL PHARR. Lawrence and Oppenheimer. 384p il $7.50 Simon & Schuster

B or 92 Lawrence, Ernest Orlando. Oppenheimer, Julius Robert. Nuclear physics—History 68-19940

This book compares the character and achievements of Ernest Orlando Lawrence, the inventor of the cyclotron, and J. Robert Oppenheimer, who directed the atom bomb project at Los Alamos. It describes how the association of these two physicists began in harmony but ended in rancor. Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by J. B. Kelley
America 119:330 O 12 '68 550w

Reviewed by D. F. Sharpe
Best Sell 28:267 O 1 '68 1800w

Reviewed by Thomas O'Toole
Book World p1 S 29 '68 1700w

"Davis has produced a fascinating and vivid narrative . . . [which] will probably attract critical fire from apologists for Lawrence, Lewis Strauss, and Edward Teller. Public and college libraries should buy this excellently told story of an important and tragic episode in American scientific and political history." J. W. Weigel

Library J 93:3550 O 1 '68 220w

Reviewed by Alexander Zucker
Nation 207:633 D 9 '68 1350w

Reviewed by John Gliedman
New Repub 159:24 N 16 '68 1600w

"By following Lawrence . . . in pursuit of bigger and bigger machines and failing to bring them off, the reader begins to understand why—for all his gifts, his early remarkable achievements and ultimate rewards—there was in his driven life a sense of frustration and entropy. . . . From the collected gropings of [Oppenheimer's] associates, those somewhat disaffected and those totally devoted, an explanation of the nature of this arresting man gradually emerges that, if not complete, is yet convincing and satisfying. I know of no better account of the life and work of the men in the laboratory at Los Alamos or of the character and contribution of its director. It is a considerable achievement. . . . [However] what follows is anticlimax. First there is a brief, caustic, biased account of how the decision to drop the bomb was reached, and then a useful but on the whole familiar review of . . . [the] unhappy divisions (both within the physics community and the wider society) and the sad confusions that developed as this country attempted to accommodate to the fact of nuclear energy." E. E. Morison

N Y Times Bk R p1 O 6 '68 1800w

Newsweek 72:106 S 23 '68 700w

"Dr. Davis has obviously read and digested the extensive published record on the two subjects of his book; he has even turned up some items not generally known or available before. . . . But the backbone of the book . . . is the material the author culled from interviews with some eighty scientists around the country. They spoke to Dr. Davis frankly and revealingly. . . . For this reason alone the book is certain to be a best-seller among physicists. . . . The author makes no pretense of being an objective reporter. He doesn't think much of Lawrence. . . . [He] is naturally much more sympathetic to Oppenheimer. . . . [His book] is an important contribution to the history of physics in America, to the study of the interactions of science and government, and to our understanding of how people who happen to be scientists behave. . . . Just how perceptive Dr. Davis's treatment of his protagonists is can best be seen by comparing it with the recent 'official' biography of Lawrence, An American Genius by H. Childs [BRD 1968], which . . . contrives to say practically nothing significant . . . about its subject. . . . [However, there are] minor inaccuracies through the book [and in the glossary]." Herbert Goldstein

Sat R 51:34 S 28 '68 2100w

Reviewed by A. K. Smith
Science 162:445 O 25 '68 2250w

DAVIS, OLIVIA. The last of the Greeks; a novel. 295p $5.95 Houghton

68-21740

This "first novel centers around the convoluted relationships of artist Mark Prentiss, his immediate family, his ex-wife [Berenice], her present husband [a French painter named Jean Alexandre], and their child." (Library J)

"In thinly disguised references to well-known British social figures and scandals of a few years ago Miss Davis attempts to give the characters a footing in reality, but the success of this ploy is very limited. The end product is pleasant enough light fiction, but the essential thinness of plot and shallow delineation of personalities prevent the novel from achieving any profound impact. It may have a fairly broad appeal among general readers." A. J. M. Pedley

Library J 93:3154 S 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk R p40 O 6 '68 190w
New Yorker 44:211 O 26 '68 170w

"Davis has a nice appreciation of the contradictions within ordinary people and she is quite good with the affectations and revelatory mannerisms of the privileged class. She has an ear for the pompous, for mindlessness and wistful gropings. What happens? Nothing very much except some minor adjustments in which sensible compromise, aided by coincidence, serves as plot-maker. . . . Still, she doesn't deprive her novel of such up-to-the-minute attractions as a psychoanalyst whose son is in a mental institution, a pair of quarreling upper-class Lesbians, an uneducated homosexual, and a phony American art critic. Her scenes and people. . . will chiefly entertain women readers." Muriel Haynes

Sat R 51:41 O 26 '68 550w

DAVIS, P. D. C. Animals that changed the world; adapted from A history of domesticated animals by F. E. Zeuner, by P. D. C. Davis and A. A. Dent. 121p il $3.95 Collier
636 Domestic animals—History—Juvenile literature 68-10999

"After an introductory discussion of how man may have come to tame wild animals and where the ancient ancestors of domestic animals may have originated, various common animals are discussed in separate chapters: dogs and cats, reindeer, goats and sheep, the bovines, pigs, horses, camels, birds. The results of special breeding by man are also covered. [Index.] Grades seven to eight." (Library J)

"Occasionally, . . . the text incorporates teleological tendencies in accounting for structural changes brought about by domestication. The book is intellectually stimulating but will have a limited audience because of the solid, heavy prose used by the British authors." A. C. Haman

Library J 93:1809 Ap 15 '68 90w
Natur Hist 77:76 Je '68 100w

Reviewed by Philip Morrison
Sci Am 219:137 D '68 100w

"How our ancestors bent the sheep and the goats, the cows and the horses, the pigs and the camels and the hens to their wills: strikingly written . . . and full of shrewd judgments and unusual information."

TLS p1096 N 24 '66 80w

DAVIS, PAXTON. The seasons of heroes; a novel. 276p $4.95 Morrow

67-21731

In this novel, "three generations of the Gibboneys of [Westgate,] Virginia, expose the major crises in their lives. Father Robert recalls being the youngest captain during McNaught's doomed raid on Pennsylvania in 1864; grandfather Matthew recollects his military life in the early 1800's, the breaking up of the Union and his consequent conflicts of loyalty; while son William remembers his intervention in a lynching [in 1912]." (Library J) A portion of this novel first appeared, in different form, in the November 1962 issue of Playboy.

"[This book] proves unpretentious and entertaining and it is produced by one thoroughly in command of his craft—reading the novel is its own justification. . . . [The] best section of the three is . . . narrated by Robert's father, Matthew Gibboney who was a West Pointer and career military man tries to live with being an American and a Virginian in 1861. In this part Mr. Davis records with engrossing clarity the growing pains of the United States Army. As part of it there is a brilliantly conceived presentation of the person of General Winfield Scott. . . . A refreshing novel; interesting, informative, always worth the trip." H. T. Anderson
Best Sell 27:227 S 15 '67 350w

"Good storytelling, excellence of characterization and skilled writing are the hallmarks of this absorbing novel. . . . Highly and generally recommended." A. C. Ringer
Library J 92:2804 Ag '67 160w

Reviewed by E. A. Morse

Library J 92:4636 D 15 '67 80w [YA]

"The three narratives combine to define certain ideas, attitudes, and articles of faith which these men embody in their different ways. These are old-fashioned: . . . duty, honor, country. . . . Rather than any unity of action it is the continuity of these ideas (plus family and place) that gives unity to the novel. The narratives are widely separated in time. Unlike those often used by Faulkner, Cary, and Durrell, for instance, they do not present the same complex of events viewed differently. . . . The novel is cleanly and well written, moving with ease and authority from West Point of 1822 to Westgate of 1912. There is a consistent feeling for people, landscape, and ideas, and underlying all, a reverence for justice and for life." Joseph Blotner

N Y Times Bk R p43 S 17 '67 800w

DAVIS, R. H. C. King Stephen. 1135-1154. 156p pl maps $5 Univ. of Calif. press

942.02 Stephen, King of England. Great Britain—History—Norman period, 1066-1154 67-17639

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by John Beeler

Am Hist R 73:454 D '67 400w

Choice 4:1304 Ja '68 200w

Reviewed by D. J. A. Matthew

Engl Hist R 83:559 J1 '68 2000w

TLS p42 Ja 11 '68 600w

DAVIS, TERENCE. John Nash, the Prince Regent's architect. 115p il $8.50 Barnes, A.S.

720.9 Nash, John 67-20198

A monograph on the English architect of the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries who served as architect to King George IV.

"The author not only writes excitingly about buildings but has a mysterious and flamboyant personality to deal with." Bowden Broadwater
Book World p6 D 10 '67 150w

"Some six years ago Terence Davis published his Architecture of John Nash, which he modestly described as a collection of photographs of all, or nearly all, Nash's buildings then surviving. As such it has proved most useful. . . . [This work] is less a supplement to than a textual amplification of the author's previous publication. It contains frequent reference to illustrations in the earlier book which it is therefore essential for the reader to have at hand. This anomaly and the occasional lack of reference in the text to those illustrations which are included cause the only valid criticism of a production in all other respects admirable. The photographs are clear and the captions suitably arranged. The figure drawings and plans are all that can be desired. . . . In his enthusiasm for the Prince Regent's architect Mr. Davis does not spoil his case by fulsome eulogy. On the contrary he does not overlook Nash's glaring demerits."

TLS p20 Ja 12 '67 750w

DAVIS, VINCENT. The admirals lobby. 329p $7.50 Univ. of N.C. press

353.008 Lobbying. U.S.—Military policy. U.S. Navy—Officers 67-23496

The author records "the role played by the officers of the United States Navy in politics and policy-making decisions from the late 19th Century to the present. He traces the growth of the Navy's involvement in political action and discusses the factors which caused the Navy to adopt the role and techniques of a pressure group with emphasis on the post-World War II era. . . . [He] contrasts the activities of the Navy with those of the other services especially the Air Force. He also analyzes the various techniques available to the armed services and explains why the Navy preferred working through the Congress rather than through the Executive." (Library J) Index.

"A comprehensive review of the political, organizational, and administrative history of the navy from 1900 to 1967. . . . Some of the author's contentions are unacceptable: that the navy was indifferent to technological advances, unprepared for war in 1941, and wedded to the doctrine that 'Navies were only meant to fight other navies'. . . . A broad, if somewhat repetitious, work, it is worthy of careful attention by students and serious readers, naval officers, and others in the armed services. It is a valuable contribution to scholarship and to the understanding of our widely misunderstood naval officers." B. S. Custer
Am Hist R 73:1256 Ap '68 400w

Reviewed by Kurt Lang

Am J Soc 73:652 Mr '68 700w

DAVIS, VINCENT—Continued

"Despite its title, the argument of this book is that naval officers do not lobby—or hardly ever do . . . The book succeeds in conveying a syndrome of attitudes that naval officers developed toward their natural enemies, the Department of Defense and the Air Force. The logical articulation between the story about attitudes and the argument about lobbying behavior, however, seems tenuous." H. C. Mansfield

Ann Am Acad 378:167 J1 '68 450w
Choice 5:1220 N '68 160w

"Too many footnotes make [this book] hard sledding at times, but the persevering reader will be rewarded. Perhaps the best chapter is the one in which Davis describes the shift from a pre-1950s 'limited' strategic vision in the navy and a concurrent 'flexible' air force posture to a post-1950s 'flexible' navy position and a 'limited' air force perspective. [His] account of the post-World War I clash of General 'Billy' Mitchell and the navy, his relating of post-World War II interservice and intraservice policy debates, and his treatment of recent naval lobbying and strategic thought are also useful. These two 'early reports on an ongoing research project' are thoughtful and auspicious." Peter Karsten

J Am Hist 54:927 Mr '68 350w

"An authoritative and scholarly record. For college and university libraries." John Buechler

Library J 92:2931 S 1 '67 200w

DAVIS, WALTER R., ed. The works of Thomas Campion. See Campion, T.

DAWNAY, N. P., jt. comp. Military drawings and paintings in the collection of Her Majesty the Queen, v 1. See Miller, A. E. H.

DAWSON, CHRISTOPHER. The formation of Christendom. 309p $6 Sheed 261 Civilization, Christian. Civilization, Medieval 66-22011

Lectures "covering the development of Christianity through the Middle Ages. [Dawson] aims to show that Christianity is not reducible to ethics and that Christianity is not understood if its history is not. The education of Western Europe by Christianity is strongly emphasized, particularly the role played by monasticism in the process of acculturation." (Choice)

"The book reflects Dawson's Catholicism quite openly, but few readers will take offense at his historical judgments on the importance of the Catholic Church in the development of Western society. Neither a history nor a theology textbook [this] is rather a short, nondetailed study of the relation of our culture and Christianity. . . . Readable and highly recommended for adolescents and adults."

Choice 4:1396 F '68 130w

"The first occupant of the Stillman Chair of Roman Catholic Studies at Harvard in 1958, Mr. Dawson quite naturally chose 'Christendom' as the over-arching theme of his lectures. Designed to appear as a trilogy in book form, volume two, The Dividing of Christendom [BRD 1965] covering the period from the Protestant Reformation to the French Revolution, was published in 1965. The present, and superior, volume comprises the lectures of the first group, 'dealing with the formation of Christendom, from its origins in the Judeo-Christian tradition through the rise and decline of medieval unity.' . . . [This book] is a work of art. . . . However, [it] may be criticized in two regards. [There is a lack of footnotes, and more fundamentally the unwary reader might] come away with the impression that at least once in world history a cultural realization of the Christian ideal had been actually achieved. . . . Too much seems to have been glossed over and left unrecorded and unaccounted for." W. C. Storey

Commonweal 86:557 S 8 '67 700w

DAWSON, HELAINE. On the outskirts of hope: educating youth from poverty areas [il. by Robert Carter]. 329p $5.95 McGraw

371.9 Socially handicapped—Education. Vocational education 67-26356

The author "describes her experiences over a three-year period with about 200 young men and women in the job-training program at the Youth Opportunities Center in Hunters Point, San Francisco, a center established under the Federal Manpower Development Training Act of 1962." (Library J) Filmography. Bibliography. Index.

"[The author is] an unusually perceptive social worker and educator. . . . She paints a colorful picture of her students at the beginning of the term. . . . Her book is an eye-opener to the problems and the rewards of job-training programs and a justification for their continued financial support." Marian Wozencraft

Library J 93:2001 My 15 '68 250w

"The book shifts from personal narrative to remarks addressed specifically to teachers on how to function within their classrooms. . . . Miss Dawson is a good teacher and a good person. . . . She loves her students; this is clear from her personal narrative. But she does them a disservice by trying to seduce them into a life many of them are certain to find inauthentic. . . . By making conformity the price of a job, Miss Dawson presented them with a severely limited social perspective. There are other reasons for black students to acquire the skills and techniques of business than making it in the white world." Herbert Kohl

N Y Rev of Books 11:31 S 12 '68 1400w

DAWSON, RAYMOND. The Chinese chameleon, an analysis of European conceptions of Chinese civilization. 235p il pl $8 Oxford

915.1 China—Civilization 67-81516

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by S. V. R. Cammann
Am Hist R 73:436 D '67 550w

Reviewed by A. M. Halpern
Ann Am Acad 375:224 Ja '68 400w

Reviewed by J. B. Parsons
Pacific Affairs 41:266 summer '68 500w

DAY, BETH. Modern motherhood. See Liley, H. M. I.

DAY, CLIVE. The Dutch in Java; with an introd. by John Bastin. reissue 434p $6.90 Oxford

325.3 Netherlands—Colonies. Java—Politics and government 66-67566

This work was originally published in 1904 under the title The Policy and Administration of the Dutch in Java. Bibliography.

"The first scholarly book written by an American . . . on Indonesia, reissued in a facsimile edition, with a brief but lucid preface by John Bastin (School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London). This is still the only full-length treatise of its kind available in English, and it continues to be essential reading on 19th-century Indonesian colonial history. Based on excellent research in printed source materials, Day provides a careful but critical interpretation of Dutch policies, especially those connected with the system of forced cultivations inaugurated in the 1830's. Indispensable for any library collections relating to Southeast Asian history. The detailed and somewhat dry treatment makes it rather tough reading for undergraduates."

Choice 4:1161 D '67 100w

Reviewed by D. G. E. Hall
Pacific Affairs 39:458 fall-winter '66-'67 90w

"A reading of Clive Day's book constantly brings to mind Canning's aphorism about the fault of the Dutch in giving too little and asking too much. Ethically, [Day] was probably right. . . . But is it reasonable, or even particularly useful, to take broad moral views of colonial problems? It is far easier to condemn colonialism in theory than to study its detailed workings in practice. As a detailed study of Dutch administration in Java, Clive Day's book is not without faults. Theoretical conclusions are not always supported by concrete evidence. One is not sure that Day knew much about Java as a place; and there is nothing in his book to suggest that he had actually been there."

TLS p178 F 22 '68 270w

DAY, DOUGLAS, ed. Dark as the grave where in my friend is laid. See Lowry, M.

DAY-LEWIS, CECIL. See Blake, N.

DAYAN, DAVID. Strike first! a battle history of Israel's six-day war; tr. from the Hebrew by Dov Ben-Abba. 292p il maps $6.95 Pitman 956 Israel-Arab War, 1967 68-14953

"A day-by-day account of the . . . war by the chief correspondent of the Israeli Army Broadcasting Service, reconstructed from . . . dispatches he received from . . . branches of the armed services . . . and from additional taped interviews." (Nation)

"Written by an Israeli and translated from Hebrew . . . [this is a] well-written and fairly comprehensive account of the war. [It is a] strictly military history of the war as seen from the Israeli side and one of the best books on the subject available." David Shavit
Library J 93:2862 Ag '68 110w

"Dayan conveys not only the feelings of his army but also those of the enemy that the Israelis encountered in the field. Included are numerous battle maps tracing the route of the victorious forces." M. J. Bandler
Nation 207:444 O 28 '68 100w

DAYRELL, ELPHINSTONE. Why the sun and the moon live in the sky; an African folktale; il. by Blair Lent. 26p $3.25; lib bdg $3.07 Houghton

398.2 Folklore—Africa—Juvenile literature. Sun—Juvenile literature. Moon—Juvenile literature 68-14293

"When the Sun and the Moon extended an invitation to Water and his people to visit their earthly home, they underestimated the number of Water's followers and thus were forced to seek a habitation in the sky. . . . Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

"It was an inspiration to bring [this tale] back with Blair Lent's illustrations, for its fanciful, childlike quality offers marvelous scope for his creative talents. Here are the superb sense of design and color, originality and humor that distinguished his earlier books. . . . Pictures in mustard yellow and brown, blue and green, reflect the whole range of African art but are uniquely the artist's own; they tell the story as though it were acted out by African tribesmen dressed to represent the sun and the moon, the water and its creatures." Polly Goodwin

Book World p2 (children's issue) My 5 '68 400w

Reviewed by P. M. Daltry
Christian Science Monitor pB3 My 5 '68 30w

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon
Commonweal 89:286 N 22 '68 50w
Horn Bk 44:316 Je '68 80w

Reviewed by M. J. Shapiro
Library J 93:2105 My 15 '68 100w

"Adapted from Mr. Dayrell's 'Folk Stories from Southern Nigeria, West Africa' [BRD 1910], this new picture book is brilliantly eloquent. The tale expresses a primitive society's concern with the natural elements and offers a simple, logical explanation characteristic of a pre-science place, time and people. Blair Lent's illustrations are the finest he has ever done since he began illustrating children's books." G. A. Woods

N Y Times Bk R p30 Ap 28 '68 240w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:36 My 11 '68 130w

Reviewed by Philip Morrison
Sci Am 219:138 D '68 330w

DEANE, PETER, jt. ed. The literary life. See Phelps, R.

DEAUX, GEORGE. Superworm. 252p $5.50 Simon & Schuster 68-12166

"Superworm, is in truth, Claude Flowers, mild-mannered professor of history who lacks the cool to co-exist with the ghastliness around him—in Washington, in Vietnam, in the ghettos, on the highways. After years of anguished sanity in a mad world, Professor Flowers finally Turns—and becomes Superworm, existential peace-creep Don Quixote, flailing his arms (and long black underwear) against modern times. Throwing reality to the winds, the Worm sallies forth to do battle against the billboards of the Mama Mia Pizza Company; then into the heart (and plumbing) of the polluting pizza factory itself; then, with demented logic, on to the mighty Stew-in in his own backyard; and finally to the nation's capital." (Publisher's note)

"Deaux's [third novel] starts out in a barber-shop with a scene of such hilarious satirical lunacy that even while laughing one cringes from the inevitable letdown, for the author cannot possibly keep up this pace. So much for prophecy. He does keep it up. . . . This is a very funny, very clever, savagely pessimistic book." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 221:114 My '68 210w

Reviewed by John Thompson
Commentary 45:73 Ap '68 440w

"Superworm is a superbore (or boor). This is because Mr. Deaux . . . has a mystifying and frustrating tendency to obfuscate situations which have in them the seeds of high drama or tragedy with a veneer of vulgar, mad, (and worse) meaningless comedy, supposedly in the name of satire. . . . [This] is a tale of a Don Quixote turned idiot, and the result is a soggy derisive concoction—unless one has a stomach for this brand of humor. The characters—students, faculty, wives, children, everyone—are too eccentric to be conceded flesh and blood except as they may be found in mental institutions. The whole enterprise, excluding a few paragraphs which prove that Mr. Deaux can write lucidly and movingly, has a tone of madness which would discourage those seeking either mere entertainment or meaning and substance." A. L. Fessler

Library J 93:1160 Mr 15 '68 180w

"[This] is a superdrag because George Deaux is worried that his reader won't get the point. . . . [He has] too much to say about too little, and the reader is often painfully aware that he's witnessing a waste of talent, as well as a hipsterism that's just a little out of date. . . . The novel boomerangs into a brief for the assertion that frustrated and ineffectual peace creeps, no matter how witty their fantasies, are pretty dull company." Sara Blackburn

Nation 206:675 My 20 '68 200w

New Yorker 44:126 Je 1 '68 70w

Reviewed by R. A. Sokolov
Newsweek 72:82 J1 22 '68 130w

DE AZCARATE, PABLO. See Azcárate, P. de

DE BEAUVOIR, SIMONE. See Beauvoir, S. de

DE BEER, SIR GAVIN. Gibbon and his world. (Studio bk) 144p il $6.95 Viking

B or 92 Gibbon, Edward 68-75881

This biography of the eighteenth-century English historian is "amplified by a hundred and twenty-nine pictures of people and places that Gibbon knew." (New Yorker) Bibliography. Chronology. Index.

Reviewed by C. L. Hohll
America 119:568 N 30 '68 40w

"A straightforward account of the great Enlightenment historian. There are few novelties in the text; the great value of the book lies in its remarkable illustrations which bring to life the eighteenth-century world of England and the Continent." Oscar Handlin

Atlantic 221:134 Ap '68 200w

"Treated simply as a picture book, [this] is delightful. . . . The text is correspondingly short: barely more than fifty pages, if one subtracts the illustrations. . . . Sir Gavin de Beer has special qualifications. . . . For twenty years he has been using . . . [the archives of the Royal Society and at Lausanne] to add to our knowledge of Gibbon's life . . . and, in this short and competent biography, the ordinary reader learns of his discoveries." Economist 226:49 Ja 13 '68 500w

Reviewed by David Jordan
Library J 93:2233 Je 1 '68 150w

"A concise, beautifully written, compassionate account of the life and work of the unhappy, fat little author of 'The Decline and Fall.'" New Yorker 44:184 Ap 13 '68 50w

"A sympathetic, comprehensive, yet impartial account of Gibbon's career. . . . The copious illustrations are not only well chosen but also skilfully arranged to bear on and amplify each development of the text. Sir Gavin . . . sheds some new light on how Gibbon came to be sent to Switzerland, and rescues the reputation of his first tutor Pavillard, from the slur of narrowness and severity from which it has suffered in the hands of some biographers. It is especially valuable to have Sir Gavin's account of Gibbon's medical history (here included as an appendix). . . . The summing up of Gibbon's place in literature as a synthesis of the philosophe and the urudit could hardly be bettered."

DE BEER, S. G.—Continued

TLS p503 My 16 '68 550w

Va Q R 44:cxxii summer '68 120w

DEBOLD, RICHARD C., ed. LSD, man & society; ed. by Richard C. DeBolt and Russell C. Leaf. 219p il $5 Wesleyan univ. press

615 LSD

67-24111

"The editors attempt to describe the pharmacology, the social and legal aspects, and the therapeutic possibilities in the use of LSD. . . . [Barron discusses] possible creative uses of the drug. . . . [Kurland] and others show that the drug is only a scalpel in the hands of the therapist—taken alone they see it as useless and dangerous. . . . [Pahnke adopts the] approach that through its use new frontiers can be found. . . . [Chayet] reviews social and legal aspects and current efforts to control its illicit use on and off the college campus. . . . [and] Purpura of Albert Einstein College of Medicine [writes] on the neurochemistry of LSD and its congeners." (Library J) Bibliography.

"The basic merit of this deceptively thin volume on an immense subject is its authenticity. Scientific honesty and clarity enhance the merits. It is a collection of presentations at Wesleyan's symposium on LSD in March 1967. All problems connected with the use and abuse of LSD (theories, motivation, research, effects, etc.) are discussed. . . . Good editing has preserved the liveliness of the taped presentations and audience reactions. There is hardly any standard work of the same scope and scientific value [for comparison]. . . . A book like this was sorely needed to fight phony mysticism and definite danger with hard medical facts. The nine contributors are well-known authorities in their fields. Good bibliography; regrettably, no index. Highly recommended."

Choice 5:228 Ap '68 200w

Reviewed by Louis De Rosis

Library J 93:1008 Mr 1 '68 220w

DE BONO, EDWARD. The five-day course in thinking. 209p il $5.95 Basic bks.

153.4 Thought and thinking

67-27438

The author presents his method of developing thinking skills. He is concerned with insight thinking, sequential thinking and strategic thinking. The book consists "of five versions of each of two problems or puzzles and five phases in a game designed by the author; the reader is to decide what the best next move is in the game." (Choice)

"The claims made or implied for this book, such as that it introduces new ways of thinking or helps explain why some people have new ideas and others do not, are really not justified. Quite the reverse; De Bono seems oblivious of much of what is known about such matters. . . . It is a fun book for those who like brain teasers and might be appropriate as a Christmas gift for the man who has everything. If he happens to be interested in how thinking occurs, it might stimulate him to test in himself the trite conclusions reached by the author."

Choice 5:268 Ap '68 140w

"If you believe that mental calisthenics can do for your brain what pushups can do for your muscles, try [this book]. . . . While this is a popular, do-it-yourself, mind-exerciser book, certainly not intended for the academic marketplace and the research stacks, it may very well become a favorite of teachers and students and may even . . . find a place in the psychological laboratory where it obviously came from in the first place. Recommended for the psychology sections." H. S. Camenson

Library J 92:3650 O 15 '67 140w

DEBRAY, RÉGIS. Revolution in the revolution? armed struggle and political struggle in Latin America; tr. from the author's French and Spanish by Bobbye Ortis. 126p $4 Monthly review

355.4 Guerrilla warfare. Latin America—Politics. Communism—Latin America

67-27766

Based on the experiences of the Cuban revolution the author presents an "account of the case for guerrilla warfare in Latin America. . . . After analysing the failure of 'legalistic', electoral socialism, M. Debray prescribes specific tactics for the organization of guerrilla movements." (TLS) Translated from the author's French and Spanish "Révolution Dans La Révolution?"

Choice 5:116 Mr '68 130w

Reviewed by T. R. Snyder

Christian Century 85:84 Ja 17 '68 600w

"Nothing I have read in recent years conveys more vividly the hopes, the despair, the courage and the utter confusion of radicals in the Third World, particularly in Latin America. . . . Furthermore, [the book] is part panegyric and polemical, although mainly programmatic—theoretical if you wish. The underlying panegyric is for Castro. The polemics are against Latin American parties—Communists, Trotskyists. Reformists all—who claim to be revolutionary but are actually selling out to and begging to be co-opted by the capitalist establishment. . . . Despite its faults as a theory of revolution, it is an important book, and not only as the latest formulation of Castroism. As an expression of the thirst after freedom from U.S. domination, the search for sovereignty and social justice, it is a touchstone of Latin aspirations." Eqbal Ahmad

Nation 206:149 Ja 29 '68 4250w

"[This] book is of tremendous importance. . . . [The author has] an exceptional talent for extracting certain essential facts from the historical process and putting them into a language that is typically French in its brilliance. . . . But there is something more to the book. . . . [It] is a weapon in Fidel Castro's struggle to bring about a union of communism and nationalism in Latin America. . . . [It] must be considered as a chapter of propaganda in a much larger book, the really important chapters of which would contain the long-range thinking of Fidel Castro. One has to see Régis Debray's book as a part of such a scheme." Juan Bosch

N Y Rev of Books 9:3 O 26 '67 3400w

"[The bulk of the book is] devoted to the attempt to prove that the Cuban military and political model is superior to all others available, including the models of the Russian and Chinese revolutions. . . . This latest contribution to the cult of Castro is certain to increase [debate on . . . the ideological side of the world Communist and revolutionary movements. . . . [Moreover] the quickness with which the Bolivian Government caught Debray and its desire to make him responsible for guerrilla activity fully vindicates all his warnings about the difficulties of the guerrillas' path." Harry Schwartz

N Y Times Bk R p26 S 24 '67 480w

"When we reviewed the French version of [this book] on June 1 we suggested that 'M. Debray's book will be indispensable reading for all concerned with the future of Latin America'. Indeed, the book should be considered on its own merits, and not only because of the unfortunate publicity it has had since M. Debray's imprisonment in Bolivia. It is an eloquent account. . . . An important lesson of his book is that the past should help to illuminate, but not fetter, the present. . . . The Bolivian Government has insisted on exhibiting M. Debray as a symbol and a warning, and his real crime in their eyes obviously is to have written a book which undermines their most basic assumptions."

TLS p956 O 12 '67 280w

DE CAMP, CATHERINE C., jt. auth. The story of science in America. See De Camp, L. S.

DE CAMP, L. SPRAGUE. The great monkey trial. 538p il $6.95 Doubleday

343 Trials. Evolution. Scopes, John Thomas

67-11414

The author recounts the 1925 trial held in Tennessee of public school teacher John

Thomas Scopes for teaching the theory of evolution. The leading trial lawyer for the defense was Clarence Darrow and William Jennings Bryan assisted the prosecution. Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:1212 N '68 190w

Reviewed by K. K. Bailey

J Am Hist 55:689 D '68 380w

"[Mr. de Camp] has used all the standard published accounts of the trial and the archives of the American Civil Liberties Union; his presentation of the many intriguing and thought-provoking aspects of this fascinating trial is commendable. The researcher will welcome his extensive notes and bibliography. Recommended for law libraries, public libraries, and university libraries." J. J. Marke
Library J 92:4518 D 15 '67 220w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 93:895 F 15 '68 70w [YA]

Reviewed by Gerald Carson

Natur Hist 77:68 My '68 600w

"A year ago the memoirs of John T. Scopes were published under the title 'Center of the Storm' [BRD 1967]. . . . Scopes did not pretend to offer the complete, definitive account but only his slant on his trial. . . . His major contribution was to dissipate the melodramatic fog that has clouded the case. . . . Now de Camp's book, building on Scopes and a tremendous range of other sources, wraps up the entire business from every relevant viewpoint. . . . The author is fair—he shows the smudges on the white hats and the white lining inside the black hats. But after doing so he gives his own conclusions. He explains context and motive as carefully and objectively as a scholar can. When he has done, the mixed high drama and opéra bouffe of the Scopes trial are rendered completely believable." A. L. Todd
N Y Times Bk R p14 Ja 14 '68 600w

New Yorker 43:136 F 17 '68 100w

"This broadly inclusive, thoroughly documented narrative . . . is without doubt to be rated as the definitive account. . . . There are numerous interesting details not found in any of the half-dozen books previously written on the subject. . . . The book is a significant contribution to the social sciences, although it avoids the jargon of those disciplines, and is a worthy source book for the historian of the life sciences. There are, however, more typographical errors than I would have expected in a Doubleday book." K. F. Mather
Science 159:616 F 9 '68 550w

DE CAMP, L. SPRAGUE. The story of science in America, by L. Sprague De Camp and Catherine C. De Camp; ill. by Leonard Everett Fisher. 282p lib bdg $4.37 Scribner
509 Science—History 67-23686

"The story begins with the transplantation of the European scientific tradition to colonial America and it includes significant American developments in the physical, biological, and social sciences through the 1960's." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Perhaps this book attempts to cover too much. Before the Revolution America had little to contribute to science. . . . But contributions were so many after that period that the authors of this volume were forced to skim through the highlights of history. . . . Nonetheless, the authors have made a fine contribution in a book to introduce young readers to science and the personalities in the history of science in America. . . . Grades six to nine."

Best Sell 27:392 Ja 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 44:31 F '68 180w

"A first-rate history of American science and technology for high-school students. Despite the title, the authors cover major American technical discoveries as well as our contributions to the purely theoretical aspects of science. . . . There is much to be praised here—the book is intelligently conceived, carefully organized, clearly written, and handsomely designed. Unfortunately, the illustrations do not do justice to an excellent text. It would have been far better to have used contemporary illustrative material, or newly drawn diagrams, instead of the decorative woodcuts." George Basalla

Library J 92:4620 D 15 '67 120w [YA]

"[This is] a fast-moving, informative and thoroughly enjoyable chronicle, with amusing anecdotes, legends and interesting sidelights that reflect the personalities, lives and times of the men who shaped our nation scientifically. Wisely, the authors have kept their writing free of chauvinism, and 'The Story of Science in America' gives credit where credit is due. . . . Most of the scientific concepts are well enough explained so that even the newcomer to science should be able to grasp at least the essence of them. The book should make fascinating reading for the bright high school student—and for his parents." J. E. Brody

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p30 N 5 '67 130w [YA]

Reviewed by Philip Morrison

Sci Am 219:138 D '68 200w [YA]

DE CARVAJAL, LUIS. See Carvajal, L. de

DE DIESBACH, GHISLAIN. See Diesbach, G. de

DEFOREST, CHARLOTTE B. The prancing pony; nursery rhymes from Japan; adapted into English verse for children; with "Kusa-e" ill. by Keiko Hida. 63p $3.95 Walker & co.
398.8 Nursery rhymes 68-15698

A collection of 53 rhymes from the private collection of Tasuku Harada, a Japanese educator, who first translated them into English. "Ages four to seven." (N Y Times Bk R)

"A lovelier or more unusual book for parents to share with young children would be hard to find than this collection. . . . Working in complete harmony with the poems, Keiko Hida is the perfect illustrator. She works in a new art form she calls 'Kusa-e', a collage technique using handmade Japanese paper and natural plant dyes that produce subtle shades of red, yellow, purple, indigo, brown and black. Her work, both sophisticated and simple, creates its own poetry of form and line and color." Polly Goodwin

Book World p4 (children's issue) My 5 '68 200w

"[The adapter's] charming choices, with their humor, bright images, and childlike wonderings, have provided inspiration for the illustrations [of] . . . lively children, scenes of snow or cherry blossoms, birds, and animals. Although called 'nursery rhymes,' the poems are not limited to the very youngest; the combination of words and pictures has an ageless interest."

Horn Bk 44:333 Je '68 120w

Reviewed by Della Thomas

Library J 93:2727 Jl '68 160w

"This handsomely illustrated picture book presents an attractive array of songs and rhymes. . . . Miss DeForest has newly adapted them for young children. One senses something of the spirit of the old songs in reading these versions. The Japanese feeling for nature, the family and the little things of daily life are there. But not all the adaptations are equally happy. In some the rhyme and meter seem a little contrived. Still, the best of them almost catch the tone of English nursery rhymes." Maria Cimino

N Y Times Bk R p30 My 26 '68 180w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:42 Ag 24 '68 70w

DEGO, GIULIANO. Moravia. 120p $2.50
Barnes & Noble

873 Pincherle, Alberto 67-4663

A sketch of "the development of Moravia's fiction from 1929 to 1963 . . . [relating] the novelist's life to his works." (Choice) Bibliography.

"If there were in English several book-length introductions to [Moravia's] work, De-go's book would probably rank near the top; since there are no others, his is all the more important. . . . The factual information, although not startlingly new, is correct and useful. De-go is best when he summarizes in smooth and readable prose the most important critical opinions; the book thus serves as a guide to Moravian criticism as well as to the original works. . . . Should be in every library."

Choice 5:202 Ap '68 140w

DEGO, GIULIANO—Continued

"[This book has] a great deal of biographical and bibliographical information; a well-drawn sketch of the historical framework of Moravia's opus and the social background from which it grew. . . . Moravia has a knack for spoiling even the best story he has to tell by elementary stylistic mistakes. Dego seems to recognize this and says as much at times, but omits the close textual analysis which would substantiate such an evaluation. . . . [Still, he] is extremely good at indicating problems involved in each novel, its themes, and the complexity of their interplay. . . . [I would] prefer to see the asserted 'greatness' of the Roman Tales played down. . . . Apart from . . . minor points (which are largely a matter of different stress) I find Dego's arguments generally very sound and well supported." Umberto Mariani

Mod Lang J 52:160 Mr '68 1100w

"As an introduction to Moravia's work and documentation about it, this essay will be useful to the non-Italian reader; but judged by any higher standards it is very very sketchy. Even the short introductory note holds us up where it says that Moravia's manner of telling a story is 'factual, cold and precise'. 'Controlled' would surely be a better word than 'cold'. . . . What Signor Dego somehow fails to convey is all the heat and passion of the struggles and changes Italy has undergone in the past thirty years and about which Moravia is surely the most intelligent living interpreter in terms of the art of writing."

TLS p1185 D 22 '66 430w

DE GRAMONT, SANCHE. See Gramont, S. de

DE GRAZIA, TED. De Grazia paints the Yaqui Easter; the forty days of Lent in forty paintings, with a personal commentary. 92p $18 Univ. of Ariz. press

759.13 Yaqui Indians. Easter 68-22334

The Arizona artist has illustrated the Lenten celebrations of the Yaqui Indians (Southern Arizona and Northern Mexico). His paintings are accompanied by his text which describes and elucidates, to some extent, the part Christian, part Indian observation of the Lenten celebration." (Choice)

"While de Grazia's dedication and sincerity are unquestioned, his paintings are sufficiently stylized that they do not serve as visual documents and, on the other hand, they are not particularly interesting esthetically. His simply written text is interesting to someone uninformed on Yaqui Indian rites, but doubtless offers little new to the specialist. The volume is not recommended for an art library."

Choice 5:942 O '68 160w

"DeGrazia [is] known throughout the world especially for his popular Los Niños which has been used as a UNICEF greeting card. . . . If sound and motion can be said to spring from still pictures, they certainly do from these, as does the deeply religious element of both Indian sensitivity and the drama of the Crucifixion. This is a handsome, reverent book, a useful and interesting addition to any collection of modern American art. Its faithful colors provide a record of an event that may soon disappear from the ken of ethnologists. One only regrets that there is no description of the size of the paintings, of the artist's techniques, nor any indication of where the originals of the series may be seen." Lee Ash

Library J 93:2472 Je 15 '68 200w

DE HART, JANE MATHEWS. See Mathews, J. De H.

DEIGHTON, LEN. Horse under water; a novel. 255p $4.95 Putnam

67-10088

Suspense novel by the author of The Billion Dollar Brain (BRD 1966). It deals with attempts to salvage Nazi-forged currency from a German submarine which sank off the coast of Portugal during World War II.

Reviewed by Jane Oppenheim

Best Sell 27:388 Ja 1 '68 350w

"The trouble is that the existential spy is now an adolescent with neither the novel charm of his first years nor yet the old-homey familiarity of the detective hero. One finds oneself annoyed rather than reassured that the several parts of Horse Under Water could have been placed in or taken out of Deighton's other novels without changing anything important. . . . It has the same nameless, middle-class hero-spy who shall drudge for a living and be paid, and the same sort of tangled plot—intricate without being at all well-made—and the usual clutter of trivial detail." Richard Boeth

Book World p16 F 4 '68 410w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p5 D 28 '67 270w

"All is not as simple as it seems at first, which is half the fascination of Len Deighton's book. We are soon involved in meteorological buoys, deep-sea diving, blackmail, miniature bikinis, and heroin containers—the 'horse' of the title. Mr. Deighton's vast knowledge and the dizzy pace of the plot keep the reader breathless and groping for clues as he races through the novel just trying to keep up with the hero. This reviewer admits he never did figure out many of the angles or all of the action. Thrilling reading for an evening. Recommended for all public libraries." Stanley Swanson

Library J 92:4522 D 15 '67 110w

Reviewed by Dorothy English

Library J 93:314 Ja 15 '68 100w [YA]

"One of the earliest (in England, 1963) adventures of Len Deighton's anonymous agent from W.O.O.C.(P) reaches us at last. . . . This is middle Deighton; he has offered us both stronger and weaker plots, always with infallibly readable storytelling. . . . Naturally there are wheels within wheels, covers within covers, all revealed through the crisp, precise indirection of Deighton's prose." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p28 Ja 14 '68 70w

New Yorker 43:112 F 3 '68 180w

DEINDORFER, R. G., jr. auth. Secret service. See Rowan, R. W.

DEKKER, GEORGE. James Fenimore Cooper: the American Scott [Eng title: James Fenimore Cooper: the novelist]. 265p $7.50 Barnes & Noble

813 Cooper, James Fenimore 67-8598

A lecturer at the University of Essex presents this study of the American author's fiction. The novels are "discussed individually in topical-chronological groupings." (Am Lit)

"Though Mr. Dekker does not say so explicitly, he seems to locate Cooper's significance in the richness with which the novels mirror the large, impersonal social, political, and economic forces at play in the novelist's world. The attempt to identify, label, and describe these forces, to indicate the manner of their interplay in the fiction, and to refer readers elsewhere to models or analogies for these tensions is surely commendable. . . . But the method, being essentially descriptive and quantitative, carries the risk of oversimplification, distortion, and caricature. Mr. Dekker does not escape these pitfalls. . . . but the sympathetic reader, aware of the dramatic use to which Mr. Dekker wishes to put his normative contrasts, can perhaps forgive the errors of fact and emphasis which have a methodological source. . . . While [the author] is not likely to reclaim Cooper fully for American readers, he writes well and succeeds, almost uniformly, in being interesting." J. F. Beard

Am Lit 40:236 My '68 600w

"Dekker asserts that Cooper's 'most important innovations are to be found in his development of the historical novel': . . . and [that] the great cultural cleavage of North America, forced Cooper 'to abandon the "wavering" hero of Scott.' . . . Dekker is sound and at his best when dealing with Scott, the nature of social change in America, and Cooper's historical novels and novels of manners; he is weak when dealing with novels that do not fit into his categories. . . . Sometimes Dekker acknowledges debts to other critics, and then does little more than repeat them. But those sections that are fresh are very good indeed, aimed at scholars, 'not immediately relevant to the undergraduate classroom situation'; the book belongs in collections serving graduate students and scholars."

Choice 5:622 Jl '68 150w

"[A] daunting academic tone is maintained throughout; . . . [and] much of the text, as might be expected, is taken up with the infighting of the academic debating club, so conscious is Mr. Dekker of his transatlantic circle of judges. . . . [However,] he has integrated Cooper's political education with the historical context of the novels. He has sifted the complete works and produced a reading list which many, especially in areas outside the Leatherstocking saga, will find helpful. He has explored, more closely than any of his predecessors, the exact nature of Cooper's debts to Sir Walter [Scott]. . . . Yet Cooper, like his master, remains in the doldrums."

TLS p1254 D 28 '67 1400w

DELAISSÉ, L. M. J. A century of Dutch manuscript illumination. 102p il col il $25 Univ. of Calif. press

091 Illumination of books and manuscripts 65-10577

The author discusses the history and art of manuscript illumination in the fifteenth century as practiced by the Dutch and those influenced by the Dutch style. Bibliography. Index.

"This present volume, by an outstanding authority, is perhaps for scholars. . . . But the intense humanness which arose within the Dutch religious community with the so-called 'Modern Devotion' should interest a wider group. The very land and the people of today are revealed in their many aspects through these Dutch manuscript illuminators and the editor's informed and readable commentary." M. M. Ferguson

Library J 93:4129 N 1 '68 200w

"A new book [on this subject] was certainly wanted. Dr. Delaissé has done much to answer this need. Occasionally one may feel that he loves this curious vernacular style almost too much, but he is quite right to draw attention to its value and charm. His book is beautifully illustrated. . . . It would be a good thing if students could have easy access to it, for its text is clear and much information can be found in it."

TLS p1060 S 19 '68 950w

DELANEY, EDMUND T. New York's Greenwich Village. 144p il $10 Barre

974.7 Greenwich Village, New York (City) 67-23657

The author "describes the village as it has been from its earliest period and pictures the changing scene. He brings back some of the characters who played their roles in other days and places them in the perspective of the city as a whole." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Mr. Delaney makes a strong plea to preserve the charm and beauty of the old Village. The excellent illustrations (on 10½" by 11½" pages) give the historical setting and the present-day appearance of this unique and vital city within a city." G. D. McDonald

Library J 93:3782 O 15 '68 140w

"The author's direct quotations are well chosen, apt and surprising in their ability to heighten the reader's appreciation of dramatic and instructive moments in the city's history. . . . Delaney perpetuates the misinformation concerning the so-called purchase of Manhattan Island from the Indians in exchange for materials valued at $24. . . . A map of today's Village is particularly helpful in locating historic sites. Sometimes the author's style is a trifle uneven. This is most evident in the earlier sections, when he attempts to construct literary 'bridges' between quoted material and segments of Village history. There are a few typographical errors. These, however, are small flaws in a delightful book." R. R. Miller

N Y Times Bk R p64 S 29 '68 700w

DELBANCO, NICHOLAS. Grasse, 3/23/66. 139p $4.50 Lippincott

67-20286

"This is a stream-of-consciousness novel which takes the form of an emotional soliloquy by a young man whose wife has left him." (Library J)

"The reader who has not had four years grounding in the humanities in a first rate liberal arts college can forget all about [this book]. . . . It will also help if he is on intimate terms with Eliot, Joyce, Pound, Yeats, Thomas, Nabokov, Burroughs, Hawk, Donleavy, and X. J. Kennedy. In such stream-of-consciousness celebrations everything is relevant. . . . [The book] is often bawdy but with exuberant masculine gusto likely to disappoint the decadent. Less palatable are Delbanco's blasphemies." J. J. McAleer

Best Sell 28:3 Ap 1 '68 550w

Choice 5:1128 N '68 200w

"[This novel is] unlike The Martlet's Tale [BRD 1966], Mr. Delbanco's more conventional first book. . . . [It is] loaded with puns, some clever, some merely sophomoric—I feel my poor craft ebbing, my freude no more jung—and overburdened with classical and literary allusions which are often so obscure as to be meaningless to the average reader, this is a book whose appeal will be limited to those interested in fiction as a craft. Both form and content are more akin to poetry than prose; there are some truly lovely lyrical passages—'A raindrop has blurred you past sure recognition, like time.' An interesting experimental novel, recommended for large fiction collections." A. C. Ringer

Library J 93:208 Ja 15 '68 150w

"You can scarcely quarrel with an abstract painting or a book of this sort; you accept, or you reject, or possibly shrug and go about your business. So with 'Grasse.' Sample before buying. The author . . . identifies it as 'a monologue, more than a little mad.' It is a monologue, not mad but calculated, drenched with allusion, alliteration, philosophical speculation, endless word-games, and quite vivid sensory recollections and evocations. . . . The severest criticism of this book is that one tends to start skimming, and I think the reason is that neither the wife nor the husband becomes palpable. There is a sense of anguish reminiscent of Walter Benton's beloved who never came to tea, or whatever; but this, concealed in a big bag of literary tricks, does not weigh enough. Indeed, the tricks weigh more than the grief." E. S. Connell

N Y Times Bk R p4 Mr 3 '68 750w

Va Q R 44:cii summer '68 80w

DELBO, CHARLOTTE. None of us will return; tr. by John Githens 128p $3.95 Grove

940.547 Auschwitz (Concentration camp). World War, 1939-1945—Prisoners and prisons 68-20635

This is "one woman's lament of her experiences of Auschwitz. . . . [She] recounts her memoirs in free verse and rhythmic prose." (Best Sell) Originally published in French as Aucun de nous ne reviendra.

"This is an excellent translation. . . . The words flow. It is the memory of a horrible experience by a courageous woman." I. N. Pompea

Best Sell 28:48 My 1 '68 650w

"This work is not to be dismissed lightly as just another personal account of the horrors endured by those imprisoned at Auschwitz. What sets it apart is Charlotte Delbo's intensely emotional, almost poetic, prose which emphasizes the agony by its simplicity and directness. The reader actually shares in the experience. . . . Mrs. Delbo can visualize the dead as heaped-up department store dummies, but she never fully loses her human compassion. Readers can be grateful for her decision to publish this account after years of silence. For large personal narrative and biography collections." Elizabeth Nelson

Library J 93:984 Mr 1 '68 120w

DELDERFIELD, R. F. Imperial sunset; the fall of Napoleon, 1813-14. 300p pl maps $7.95 Chilton co.

940.2 France—History—1799-1815. Europe—History—1789-1900. Napoléon I, Emperor of the French 68-31696

The history of the sixteen months following Napoleon's retreat from Moscow. "The engagements, the sorties, the battles, the . . . position of troops, their numbers, those in command, the Marshals of France, Napoleon's circle, his family [and] his retainers are all on stage. . . . [The author describes the] last fight put on by Napoleon before . . . the restoration of the Bourbons. [The book] ends with Napoleon's exile to Elba." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The present work is dramatic and makes absorbing reading; it is also valuable in that it treats in detail a period usually passed over lightly by historians and even biographers of Napoleon. The Emperor's efforts to rally and reorganize his armies in Germany after the retreat from Moscow, the rising of the German states, the battles of Dresden, Jacur, the defeat at Leipzig, the retreat across the Rhine, the invasion of France are all described in dramatic detail. While this is exciting and lively, the author's overstriving for dramatic effect and sudden switching from Germany to Spain to Italy is often confusing. . . . The student will find it helpful and interesting and it will be a valuable addition to the college library." F. J. Gallagher

DELDERFIELD, R. F.—Continued

Best Sell 28:302 N 1 '68 320w

"Mr. Delderfield not only keeps the threads of his military narrative (from the Saxon Plain to the Iberian Peninsula) firmly in his grasp and tells the complicated story cleanly but also presents the behind-the-scenes maneuverings. . . . of Napoleon's autocratic enemies, the Allies. . . . Lacking the great tragic impact of 1812, this story of 1813 and 1814 . . . has about it an autumnal melancholy. . . . Creative writers are entitled to strong views. Mr. Delderfield makes no secret of where his heart lies. . . . He has his intricate material beautifully in hand, and he writes with grace and conviction. [This book] can take its place worthily beside last year's Retreat From Moscow [BRD 1968]." E. V. Sutherland
Library J 93:4138 N 4 '68 300w

DELDERFIELD, R. F. The retreat from Moscow. 256p il maps $5.95 Atheneum pubs.

944.05 Napoleon I, Emperor of the French—Invasion of Russia, 1812. Europe—History—1789-1900 67-25469

The author presents the "drama of the Grand Army's immolation in the 179 days between June 24, 1812 when, 350,000 strong and in its veteran pride, it crossed the Niemen and headed east, and December 19, when Ney . . . commander and last man of the pitiful rear guard, staggered backward across Nieman's bridge, still defiantly facing the pursuing Russians." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[This] book is full of participants' adventures, skillfully interwoven from numerous memoirs. There are no Russian sources, not even Tarlé, and few traces of recent French scholarship. Little is said, and what is proved debatable, about the larger diplomatic picture, but there are some interesting ideas." P. H. Beik
Am Hist R 73:1137 Ap '68 410w

Reviewed by Oscar Handlin
Atlantic 220:100 Ag '67 250w

"Relying to a large extent on heretofore untapped mémoires Delderfield succeeds in vividly recreating all the horror and tragedy of Napoleon's poorly conceived scheme, but unfortunately only reiterates the well-known disaster instead of adding to our knowledge about it. . . . Primarily of interest to laymen and of little value to serious students of Napoleon or Napoleonic warfare. . . . A few footnotes, all explanatory; uncritical bibliography." Choice 4:1304 Ja '68 190w

"Mr. Delderfield goes far beyond merely retelling the story. He draws skillfully upon a lifetime's reading and a sizable number of well known sources. . . . He evokes the terrible events of these six cataclysmic months with moving power. Mr. Delderfield's expository and narrative skills are sure, his use of the telling detail masterful. . . . [He] has an artist's eye for personality and draws the contending leaders with marvelous economy. Even those who count themselves expert in the 1812 campaign will be moved anew by the tragic grandeur of the story." E. V. Sutherland
Library J 92:2768 Ag '67 350w

DELL'ISOLA, FRANK, ed. The Old Testament for everyman; ed. and rearranged in a continuous narrative. 427p $8.95 Meredith

221.5 Bible. O.T. 68-11333

The author "has edited and condensed the Old Testament into a product one-fifth the size of the original. He has desired (1) to introduce the uninformed reader to the drama and profundity of the Old Testament in the hope that one day he may, on his own, enthusiastically peruse that document in its entirety; (2) to place before the reader those passages from a book of faith which offer comfort to the suffering and hope to those who despair. Dell'Isola draws upon two recent biblical translations, the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine and the Revised Standard Version." (Choice)

"Dell'Isola . . . is emphatically a layman. . . . He nowhere explains why he employs the [Confraternity of Christian Doctrine] in some instances and the [Revised Standard Version] in others. Because students are people with quite definite needs, it would be thoughtless to predict that such a book in a college or university library would go unread. Nevertheless, students and faculty who approach the Old Testament in a serious academic manner will find this work quite irrelevant."

Choice 5:647 J1 '68 170w

"[The author] has rushed in where Old Testament scholars fear to tread. His introductory note adds little except pious generalities with the hope that the reader will . . . find that elusive peace of mind. There is nothing here which could not be found in any modern version of the Bible including the Apocrypha. No library should waste its book budget on it." W. S. Sparks

Library J 93:555 F 1 '68 120w

DELMAR, VINA. The Becker scandal; a time remembered. 216p $4.75 Harcourt

B or 92

68-12571

"This is the story of a 1912 cause célèbre and its effect on the lives of [the author, who was nine at the time,] and her parents. The murder of gambler Herman Rosenthal set in motion a series of events that culminated in the execution of Police Lieutenant Becker and four confederates for the crime, and the election of the successful prosecuting attorney, Charles S. Whitman, as governor of New York State. Mrs. Delmar's father was a childhood friend of the dead gambler and her mother had an unshakable belief in the integrity of Lieutenant Becker and the New York City Police Department. The divided household did not fall but was rather badly shaken on a number of occasions." (Library J)

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 221:113 My '68 160w

"The child in Mrs. Delmar's recollection becomes a witness to [the family tension] and, as a witness, gives some interesting slants on her father's character in the Life-with-Father sense. Her mother is presented relatively colorless before the cynicism, abruptness, rudeness, and delicately referred to infidelity of her father. . . . The entire recollection is fictionalized. . . . This is a book with some interest, not the least of which is the nostalgia of seeing some old scenes out of my own youth. . . . But, aside from these things, the life in this recollection is not the life that was lived, but the life that is lived in the memory. . . . As a piece of fiction [this] is interesting but pointless; as autobiography it is pointed but suspect." F. L. Ryan

Best Sell 28:4 Ap 1 '68 600w

"The characters of Mrs. Delmar's mother and father are skillfully evoked by means of quoted conversations which have the ring of authenticity while not being, as the author freely admits, entirely word-perfect, and by the rather puzzled reaction of a nine-year-old to her elders' inexplicable behavior. Despite the lurid background of crime and greed, this is a gentle and nostalgic account of life in New York City and the wilds of Flatbush, Brooklyn during a time still fondly remembered by many. For general purchase." T. E. Smith

Library J 93:768 F 15 '68 210w

Reviewed by A. R. Dodd

Sat R 51:34 Ap 27 '68 400w

DE LUBAC, HENRI. See Lubac, H. de

DEMARAY, JOHN G. Milton and the masque tradition; the early poems, "Arcades," & Comus. 188p il $6 Harvard Univ. press

821 Milton, John. Masks (Plays) 68-14254

In this "examination of [Milton's poetry] and the masque tradition . . . [the author produces] evidence to suggest that Comus is not only a masque but a Jonsonian masque." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

"Historical evidence relating to . . . masques is employed to create a detailed description of the first Comus. Even though it is in many respects conjectural, this perspective on the 'Mask' redresses an imbalance in much modern criticism by restoring to their proper place dance, setting, spectacle, and music as coordinates of the poetry. . . . Though of limited scope, recommended for upper division, seminar, and graduate studies in Milton."

Choice 5:948 O '68 240w

TLS p1003 S 12 '68 430w

DE MARE, GEORGE. Communicating for leadership; a guide for executives. 283p $6 Ronald 658.4 Communication. Efficiency, Industrial 67-30355

Following an examination of "many media, the conference, correspondence, the memorandum and report, the promotional piece, article, speech, and the book . . . forms of communication which the professional businessman employs as writer and speaker, [the author analyzes] . . . the various publics, from management to government, with which any business organization is involved and describes how these forms may best be employed to establish or improve channels of communication. He suggests the ingredients of a sound company communications program, and devotes the two final chapters to the arts of thinking and listening." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Appendixes offer some thoughts on communications technology, a glossary of terms, advice for group discussion leaders, and a bibliography for writers, speakers, and thinkers of whom Mr. De Mare is obviously one. Recommended for large business collections or for the company library where the executive may find time to pick it up." B. A. Robie

Library J 93:2481 Je 15 '68 200w

"[The author maintains] that it is a myth that the communications function can be shifted from the shoulders of the executive to those of the specialist. It is just one of several revolutionary ideas or approaches in this first-rate guidebook for businessmen and others. . . . De Mare says, 'A man of affairs simply cannot afford not to read.' He would have him a speaker also, a writer of articles, and, best of all, if possible, the author of a book. The 'publish or perish' psychology has invaded the professions of law, medicine, science, and politics. Why not business? The author writes out of his own literary background as a novelist and as director of communication, and publications for Price Waterhouse & Company." S. W. Little

Sat R 51:109 Mr 9 '68 270w

DEMARIS, OVID, jt. auth. Jack Ruby. See Wills, G.

DEMARQUEZ, SUZANNE. Manuel De Falla; tr. from the French by Salvator Attanasio. 253p $6.95 Chilton co.

B or 92 Falla, Manuel de 68-25858

The author follows the Spanish composer's "career from his youth in Cadiz, through his musical studies in Madrid, his long residence in Paris, his return to Spain and numerous tours, to his final retreat to Argentina . . . [and] comments on his chief compositions: La Vida Breve, El Amor Brujo. The Three-Cornered Hat, Nights in the Gardens of Spain, and the posthumous L'Atlántida." (Publisher's note) The works of Manuel de Falla. Bibliography. Index.

"Miss Demarquez brings to her study a lifetime of interest and ability in musicology. What seems odd is that the rather shy and retiring composer is not represented by photographs. The only illustration is a frontispiece reproduction of a drawing. . . . [This reviewer] welcomes this study of one of the most original of the early 20th century composers." Richard Conlin

Best Sell 28:188 Ag 1 '68 180w

"[This] is a routine study . . . without imagination and without the psychological shrewdness that is the essence of good biography. This is especially unfortunate because there is so little available in English on Falla.

Miss Demarquez glosses over Falla's religious piety, one of the strengths of his life and inspiration for his music. She treats his love for Spain, his other inspirational source, in guidebook fashion, and with similar naïveté. The book has value as an introduction, but those interested in Falla will still have to rely on other existing foreign language studies of this composer." David Jordan

Library J 93:2999 S 1 '68 150w

DEMBO, L. S., ed. Nabokov: the man and his work. 280p $6.50 Univ. of Wis. press

818 Nabokov, Vladimir Vladimirovich 67-26625

This "reprint of the Spring 1967 issue of Wisconsin Studies in Contemporary Literature, with the addition of articles on Pnin and Sebastian Knight, [includes] . . . articles on Nabokov's novels, drama, [and] translations." (Library J) Index.

Am Lit 40:435 N '68 50w

"To achieve balanced coverage, one essay is devoted to each of Nabokov's major works taken chronologically. . . . The essays are of uneven quality. Particularly worthy of attention are: Appel's penetrating commentary on Lolita as a parody; Nicol's study of Sebastian Knight; Karlinsky's essay on Nabokov's plays; and Brown's discerning discussion of the literary fracas which ensued after the appearance of the Nabokov translation of Pushkin's Eugene Onegin. . . . On the whole, both more inclusive and insightful than [P.] Stegner's Escape into Aesthetics, but less so than [A.] Field's Nabokov: His Life in Art [both BRD 1967]."

Choice 5:618 J1 '68 200w

"The scope of the collection is broad. . . . [There is an] amusing and revealing interview with Nabokov. None of the articles are less than competent and several, notably that of A. Appel, Jr. on Lolita and one by C. Brown on the translations, are excellent. The anthology belongs in public and academic libraries." Dorothy Curley

Library J 93:1634 Ap 15 '68 70w

"As Nabokov himself says in an interview published in this collection: 'Remember that mediocrity thrives on "ideas." Beware of the modish message. Ask yourself if the symbol you have detected is not your own footprint.' Unfortunately, too many of the pieces do drag in ideas—Hegelian patterns, Popean satiric devices, Rankian theories of the Double—and other irrelevancies. There are good essays in the bunch, notably by A. Field, G. Struve, and C. Brown. There is also a useful checklist of Nabokov criticism."

N Y Times Bk R p32 Mr 24 '68 180w

Va Q R 44:clxvi autumn '68 90w

DEMERTH, N. J., ed. System, change, and conflict; a reader on contemporary sociological theory and the debate over functionalism; ed. by N. J. Demerth III and Richard A. Peterson. 533p $9.95 Free press

301 Sociology 67-12512

"Focusing on the debate over functionalism . . . this reader features the confrontation of divergent positions to emphasize, rather than minimize, the controversy. The purpose is . . . to sharpen, focus, and clarify the issues . . . [which] range from questions of system, change, and conflict to matters of teleology and the ideological ramifications of sociological theory. Among the thirty-five contributors are . . . Talcott Parsons, C. Wright Mills, . . . S. N. Eisenstadt, and Pitirim Sorokin. . . . Selections from the work of Andrew Hacker, Ernst B. Haas, Ernest Nagel, Fritz Machlup, Clifford Geertz, and other anthropologists, political scientists, and philosophers are included." (Publisher's note) Name index. Subject index.

"This is a timely and thought-provoking volume. . . . All but three of the papers . . . have been published since 1950. . . . All questions raised deal with the wider issues of sociological theory rather than the more specialized problems of social stratification, formal organizations, kinship, or community. This choice is dictated primarily by the editor's desire to focus the debate on those problems which are likely to indicate the prospective transformation of contemporary sociological theory. . . . But this focus on the most common arguments also leads the editor to adopt a conciliatory attitude when a radical restatement would have been preferable [and] results in a disregard of the fact that there are sociological phenomena . . . which elude functionalist analysis." Jan Hajda

Am J Soc 73:774 My '68 950w

"One might like to have seen greater diversity of disciplines (for example, psychological functionalism is not directly represented) or greater divergencies of approach within our own discipline (Where, for example, were the ecological and interactionist positions?) But short of a second volume, this could not have been done. . . . The editors . . . have provided us with a well-organized spectrum over a major area of concern. One would wish this book upon other editors as a prototype; it should not only find its way into the graduate classroom but also onto the bookshelves of professional sociologists." Herman Turk

Am Soc R 33:464 Je '68 1000w

DE MILLE, AGNES. Lizzie Borden; a dance of death. 302p il $6.95 Little

792.8 Fall River Legend (Ballet). Borden, Lizzie Andrew 68-11531

The choreographer explains the origin and development of the ballet Fall River Legend, which was based on the Borden murder trial. Index.

"Miss de Mille ultimately became so hooked on Lizzie that she prowled around Fall River, studying the murder like any other Borden buff. Her report on Fall River, past and present, and her account of the uncertainties, tantrums, and obstructions involved in creating the ballet are equally interesting. The faint note of martyrdom in her prose is forgivable. It appears that getting a ballet on stage really is hell and disaster." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 221:136 Ap '68 170w

Reviewed by Jennie Schulman

Library J 93:568 F1 '68 250w

"[The author's] investigation into the record uncovered no new facts, but her personal response to the New England temperament brings new life, if not new light, to the mystery. The second half of the book tells of her creation of the ballet. . . . Miss de Mille can literally stir the blood with her descriptions of the problems in choreography and with ballet personalities. Young adult readers who might never otherwise approach the ballet may be lured to this book because of Lizzie Borden, and, of course, students of the dance will seek it out as [well as] the author's Dance to the Piper [BRD 1952]." Carol Tefft

Library J 93:1823 Ap 15 '68 120w [YA]

DEMING, RICHARD. The police lab at work. 125p il $3.95 Bobbs

364.12 Criminal investigation—Juvenile literature 66-29903

Using "case histories emphasizing the . . . role of science in modern crime detection, the author describes the activities of various crime laboratories. He discusses detection techniques involving the study of various substances such as hair, paint, soil, metal, and poisons, obtained as evidence against criminals. . . . Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"The writing is simple, direct, and lively. In addition to its value as recreational reading, this book could be used as a basis for an introduction to the subject of chemistry for the less academically oriented students." E. F. Grave

Library J 92:3185 S 15 '67 80w

"Some of the procedures and instruments are familiar: ballistic tests, fingerprint files. . . . Others are new or less familiar, such as the analysis of olfactory clues or the use of the sound spectograph. The writing is crisp and straightforward, the material dramatic." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 50:49 S 16 '67 70w

DEMKO, GEORGE J. Europe and the Soviet Union. See Pounds, N. J. G.

DEMOTT, BENJAMIN. A married man. 153p $3.95 Harcourt

68-24388

This novel "is the account of Gordon Flint, a respectable middle-aged man—married, the father of two sons—who has a passionate affair with [Jean Hollis] a young fellow-employee in a firm that makes educational films." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Richard Rhodes

Book World p8 N 17 '68 460w

"[This novel] seeks to combine graphic sexuality . . . with a stream-of-consciousness technique that reveals the crisis of self-understanding in a consciously literate middle-aged man. Mr. DeMott fails to succeed in either technique. . . . The sexual passages . . . are tame for best seller readers of the 1960's. Empathy with the main character is not possible, for the reader finds himself shut away by the pretentiousness and self-indulgence of the protagonist. If this novel purports to be a morality tale of the costs of adulterous deceit in America, the reader is made to pay far more than the protagonist." Robert Stewart

Library J 93:3154 S 15 '68 130w

Reviewed by Sara Blackburn

Nation 207:286 S 23 '68 180w

"When [the short novel] is handled masterfully—as Benjamin DeMott handles it here—it can sharpen the highlights and reinforce our emotional grasp on materials we have seen before. Certainly there is nothing unique about the story he has to tell. . . . But the impact of [the book's] significance comes from the granular accumulations of destiny the author sifts from each phase of the sexual encounters, and from the intellectual accounting they provoke. In the end, it is made to appear that each of the main characters suffers justly. It is the triumph of Mr. DeMott's observation, selection of detail, and verbal resource that we can believe in such bitter justice while we pity its victims equally." R. V. Cassill

N Y Times Bk R p5 S 29 '68 700w

"By exploiting the difference between the dreary conventions of words and the overwhelming explosions of emotion, . . . DeMott has lifted real sentiment out of the swamps of sentimentality and transported it into the rarefied realm of powerful fiction. . . . [The author], who teaches English at Amherst College, . . . suffers as a novelist from occasional academic eclecticism and tiresome verbal involutions; but, in spite of these quirks of his trade, [this] is a moving piece of fiction. . . . The story is almost too familiar; the ideas and style that sustain it will surprise no one. DeMott succeeds through the sensitive manipulation of perennially affecting commonplaces." T. G. P.

Newsweek 72:92 S 8 '68 650w

Reviewed by James McConkey

Sat R 51:37 O 12 '68 850w

DEMPSEY, DAVID. The triumphs and trials of Lotta Crabtree, by David Dempsey with Raymond P. Baldwin. 341p il $6.95 Morrow

B or 92 Crabtree, Lotta 68-22434

A biography of the nineteenth-century comedienne. Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"Anyone who is interested in nineteenth century American theatre, in the California gold rush or in bizarre court trials will thoroughly enjoy this book. On second thought, people who like people had better give it a whirl too. . . . Taught to sing and dance by the famous Lola Montez, Lotta, a tiny attractive child with large black eyes and a mop of red hair, began her professional career at the age of eight when her mother took her on a tour of the mining camps. . . . When 'the immortal child' died in 1924 at the age of seventy-seven with no dependent heirs, her will left $4,000,000 in perpetual trust to charity. . . . More than a hundred persons claimed relationship to the heiress in an attempt to have the will set aside. . . . Authors Dempsey and Baldwin, the latter one of the attorneys who helped defend the will, have skillfully combined the story of a fascinating theatrical figure with a vivid account of the legal drama which followed her death." Sister M. Gregory Duffy

Best Sell 29:198 Ag 15 '68 550w

"Dempsey, a highly professional writer, has done his best to make Lotta Crabtree and her times exciting but Lotta was so dominated by her mother that she evidently never became an interesting person. Therefore as a biography this has dull patches. However, the personalities involved in the scramble for her money are very well drawn; this section of the book makes the whole well worth reading. The book is recommended for public and high school libraries." E. T. Smith

Library J 93:2481 Je 15 '68 190w

Reviewed by I. S. Haverstick

N Y Times Bk R p6 S 15 '68 1200w

Reviewed by Maureen McManus

Sat R 51:30 Ag 31 '68 500w

DEMPSTER, PRUE. Japan advances; a geographical study. 329p il maps $13.50 Barnes & Noble

915.2 Japan—Economic conditions 67-113077

The "book is oriented toward the physical, social, and economic dimensions of Japan's geography, and [the author] is mainly concerned with assessing the rapidly changing nature of the environment in which the islanders live and make their living. She spells out the radical changes in the farming sector of the economy and in the patterns of rural life which have occurred in recent years." (Library J)

"The editor deserves bad marks not only for his approbation of Dempster's efforts but for some editorial flaws [e.g.] lack of an inroduction so that neither the author nor the reader has any sense of organization; very uneven balance in the level at which the material is treated (the chapter on physical landscape uses the jargon of the professional geologist to excess, while the chapter on historical geography would insult a high schooler); a great number of maps have only Kanji designation, severely limiting their usefulness to non-Japanese readers; statistical tables are poor in format with no source cited; no conclusions; shallow comparisons between Japanese and Indians that seem out of place in a scholarly work. . . . Not recommended."

Choice 5:382 My '68 170w

"Hopefully, [Miss Dempster's] study will help lay to rest numerous misconceptions which still linger. The drastic transformations in Japanese industry and city life will surely come as an eye-opener to all readers, except those who have observed these changes firsthand. The many maps, charts, tables, and plates are lucid and strongly reinforce the textual discussion. For public and academic libraries." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:993 Mr 1 '68 170w

"The book contains much useful information and is illustrated by many photographs, all of which are well reproduced. Unfortunately, however, the text is marred by a proliferation of errors and inconsistencies, while the staccato style and tedious repetition of information detract from the book's attractiveness. . . . Perhaps the most successful chapter is that dealing with agriculture, where the author has been able to make use of the results of her own field work, but here, too, the writing is confused and often inconsistent. Too often the text tends to degenerate into a repetitious catalogue of statistics, most of which could have been usefully removed and represented in tabular form. . . . One is left with the impression that a more painstaking revision of the manuscript would have resulted in a far better book."

TLS p83 Ja 25 '68 700w

DENBEAUX, FRED J. The premature death of Protestantism; an invitation to a future. 155p $4.95; pa $2.25 Lippincott

280 Protestantism 67-25897

Maintaining that Protestantism "has abandoned its proper role, Denbeaux opposes both a Christianity which is otherworldly, irrelevant, and a Christianity which tries to sell itself to the secular world. He opposes both the radical separation of Christ and culture and the identification of the two. Rather Christ, through the church, is to influence and transform culture. The church must be flexible and imaginative enough to encourage man's God-given abilities as a maker; but it must criticize 'worldliness' (man's turning of his creativity towards himself and away from God)." (Choice)

"[The author's] position leads to an attack on Freudianism and empiricism in the secular realm, and the radical theology (Altizer and Hamilton) and contextual ethics (Fletcher and Lehmann) in the religious. The style suggests it is directed toward the general reader rather than the trained theologian."

Choice 5:791 S '68 130w

Christian Century 84:1326 O 18 '67 20w

"The author, a professor of Biblical history at Wellesley, and student of Niebuhr. . . . [has] a thoroughly modern opinion of man's attempt to regulate society by the dual standards of church and state. What churches are still attempting to do is to pass off Christianity as law rather than to present it as a way of life suitable for man's social and mental freedom. Mr. Denbeaux propounds this with a clarity that might cause the puritan conscience to cringe as it sees itself in the role of villain, but it will appeal to the man endeavoring to be honest with himself." E. F. Waterman

Library J 92:2928 S 1 '67 120w

DENIEUL-CORMIER, ANNE. A time of glory: the Renaissance in France, 1488-1559; tr. by Anne and Christopher Fremantle. 328p il $6.95 Doubleday

914.4 France—Civilization. France—History—House of Valois, 1328-1589. Renaissance 67-19064

The first part of this book "is devoted to a description of the land of France and its inhabitants. . . . The second part recalls the nature of French society in the sixteenth century. . . . [The third section describes country life for nobleman and peasant]. . . . Finally, . . . the author has tried to highlight the important aspects of the century as a time of revolution, of profound upheaval, of metamorphosis, as a time when the heritage of the past in culture, economics, and the spiritual life was rebuilt on a new foundation." (Foreword) Genealogy. Index. First published in France under the title La France de la Renaissance.

"The author, a . . . specialist in 16th-century history, does well in dealing with a subject as many-faceted as that of the Renaissance in France. The basic events, the dominant personalities, the over-all richness of language and accomplishment, are all given ample attention. The important role of the French king, Francis I, . . . whose court served as the well-spring of the new ideas, is, of course, highlighted. . . . A unique feature of the book is its heavy reliance on contemporary accounts. By quoting extensively from memoirs and letters, the author allows the period to speak for itself, lending an air of authenticity to her own narrative. . . . [In the epilogue, she] promises a later volume dealing with the struggles of the later part of the 16th century and the revival of the monarchy that was to end them. On the basis of the present work, we look forward to its sequel." C. P. Bruderle

America 118:298 Mr 2 '68 410w

"A free translation, often a paraphrase, of an oeuvre de vulgarisation by a student of André Chastel, quite inferior because of unacknowledged deletions and additions, to the French original. The reproductions of the English edition are inferior both in number and quality, and they no longer closely support the text they are designed to illustrate. . . . An index has been added but, given the illustrative rather than analytical purpose of the author, uselessly. . . . The general reader and undergraduate will nonetheless be delighted and rewarded by this survey, for want of anything like it in English."

Choice 5:396 My '68 120w

"The fact that with a French author we are assured of a wholly French point of view is one of this book's chief charms. It is also one of its greatest drawbacks, for the translation is more literal than literary. Readers must refuse to be distracted by the odd effect of French idioms rendered into word-for-word English to appreciate what a magnificent job [the author] has done, showing a nation animated with new ideas, new concepts spreading from one sphere to another." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p9 F 26 '68 400w

"While the reader acquires a vivid impression of the Renaissance in France, his conception of this period may be somewhat distorted because Miss Denieul-Cormier seldom criticizes in any way the authors from whose works she has drawn so heavily. Her lack of criticism coupled with extremely short introductions and conclusions to each chapter make it almost impossible for the reader who is a nonspecialist to be sure that he is obtaining a balanced treatment of this highly complex period. For example, . . . [her] overstatement of France's role in the dynamic exploration of the 16th Century may mislead the unwary reader. A Time of Glory in actuality is a collection of interesting anecdotes, which Miss Denieul-Cormier has strung together in an attempt to describe the culture of 16th-Century France. While the history buff might find this book of interest, the scholar will have no use for it." K. G. Madison

Library J 93:1138 Mr 15 '68 330w

DENISON, EDWARD F. Why growth rates differ; postwar experience in nine western countries; assisted by Jean-Pierre Poullier. 494p $12.50 Brookings

339.3 Europe—Economic conditions—1945-. U.S.—Economic conditions—1945-. Economic development 67-27682

A "comparison of post-World War II changes in a substantial number of determinants of national income for nine Western countries: U.S., Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Netherlands, Norway, U. K., and Italy [by] a Brookings Institution senior staffer." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Phyllis Deane

Am Econ 58:980 S '68 1600w

"A thoroughly scholarly monograph useful not only to economists but to other disciplines concerned with quantitative comparisons on an international front. Business concerns doing direct studies on their international market will want it in their libraries. Characteristic of its thoroughness is an exhaustive international bibliography (313 items); 100 pages of appendices reviewing methods, sources, and their limitations; and 20 pages of working index."

DENISON, E. F.—Continued

Choice 5:232 Ap '68 190w

"This volume contains nearly 200 tables which offer a very large-scale comparison of more than 20 key indicators of economic growth. The point of view and the methodology are an outgrowth of Mr. Denison's earlier work, The Sources of Economic Growth in the United States and the Alternatives before Us. The present study will be a landmark effort in the field of international and comparative economics and conforms to the high caliber of research consistent with earlier Brookings studies. Carefully detailed, . . . the book is an essential acquisition for serious collections in economics and public policy." Paul Wasserman

Library J 92:4148 N 15 '67 150w

"The work is scrupulous, of massive scope, and a model of skill in application. Every limitation in the data, every dangerous nuance in sociological or economic or political jargon, gets its due caveat. . . . Interesting is the authors' emphatic admission that the biggest single 'cause' or 'in-put' of economic growth in all nine nations is an item which they term 'residual' because they cannot pin a measurable quality on it. . . . In short, there is an item, a 'something', perhaps das verbindende Etwas or unknown linking ingredient with all the others, which powerfully makes for economic growth and social dynamics. . . . It could be, not 'know-how' as such, but the comparative efficiency with which the know-how of all kinds of paid work . . . is performed. . . . The authors' figuring shows up in striking fashion the swifter growth to an all-time world record of American productive fixed assets per employee . . . and—which may surprise some Europeans—in-put of formal education and training."

TLS p517 My 23 '68 2450w

DENT, A. A., jr. auth. Animals that changed the world. See Davis, P. D. C.

DENTAN, ROBERT C. The knowledge of God in ancient Israel. 278p $7.50 Seabury

296 God. Bible O.T.—Criticism, interpretation, etc. 68-11593

An "examination of the Old Testament doctrine of God. . . . The author first examines Israel's theology as knowledge of God, and then in subsequent chapters considers in depth God's nature and character. His study concludes with a . . . summary chapter entitled 'Ancient Israel and the Modern West.'" (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of subjects and persons. Index of scripture references.

"Competent treatment of the Old Testament concept of God (rather than epistemology, as the title would indicate), aimed at the well grounded undergraduate student. Dentan's views are known and highly respected from his other writings, and anyone who has read them or [G.] von Rad's [Old Testament Theology: v 1, The Theology of Israel's Historical Traditions, BRD 1963; v2, The Theology of Israel's Prophetic Traditions, BRD 1966] will find little that is original here. He is at pains to distinguish himself from von Rad and . . . others but is highly dependent on him, as any Old Testament student must be. Despite early indications that he intends to treat his subject by the inappropriate logic of systematic theology, it quickly becomes evident that Dentan is committed to historical method and is fully appreciative of the importance of archaeology, comparative cultures, and form criticism to the proper understanding of the Old Testament."

Choice 5:1146 N '68 150w

Christian Century 85:560 Ap 24 '68 40w

"This book differs from more comprehensive treatments of Old Testament theology by concentrating on one basic aspect. . . . Dentan, professor of Old Testament, General Theological Seminary, New York, hopes to 'enable the reader to see more clearly that it was the character of Israel's God that set the distinctive stamp on every aspect of her religion.' . . . That the presentation is usually convincing derives largely from Mr. Dentan's ability to see and isolate his issues clearly and to organize his material in a consistent and meaningful manner. . . . The result is a useful, responsible, popular, yet scholarly analysis."

R. V. Ritter

Library J 93:1904 My 1 '68 200w

DENTLER, ROBERT A. The urban R's: race relations as the problem in urban education; ed. by Robert A. Dentler, Bernard Mackler [and] Mary Ellen Warshauer; pub. for the Center for urban education. 304p $7.50; pa $2.50 Praeger

370.19 Education—U.S. Segregation in education. Race problems 67-24987

"In these 18 essays . . . educators, sociologists, and psychologists examine how the school and community can best provide a meaningful education for the changing school population. Contributors try to determine what actually happens when desegregation is achieved within a school, and the effects of desegregation on the academic performance of students and on their attitudes toward each other and themselves." (Library J) Chapter bibliographies.

Reviewed by William Michelson
Am J Soc 74:105 Jl '68 400w

Reviewed by David Gottlieb
Am Soc R 33:474 Je '68 1150w

"Much of what is said is no longer new since the work reported was conducted between 1964-66. The book's value lies in the reporting of statistics gained through studies conducted in such areas as 'resistance to school desegregation,' 'attitudes, school performance and race,' 'integration and minority group achievement,' and 'prejudice in Negro and Puerto Rican adolescents'. Two articles dealing with education projects in Community Action Programs and school-parent programs should prove of particular value to school administrators. Not comprehensive enough in its treatment of urban problems to stand by itself but it could be most valuable as a supplement to other works in the field."

Choice 5:842 S '68 180w

"Some indication of the changing nature of urban education is given. . . . The collection also gives evidence of a realization of the importance of environment as it affects children of the slum. . . . The book is recommended for school administrators, social workers, specialists in the field, and other informed and interested readers." Claude Ury

Library J 93:1625 Ap 15 '68 140w

"[This book] for the most part avoids prudish pseudonymity in examining towns or schools with segregation problems. Following a frank introductory statement concerning striking achievement differences between white, Negro, and Puerto Rican boys and girls, this fact-laden collection of studies looks at the urban context of education, intergroup relations, programs for minorities, and Negro children in Northern cities. Measurement-oriented, the work scrupulously disdains normative conclusions. This fact alone renders it all the more desirable as a resource for those charged with mustering the political, financial, and humanitarian forces needed to battle a twentieth-century disgrace." John Calam

Sat R 51:73 Ap 20 '68 110w

DE PALOL, PEDRO. See Palol, P. de

DEPORTE, A. W. De Gaulle's foreign policy, 1944-1946. 327p $7.95 Harvard univ. press

327.44 Gaulle, Charles André Joseph Marie de. France—Foreign relations 67-29624

The thesis of this "book is that a study of the measures Charles De Gaulle took in foreign affairs during his presidency of the provisional government of the French Republic from August 1944 to January 1946 reveals the origins of the foreign policy of the Fourth and Fifth Republics. Distrustful of allies who had let France down in the 1930's, De Gaulle sought a Franco-Soviet pact and attempted to organize and be spokesman for the smaller west European nations. During the war he had felt himself to be the symbol of France, and as the war ended he pursued incessantly, as his basic foreign policy objective, the recognition and resumption of France's Great Power status." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Happily, this study partially fulfills a dual need—to assess the foreign policy of de Gaulle as head of the Provisional Government, 1944-46 and to offer a rational explanation of his motives and aspirations, a task too few American commentators seem willing to undertake. . . . Despite very thin documentation and heavy reliance upon the newspaper, Le Monde, the author has presented an able and persuasive reconstruction of de Gaulle's foreign policy, although its relation to domestic politics is not made as clear as it might have been. Recommended for all libraries: thorough treatment of the period may have to await the release of diplomatic documents."

Choice 5:670 J1 '68 170w

"DePorte, a recognized scholar in foreign affairs, completed most of the book before joining the State Department. It will have its greatest appeal among informed laymen, scholars generally, and specialists in the field." E. O. Hofstetter

Library J 93:194 Ja 15 '68 140w

DE REUCK, ANTHONY, ed. Caste and race; comparative approaches; ed. by Anthony de Reuck and Julie Knight. 348p $12 Little

301.44 Social classes. Caste. Race 66-30164

"This book contains the edited proceedings of a symposium held in London in 1966 under the sponsorship of the Ciba Foundation. . . . The twenty-two participants heard papers by Edmund Leach, Louis Dumont, Gerald D. Berreman, Surajit Sinha, H. Wagatsuma, Keith Hopkins, S. M. Elkins, L. Poliakov, N. Cohn, F. H. M. Raveau, and George De Vos. [The conference discussed] the inter-related problems of caste, class, slavery, and ethnicity." (Pacific Affairs)

"The mysterious relations between caste, class, slavery, racism and anti-semitism are freshly explored in this symposium. . . . [The] short papers and extended discussions move freely between varied perspectives in the social sciences, in history, and in psycho-analysis. The result is a rich and stimulating interchange of ideas. The papers on caste . . . are the core of the symposium. . . . The section on slavery briefly compares slavery in the old world and the new. . . . A discussion of 'Racism in Europe' by Poliakov introduces a stimulating paper by Cohn on 'The Myth of the Demonic Conspiracy of Jews in Medieval and Modern Europe'. This is an aspect of the broader problem of the processes by which groups are made the targets for discrimination and genocide. . . . Taken as a whole, this is a very interesting volume, beautifully edited." Leo Kuper

Am Soc R 33:470 Je '68 750w

"There were important elements of consensus on certain substantive and methodological fundamentals, consensus that shows how social science has made progress in these matters, especially during the last twenty years, and how it promises to continue that progress in the immediate future. . . . I recommend this book strongly for both its analysis and its data. Several articles provide excellent bibliographies."

Pacific Affairs 40:414 fall-winter '67-'68 500w

DE RIENCOURT, AMAURY. See Riencourt, A. de

DERLETH, AUGUST. Vincennes: portal to the West. 210p pl $7.95 Prentice-Hall

973 Vincennes, Indiana. U.S.—History—Revolution—Campaigns and battles. Northwest, Old 68-20537

The history of a "strategic outpost on the Wabash River for the French, English, and Americans in turn throughout the 1700's and into the early 1800's, when the advancing frontier left it behind. Mr. Derleth gives an account of the founding of Vincennes by Sieur de Vincennes . . . [and] relates how the English, after the French and Indian War, named the post Fort Sackville. . . . [His] account is based largely on published works and on reprints and translations of original documents from various collections and archives." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is a condensed tale of successive campaigns waged in the whole area north of the Ohio, from Cincinnati to Detroit, and downriver to where the Wabash flows into the greater stream. Most notable, and most excitingly told, is the adventure of George Rogers Clark. . . . The scope of the book, however, is so broad geographically that much has had to be crammed into a small volume. The historical work may be excellent, indeed the reputation of the author and the richness of the bibliography—if not the footnote documentation—are obvious warrants for that. Yet the writing becomes so condensed as often to be dull." Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 28:199 Ag 15 '68 550w

"A number of . . . documents are included in the text, and give a vivid account of the hardships and dangers faced by small numbers of intrepid French, English, and American soldiers and frontiersmen in their long struggle with one another and with the Indians to gain and maintain control of a vast area that today comprises much of five states. The book is recommended especially for students of American history and for informed readers." R. M. Kennedy

Library J 93:2653 J1 '68 310w

DE ROTHSCHILD, PAULINE. See Rothschild, P. de

DERRICK, CHRISTOPHER. Trimming the ark: Catholic attitudes and the cult of change. 154p $4.95 Kenedy

262.7 Catholic Church 67-26803

"The 'cult of change' is a phenomenon readily observed in contemporary secular thought. And now, says Derrick, it has caught up with the Church. This phenomenon, and the problems it has created, are the subjects of this . . . commentary on the preconciliar age—pre-Vatican III, that is." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by E. S. Stanton

America 118:622 My 4 '68 70w

"This book is an attack on the cult of novelty and newness in contemporary Catholicism. Since it lacks virtually any explicit reference to living people one fears that there is some straw-man downing and pillow-punching and boggy-shooting. Still, not all change in the church is a priori valid, and mere outrageousness often passes as profundity. So Derrick's balancing words are of worth."

Christian Century 84:1527 N 29 '67 60w

"Mr. Derrick begins on a rather interesting note and has some worthwhile things to say about the cult of change in the first section. . . . [After this] the book deteriorates into a defense of religious conservatism which fails to address itself to live issues. . . . For Derrick, 'balance' in our age of the cult of change demands a clarion call to religious conservatism. . . . One gets the feeling of reading a book which was written several years ago, perhaps because of its treatment of such issues as the Latin versus the vernacular Mass, as if this were of burning interest." Mary Daly

Commonweal 88:601 S 6 '68 600w

Critic 26:94 Ap '68 130w

"The phrase, 'Trimming the Ark' (the Ship of Peter, the Ark of Salvation), refers to the changes in thought and action brought about by the Second Vatican Council and other modern interpretations of the law of the Church. . . . Mr. Derrick predicts that many more changes will come, and more trimming of the Ark. A popular treatment with limited appeal." L. R. Etzkorn

Library J 92:4160 N 15 '67 130w

DERY, TIBOR. The Portuguese princess, and other stories; tr. by Kathleen Szasz. 224p $5.95 Quadrangle bks.

68-26440

Nine short stories "linked by their characters and the setting (Budapest before, during, and after World War II). . . . [Six of them are] sketches collected under the heading, 'Games of the Underworld' [and concerning civilians living in cellars] as the Russians are preparing to storm Budapest. . . . The title story concerns three post-war orphans who show that the seeds of hate and fear have not ended with the fighting. The final story, 'A Gay Funeral,' is about an old man facing death by cancer while his wife joyfully handles the funeral arrangements." (Best Sell)

"One of Hungary's most talented writers . . . provides both a realistic portrayal of the dehumanization of people during wartime and an optimistic statement on the determination of mankind to survive and endure. . . . Dery's writing is a blend of Kafka and Tolstoy and his picture of Hungarian peasants is representative of all men who grope toward 'the gentle, inward order' of resignation. . . . All of the stories in this collection are deftly understated comments on the nature of man. It is obvious, even in translation, that Dery has a sharp ear for dialogue and the ability to choose those incidents and situations that point out man's foibles and shortcomings." Keith Kraus

DERY, TIBOR—Continued

Best Sell 28:232 S 15 '68 850w

"The present volume is a good translation of some of [Dery's] short stories, although a great part of the original beauty of the text has been lost. The short stories show an above average literary talent, a critical eye for the bizarreness of modern society and a basically humanistic approach to problems of life. There is also a timid but recognizable confession of the basic human dignity and humanity of the Hungarian people. Recommended for public libraries." A. H. Pogany

Library J 93:4306 N 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Ian Hamilton
New Statesman 73:122 Ja 27 '67 90w

Reviewed by Tamas Aczel
Sat R 5:138 D 14 '68 1750w

"Mr. Dery is much more than a distinguished social critic or a political firebrand and the new collection of his stories proves his strength as a writer committed first of all to his own story. . . . The war and the terror resulting from it are used as a background against which human situations and actions unfold, often with the force and beauty of a parable. . . . Kathleen Szasz's translation is good and reliable, but the dust cover carries an extremely poor drawing which may frighten off some likely readers. This would be a pity: Tibor Dery is one of the last living masters of that great tradition of European realism that we associate with the name of Thomas Mann, and he deserves our close attention."

TLS p80 F 2 '67 500w

DESBARATS, PETER. Gabrielle and Selena; pictures by Nancy Grossman. unp $2.95; lib bdg $3.09 Harcourt

68-11498

"Two eight-year-olds, Selena and Gabrielle, are tired of being themselves and decide to trade identities and live at each other's homes. Each is surprised to discover the likes and dislikes of the other as Selena learns that as Gabrielle, according to her parents, she prefers bread and butter to dessert and likes to go to bed at 7:30. Meanwhile, Gabrielle is learning that as Selena, she loves turnips and hates television. . . . Grades three to four." (Library J)

Reviewed by P. M. Daltry
Christian Science Monitor pB1 My ■ '68 60w

"A well-written, humorous story that will appeal to younger girls. . . . The sepia drawings charmingly reveal the fact that Gabrielle is white and Selena is a Negro. A bonus extra is that the book is very easy to read." Trevelyn Jones

Library J 93:1308 Mr 15 '68 150w

"The drawings are conventionally attractive, as is the text for this tale of integrated suburban friendship." Eleanor Dienstag
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p47 My 5 '68 110w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:40 Ap 20 '68 120w

DESCARGUES, PIERRE. Hals; biographical and critical study; tr. from the French by James Emmons. (The taste of our time) 145p col pl $7.50 Skira

759.9492 Hals, Frans 68-20497

A monograph on the seventeenth century Flemish portraitist, illustrated with a number of color plates tipped in on pages near the text. Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"The text ranges knowledgeably over the painter's technique and environment, the illustrations are good, and the whole small book is handy, useful, and agreeable." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:96 Ag '68 40w

"[This work] is admirably constructed and critically valuable, since [Descargues] takes pains to discriminate between the long accepted legend about Hals as a painter who beat his wife and was an alcoholic and the facts available which show that an artist as prolific as Hals could not have been the tavern tramp that many art historians have made him. What is particularly valuable about this monograph is that the seven large canvases of the Officers of St. George, painted in 1616, 1627, 1633, 1637, 1639, 1641, and 1664 are included showing not only the diversity of portraits of his contemporaries but also the development of Hals as an artist."

Best Sell 28:146 Jl 1 '68 220w

DESHARNES, ROBERT. Auguste Rodin [by] Robert Descharnes and Jean Francois Chabrun [tr. by Edita Lausannel]. (A Studio bk) 277p il col il pl col pl $35 Viking

730.944 Rodin, Auguste 67-31963

This work tells the story of Rodin's life and of his development as a sculptor. Chronology. Bibliography. Index of proper names.

"A sumptuous, well designed book. . . . [The interest] is primarily in the many illustrations, particularly in the numerous contemporary photographs of Rodin, his friends, models, homes, and influences. The tipped-in color plates are of better than average quality, particularly those of his watercolors, which are often superb. The plates of his sculpture are a bit sweet in color and often overly dramatized in lighting. . . . Comments on the work are routine, often unsatisfactory. There are a few references to Rodin's working methods and to his ideas, the latter presented somewhat disparagingly. . . . Despite the illustrations, not as useful as [A. E.] Elsen's critical study [Rodin, BRD 1964]. Recommended only as a luxury item."

Choice 4:1371 F '68 170w

"[The authors] have made the text basically a quite detailed biography, in part based on newly found documents. . . . Their extensive bibliography and an interesting chronology with parallels to events in history and literature help the reader's orientation. This is an excellent introduction to the man, his life and times, and his works, although not to his aesthetics. Recommended for large general libraries and for art lovers, but also for subject and serious research collections." J. L. Dewton

Library J 92:4493 D 15 '67 160w

Reviewed by Anita Brookner
New Statesman 75:116 Ja 26 '68 750w

"A massive, luxurious and in the end pretentious volume which has no real value beyond the documentary interest of its few hundred illustrations. . . . This is the first monograph to offer such an extensive coverage of the decorative sculptures which Rodin executed under his own or other names in the years before 1878. The documentary photographs often taken under Rodin's direction, which M. Descharnes has found . . . are also of special interest and cannot for the most part be found elsewhere. The text, on the other hand, is flat, conventional and devoid of new information or ideas. . . . Given the price, the bulk and the highfalutin claims made for their volume by the authors in the preface, the result is a disappointment. The make-up is fashionably pleasing, but why must the reader be deprived of such elementary necessities as a list of plates and a list of works reproduced?"

TLS p150 F 15 '68 550w

DE SILVA, ANIL. The art of Chinese landscape painting in the caves of Tun-huang [Eng title: Chinese landscape painting in the caves of Tunhuang]; phot. by Dominique Darbois. 240p $6.95 Crown

758 Landscape painting. Painting, Chinese. Tun-huang, Karsu 67-19591

"The caves at Tun-huang on the Great Silk Road were cut into the stone mountain. Their walls, decorated over a period of 1000 years, display paintings from the pre-Han era to the end of the Sung Dynasty in the 13th Century. . . . In her text Mrs. de Silva interprets the wall paintings and relates them to other existing artifacts of the periods and to copies of early paintings. She also presents the theories of early Chinese painting as opposed to the lineal painting of the West." (Library J) Chronological chart. Bibliography. Index. Originally published 1964 entitled Chinesische Landschaftsmalerei.

"This [book] offers new color plates of murals at Tun-huang with sensitive notes on them. . . . The Tun-huang plates and notes are more valuable than the text. . . . Most color plates reproduce three colors clearly, including blue. . . . Murals lack titles, even when subjects are known. Format attractive, but confusing, because illustrations and extensive notes interrupt the text. . . . Map. . . . list of caves. . . . 46 color plates (42 are caves), 49 monochrome plates. . . . Recommended." Choice 5:187 Ap '68 170w

"Although the reader must concentrate to enjoy this book, he does not need specialized knowledge. Recommended for larger art collections." Paul von Khrum

Library J 92:3986 N 1 '67 130w

DESMOND, ALICE CURTIS. Marie Antoinette's daughter. 291p pl maps $4.50 Dodd

B or 92 Angoulême, Marie Thérèse Charlotte, Duchesse d'—Juvenile literature 67-26151

This is the biography of Marie Thérèse, daughter of Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette, who was "imprisoned in the Tower with her parents . . . [but] escaped the guillotine . . . [and after years of exile] returned to Paris to preside as First Lady at the Tuileries during the reigns of her two uncles, Louis XVIII and Charles X." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Annotated bibliography. Index. "Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"The author's enthusiasm gives so much life to the account, based on years of research, that the occasional brief passages of conversation sound completely natural." R. H. V.

Horn Bk 44:76 F '68 150w

"An interesting and unusual view of the French Revolution is presented in this portrait. . . . Historical information in the book is interspersed with quotations from contemporary journals and dialogue. The characterization of Thérèse is sympathetic without being sentimental; girls who like period romances and tragedies will surely empathize with her. The author presents objectively the various theories of the Dauphin's fate and doesn't whitewash the rule of Marie Antoinette and Louis XVI. . . . A detailed genealogical table [is] included." Elizabeth Guiney

Library J 92:4620 D 15 '67 90w

DESNOES, EDMUNDO. Inconsolable memories; tr. by the author; foreword by Jack Gelber. 155p $4.50 New Am. lib.

67-19163

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Christian Century 85:85 Ja 17 '68 200w

Reviewed by Stanley Reynolds
New Statesman 75:243 F 23 '68 140w

Reviewed by David Gallagher
N Y Rev of Books 10:39 My 23 '68 1350w

TLS p149 F 15 '68 600w

DE SOLA, RALPH. Abbreviations dictionary . . . new rev & enl int ed 298p $9.95 Meredith 423.1 Abbreviations—Dictionaries 67-14746

This revised edition of the 1964 version (BRD 1964) of a book first published in 1958 includes abbreviations, acronyms, anonyms, contractions, initials and nicknames, short forms and slang shortcuts, signs, and symbols, including astronomical constellations stars, and symbols, automatic data-processing abbreviations for zip-coded mail; chemical element symbols, atomic numbers, discovery data; civil and military time systems compared; diacritical and punctuation marks; Greek alphabet; international civil aircraft markings; international radio alphabet and code; numbered abbreviations; proofreader's marks; Roman numerals; ship's bell time signals; signs and symbols frequently used; weather symbols; Beaufort scale; zodiacal signs.

"To produce a dictionary of current maximum utility is a formidable challenge, and Mr. De Sola has met it well—or better said, is meeting it well since to keep abreast of current contractions and symbols while culling out the deadwood of those forgotten is a never-ending task. . . . Given the inexhaustibility of possible inclusions, and their continual turnover, we find this an admirable and useful compilation which belongs on all reference shelves." B. H. Smeaton

Library J 93:535 F 1 '68 200w

"All the omissions we had mentioned with regard to his 1964 version have been rectified in [this revision] which now includes many valuable foreign entries in its 300-page collection of . . . abbreviations drawn from every discipline, not forgetting students' slang, space-age acronyms, and numerical symbols." D. M. Glixon
Sat R 50:40 N 18 '67 40w

DESSAIN, CHARLES STEPHEN. John Henry Newman. 178p $6 Nelson

B or 92 Newman, John Henry, Cardinal [67-76058]

A study of the career of the nineteenth century English ecclesiastic.

Reviewed by John Pick

America 117:388 O 7 '67 340w

"Newman's life—so long, so crowded, so thoughtful, so heavily documented—could stand treatment on the largest scale. . . . The only brevity acceptable . . . is that attainable by an expert. Not only is Fr. Dessain an expert, he is the expert, and the combination of brevity and authority ensures the excellent uniqueness of his biography. Brief as it is, [this book] pays as much attention to the life of the mind as of the body, making room, for instance, for a whole chapter discussing the contents of the Grammar of Assent. His book, thus, is the book to put in the hands of anybody starting to map out Newman, and also of anybody who has gone over the ground often already."

TLS p139 F 8 '68 310w

DESTLER, CHESTER MCARTHUR. Roger Sherman and the independent oil men. 305p $8.75 Cornell univ. press

338.4 Sherman, Roger. Standard Oil Company. Petroleum industry and trade 67-13466

"This is a biographical study of Roger Sherman, an eminent Titusville lawyer and civil leader, whose professional life paralleled the . . . developments of the oil industry in western Pennsylvania from 1867 until 1897. Since Sherman served as legal counsel for many of the independent oil men and as chief counsel for their organizations, the study is also a history of the bitter struggle to maintain their freedom against the monopolistic practices of the railroads, pipelines, and Standard Oil." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by William Miller

Am Hist R 73:1652 Je '68 420w

"[This story] is carefully presented with the extensive use of excerpts from legal files, contemporary newspaper records, and the previously unexplored Sherman pages. Unfortunately, the detail sometimes provides for difficult reading and only infrequently permits the character or personality of Sherman to emerge. Despite these weaknesses, the book will be a useful supplement to the extensive research already published on the history of the Standard Oil Trust."

Choice 5:233 Ap '68 200w

"The volume presents much new information because it is based primarily upon a large and hitherto unused collection of personal letters, papers, and miscellaneous documents of Roger Sherman. Consequently, the book provides more details about the conflict, confirms much that has been written in previous accounts, and offers new insights. It is well organized and well written." P. H. Giddens

J Am Hist 54:902 Mr '68 500w

"[This book and W. Turrentine Jackson's The Enterprising Scot: Investors in the American West after 1873] are nicely complementary. The first explains, in fact if not in intention, why so much Scottish enterprise failed to pay. For if the rigour of the game was so extreme in the Quaker commonwealth, what was it like on the mining frontier or on the cattle ranges of Texas or the High Plains? . . . One fault in Professor Destler's book is that the background is not painted in. We have only one allusion to the great and violent Pittsburgh railroad strike: there is none to the Mollie Maguires who played such a part in the career of Governor Hartranft. It might be pointed out that the (Confederate) General Gordon was John, not James, and one might ask who was (before 1937) Justice Black of the United States Supreme Court?"

TLS p200 F 29 '68 500w

DESTOUCHES, LOUIS FERDINAND. See Céline, L. F.

DETRE, JEAN. A happy ending. 221p $4.95
Simon & Schuster

67-22942

"Mr. Isadore Rose, seventy-nine, is a rich retired businessman who spends his winters in Florida and the rest of the year at his sister-in-law's place in an expensive New York suburb. His life is made up of grudging visits to his doctor, the attentions of solicitous fundraisers, the anxious and irritating interference of his family. But with the appearance in his life of a gentle and feminine woman [Mrs. William Sweet] who is hired to be his companion, Mr. Rose . . . decides to go abroad, to travel, for the first time. [The] results—in Italy, in Jerusalem, and on his ultimate journey to the ruins of the ancient city of Petra—are the central matter of the novel." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by M. F. O'C. Moriarty
Best Sell 27:331 N 15 '67 600w

"Izzy's progress, including the problems of a sedate gentleman travelling with a lady companion, is told with deft humor. The highly imaginative, unexpected climax is a brilliant tour de force. This novel is different and will be enjoyed by all, especially by older people." R. W. Henderson

Library J 92:2942 S 1 '67 130w

"A delicately whimsical account of the old tycoon's transformation. [Miss Detre] sees life convincingly from her hero's vantage point as she sensitively explores the gulf between him and some of his juniors." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p44 S 17 '67 130w

"This first novel about an aged man who finds happiness through the affection and respect he feels for a woman half his age is very believable as long as Mrs. Detre keeps her story in Clearwater, Florida. . . . [Mr. Rose's] life changes, pleasantly but not very believably, as he sets out to travel for the first time in his life."

New Yorker 43:244 D 9 '67 120w

TLS p929 Ag 29 '68 220w

DETZER, KARL. Myself when young. 248p $4.95
Funk

B or 92 Fort Wayne, Indiana 68-12005

This is an account "of a remembered boyhood in Fort Wayne, Indiana at the turn of the century . . . [The author uses as sources the stories] of men and women whose parents and grandparents had known General Mad Anthony Wayne, Miami Chief Little Turtle, and had taken part in the dramatic events which centered around this strong outpost on the American frontier." (Library J)

"[This book] richly portrays days really not so long ago but so vastly different from what our children see. Mr. Detzer's characters are ably captured . . . [and the book] will be enjoyed by those who collect tales of Americana and look nostalgically to days gone by. . . . I fear many readers will find the book 'square,' but hopefully for each of those there will be one who is charmed by its lack of message. Mr. Detzer has written a most unusual book for 1968." P. J. Earl

Best Sell 28:11 Ap 1 '68 170w

"Mr. Detzer has written not a history of Fort Wayne but a biography of one youthful citizen growing up in a locale rich in historic events and personages. Recommended for libraries which have readers interested in the subject." E. B. Hayward

Library J 93:68 Ja 1 '68 150w

DEUEL, LEO. comp. Conquistadors without swords; archaeologists in the Americas; an account with original narratives. 647p il pl maps $12.50 St Martins

970.1 America—Antiquities. Indians—Antiquities. Excavations (Archeology)—America 67-22577

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 4:1298 Ja '68 240w

Reviewed by J. W. Stevenson

Library J 93:188 Ja 15 '68 140w

Va Q R 44:cxxxiii summer '68 100w

DE UNAMUNO Y JUGO, MIGUEL. See Unamuno y Jugo, M. de

DEURS, GEORGE VAN. See Van Deurs, G.

DEUSEN, GLYNDON G. VAN. See Van Deusen, G. G.

DEUTSCH, BABETTE. comp. Poems of Samuel Taylor Coleridge. See Coleridge, S. T.

DEUTSCH, HAROLD C. The conspiracy against Hitler in the twilight war. 394p $8.95 Univ. of Minn. press

364.13 Anti-Nazi movement. Hitler, Adolf. Germany—History—1933-1945 68-22365

A "professor of history, University of Minnesota, sees the history of the opposition to Hitler in four rounds, and he has written a . . . study of round two, September 1939-May 1940. During these months the opposition wrestled with the problem of contriving some way to overthrow Hitler and stop the war while insuring that Germany would have a functioning government. The plans of the opposition involved the British government with whom contact was made. Pope Pius XII was also informed on the work of the opposition and through his contacts tried to aid them." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:1028 O '68 170w

"Based on extensive research and on many interviews, [this book] includes some generally favorable references to Pius XII, whose actual role in relation to the nazis remains a subject of mystery and controversy."

Christian Century 85:688 My 22 '68 50w

"Deutsch shows [that] success depended on the help of the Army leaders, Brauchitsch and Halder, but they proved unable to resist Hitler and let him launch the attack on the Low Countries and France in May 1940. In contrast to authors of earlier accounts who have often been critical of the Resistance, Dr. Deutsch does not hide his sympathies for these men who were unsuited to conspiracy. The book has profited from interviews with survivors of Hitler's efforts to eliminate them. It is a major contribution to the history of the Resistance to Hitler and is highly recommended for libraries both public and academic." Keith Eubank

Library J 93:2491 Je 15 '68 300w

Reviewed by Francis Hope

New Statesman 76:752 N 29 '68 1550w

"The author has left no documentary source unexplored or living witness unquestioned; the detail is immense and the delineation of the conspiratorial web which is here recreated evokes appreciation and praise. And for those who are skeptical of the existence of 'another Germany' this study gives indisputable proof that resistance and conspiracy began long before the tide of war turned against the Third Reich."

Va Q R 44:clxvi autumn '68 250w

DEUTSCH, KARL W. Arms control and the Atlantic alliance: Europe faces coming policy decisions. 167p $5.95 Wiley

341.6 Disarmament. North Atlantic Treaty Organization 66-28751

The author has "examined current and prospective attitudes in Europe relating to security and arms control. Much of the material presented derives from a 1963-65 study conducted at Yale and sponsored by the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. . . . [The trends are examined] through verifiable data: elite interviews, mass opinion sampling, and content analysis of newspapers and periodicals." (Choice) Index.

"The tables and appendices which take up about half of this most interesting book deal with the attitudes of the elites of France and West Germany. . . . The interviews were conducted in the summer of 1964. By the time the book appeared in 1967, it was an historical document. The first question one asks of such a document is 'Who's speaking?' There is no list of tables, and the information may be buried there, but the twenty-two-page Index has nothing on the criteria for selection on age and occupational weightings. . . . This book is a most interesting failure. A private sampling of the data does suggest, however, that the French were less prone to answer the more stupid questions than the Germans." Theodore Ropp

Ann Am Acad 378:147 Jl '68 420w

"This work complements the recent study published by the author and a number of his collaborators: France, Germany and the Western Alliance [BRD 1968]. Deutsch manages with clarity and conciseness to deal with a host of complex issues that heretofore have persisted as myths or unsubstantiated hunches. A valuable study that will be of interest to political scientists across the entire spectrum of scholarship."

Choice 5:262 Ap '68 180w

DEUTSCH, KARL W. France, Germany and the Western alliance. See France, Germany and the Western alliance

DEUTSCH, MARTIN. The disadvantaged child; selected papers of Martin Deutsch and associates. 400p $10 Basic bks.

371.9 Child study. Socially handicapped
67-28504

The papers in this collection, "drawn from a series of . . . related research projects at the Institute for Developmental Studies at New York University . . . were originally prepared as independent contributions for various scholarly journals or conferences." (Am J Soc) "The selected papers are divided into three parts: 'The Social Environment for Learning,' 'Cognitive and Language Factors in the Education of the Disadvantaged Child,' and 'Aspects of Race and Social Class in the Education and Integration of the Disadvantaged Child.' . . . Professor Deutsch and his co-authors report on research directed to determining the specific areas in which disadvantaged children are deficient . . . [and] make an effort to identify the specific features of the lower-class environment which are associated with cognitive and verbal development. One result is a 'Deprivation Index,' consisting of six significant factors: housing dilapidation, the educational aspirational level of the parent for the child, the number of children under 18 in the home, dinner conversation, the number of cultural experiences, and the attendance of the child in kindergarten." (Library J) Index.

"[The collection] contains a wealth of data on verbal, perceptual, and attentional deficiencies, on the one hand, and on social class and racially based handicaps on the other. . . . There is some redundancy from one paper to another. . . . A tone of cautious optimism pervades the evaluative sections. . . . Deutsch's research in New York City included about equal proportions of disadvantaged whites and Negroes . . . [A broad contribution is] the delineation of the differences in life-style and extent of deprivation or family disorganization within the lower class. . . . The 'Deprivation Index' . . . [offers a] systematic way of gauging the probable impact of a family's poverty on its children. . . . These refinements in the definition of 'the poor' have major implications for the diagnosis of problems, the prescribed treatment, and the long-range prognosis." N. O. Funk

Am J Soc 74:110 J1 '68 400w

"The point of view might be called a social-psychological perspective with neglect of such important factors as the gross sociological context in which the 'poor' child is found, e.g. community; politics and power; patterns of employment; Federal intervention, etc. In most of the papers there is a heavy and abstruse statistical orientation which gives the volume an air of unreality. Libraries would not particularly need this volume (unless they sought a particular specialization in learning theory, sociolinguistics) but should depend on more representative sources."

Choice 5:1188 N '68 190w

"This work has already resulted in significant findings which could, if applied, be instrumental in 'stimulating the prime national resource: the intellectual capabilities of the entire population.' . . . This book is a deep reservoir of ideas for curriculum workers in early childhood education and in language arts and reading. It should be read by all American educators concerned about creating a better society based on better schools." Marian Wozencraft

Library J 92:3634 O 15 '67 390w

Sat R 51:74 S 21 '68 90w

DEUTSCHER, IRWIN, ed. Among the people: encounters with the poor; ed. by Irwin Deutscher and Elizabeth J. Thompson. 408p $10 Basic bks.

301.44 Poverty. U.S.—Social conditions. U.S.—Economic conditions
68-22855

"Most of the poor people whose lives and perspectives are reported here live in Syracuse, New York, an upstate industrial and commercial city with a population of about 250,000. In Part V, we are provided with a glimpse of how these people compare with the poor in such places as [North Shields], England, and San Juan, Puerto Rico. In Part IV, encounters with the medical and health systems are described in a rural North Carolina county and in the city of St. Louis, as well as in Syracuse. In other chapters, observations made in such places as Washington, D.C. and Boston appear." (Introd) Index.

"A few years ago this might have been an interesting book, but reading it today is almost an exercise in nostalgia. Too much has happened for interested readers to be content with the same old observations offered by the same old sociologists from the same old points of view. In most ways the writers who contributed to this anthology are not with it, they merely passed through on their way to the next study project. . . . The memorable essays in this collection, and there are some, share one quality in common, and that is compassion. . . . It is too bad that [they] are surrounded by so much mediocrity, for these few are well worth reading." Donald Gropman

Christian Science Monitor p9 D 17 '68
750w

"Most of the 20 chapters were written by social scientists and professional workers who have observed encounters between the poor and society's agents. Although some of the authors have contributed readable but standard academic papers, others seem to share the editors' conviction that social science must get back in touch with humanity. As a result, the reader listens when Big Chino Garcia, ex-gang leader, answers questions at the Junior League; sits in the application office of a Public Housing Authority; hangs out with a group of aimless teen-age boys; and attends sixth grade at three very different schools. Middle-class readers will learn a lot worth learning from this book; specific chapters will be useful to bright high school students. The book is recommended for public, academic, medical and other appropriate special libraries." David Cooley

Library J 93:2639 J1 '68 180w

"[The essays] are of consistently high caliber. Essentially [they] separate out into two categories: first, those more theoretical ones that deal with . . . 'the system,' the social, economic and political institutions which govern the way poor people live . . . and then the ones which look more concretely at the distinctive way poor people grow up, contend with disease, and experience the street, the alley, and the various representatives from across the tracks. . . . I wish that every medical student in America could read Lee Rainwater's paper, read how removed they as doctors will one day be from the people who need them most and cannot afford them or the high-priced medicines they prescribe. But perhaps it is our congressmen who need to read Lee Rainwater's books and essays. Maybe if everyone in Congress read the articles in this book things would begin to change for the poor." Robert Coles

New Repub 159:36 O 12 '68 1550w

DEUTSCHER, ISAAC. The unfinished revolution, Russia, 1917-1967. (Cambridge. Univ. The Trevelyan lectures, 1967) 115p $3.75 Oxford

947.084 Communism—Russia. Russia—History—1917-67-23012

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by S. W. Page

Am Hist R 73:548 D '67 430w

Reviewed by D. D. Barry

Am Pol Sci R 62:662 Je '68 800w

Choice 5:252 Ap '68 160w

DEVAMBEZ, PIERRE, ed. The Praeger encyclopedia of ancient Greek civilization. See The Praeger encyclopedia of ancient Greek civilization

DEVINS, JOSEPH H. The Vaagso raid; the commando attack that changed the course of World War II [by] Joseph H. Devins, Jr. 222p il $4.50 Chilton co.

940.54 Vågso Island, Battle of, 1941 68-13943

This is an analysis of the British commando raid on the German-occupied Norwegian port in December 1941. Index.

"[Mr. Devins has reconstructed] from scattered and variable evidence a perfectly fascinating story. . . . [It is also an] important book. It has enough of striking personalities in it . . . to create interest . . . [and it gives] what may be, for many decades, the finest and fullest account of a vital and interesting operation, hitherto too insufficiently recorded even for history." Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 27:459 Mr 1 '68 330w

"Mr. Devins's book has a delightful grace, restraint, humor and professional polish all too seldom found in the military writing of Yankee authors. In distilling his account from a wide variety of sources and by writing so attractively and capably he has added a most welcome item to the literature of World War II." E. V. Sutherland

Library J 93:2486 Je 15 '68 230w

"Mr. Devins has a sound knowledge of the British naval and military temperament and a rare skill in preserving its atmosphere in the course of painting the pictures of action in a narrow fjord and on the quays, hillsides and streets of a stubbornly defended coastal town."

TLS p150 F 23 '67 150w

DEVLIN, HARRY. To grandfather's house we go; a roadside tour of American homes. unp il col il $3.95; lib bdg $3.34 Parents mag. press 720.973 Architecture. American—Juvenile literature. Architecture. Domestic—Juvenile literature 67-18474

The author describes "examples of period architecture from the Dutch Colonial of the 17th century to Federalist, Georgian, Greek Revival, and varied examples of Victorian Italianate, Romanesque and others. The full-page color illustrations of representative houses are accompanied by smaller drawings of architectural details, period furniture, and young ladies and gentlemen dressed in the costume of the times. . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

"Fifth- and sixth-grade children, for whom the book is recommended, would be fascinated with the pictures, but the language and manner in which it is written are not as suitable for this age group. The architectural terminology would convey little to these children, as many would not have the background to comprehend some of the historical references which are found throughout the book. The text could be used for an interesting unit in home economics at either the junior or senior high school level. Many families, too, would find it a stimulating addition to a trip, as would senior citizens. For adults the book contains sufficient information so that trends in architecture could be studied and perhaps result in an interesting hobby." G. G. Jenkins

J Home Econ 60:678 O '68 250w

"A good book for intermediate grades on American architecture. [Devlin describes his examples] with humor and in considerable detail. . . . Many libraries will find this a valuable treatment of a subject that usually has to be traced through scattered sources."

Barbara Gibson

Library J 92:4611 D 15 '67 130w

DE VOS, GEORGE. Japan's invisible race; caste in culture and personality [by] George De Vos and Hiroshi Wagatsuma. 415p il $8.75 Univ. of Calif. press

301.453 Eta. Caste, Japan—Social conditions 66-16422

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Harumi Befu

Am Anthropol 69:772 D '67 900w

Reviewed by Tamotsu Shibutani

Am J Soc 73:524 Ja '68 800w

Choice 4:1285 Ja '68 180w

DE VRIES, C. M., ed. Bible for children, v 1. See Klink, J. L.

DE VRIES, LEONARD. See Vries, L. de

DE VRIES, PETER. The cat's pajamas & Witch's milk; two novels. 303p $5.95 Little 68-30874

In the first of these "novels, Hank Tattersall is a happily married minor academic in search of a better-fitting personality. He abandons security in favor of the successive masks . . . of advertising executive, . . . street-singer, . . . gardener, and—the final stage . . . bum shackled up with a stray idiot child and an alcoholic mongrel. In 'Witch's Milk,' Tillie Seltzer struggles . . . to justify an earlier choice of life-style—marriage to [Pete] an . . . ill-suited but lovable man, who fails her at the moment of crisis." (New Yorker)

Reviewed by J. A. Phillips

Best Sell 28:367 D 1 '68 700w

"[There is] some light and tricky wordplay [here] . . . yet this is a serious and most ingenious book. . . . It is two loosely but judiciously connected short novels, which cannot precisely be called novellas because, though each is complete in itself, they achieve their full import only when joined. . . . A brief, apparently casual interconnection occurs in the first of them. Without it they would both be deftly written stories of little import. Conjoined, they become a strangely unified structure, to be pondered. . . . Implicit in this book . . . is a curious blend of despair and hope. . . . There is a devious and dubious philosophy of the Comic and the Absurd. . . . These coupled stories, however wittily disguised by the very words which tell them, are serious, grave, and severe." Richard Sullivan

Book World p3 N 24 '68 750w

"There is nothing, [De Vries] seems out to prove, that cannot be turned into a joking matter. He kills off Hank by wedging him . . . [in] a dog-door to freeze in a blizzard. . . . [He] treats the dying of a child in 'Witch's Milk' with quiet respect, but even here there are jokes . . . designed, this time, to deepen the awfulness. . . . In these two novels, De Vries can still be brilliantly comic. . . . It is the muddle man with intellectual leanings, blundering into defeat . . . that concerns him. But now his humor, always on the black side, is grim indeed. . . . Whether [De Vries in this book] comes to grief or not, whether amusement 'goes on to its reverse,' depends on the taste of the reader and how black he can take his humor." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p9 N 21 '68 600w

Reviewed by R. B. Sale

Commonweal 89:448 D 27 '68 1150w

Reviewed by Stanley Swanson

Library J 93:4164 N 1 '68 270w

Reviewed by Hugh Kenner

N Y Times Bk R p4 N 24 '68 900w

"In both novels, situations are saddest when we are laughing most. Tattersall's adventures are so funny that he is pitiful only in hindsight, and because of the incorrigible gaiety of her double-talking husband, the failure of Tillie's marriage is comic. The death of her child is overwhelming because it momentarily halts a joviality that consistently proves the only antidote to tragedy. A powerful, gentle book."

New Yorker 44:246 N 16 '68 140w

Newsweek 72:128 O 28 '68 450w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:32 D 14 '68 1700w

DEWEY, MELVIL. Dewey decimal classification and relative index; devised by Melvil Dewey; 17th ed; v2 (revised) Auxiliary tables, revised relative index. Free to purchasers of the 17th edition Forest press

025.4 Classification, Decimal (65-10445)

In response to criticisms of the insufficiency of the Index to the seventeenth edition (BRD 1966) the committee revised it, following the pattern of the index in the sixteenth edition. "There has been a 50 per cent increase in pages over the former index and three times as many numbered entries for direct leads from the schedules. Changes in the revised volume are noted . . . through added items in the Table of Contents." (Library Q)

"Dewey 17's 2d Index embalms the old problems. Progress is two steps forward and one step back. And Melvil's ancient decree lives on in Ben Custer's final 'Reminder: Never classify from the Index alone; always check the tables also.'" P. S. Dunkin

Library J 93:1876 My 1 '68 700w

"The 'Table of Relocations' is a new section that will undoubtedly prove useful . . . in the planning of over-all classification changes within a library. . . . The 'Editor's Introduction to the Revised Relative Index' [is] a helpful description of the new index as compared with the former one, and some general suggestions on how to use it. The added section, 'Devices Used in the Index,' is well arranged for clarity and easy use. . . . The index itself is entirely new; . . . the entries themselves as well as the over-all pattern of entries have been greatly changed. . . . It is important to note that every entry is assigned a number. Not only are there many more entry leads to the schedules than in the preceding index but there are actually now more leads to numbers than there were in the much-lauded index to Edition 16. . . . The entire pattern of cross-references has been changed. . . . What we now have seems to be a good, thorough, reasonable index with a straightforward approach." R. F. Carnovsky

Library Q 38:272 J1 '68 950w

DEWEY, THOMAS B. The king-killers. 184p $4.50 Putnam

68-19431

Mac, a Chicago private detective, attempts to collect an unpaid bill for 1200 toy wooden guns delivered to a right-wing organization in California. The bill is paid and Mac "finds himself facing a murder rap and possible death." (Sat R)

"Unrealistic and unconvincing."

Best Sell 28:320 N 1 '68 70w

"In these flip days of easy morals and sticky-fingered operatives, Mac shines for his ungrudging decency . . . feeling called upon to earn [his fee] no matter what the personal cost. Earning . . . [it] in this story leads deeper into a tangle that unravels in the vigilantes' training camp and amid the swimming-pool set of Southern California. Dewey's prose is among the crispest in the business, stripped of frills and shot from guns." A. L. Rosenzweig

Book World p14 J1 21 '68 120w

Reviewed by A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p18 J1 28 '68 100w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:116 S 14 '68 40w

DE WIT, H. C. D. See Wit. H. C. D. de

DEXTER, BYRON. The years of opportunity: the League of nations, 1920-1926. 264p maps $8.50 Viking

341.12 League of Nations 67-20299

"Dexter, former managing editor of Foreign Affairs, examines the early years of the League of Nations. He starts from the position that the Treaty of Versailles was 'a fair and moderate settlement, well worth upholding,' and that the League of Nations was, for a few years, an effective organization with its share of successes and failures. . . . He argues that the League was weakened by the Locarno Treaty . . . [which, he contends,] by failing to guarantee the eastern frontiers of Germany, . . . guaranteed the success of Hitler's strategy." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by W. T. Perkins

Am Pol Sci R 62:1014 S '68 600w

"In polished and lucid prose, [the author] portrays his view of the organization from its emergence through the contrivance of the Locarno treaties, which he believes was a destructive turning point. . . . [He] pays more attention to the maneuvers of the European great powers than to the actual functioning of the League. . . . This is a book for 'the general reader.' . . . Almost no use is made of League publications, and none is made of the archives open to scholars. Most citations refer to secondary works. By felicitous phrases and evocative comment, Dexter does recall some of the stimulation of the early years of the League. Other students ought to be encouraged to delve still more deeply into the causes, the processes, and the settings of that excitement." Leon Gordenker

Ann Am Acad 337:168 My '68 460w

"The essay is written for the general reader, but there is much for the academic scholar to glean from the clear narrative and analysis by this former Foreign Affairs editor. Though the book lacks some of the apparatus of a scholarly monograph such as a good bibliography, it is highly recommended for all college and university libraries."

Choice 5:1346 D '68 130w

"Dexter has sought to reverse the tradition of castigating the Treaty of Versailles and the League of Nations for all of the failures in the interwar years. Despite its limited scope, this book should be widely read as a corrective to some of the myths about international affairs in the 1920's. Recommended for public and academic libraries." Keith Eubank

Library J 92:4164 N 15 '67 200w

DICK, IGNACE. What is the Christian Orient? tr. by C. Gerard Guertin. 176p $4.50 Newman press

281 Eastern churches 66-28936

This book deals with "the formation and constitution of the Oriental Churches, the historical evolution of Oriental Christian communities, the historical aspects of the Schism, and the meaning and value of the Christian Orient. The Oriental Churches, established historically and hierarchically in the vast regions which extend from central Europe to India and Abyssinia, are of Apostolic origin which do not look to Rome for their birth, growth, or organization." (Choice)

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney

America 116:690 My 6 '67 70w

"The author contends, and rightly so, that the factors which characterized and shaped Oriental Christianity are: patriarchates, theological and doctrinal struggles, liturgical families, and cultural languages. Although this volume is not as comprehensive as N. Zernov's Eastern Christendom: A Study of the Origin and Development of the Eastern Orthodox Church [BRD 1962], it compares favorably with it. Valuable for ecumenical studies; timely and well written. Excellent footnotes. . . . Highly recommended."

Choice 5:68 Mr '68 200w

DICKENS, CHARLES. Memoirs of Joseph Grimaldi. See Grimaldi, J.

DICKENS, HOMER. The films of Marlene Dietrich. 223p il $7.95 Citadel

791.43 Dietrich, Marlene. Moving pictures—Biography 68-19123

"Dickens, a graduate of the American Academy of Dramatic Arts and a frequent contributor to film magazines, briefly reviews the 50 or more films in which Marlene Dietrich has played a major or minor role. He provides a summary of the plot of each of these films adding his own personal notes and comments." (Library J)

"The Dietrich book is written in terms of mandatory gush. That is the way you write about Miss Dietrich. Her career comes through as a heartwarming saga of German grit. Of the kinky compulsion that keeps 'the Kraut' (as her friend Ernest Hemingway called her) on stage in the half-light under a ton of makeup you will learn little here. This intriguing, self-satirizing lady has been flattened out as if she were the mother founder of a religious order." Wilfrid Sheed

Atlantic 222:142 N '68 370w

"The reader sees Dietrich's gradual development from an exciting sex symbol into an accomplished and sophisticated actress from her early German movies of the 1920's to her work [in Hollywood]. . . . Although many of the vehicles in which she starred now read like so much bad soap opera, Dietrich managed to overcome this handicap by the qualities of her face and figure and the biting force of her singing and acting style. This book is no great work of scholarship; it lacks even a simple index. . . . The writing is often dull and uninspired. Yet the book is a feast to the eyes because of the many fascinating photographs of Dietrich during various stages of her movie career. It will delight those readers who are entranced by the minutiae of film culture." Henry Halpern

Library J 93:3018 S 1 '68 220w

DICKEY, JAMES. Babel to Byzantium; poets & poetry now. 296p $5.95 Farrar, Straus

821 American poetry—20th century—History and criticism. English poetry—20th century—History and criticism 68-10644

In this volume "some sixty poets of our time are discussed, among them Theodore Roethke, Marianne Moore, Randall Jarrell, and Robert Frost, as well as others who are not so well known. Together these essays form a personal chronicle of American and British poetry in the fifties and sixties." (Publisher's note) Index. Some of these articles were originally published in such journals as The American Scholar, The Hudson Review and Poetry.

Am Lit 40:436 N '68 100w

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 221:114 My '68 20w

"[These pieces record] the process of Dickey's continuing response to the poetry of his time, as well as (in some of the longer essays) his experience of being a poet and a man intensely alive. 'Response' is the key word: 'responding' and 'reacting', for there is not an inert or sententious line in his new, compendious book. . . . He is never evasive and never canting. Each judgment, each notation (one feels) has been tested repeatedly against his total experience of poetry and of his life. He is exact and felicitous. . . . He invites his reader to 'live' the poem, to test his reaction against his. . . . You may not always agree about this or that poem or poet; but you will always know precisely where the insight and judgment came from and how they were arrived at." Saul Maloff

Book World p10 Je 30 '68 700w

Choice 5:950 O '68 110w

"Mr. Dickey's enthusiasms are as extravagant as his dislikes. Many of his judgments sound dated because subsequent works of the poets have necessitated other evaluations, but his rugged honesty and graceful writing make one willing to share his affection for the good and bad poetry he has reviewed. His message about contemporary poetry is too diffuse, if there is a message. But it is good to have the reflections of one of our excellent contemporary poets. Recommended for large public, college, and university libraries." Jerome Cushman
Library J 93:1485 Ap 1 '68 200w

"The most serious defect of Dickey's critical sensibility is in the area of traditional poetry. . . . He is unable to read traditional poetry sensitively, and to make intelligent discriminations among poems and poets in this mode. . . . [His] engaging candor informs the three longer, personal essays which end the book. 'Barnstorming for Poetry,' an account of his adventures on a poetry-reading tour of mid-western colleges, shows a considerable talent for personal journalism. . . . 'The Poet Turns on Himself,' explains why Dickey's poems are the way they are. . . . I am about as far as possible from James Dickey's ideal reader. For me, his ideas are pernicious and his taste is wildly unreliable. Still, he is an interesting man, and this book is, at the very least, superior entertainment." Howard Kaye
New Repub 158:28 Je 29 '68 1300w

Va Q R 44:cliii autumn '68 130w

DICKIE-CLARK, H. F. The marginal situation; a sociological study of a coloured group. 226p $6.75 Humanities press

309.168 Durban, Natal—Race relations. Sociology. Race psychology 66-73643

"A report of sociological findings on marginality among South African Colored people [which] concentrates particularly on a suburb of Durban, Sparks Estate, where about 1,200 Colored people live. . . . As generally understood, the marginal man or group is a semi-isolate, living between two cultural groups in opposition and participating fully in the culture of neither. . . . In this essay, Dr. Dickie-Clark defines the marginal situation as a hierarchy constituted by two or more groups varying in degrees of power and privilege, [and maintains that] . . . not cultural difference but rather 'inconsistency between the cultural and social dimensions of [that] hierarchy' . . . limits [its] access to the dominant culture." (Am Soc R)

Sparks Estate, the largest single concentration of Coloureds in Durban, is his field of focus, but he never clarifies his field. . . . [And he] rarely clarifies when he is drawing on his sample of 50 persons from Sparks Estate, when he is referring to the data recorded on 1,261 persons in a larger sample, or when he is referring to the conditions and marginality of the South African Coloured in general. . . . It seems, furthermore, as if the chapter dealing with historical development were written without reference to the rest of the book, for it is the only place the Afrikaner is singled out. The rest of both studies subsume Afrikaners in the general category of Whites."

Am Anthropol 70:139 F '68 460w

Reviewed by Aidan Southall
Am J Soc 74:90 Jl '68 550w

"The book rewards us with informative chapters on 'the historical development of the situation of the Durban Coloureds' and 'the Durban Coloureds and their marginal situation.' The author repeatedly stresses the point that the Coloureds' cultural equality: 'his origin, his culture, his religion, his language, and sometimes even his colour are on the same level as the Whites.' Thus 'the cultural parity of the Durban Coloureds is complete.' . . . But I am not so convinced as the author that there is cultural parity of Whites and Coloreds in South Africa or even in Durban. . . . Dickie-Clark presents a critical examination of the marginal man, but it seems questionable whether any elucidation or strengthening of the concept has been achieved." O. C. Cox

Am Soc R 32:834 O '67 800w

"Important sociological theory integrated with empirical observation of a specific racial group. . . . American readers will be struck by the many parallels to be seen between the African and the American situations: the struggle for minority identity, conflicts between minorities, 'passing,' and the strength of the color bar, even though legal equality increases."

Choice 4:1323 Ja '68 140w

TLS p366 Ap 11 '68 300w

DICKINSON, DONALD C. A bio-bibliography of Langston Hughes, 1902-1967; with a pref. by Arna Bontemps. (Archon bk) 267p $10 Shoe String

818 Hughes, Langston 67-15933

The "librarian at the University of Missouri divides his efforts between a 119-page chronological biography, and a . . . bibliography of works by and about the poet which takes up the rest of the book. . . . The bibliography ends at 1965, two years before Hughes's death." (Library J)

"Discussing his efforts to reach a class of Negro students, Benjamin DeMott tells how he used a Langston Hughes poem to draw out the children (Saturday Review, January 20, 1968). The incident illustrates how little Hughes is understood as an early rebel operating within accepted lines drawn by whites. Mr. Dickinson does some, but not enough, to right the picture. [This is] an otherwise accurate, scholarly, and long needed book. . . . Using original source materials, [the author] leans more on facts and content analysis than subjective opinion. One suspects that within the limits of his dissertation, upon which this book is based, the method is commendable. Still, an interpretive approach is yet to come—one, to be sure, which will draw heavily upon Mr. Dickinson's necessary spade work." Bill Katz
Library J 93:980 Mr 1 '68 190w

"An enormous amount of labor went into the bibliographical section of this work—though errors and omissions inevitably appear—but the compiler's efforts would have been more valuable if he had included Hughes's song lyrics and contributions to newspapers, while omitting the embarrassingly inept attempt to provide an account of his literary career." Kenneth Kinamon
Nation 205:599 D 4 '67 300w

DICKINSON, JOAN (YOUNGER). The book of pearls; their history and romance from antiquity to modern times. 248p 11 maps $6.95 Crown

639 Pearls 68-20481

The author "speculates on primitive man's use of pearls, retells the stories of famous pearls of royal ownership and of those worn

"A well-documented sociological study of urban Coloureds in which theory is illuminated by sketchy descriptive and factual data. . . . In the introduction Dickie-Clark explains that later by wealthy but less than royal owners, and finally shows their decline as symbols after World War I." (Library J)

"The author's research methods are random with a romantic bias, and her rootings cast before the reader such astounding historical misinformation that it is impossible to take her seriously on the modern pearl industry, about which she may possibly be quite accurate." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:134 S '68 40w

"Of particular interest is the story of the finding of pearls in America. However, [the] account of the cultured pearl industry in Japan is somewhat overly detailed. Mrs. Dickinson's informal style makes good casual reading. . . . Recommended for larger public libraries." Paul von Khrum

Library J 93:1994 My 15 '68 130w

DICKINSON, JOHN K. German & Jew: the life and death of Sigmund Stein. 339p $6.95 Quadrangle bks.

301.45 Jews in Germany 67-21639

The author follows "the life of a single individual (with the names of persons and places . . . changed to prevent identification) from his childhood in a rural Hessian town prior to World War I to his death at Auschwitz in 1944." (Choice) Index.

Reviewed by L. P. Lochner

Ann Am Acad 378:159 J1 '68 480w

"[This work] gives the reader a clear insight into how the Nazi persecution of the Jews grew out of the German social conditions of earlier decades. The life story of 'Sigmund Stein' also poignantly illustrates the Jewish ambivalence between national and ethnic loyalties. Dickinson is exceptionally well informed about the historical background, while his narration of 'Stein's' tragic life is written with the skill and style of a fine novelist. Highly recommended."

Choice 5:112 Mr '68 180w

"[This story] shows the effectiveness of the biographical approach to history. . . . German and Jew is tragic, but no more morbid than [A. Frank's] Diary of a Young Girl [BRD 1952]. . . . Mr. Dickinson can only speculate about Sigmund Stein's thoughts and feelings. However, his interviews of Mr. Stein's acquaintances and surviving relatives and his prodigious reading of published and unpublished material, enabled him to write such a coherent and well-written description of Hessian life before and during the Nazi period that one is tempted to call the book a nonfiction novel."

John Neufeld

Library J 92:3411 O 1 '67 210w

DICKS, HENRY V. Marital tensions; clinical studies towards a psychological theory of interaction. 354p $10 Basic bks.

362.8 Marriage 67-24965

A psychiatrist who has been head of the Marital Research Unit of the Tavistock Clinic in London presents an approach to marriage difficulties based upon the work done at the clinic. "In the light of the newer psychoanalytic thought of Klein and Fairbairn, Dr. Dicks views marriage relationships as a result of the interaction of those forces, inherent in personalities, which create the complex texture of individual and social responses. The author also describes conflict situations as they result from the incongruity of social and personal norms. Dr. Dicks shows how his conclusions are applied to diagnosis and treatment, and how future therapists may use them as part of a new skill in preventive psychiatry based on interpersonal relations." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"The book will not be useful to most college students, except for occasional passages, because there is no attempt to explain medical or psychiatric terms or to explain the meaning of references to authorities well known to professionals. The case studies are meaty and well integrated, making it useful as a training tool in graduate work in psychology courses."

Choice 5:562 Je '68 150w

"To help patients the disciplines of psychiatry, psychology, and social case work had to be combined. This seems to be an important contribution to the solution of one of the most pressing problems of our time. The appendices in Dr. Dicks's book which contain tests given to patients and the case histories included are the only parts written in layman's language. The rest of the book is highly technical, and deliberately so, because it is addressed to 'the professions concerned with mental health,' College, university, and large public libraries should add . . . to their collections." E. T. Smith

Library J 93:561 F 1 '68 160w

TLS p294 Mr 21 '68 1800w

DICKSON, MORA. Israeli interlude; with Il. by the author. 182p $4.95 Rand McNally

915.694 Israel—Description and travel

66-15010

The author of A World Elsewhere: Voluntary Service Overseas (BRD 1965) has written a book describing a journey through Israel which discusses the people, land, and present-day problems.

"Written with warm sympathy for the country and beautifully illustrated with pen and ink sketches, the volume should make engaging and profitable reading for advanced high school or junior college students. . . . [Some of the issues treated are] the absorption of immigrants of diverse backgrounds, national defense, fructification of the desert, incipient industrialization, religion and state, the history of Zionism."

Choice 4:1301 Ja '68 160w [YA]

"[This book] is more than the travel jottings of an intelligent observer. It contains a sound assessment of a new nation, with sympathetic understanding and thoughtful analysis of the particular problems which beset Israel today. It does not set out to be a complete survey and there are obvious gaps in [the] coverage. As the author and her husband made the journey at the suggestion of a friend in the Ministry of Agriculture their contacts were mainly concerned with farming, and the land looms large in proportion to some other aspects of Israeli progress. . . . Mora Dickson is very experienced in dealing with young people, and it is largely through their eyes that she views the present and the future of Israel. . . . Her prose is clear and colourful and the descriptions of the gradual flowering of the desert and the complex organization of the kibbutz display a sense of beauty and a humanity tempered with reason."

TLS p578 Je 30 '66 360w

DICKSON, P. G. M. The financial revolution in England; a study in the development of public credit, 1688-1756. 580p pl $16 St Martins

336.3 Debts, Public—Great Britain. Great Britain—Economic policy 67-12509

This book is concerned with "the development of government borrowing in England in the six decades preceding the Seven Years War, which saw the creation of the National Debt, the South Sea Bubble, the rise of the Bank of England, and the financial policies of a series of powerful ministers, including Montague, Godolphin, Harley, Walpole and Pelham. The present volume, based on a . . . study of original records, including those of the Bank of England, is intended to . . . [throw] light on the general social and political, as well as financial, history of the period, examining . . . the reactions of contemporaries to the development of government borrowing, the social origins of those who lent to the government, the part played by Jewish, Huguenot and foreign capitalists, and the growth of a domestic capital market." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Far-ranging in its scholarship, perceptive in its questions, authoritative in its conclusions, [this is] one of the rare works of modern scholarship that . . . can be described as 'works of reference that should be in every library.' Dickson's usefully detailed treatment of the long-term debt is particularly valuable and will undoubtedly be standard. . . . Despite its impressive scholarship and enormous value, the book falls just short of being definitive. One is surprised by the apparently limited use of the Treasury In-papers (T. I) in the [Public Record Office] and by some omissions in the bibliography. . . . I also have some doubts about the way Dickson passes off the possibility that some of the nominal fundholders may actually have been acting for others. . . . If, as I suspect, this is still very much an open question, then Dickson's data on the proportion of the debt and company shares held in London must be used with extreme caution." J. M. Price

DICKSON, P. G. M.—Continued

Am Hist R 73:813 F '68 800w

"[The author] (St. Catherine's, Oxford) has written the first . . . important book dealing with governmental borrowing in England. . . . Scholarship bespeaks the book on all accounts. Few archives, public or private, have escaped Dickson's inquisitive eye. . . . Aside from some monographs, the book stands alone in its field. Its best use will be by scholars who will report its thorough documentation. Worthwhile for scholarly libraries, but probably not necessary in undergraduate library holdings."

Choice 5:655 J1 '68 180w

"This is a work of the first importance. It is itself a revolution, in the sense that there has been no such comprehensive and authoritative survey before of the crucial transformation that took place in the first half of the eighteenth century in English public finance and in the evolution of a securities market. . . . Dr Dickson writes with engaging ease and lucidity. His organisation of his detailed material is admirably handled. He combines a sharp eye for the particular with an ability to make broad judgments of significance. He does not minimise the difficulties and the failings. . . . But in general his theme is the triumph in England of political stability, sound financial administration and commonsense."

Economist 223:iii Ap 15 '67 1450w

Reviewed by W. H. Chaloner

Engl Hist R 83:617 J1 '68 290w

Reviewed by Barry Supple

Pol Sci Q 83:470 S '68 600w

"The author's accounts are models of lucidity and precision. The history of the finances of a country cannot, however be studied in isolation from its political and social history, and Mr. Dickson, who is no narrow specialist, has a good deal to say about both. Indeed, he shows that the developments in which he is primarily concerned could not have taken place except in a specific political and social atmosphere. . . . One of the most interesting parts of his book is that in which he deals with the individual creditors of the state. . . . In conclusion Mr. Dickson adds a valuable if necessarily rather tentative section on 'the Rate of Interest in Theory and Practice' and brings together some excellent material on that neglected but important topic, the origin of the Stock Exchange."

TLS p641 J1 20 '67 1400w

DIDION, JOAN. Slouching towards Bethlehem. 238p $4.95 Farrar, Straus

917.3 U.S.—Civilization

68-14916

"In this collection of essays and articles, most of which have been published in magazines, Joan Didion, . . . columnist for the Saturday Evening Post, treats . . . details of contemporary life and analyzes some of her personal experiences. In many of the pieces she deals with life in California, from pre-World War II days in insular Sacramento to current institutions and happenings. Her principal theme, based on a line from the Yeats poem, has to do 'with the general breakup, with things falling apart.' The book takes its title from her article on the Haight-Ashbury district in San Francisco." (Library J)

"In the twenty selections gathered here—written over the past three years—a squirming irritation with change is evident. The best explore the folly inherent in certain modern structures . . . or they celebrate, in a tasteful way, the individual's delicacy and valor as he shifts within a sterile environment. . . . The worst, and they are the majority, suffer from a lack of relevance or depth when they are not smothering under the heavy hand of irony. Too often a love for the theatrical touch makes her work sound not very superior to Winchell or Jim Bishop. . . . In the personal reflections a clinical disposition so stolid that [it] makes me feel like I'm thumbing through the analyst's files distorts the revelation." T. O'Hara

Best Sell 28:106 Je 1 '68 500w

Reviewed by Janet Coleman

Book World p5 J1 28 '68 700w

"Joan Didion is one of those brilliant new-breed journalists who wander sadly and watchfully across the United States as if touring a disaster area. . . . The subjects are conventional, given Miss Didion's temperament: Las Vegas weddings (an essay on American vulgarity); San Francisco hippies (the American dream gone to pot); backstage Hollywood à la Lillian Ross; Joan Baez ('a girl who might have interested Henry James'); Howard Hughes (subversive hero of the middle-class underground). A substantial element of spiritual biography is present in these pieces of wary skepticism. Though she has a journalist's weakness for converting her themes into 'myths,' 'dreams,' and 'folk' symbols—she is an original observer and even better, an original thinker. Has anyone written a better treatment of that overexposed topic of the year—hippies?" Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor p11 My 16 '68 750w

Commonweal 89:324 N 29 '68 800w

Reviewed by Maybelle Lacey

Library J 93:1646 Ap 15 '68 200w

"Gathered together, [Miss Didion's] Journalism forms a fragmentary chronicle of the breakings-up of society, civilization and her own world; and of her search for a niche in the rubble. . . . The past, for most of us, is a special self-deception—and for Miss Didion, self-deception is the root evil. Only without it, she says, can we achieve 'character—the willingness to accept responsibility for one's own life.' What dismays her about the breakings-up she chronicles is that they show that fewer people have pasts with which to come to grips. . . . [She] writes carefully, with a perfect eye for detail and an unfoolable ear. I am sure she parts with her secrets with a certain regret, and out of a sense that it is somehow her duty not only to make what sense she can of the times, but to do what she can for the rest of us." C. H. Simonds

Nat R 20:558 Je 4 '68 950w

Reviewed by Dan Wakefield

N Y Times Bk R p8 J1 21 '68 800w

DIESBACH, GHISLAIN DE. Secrets of the Gotha; tr. from the French by Margaret Crosland. 392p il $10 Meredith

929.7 Nobility. Almanach de Gotha 68-17909

"From 1764 until 1944 the Almanach de Gotha kept genealogists . . . informed of the births, marriages, relative ranks and deaths of the royal houses of Europe. For its first century of publication it was 'almost exclusively royal and Germanic' (Gotha was a minor German court), but by 1874 some French and English ducal families had crept into it, and by 1890 it had achieved its final, encyclopedic form." (Book World) This volume is 'a study of the contents of the Almanach.' (TLS)

"[The book] retails, with verve and conciseness, all the royal scandals which rocked Europe during the 18th and 19th centuries and which now seem so faded and quaint. Ludwig II's involvement with Lola Montez and Ludwig II's with Wagner; Maximilian's Mexican debauche at the hands of Juarez; Archduke Rudolph's suicide pact at Mayerling. . . . In casting his golden net from the Court at Windsor to the House of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Glücksburg, Diesbach's range is necessarily wider than it is deep. Most of his stories will be familiar to the most casual reader of European history, but are not the less worth retelling for that fact." Richard Freedman

Book World p4 Je 23 '68 900w

"Unusual and intriguing though these tales may be, no personage is spared the searching and occasionally lighthearted bite of Mr. de Diesbach's pen. To cover so much ground in so short a space sometimes leads to confusion for the reader, even though the genealogical tables are very good. The black-and-white photographs of subjects in the early 20th Century are not as good as present-day pictures, yet these help the reader understand the many diverse characters. The book is recommended for biography and history collections of public and university libraries." G. F. Dole

Library J 93:3124 S 15 '68 170w

"[This] book is enchanting, witty and clearly written. It gives you a marvelous gossipy round-up of crowned heads and consorts and backstairs with Clío pattering up and down, taking notes. Open it anywhere and you're almost certain to find a plum." Maurice Richardson

New Statesman 74:292 S 8 '67 600w

TLS p902 S 28 '67 330w

DIETZ, LEW. The Allagash; il. by George Loh. 264p $7.50 Holt

917.41 Allagash River, Maine—Description and travel 68-12043

"The Allagash River in Northern Maine [is in the heart of the North Woods. The author] describes the region from its geologic formation through its Indian residents, the loggers and settlers, to the present threat of a great recreational and electric power complex thrust on one of the few remaining wilderness areas in the East." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is a fine addition to the [Rivers of America] series." S. L. Mott
Library J 93:2490 Je 15 '68 230w

"If, as I do, you believe in rivers, you will enjoy reading about the Allagash. The writing is solid and exact, the drawings . . . a pleasure both to eye and mind. Lew Dietz does far more than describe the Allagash River as it is today, and the wilderness of which it is the living heart; he gives us a well-documented history of an entire region. . . . There are chapters on the explorations of such philosophic adventures as Thoreau." Edward Abbey

N Y Times Bk R p36 O 27 '68 250w

DIETZE, GOTTFRIED. America's political dilemma: from limited to unlimited democracy. 298p $7.95 Johns Hopkins press

321.8 Democracy, U.S.—Politics and government 68-12902

The author of In Defense of Property (BRD 1964) is concerned with "the accelerating breakdown of institutional safeguards of freedom. This breakdown can be seen in the dominance of the executive over the legislative branch, of the Federal Government over the states, of the majority over the minority, of the central government over the individual. . . . America's political dilemma, as Dietze sees it, is that she has become too egalitarian, too majoritarian, losing in the process her libertarian values and constitutional tradition." (Nat R) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by J. L. B. Higgins

J Am Hist 55:635 D '68 430w

"Dietze's thesis in this review of national politics is that there is too much democracy meandering in incorrect directions. He . . . points out in his well-documented study that we now also find ourselves in a struggle for survival with the USSR because too much democracy has made our leaders blunder often. The book is an assemblage of facts to prove an argument and as such requires careful, serious reading. Conservatives will welcome this study to support their viewpoint. It is an important book for academic and larger public libraries." Marco Thorne

Library J 93:2669 Jl '68 180w

Reviewed by M. Peterson

Nat R 20:971 S 24 '68 110w

DIGGORY, JAMES C. Self-evaluation: concepts and studies. 477p il $9.95 Wiley

155.28 Self. Personality 66-21052

Maintaining that "what people value about themselves is primarily their abilities as attested by their accomplishments . . . [the author] reports a series of experimental studies [which he] conducted [with] his associates at the University of Pennsylvania utilizing the indicated conception of self-evaluation. . . . This presentation . . . covers studies of children, high school and college students, and psychotic and near-psychotic cases. . . . Using this general format, the following topics are investigated: conditions affecting the level of estimated [success]; consequences of manipulated changes in self-evaluation; effects of the presence and evaluations of others upon self-evaluations; and similarities and differences in experimental results between certain types of mentally-disturbed subjects and normal subjects. In addition, Diggory presents a chapter . . . on some relationships between self-evaluations and attitudes toward death." (Am Soc R) Bibliography. Subject index. Author index.

"[Sociologists] have tended to leave the study of self-evaluation largely to psychologists. Moreover, each discipline has evidenced a degree of parochial disregard for the work of others on these topics. This well-organized, carefully written monograph, authored by a psychologist, reflects both of these circumstances. . . . Having scantied sociological work on the self, Diggory makes two serious errors. His operationalized conception of 'objective self-evaluation'—he scornfully rejects the utility of the 'phenomenal self-concept'—overlooks the significant role of attributes (race, sex, kinship, beauty, height, etc.) in self-evaluation. And secondly, Diggory's rejection . . . of the complete social determination of self-evaluations is not adequately tested by his research." B. N. Meltzer

Am Soc R 33:168 F '68 750w

"Beginning with an interesting attempt to deal in specific terms with the constructs of 'self,' 'value,' and 'self-evaluation,' Diggory moves from a theoretical and philosophical background of the problem to a consideration of empirical studies. . . . The book is written in an uneven, mixed style, necessitated by the switch from broad philosophical and theoretical discourse to more specific scientific writing. The most intriguing feature is [the author's] ability to shift creditably from phenomenological to behavioral levels of analysis. This is something rather unusual for authors discussing self-evaluation. For upper-class psychology majors to graduate students. Parts might also be interesting to readers from the other behavioral sciences and the humanities."

Choice 4:480 Je '67 150w

DILLARD, DUDLEY. Economic development of the North Atlantic community; historical introduction to modern economics. 747p $10.95 Prentice-Hall

330 Europe—Economic conditions. U.S.—Economic conditions 67-15169

"A study of the North Atlantic economy from its medieval origins through the transformation of classical capitalism to modern day mixed capitalism. . . . The text treats early commerce through European integration; early industry, industrial capitalism, industrial revolution and mass production; manorial system and capitalistic agriculture; money, banking, and mobilization of capital; political union and imperialism; and economic development of Russia and the U.S." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"This is a monumental work. . . . The writing is clear and well paced. The information packed in these pages is enormous. . . . The subtitle suggests that Professor Dillard hopes [it] will be used as an introductory textbook in economics. . . . But this reviewer regards it rather as 'An Introduction to Economic History' . . . . The professional economic historians may take Dillard to task for his almost exclusive reliance on English language (and translated) sources and for slighting Marx. . . . But one cannot ask Dillard for everything. His is a tremendous accomplishment to have organized and synthesized this mountain of fact and interpretation. . . . Some economists and many economic historians will adopt the book as an introduction to economics in general or to economic history in particular." C. P. Kindleberger

Am Econ R 58:211 Mr '68 1550w

"[This] breaks with traditional texts in two important respects: (1) the scope of coverage views Western Europe and the U.S. as part of a single economic unit, and (2) a methodology which emphasizes economic analysis to a greater extent than that found in more institutionally oriented textbooks. . . . A well written book for use by undergraduates and graduates. An excellent reference in the areas of economic development and comparative systems (Western capitalism)." Choice 5:836 S '68 160w

DILLEHAY, RONALD C., jr. auth. Dimension of authoritarianism: a review of research and theory. See Kirscht, J. P.

DILLON, MYLES. The Celtic realms [by] Myles Dillon and Nora K. Chadwick. 355p il maps $12 New Am. lib.

910.03 Celts 67-15326

This "survey of the history and culture of the Celtic peoples covers the whole period from their prehistoric origins to the Norman invasion of Britain, with a separate treatment of the British and Irish people. The early part of the book is concerned with the narrative history of the period and a discussion of the society and culture of ancient Gaul. . . . The remainder of the book is concerned with a demonstration of the peculiar genius of the Celts, and the way in which this genius was manifested in religion, literature, and the visual arts." (Publisher's note) Index.

DILLON, MYLES—Continued

"[The authors] have combined their great erudition to present a full and detailed synthesis of Celtic civilization that is a milestone in modern scholarship. . . . It is a tremendously complex story built upon tenuous evidence with meticulous precision. As a work of the highest intellectual order, [this] belongs in every major university library." R. R. Rea
Library J 93:990 Mr 1 '68 200w

"A strangely disappointing book. Perhaps it would have been useful if the very loose word 'Celtic' were once and for all properly defined by the scholarly authors. . . . Mrs Chadwick's chapter on Celtic Christianity implies that Celtic speakers somehow evolved a brand of religion or faith specifically and significantly different from that of the rest of west Europe. This implication can hardly be seriously sustained and throws a certain amount of doubt on the value of the book except as a beautiful ornament on the coffee table. . . . Readers may be surprised to find that the learned authors who speak of the Celts coming to Britain about 2000 BC on one page, suggest on another that 'The Celts, then, are a people who appear in history in the sixth century BC' and still further speak of 1500 BC as a possible date for their coming to the British Isles. . . . Confusion of this kind makes one wonder what was the point of the entire project." Proinsias MacAonghusa
New Statesman 75:147 F 2 '68 300w

Reviewed by Padraic Colum

N Y Times Bk R p20 My 19 '68 1000w

"[The authors] have set themselves the task of presenting the Celts in history 'as one people, with a common tradition, and a common character.' . . . The two collaborators are distinguished scholars, and record the names of many distinguished helpers. Each wrote about half of the book; occasionally they have agreed to differ, but they accept joint responsibility for all their chapters. . . . Historical uncertainty may be against them at times, but language, literature, and the visual arts are, so to speak, on their side, and all are very fine. Reading the chapters that treat of these, it is unlikely that any reader will challenge the oneness of the Celts. . . . Ireland plays a big role in The Celtic Realms, and her arts and artefacts are generously represented in the 100 and more plates which have been well, and sometimes brilliantly, chosen. . . . The book is pleasantly as well as authoritatively written, and should appeal to the scholarly and general reader alike."

TLS p138 F 1 '68 1400w

DIMENT, ADAM. The great spy race. 208p $4.50 Dutton

68-12459

Philip McAlpine "is directed to the island of Mall [in the Indian Ocean]. A paradise for wealthy playboys, and the home of Peters, a retired master of spydom. And it is from Peters that Philip McAlpine learns of the Great Spy Race—a race to outwit the top agents of all competing foreign countries: to win means a secret microfilm and a fortune to Philip; to lose, his final disposition at the hands of [his boss] Quine. . . . [The race] starts for Philip with a clue in London, takes him to St. Tropez and Geneva and back to Mall in a treasure hunt in which he ultimately becomes the quarry." (Publisher's note)

"The real potential which this book had as a satire is vitiated by the author's steeping the plot in sex. His comic homosexuals can produce only uncomfortable sniggers in his readers."

Best Sell 28:68 My 1 '68 80w

Reviewed by Norman Horrocks

Library J 93:1018 Mr 1 '68 170w

"I was pleased last year by Adam Diment's mad-mod-camp-odd 'The Dolly, Dolly Spy,' [BRD 1967] and I am even more pleased [with this book]. . . . The first novel created a vivid, surprisingly appealing anti-hero in Philip McAlpine, young (like Diment he is in his early 20's) and gave him a lively, of-this-instant narrative style, but told a fairly conventional story. This time the plot . . . is outrageous as our hero, and everything meshes, black humor with glittering insets of chrysoprased. One of the funniest of all anti-spy novels."

N Y Times Bk R p38 Ap 28 '68 100w

"Or how the very rich live. Not that our hero is rich, poor Philip McAlpine in his dolly, dolly clothes, deprived of his hash, under the thumb of secret service director Quine, who brought him to heel in The Dolly Dolly Spy. This latest rollick is immense fun, possibly even too much so, as minimal verisimilitude lapses into rank improbability. It's always a moot point how much fun can tastily mix with death. . . . Mr. Diment is sweet on the pleasures of sex; his word-hoard is terrific; and the culminating dodo race a real gas."

TLS p380 Ap 11 '68 100w

DIMOCK, EDWARD C. The place of the hidden moon; erotic mysticism in the Vaisnava-sahajiyā cult of Bengal [by] Edward C. Dimock, Jr. 299p $6.50 Univ. of Chicago press

294 Sahajiyā. Mysticism 66-13865

"The Vaisnava-sahajiyā cult that arose in Bengal in the sixteenth century was an . . . emotional attempt to reconcile the spirit and the flesh. . . . [The author examines this] religious phenomenon in a study [combining] . . . the history of religion as well as of Indian culture. . . . [The sect] was secretive on principle, with the doctrine and ritual transmitted exclusively from guru to disciple. The source of our knowledge of the sect include . . . poems written by numerous poets using the name 'Candidasa' [which the author relates] to the cult." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The anthropologically relevant thesis of this book is this: an important section of the population of Bengal has been following a religio-ideological tradition inaugurated by Caitanya . . . in the late 15th century. . . . [Caitanya] denied overt sensuousness and taught extreme sexual abstinence as central to his discipline. . . . Dimock himself points out certain striking similarities with Western forms of Christian mysticism. But in the case of medieval Bengal, as of modern Bengali religion inasmuch as it perpetuates this specific lore, we have a local precursor to the religious use of sensuality in the Sahajiyā cult that is considerably older than the Caitanya movement. Fascinatingly, Dimock traces the relation between the two cults, their oppositional and their intermeshing elements and phases, and the resultant ambivalence of Bengali devotional life." Agehananda Bharati

Am Anthropol 69:525 O '67 500w

"[This book is] informative for the scholar and less interesting for the general reader than it would seem at first glance. It retains some of the stylistic faults of a thesis, especially a condensed style which in places could be called turgid. But the authority of Dimock, one of the country's best-known Bengali scholars, recommends it highly, as do the clarity of its organization and the thoroughness of its treatment. . . . [The author] discusses the complex problem of origins, the metaphysical bases, and the historical (and to a somewhat lesser extent present) cultural implications of the cult. . . . Of interest to students of comparative literature and religion in general, as well as to those specializing in Indian culture."

Choice 4:174 Ap '67 200w

DINNERSTEIN, LEONARD. The Leo Frank case. 248p il $6.95 Columbia univ. press

364.13 Phagan, Mary. Frank, Leo Max. Jewish question. Trials. Justice, Administration of 68-19750

In Atlanta, Georgia, a northern Jewish industrialist was convicted of the murder of a 13-year old girl employed in the National Pencil Factory. "Governor John Slaton in 1915 commuted the sentence to life imprisonment, but one month later the citizens of Marietta abducted Frank from the jail and lynched him. Around this story [the author] . . . examines and analyzes the currents in American society of the early 20th Century, and particularly the problems of Southern society. . . . He also discusses the improvements made in the United States' legal system, especially during the 1960's, increasing the safeguards for the due process of law." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is a meticulous study of the incident, grounded upon a careful examination of the documents. It reveals the deficiencies of the judicial system, the effects of passion, and the corrupting results of violence. It also shows the connection between this case and the founding of the Ku Klux Klan shortly thereafter." Edward Weeks

Atlantic 221:113 My '68 160w

Choice 5:1227 N '68 130w

"This thoroughly documented and well-written book is recommended for academic and public libraries where materials on human prejudice may be needed." Victor Novak
Library J 93:1157 Mr 15 '68 210w

"These are the bare bones of as vicious an example of anti-Semitism as America has ever produced. Professor Dinnerstein's fully documented account does not avoid the economic and sociological implications." Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 51:30 Je 29 '68 50w

DIRENZO, GORDON J. Personality, power, and politics; a social psychological analysis of the Italian deputy and his Parliamentary system. 264p $7.95 Univ. of Notre Dame press 329 Italy—Politics and government. Personality 67-22144

The author "administered Rokeach Dogmatism tests to members of the Italian Chamber of Deputies [to test the relationship between politics and personality. He found] . . . that the Deputies scored higher than members of the general population on the Rokeach test, which seeks to measure attitudinal rigidity." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The study is interesting as a ground breaker, although it lacks conceptual sophistication and suffers from the author's mechanical reading of the tricky and uneven personality and politics literature. The best study of personality in a legislative body is Barber's The Lawmakers [BRD 1965]." Choice 5:868 S '68 130w

"[The author has] turned his study into a rich source of interesting facts and insights concerning modern Italy. While his theoretical themes and the illustrative materials will easily arouse the reader's interest, it is likely to be dampened by Mr. DiRenzo's total reliance on testing methods in vogue in modern social psychology. One can sympathize with those Italian political men who described their own answers to his precoded questions as reflecting neither the real situation in Italy nor their actual attitudes. This book illustrates once more how methodical ritualism brings a potentially interesting study to the level of an academic exercise with a limited appeal to nonacademic readers." James Bram
Library J 93:194 Ja 15 '68 170w

DITTES, JAMES E. The church in the way. 358p $6.95; pa $2.95 Scribner 250 Pastoral work. Church work. Psychology, Pastoral 67-24041

An analysis of the "possibilities for the Christian church in contemporary society structured by the analogy of resistance in psychotherapy. Dittes' main theme is 'Whatever the internal obstacle to the purposes of the church and its ministry, this obstacle presents precisely the occasion for a realization of those purposes.'" (Choice) General index. Index of applications to church activities.

"A most provocative analysis. . . . No other publication to date has appreciated the creative and positive potential of the church and its ministry in the face of realistic and unrealistic criticisms. The author modestly claims his book is meant essentially for ministers and theological students. It ought to be required reading for them. Perhaps the social scientist has much to learn from it also, both in terms of evaluating the possible influence of the church in society and as a model for evaluating any social institution. It is the best answer offered today for the critics of the validity and vitality of the church." Choice 5:792 S '68 130w

"Even before it was published. . . . [this book] was the subject of intense controversy. . . . If [Dittes'] proposals are taken as seriously as they should be, [it] could mark a turning point in clerical attitudes toward parish Protestantism of the ordinary garden-variety. . . . [The book] easily lends itself to misinterpretation as a reactionary withdrawal from current realities or a conservative defense of the status quo. . . . [However,] I think it has a special message for those who have given up on psychology and turned to sociology and political action; namely, that the psychotherapeutic dynamics Dittes favors are eminently relevant to current strategies for institutional and political change." T. C. Oden

Christian Century 84:994 Ag 7 '68 2100w

DIX, ROBERT H. Colombia; the political dimensions of change. (Yale univ. Yale study in political science) 452p $10 Yale univ. press 986.1 Colombia—Politics and government 67-24495

The author's "purpose is to present and analyze the political history of Colombia since 1934—the beginning of the process of modernization—concentrating on the elite's reaction to change and threatened change which culminated finally in the singular Frente Nacional." (Ann Am Acad) Bibliography.

"Dix tends to see Colombia's most poignant national problem as an inter-elite conflict rather than as a direct popular assault upon the established order itself. In so doing he does not do justice to the basic sociological fact that the violence . . . produced an accelerated over-politicization of the peasantry which, in turn, generated a momentum of nihilism and anarchy that outran the capacity of the traditional order to contain that which it had itself nurtured. I stress what appears to me as a shortcoming constructively and with full recognition of the obvious fact that Dix has produced an excellent work with which there is otherwise really very little to find fault. . . . [He] has given us a work that is not only intellectually stimulating but one that is a challenging instrument of pedagogy as well. I have assigned his book to graduate and undergraduate classes." K. F. Johnson
Am Pol Sci R 62:996 S '68 650w

"This is an excellent book on modern, political Colombia. It is comprehensive without being encyclopedic; it is analytic without being ludicrous; and it is academically respectable without the obscurity of professorialism and jargon. It is especially recommended to the following: serious tourists and all resident gringos in Colombia, social scientist Latin Americanists, those interested in the politics of development, and the handful of Colombians who ought to be and apparently are developing an indigenous 'political science.' . . . The analysis would hopefully give a uniquely determined prediction of the future, but either the model fails or Colombia poorly fits the model. The future, unfortunately but not unexpectedly, remains obscure." J. M. Hunter
Ann Am Acad 378:178 Jl '68 400w

Choice 5:868 S '68 110w

"[The] former foreign service officer in Colombia, and now a Yale professor of political science, has enlarged and rewritten his doctoral dissertation at Harvard as a contribution to the objective study of Colombian political life from the fall of dictator Rojas Pinilla through the advent of the National Front, an institutionalized coalition of the country's two traditional, warring political parties. The resultant political changes may be described as 'modernization by an elite.' A timely, well-written, and well documented study valuable in both public and academic libraries." F. E. Kidder
Library J 92:4512 D 15 '67 120w

DIXON, ROBERT G. Democratic representation: reapportionment in law and politics [by] Robert G. Dixon, Jr. 654p $12.50 Oxford 328.73 Apportionment (Election law) 68-18563

"The Supreme Court's 'one man-one vote' mandate is bringing revolutionary changes in the composition of American legislative assemblies. . . . [Professor Dixon of George Washington University] questions the extent to which 'adjusting the population of election districts, without regard to political parties and interest groupings, can equalize citizen influence on governmental decision-making and legislation.' He suggests that the problem of defining the true popular majority, and related matters of 'malrepresentation of interests' are just as important as 'malapportionment of people'; and he . . . projects his discussion of unresolved redistricting and reapportionment problems into the next decade." (Publisher's note) Table of cases. Subject index.

"[The length of this] discussion of 'the many-faceted reapportionment revolution [which is] an auspicious stage in an ongoing process of perfecting representative democracy' . . . may frighten some away; its lack of a clear-cut ideological pitch may confuse others. But author Dixon has brought together the materials one needs to help chart a path toward improved standards of representationality."

DIXON, R. G.—Continued

Christian Century 85:1109 S 4 '68 60w

"Professor Dixon fears that tyranny of the majority may become a reality. . . . [He] has written a definitive study. The work's only shortcoming is the lack of a bibliography. Because of the scholarly nature of the work it should be acquired by academic libraries and by public libraries." J. J. Fox

Library J 93:4148 N 1 '68 170w

"The first really comprehensive and complete account of the recent and continuing reapportionment revolution. . . . [It] is truly a magnum opus, providing historical background, theoretical framework, constitutional and legal analysis, and political insights. . . . Dixon's position is one of careful and dispassionate balance. . . . But the author's balance does not mean a sterile neutrality. He has no hesitation in letting the reader know his considered opinions and his conclusions on controversial or value-laden questions. A theme running throughout much of the book is Dixon's distinction between majoritarian democracy and consensus democracy. . . . [He] is much less specific about what he favors than what he disapproves of as ground rules for fair representation. . . . Leavened by an excellent style of writing and a ready sense of humor, it is a book that no one concerned with reapportionment can afford not to read." G. E. Baker

Va Q R 44:670 autumn '68 1100w

DJAMOUR, JUDITH. The Muslim matrimonial court in Singapore. 189p $7 Humanities press 347 Marriage—Laws and regulations.
Divorce—Laws and regulations. Courts—Singapore [66-11163]

The author presents a "study of the structure, functioning, and guiding principles of a Shariah (Islamic Law) Court, established in Singapore, Malaysia, in 1953 by new legislation (Muslims Ordinance, 1957) to deal with matrimonial suits (chiefly divorce) among Muslims. The author examines the effects on the court and its operations, judgments, and litigants of significant provisions in this legislation that were designed to promote marital stability among Singapore Muslims." (Am Anthropol) Bibliography.

"A competent, if unexciting study. . . . Dr. Djamour does not precisely state the objectives of her study or clearly summarize her findings and conclusions. . . . We learn that the new legislation has a varied effect on marriage and divorce, but the reduction in the divorce rate essentially remains unexplained. . . . In fact, the chief defect of this book is that it lacks [sociological] perspective. . . . The book also lacks a theoretical orientation. . . . In spite of these limitations, the study is a useful contribution to the literature on Islam and Islamic Law. Dr. Djamour competently describes the Muslim law of marriage and divorce as interpreted and manifested in Singapore, rather than the ideal Islam of Muslim purists." L. P. Gerlach

Am Anthropol 69:769 D '67 550w

"[The author] is to be congratulated for writing on a subject on which but little has been previously written. This book is the product of her field work in Singapore, carried out under the auspices of the London-Cornell Project for the study of Chinese and Southeastern Asian Societies, financed jointly by the Carnegie Corporation of New York and the Nuffield Foundation. . . . The most outstanding feature of the book is that the author has seldom missed the opportunity of suggesting reforms and making valuable comments, keeping in view the advancement of the status of Muslim women and the advancement of the country. Anyone wishing to go deeper into the subject will find the biography very useful. . . . The book will prove to be useful to sociologists, lawyers, students of Islam, those who are interested in Malayan problems and legal reformers." S. P. Khetarpal

Pacific Affairs 40:164 spring-summer '67 500w

DOBB, MAURICE HERBERT. Papers on capitalism, development and planning. 274p $5.95 Int. pubs.

330 Russia—Economic policy. Economic development. Capitalism 67-8104

A collection of the English economist's "essays dealing with economic history, with economie growth, with the Soviet economy (notably the question of investment priority for heavy industry) and lastly with Marx." (TLS)

"Reading this book is an intellectual delight. Few economists have the command of both modern economic theory and Marxian economics possessed by Dobb. Nor are there many who have the ability to clearly express complex propositions in such precise and exquisite language. One may quarrel with Dobb's views and preferences for institutional arrangements . . . but audire alteram partem Dobb's writings should be consulted without fail for a superb rationalization of some aspects of the Soviet mode of economic development." G. R. Feiwel

Am Econ R 58:592 Je '68 1650w

"Dobb, one of the leading Western experts on Communist economics and the Soviet economy, is sympathetic to Marxian economics and the Soviet Union without being an outright apologist for either. . . . Most of the essays in this current book have been published before, several in obscure places. They range in difficulty from the highly nontechnical 'Some Problems in the History of Capitalism' to the narrowly technical 'Kantorovitch on Optimal Planning and Prices.' A better discussion by a single author of the economics of Communism is P. Wiles, The Political Economy of Communism [BRD 1964]. A more useful book for students is Bornstein and Fufeld's The Soviet Economy. . . . Too technical in many places for the neophyte, yet too commonplace for the expert, this book is a marginal purchase."

Choice 5:528 Je '68 120w

Economist 224:1000 S 16 '67 150w

"The last essay is one of the most interesting in the collection, and shows much evidence of Mr. Dobb's erudition and insight into Ricardo and Marx. . . . His other essays on the transition from feudalism to capitalism, and other aspects of economic history, are, as usual, full of insight and incisive judgment, and are extremely relevant to the analysis of the contemporary economic crisis. Mr. Dobb's studies in the Soviet economy are of very great importance for all students of the Soviet Union, and, in particular, put into perspective the recent development of price theory in Marxist economics."

TLS p210 F 29 '68 330w

DOBIE, EDITH. Malta's road to independence. 286p il $5.95 Univ. of Okla. press

945.8 Malta—Politics and government

67-15591

The author "traces the history of Malta from French rule under Napoleon to independence within the British Commonwealth." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Dobie's researches have been in the Colonial Office Records . . . and the reports of parliamentary debates in the House of Commons and the House of Lords; and, in Malta, the debates of the Council of Government and of the Legislative Assembly. For the twentieth century she also makes full use of the newspapers in Malta and Britain. [She] has produced the first specialized analysis of the constitutional developments in Malta from 1800 to 1964. . . . The discussion of the development of the Labour party and trade-unionism . . . is particularly useful. The several missions of political and economic advisers from Britain are given sympathetic treatment despite understanding of the pressure for independence by a growing number of the Maltese electorate. The final referendum is carefully analyzed, and the several factors in the formulation of the grant of independence are lucidly presented."

Hilda Lee

Am Hist R 73:1570 Je '68 270w

"[The author] discusses the strategic importance of the islands; nationalist sentiment in Italy; and the traditional political activity of the dominant Catholic Church . . . in her detailed, scholarly account. . . . The book, necessarily limited in interest because of its specialized topic, is for larger collections."

Dorothy Sinclair

Library J 92:4500 D 13 '67 100w

DOBIE, J. FRANK. Some part of myself. 282p il $6.95 Little

B or 92

67-23832

This autobiography was assembled by the author's widow from 'a number of initial chapters for such a work, . . . combined with various published pieces to produce a narrative that covers her husband's childhood years in his beloved Brush Country of Southwestern Texas, his experiences as college student, schoolteacher, graduate student at Columbia University, and soldier in World War I, and the commencement of his lifelong career collecting the traditional tales and folklore of the Texas-Mexican borderlands." (Va Q R) Some of the chapters appeared in slightly different form in The New York Times Book Review, Southwest Review and Atlantic, Index.

"[The] writings are filled with characteristic Southwestern stories and folklore. . . . Recommended for public libraries generally." D. O. Kelley

Library J 92:3990 N 1 '67 120w

"[This book] is 'straight Texas,' that is, Old Texas: a delightful account of family, ranch, and academic life around the turn of the century, full of the memorable anecdotes, vivid personality sketches, and lively good humor that are the special charm of Dobie's many unique books."

Va Q R 44:xxii spring '68 200w

DOBRIN, ARNOLD. Italy: modern renaissance. 224p il $3.50; lib bdg $3.30 Nelson 914.5 Italy 68-14952

The author discusses the history and people of Italy and describes how "today a new surge of creativity has swept the Italian nation. An economic miracle, a modern renaissance, is taking place." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"[This volume] treats of the present progress and developments, with tourist information added for those who will travel and visit the countries. . . . [It] should find a place in the high school collection. . . . Grades eight to ten."

Best Sell 28:112 Je 1 '68 60w

"The author has successfully balanced the present and the past in a volume in which photographs and text capture not only vignettes of architecture, monuments, and ruins but reveal people at work and play as well as machinery and skyscrapers. A travelogue rather than a merely factual presentation, the book discloses Italy as it is today. . . . One is left with a feeling of the continuity of the tradition of Italian family life, the maintenance of the tradition of craftsmanship, and the successful adjustment of the nation to the twentieth century." P. H.

Horn Bk 44:438 Ag '68 140w

Reviewed by C. A. Gallant

Library J 93:13313 S 15 '68 60w

DOCKSTADER, FREDERICK J. Indian art in South America; photography by Carmelo Guadagno [Eng title: South American Indian art]. 222p maps $27.50 N.Y. graphic

709.8 Indians of South America—Art. South America—Antiquities 67-19372

"The works of art in the archaeological and ethnographical collections of the Museum of the American Indian are presented by the Director in a volume complementing his earlier works in similar format [Indian Art in America. BRD 1961, and Indian Art in Middle America. BRD 1965]. The range is from 750 B.C. to the present in all countries. Fifty objects postdate Discovery. All others are pre-Columbian. A short text surveys setting, chronology, and techniques. Each plate has discussion, measurements, and identification." (Choice)

Choice 5:187 Ap '68 150w

"In Dr. Dockstader's book, unlike recent art books about this area, there is no great emphasis on the 'high cultures' of Peru and the Andean highlands. He presents materials from the most ancient cultures of Ecuador, Colombia, and Venezuela, from contemporary groups of Argentina, Chile, Uruguay, Paraguay, and from the jungles of Brazil. The text, written as an introduction for a nonspecialist, is almost too cursory, but the 250 superb photographs (50 in color) with accompanying commentaries on style, origin, and significance present a most thorough survey of the arts of an important but largely unknown area. The majority of the objects shown are from the great collection of the Museum. . . . most of them in print for the first time." Mary Gormly

Library J 93:743 F 15 '68 280w

"The present collection is . . . an attempt to acquaint the reader with as broad a spectrum as possible . . . of the indigenous art expression of the southern continent. The aim is laudable, even though it produces an uneven document, with some materials perhaps included only because they are representative of a region or a culture, while some of the richest cultures are scantied in favor of these less exciting but regionally important forms. This results in understating the case for indigenous art, and in this respect the collection is somewhat of a disappointment. The two earlier volumes are more consistent in evoking a high level of wonder and delight." D'Arcy McNickle

Nation 207:54 J1 22 '68 1000w

"A 31-page introduction provides some perspective for looking at the illustrated specimens. This commentary includes brief statements about the geography of South America and the culture history of its native peoples. The maps accompanying the introduction show the locations of places or cultures mentioned in the text or the captions; these are occasionally misleading or in error. The chart showing the chronological relationships of the archaeological cultures mentioned is confusing and out of date; it reflects what was thought about a decade ago and does not incorporate many recent developments in South American archeology. These deficiencies are more than offset by the extensive bibliography, which will guide the reader through the recent technical literature. The book is not only interesting but also useful, and the author should be congratulated for the high quality of this work." T. C. Patterson

Natur Hist 77:71 My '68 410w

DODD, EDWARD. A pictorial peregrination through the shapely and harmonious, often enigmatical, sometimes shocking realms of Polynesian art; with introd. and captioned commentary by Edward Dodd. (The ring of fire, v 1) 368p il $25 Dodd

709.96 Art, Polynesian 67-16863

"After discussing the influence of environment, heredity and seafaring on Polynesian art, the author describes the place of the artist in the community. He then divides all art of the islands into decorative arts and fine arts. These two main sections of the book are . . . illustrated, with a minimum of text." (N Y Times Bk R) Glossary. Index.

"Photographs of 450 individual pieces, ranging from shell fishhooks to carved and decorated figures, make up the bulk of the book. This selection is evidence of the taste and interests of the author. . . . Beneath an informal literary style, Dodd makes a serious attempt to improve the art history of the area. This handsome book will be a resource for students, with its gallery of both well-known and rarely seen works of art. Questions will undoubtedly be leveled at the author, particularly for his 'irregular notions' on the origin of the Pacific peoples and the causes of their migration, but his attempt to relate art to the culture offers much to consider." Philip Gifford

Natur Hist 77:71 Ja '68 300w

"As with most books in the primitive-art field, the pictures are very largely supposed to speak for themselves, and the message does not always come through. . . . [However] the photographs in this book are excellent (though sometimes poorly reproduced); they show a better series of Polynesian specimens than has ever before been presented between two covers. . . . There are occasional lapses. . . . [Mr. Dodd] will find himself in disagreement with many ethnologists and authorities on primitive art. . . . Nevertheless, he makes many good points . . . [and has] produced not only a good book but the best written book in the primitive-art field yet to appear." E. S. Dodge

N Y Times Bk R p75 O 29 '67 750w

DODGE, BERTHA S. Hands that help; careers for medical workers; il. by Jane Clark Brown. 247p $4.75 Little

610.69 Medicine as a profession—Juvenile literature 67-19794

A "digest of medical history and current procedures in paramedical fields. Scientific and historical information is given on microbiology, genetics, pharmacology, physiology, pathology, biomedical engineering, radiology, angiocardiology, and [other fields]. . . . Information is included on training requirements for . . . careers [in these areas] and an appendix lists addresses of various professional societies. [Glossary. Index.] Grades six to twelve." (Library J)

DODGE, B. S.—Continued

"The author aptly describes any career that has the slightest connection with medicine. . . . The book has a comprehensive glossary, but even with the glossary most youngsters would find the text difficult unless they know a little of human physiology, zoology, botany and bacteriology. With such a background the advanced student will find the volume interesting and rewarding, but without this background it will be tedious and discouraging reading."

Best Sell 27:360 D 1 '67 90w [YA]

"Clear and thorough. . . . Some of the chapters show very little of the actual duties of the 'hands that help'; others give vivid impressions of the daily work of personnel in the operating room, as occupational or physical therapists, medical technologists, or laboratory assistants." Isadora Kunitz

Library J 92:4621 D 15 '67 90w

DOERING, HEINRICH UBBELOHDE-. See Ubbelohde-Doering, H.

DOHERTY, ROBERT W. The Hicksite separation: a sociological analysis of religious schism in early nineteenth century America. 157p $7.50 Rutgers univ. press

289.6 Friends, Society of 67-13077

"In describing and analyzing [the] social and theological episode [of the Quaker schism of 1827], the author develops concepts and techniques, drawn from sociological theory, to illuminate the bases for behavior of religiously oriented individuals and groups." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Quaker historians have not written much about this schism. Hitherto, the fullest modern treatment has been Rufus M. Jones, Later Periods of Quakerism [BRD 1922]. . . . Jones hinted at the possibility of a sociological interpretation, . . . but he left the matter with this hint. . . . Using the 'functional' approach of the sociologist, [Doherty] does something that no previous historian to my knowledge has ever done: he collects information about as many of the individual Quakers on one side or the other as he can. Most of this information must naturally come from courthouse records and have to do with the individual's worldly goods rather than his religious ideas. But this is what Doherty is looking for. . . . His final chapter is called 'Some Conclusions.' One would expect it to be a summary of the results of his research, but he scarcely mentions his own conclusions. He takes, rather, his study as a sample of what can be done by the method of 'collective biography.' . . . It is not the definitive answer to questions about the Hicksite separation, but it adds much to our understanding of it." F. B. Tolles

Am Hist R 73:1639 Je '68 600w

Reviewed by E. K. Nottingham

Am Soc R 33:660 Ag '68 470w

"Almost a third of the book is given to the supportive appendices, notes, and bibliographic material. Here the author identifies the social status of participants using such demographic data as wills, mortgage records, tax returns, and city directories. . . . A combination of history and sociology, this book proves the value of interdisciplinary research in American social and religious life. Highly recommended for collegiate libraries."

Choice 5:834 S '68 130w

"[The author] is both knowledgeable and objective. He makes a convincing case for the influence of social (or more precisely, socioeconomic) forces on the schism among early nineteenth-century Friends. The chief limitation to this study is, as Doherty puts it, the difficulty of looking 'into the inner psyche of individuals who are dead and who acted in a different sociocultural environment.' Although his interpretation contributes vitally to an understanding of the Hicksite-Orthodox division, it cannot explain the whole story. Nevertheless, this pioneer analysis suggests possibilities for similar inquiries in the rural counties of central and western Pennsylvania and in the other states to which the separation spread." W. D. Barns

J Am Hist 54:886 Mr '68 430w

DOLAN, EDWARD F. William Crawford Gorgas: warrior in white, by Edward F. Dolan, Jr., and H. H. Silver. 269p il. $4.50 Dodd

B or 92 Gorgas, William Crawford—Juvenile literature 68-14243

This biography describes how United States Army Surgeon General Gorgas introduced public health measures into the Panama Canal zone during the building of the Canal, and succeeded in controlling the mosquitoes which carried yellow fever. Index. "Ages eleven to fifteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

Best Sell 28:112 Je 1 '68 100w

"Gorgas' personal life and character, his deep love of his wife Marie, his devotion to his work, and his close relationship with Theodore Roosevelt are emphasized. Much description is given of the living conditions in Cuba where Gorgas served during the Spanish-American War. . . . Plausible dialogue has been added, while the events described are authentic." Helen Hawkes

Library J 93:2546 Je 15 '68 130w

"Gorgas's failure to get into West Point in the late 1870's resulted in his becoming a doctor. . . . The authors offer much useful information on his life and times but it is often conveyed in stilted question-and-answer dialogue and flashback after flashback. The book is also poorly edited. . . . [However, it is] fast moving and will hold the reader's interest. [It] is skillfully set in its historical context though it is often not clear when actual quotes (as opposed to paraphrase or invention) are used." N. R. Campion

N Y Times Bk R p26 My 19 '68 120w

DOLBEARE, KENNETH M. Trial courts in urban politics: state court policy impact and functions in a local political system. 137p $6.95 Wiley

347.9 Courts—New York (State). Law—U.S. 67-28778

This study of state trial courts is based on "one serving a 'suburban' county but one with more than a million people in it, with fragmented town and village government, in the New York metropolitan area. Its work is confined to civil cases. . . . [The author] differentiates between the hierarchical and procedural court structure . . . and the court as an institution of policy-making, and conflict resolving within the local political system." (Ann Am Acad) Index.

Reviewed by I. H. Bromall

Am Pol Sci R 62:983 S '68 750w

"The importance of the movement represented by the book is that while jolting analysis out of the judicial review rut it seeks really to define what is a study in politics, and on that basis to state how courts should be studied. . . . Quantitative analysis is relied upon rather heavily, if in rather simple forms, first to suggest the importance of the subject, . . . and second to characterize the particular court and its functioning. . . . For this reviewer, the value of empirical study of the court is demonstrated by the answers provided to the question, how is this defense [of the status quo] achieved? Dolbeare gives us graphic evidence in a series of chapters respectively devoted to the judges, the cases, the litigants, and the character of the decisions." G. S. Duggar

Ann Am Acad 373:169 Jl '68 550w

"Very little attention has been given to the work of the lower courts in the legal literature of today, and this small but substantial study is an attempt to remedy this and to make a beginning in the field. . . . Numerous tables reinforce the text. Recommended for law, academic, and large public libraries." T. E. Smith

Library J 92:4170 N 15 '67 130w

DOLIN, ANTON. The sleeping ballerina; with a foreword by Dame Marie Rambert. (Leisure time bk) 130p il $8 Sportsshelf

B or 92 Spessivtzeva, Olga [66-78031]

"Olga Spessivtzeva's mental collapse in 1940 was followed by her detention for twenty-two years in the Hudson River State Hospital, New York, almost forgotten by the world and those who had hailed her as the successor to Pavlova. . . . Dolin, who as an unknown youth first saw Spessivtzeva from the wings, paints a . . . picture of her development as a dancer, her triumphs throughout the world and her relationship with such giants of the ballet world as Fokine, Lifar and Lopoukhova, as well as himself." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Dolin's life has long been linked with that of Spessivtzeva—as youthful admirer, partner, and devoted friend. It was he who took a great interest in her during her years of confinement and who was instrumental in arranging her release. He is very much a part of this story and it was fitting that he should tell it in his very personal and informal style. He briefly documents her career and includes many fine and rare illustrations to enhance the text. Of human interest value, and of interest to dance collections, this book is suitable for libraries of all sizes." G. L. Mayer

Library J 93:3125 S 15 '68 170w

"[The author has] produced a slight and glossy book of belated homage and romantic appeal, owing much to the late André Schalkewitch's Magicienne Envoûtée. It will serve to show how little of a dancer's work can be transmitted or perpetuated save by observation or teaching." Carl Wildman

New Statesman 72:753 N 18 '66 190w

DOMANSKA, JANINA. Look, there is a turtle flying; story and pictures by Janina Domanska. unpag. $4.50 Macmillan (N Y)

393.2 Turtles—Stories. Folklore—Juvenile literature 68-12082

King Powoj of Poland "is accused of talking too much by his century-old pet turtle, Solon. But it is Solon, in his ambition to fly, who demonstrates that he is the one who talks too much and is made wiser by the discovery." (Book World) "Preschool to grade one." (Library J)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin

Book World p16 Je 9 '68 100w

Reviewed by P. M. Daltry

Christian Science Monitor pB3 My 2 '68 70w

Horn Bk 44:407 Ag '68 180w

"The line and watercolor (orange, brown and blue) illustrations echo the free, two-dimensional spacing of medieval drawings, with lines moving dramatically the length of the page. Altogether, a successful blend of picture and text." Steve Rybicki

Library J 93:2728 J1 '68 110w

"Many countries have variants of this folk tale, and here, in one of the most sprightly versions yet, the blithe humor of the text is echoed in the gay and graceful illustrations." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:37 My 11 '68 120w

DOMHOFF, G. WILLIAM, comp. C. Wright Mills and The power elite; comp. by G. William Domhoff and Hoyt B. Ballard. 278p $7.50 Beacon press

309.173 Mills, Charles Wright—The power elite 68-14705

"The provocative nature of The Power Elite [by C. W. Mills, BRD 1957] is attested to by the considered reviews it elicited from leading social scientists on the American and British scenes. The purpose of this book is to bring together some of the most thoughtful and representative of these many reviews in order to continue the discussion on power and social structure that was initiated by the publication of The Power Elite. . . . The book concludes with an essay by one of the editors, 'The Power Elite and Its Critics.' (Introd) Some of this material appeared previously in such periodicals as The American Political Science Review and The New York Times Book Review.

"There is some question whether the current revival of interest in the late C. Wright Mills, the radical sociologist, will last beyond the contemporary fad for new left anti-intellectualism in social thought. While it lasts, however, Mills will undoubtedly continue to be the James Dean of the movement. This book is a useful compendium of critiques of . . . Mills's most famous, most sweeping, but certainly not his best book. . . . Some of the critical essays, especially those by Dahl, Bell, and Parsons, are well known in their own right."

Choice 5:554 Je '68 200w

"There is a wide popular acceptance of Mr. Mills's basic point—that America is run by a combination of 'the high military, the corporation executives, and the political directorate.' The lively and balanced presentation here of Mr. Mills's views on elite analysis, the well-chosen sampling of reviews of The Power Elite, and Mills's 'Comment on Criticism' will be of value to both academic and large public libraries." E. M. Oboler

Library J 93:200 Ja 15 '68 100w

DOMHOFF, G. WILLIAM. Who rules America?

184p $4.95; pa $2.45 Prentice-Hall

301.440973 Social classes—U.S. U.S.—Politics and government—1945- 67-25926

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by N. W. Polsby

Am Soc R 33:476 Je '68 430w

Reviewed by A. A. Berle

Ann Am Acad 337:201 My '68 1000w

Choice 5:262 Ap '68 80w

Reviewed by William Schechner

Commonweal 89:67 O 11 '68 1500w

Reviewed by V. K. Dibble

Nation 207:470 N 4 '68 2400w

DONALDSON, FRANCES. Evelyn Waugh; portrait of a country neighbour. 124p pl $4 Chilton co.

B or 92 Waugh, Evelyn 68-11545

The author was a neighbor of Waugh's in Gloucestershire and attempts here to catch the man as she knew him from 1948 to his death in 1960. Index.

Best Sell 27:434 F 15 '68 120w

Choice 5:622 J1 '68 160w

"The plain title is indeed misleading, for Mrs Donaldson herself would not claim that the whole man is here. The ground covered by Evelyn Waugh himself in 'A Little Learning' [BRD 1964] is left untouched by her, and there is little emphasis on the part the Roman Catholic religion played in [his] life. . . . In his autobiography, Evelyn Waugh remarks that his father was a born actor in private life. Mrs Donaldson, for all her insight, fails sufficiently to underline that the same is true of the son. . . . There are some sad and pathetic passages here, but Mrs Donaldson is abundantly justified in stressing the genius and indomitable humour of a unique personality."

Economist 223:697 My 13 '67 380w

"There are certain literary men of whom even the slenderest recollection or anecdote fascinates; Waugh was one. Mrs Donaldson has written a brief, artless but compulsively readable memoir, in which she records what she can remember of his conversation, and publishes some characteristic Waugh mis-sives. Only on one visit did Mrs Donaldson have the foresight to make an immediate note of Waugh's conversation, so little verbatim material is included. But we get a moving portrait of the novelist in his twilight, writing better than ever but longing for death to release him from the burden of creation and a world he found increasingly alien; and there are, happily, a few flashes of the dark humour which Waugh found most congenial." Bede Longinus

New Statesman 73:839 Je 16 '67 270w

"Apart from a few observations . . . which could not have been difficult to make or write down, [this] memoir is a morass of trivia. It consists primarily of bad anecdotes . . . almost impossible to follow and remarkably uninteresting, partly because they are in themselves inconsequential and partly because Mrs. Donaldson is unable either to keep to the point or remember what happened. . . . The triviality of her subject matter suggests either she and her husband did not know the Waughs as well as she would like us all to believe, or that she is a thoroughly superficial woman; or, as I tend to think, a combination of both." Sarel Eimerl

Reporter 38:38 My 2 '68 900w

"Mrs. Donaldson has written a delightful and valuable short book, which gives a convincing picture of this complicated man, at the same time shedding both incidental and direct light on some of his writings. . . . Her account of him is thus both human and critical, both affectionate and amusing, and it joins Mr. E. R. F. Sheehan's article in The Cornhill of summer, 1960, and the Paris Review interview of 1963 as (so far) the only essential reading about Evelyn Waugh."

TLS p759 Ag 24 '67 270w

DONALDSON, GORDON. Scottish kings. 224p ill $5.95 Wiley

929.7 Stuart, House of. Scotland—Kings and rulers. Scotland—History 67-9651

A "survey of Scottish political history from Malcolm II (1005-34) through James VI (1567-1625) [which] shows that the Crown, confronted with strong rivals to . . . extensions of its power and beset with a . . . succession of royal minorities, gradually gained in stature." (Choice) List of genealogical tables. Bibliography. Index.

"For the nonspecialist who needs some knowledge of Scottish history, Donaldson's book will come as a welcome guide through what often is an impenetrable mass of confusing names and seemingly barbarous events. . . . Although mainly concerned with politics and foreign policy, Donaldson's comments on economic and social developments are most helpful while the . . . illustrations add significantly to the text. Libraries, where English history is taught, should buy this book."

Choice 5:1206 N '68 140w

"One should not be put off by the title: this is not a Crawlfe book or anything like it. During the period covered, from the thirteenth century to 1603, the history of the kings was the political history of Scotland; and Professor Donaldson treats it in that way. The story is complicated and ill-documented; by taking as the main thread the actions and sufferings of the successive kings (including among them Mary Queen of Scots) . . . he has produced a clear and almost a simple account of the development of the Scottish state. . . . This is a brilliant and informative book."

Economist 223:1027 Je 3 '67 270w

Reviewed by Tom Nairn

New Statesman 75:14 Ja 5 '68 290w

DONAT, JOHN, ed. World architecture 4. (Studio bk) 216p pl $16.95 Viking

724.9 Architecture, Modern—20th century (64-11432)

This volume is the fourth in a series of annual reviews. Its theme is Place and Environment. It "examines the factors which contribute to a successful, alive and humane physical environment. It illustrates the methods which are being used to renew the decaying fabric of old cities and to bring a much-needed spark of life to many new ones. The examples . . . includes: an island village and an amphitheatre from Greece; an indoor neighbourhood street from Israel; a national park for children from Japan; recreation centres from Switzerland; a university college from Italy; and an urban landscape from the USA." (Publisher's note) Indexes of architects and contributors, countries, buildings and projects. For volumes two and three see BRD 1966.

"[The] theme is illustrated with 36 buildings and projects from 16 countries reported in 216 pages of photographs, simplified (and often unclear) drawings, and short nontechnical discussions and explanations. The examples, ranging from houses to cities, are widely varied, but all were selected to illustrate an architecture where the actions of people are the principal object, where problems are defined in terms of ambience rather than form. The examples are interesting, and though the theme goes undeveloped, only suggested, it should prove stimulating to architectural students."

Choice 5:1127 N '68 170w

"The latest issue of this periodical publication is as full of stimulating pictures as before, and as bewilderingly miscellaneous. Again it hardly justifies its somewhat grandiose title, except in the sense that the buildings and projects included come from different parts of the world. They are not a survey of world architecture. . . . Britain is represented by a social and topographical survey of the Yorkshire town of Kirbymoorside made by three second-year students at the Architectural Association school. This is well done of its kind but seems a strange choice as Britain's only contribution to world architecture."

TLS p792 S 7 '67 230w

DONCHEV, ANTON. Time of parting; a novel; tr. from the Bulgarian by Marguerite Alexieva. 379p $5.95 Morrow

68-31910

"Two chronologically parallel narratives tell the tale of a seventeenth-century Bulgarian province's forcible conversion to Islam. A French nobleman, captured and enslaved by the Turks, is among the retinue of the persecuting janissary responsible for the province's conversion: he tells how the affair looks to a technical neutral in the camp of the invader. A local Bulgarian priest relates the other narrative; from a close association with the area's defiant martyrs he grows to a realization that Bulgarian nationalism can be as profound a resistance to the foreign overlord as the profession of Christianity. His apparent act of weakness, then, in leading his people to conversion, is actually an act of strong self-denial in the interest of the greater good." (TLS)

Reviewed by N. J. Loprete

Best Sell 28:85 My 15 '68 450w

"The Balkanese epic style may not hold an immediate appeal for most modern Americans, but this reader at least succumbed eventually much as one succumbs to the relentless drum-beat of Ravel's 'Bolero.' To be sure, this is not an item for all branch libraries, but it should be the kind of unusual reward that waits on one shelf in a larger collection for the right reader to come along—he will appreciate it profoundly when he finds it." V. D. Newman

Library J 93:1160 Mr 15 '68 190w

"A long novel, with glossaries for each section and notes on such things as the nose-gays worn by Bulgarian shepherds and the Curse on Monchil—one of the main characters, whose handsome head is eventually cut off by the Turks. The prose is also heavily romantic. . . . Altogether the book is not very well served by its translator, who appears to transcribe literally. Characters exclaim 'Lo!' and 'Draw back, curs!' and converse stiltedly in correct but awkward grammar. The descriptions of landscapes and battles are more impressive. . . . Donchev conveys a sense of familiarity with the turbulent Levantine history which still concerns the world three centuries later." Gillian Freeman

New Statesman 73:548 Ap 21 '67 270w

"A prose epic of incredible beauty, [this book] was awarded Bulgaria's highest literary award in 1966, the Dimitrov Prize. . . . Donchev's stylistic triumph is his ability to fuse the realistic and psychologically sophisticated mode of the modern novel with the primitive and intricately plotted epic matter of the folktales and songs from which his story derives. The result is tonally magnificent: page after page of strange, majestically paced action. [The author] lived in the Rhodope Mountains while he wrote, and has caught the nuances of his rich setting: a richness that can be compared to that of Tolkien or the music of Sibelius. . . . But, for all his technical mastery, Mr. Donchev's writing is most impressive for its moral clarity. He has Homer's sense of understanding both Bulgarian and Turk, of honoring the intrepid faith and unleashed wild energy of them both. And yet he has drawn heroes and villains as in the folk epics that underlie his heartbreaking tale." Guy Davenport

N Y Times Bk R p36 Je 9 '68 700w

Reviewed by Orville Prescott

Sat R 51:37 My 4 '68 550w

TLS p424 My 18 '67 280w

DONNELLY, JOSEPH P., ed. Wilderness kingdom. See Point, N.

DONNITHORNE, AUDREY. China's economic system. 592p $13.50 Praeger

330.951 China (People's Republic of China) —Economic conditions 67-23967

This study "based on original Chinese source material, deals mainly with the institutional framework of the Chinese economy [since the mid-1950's] rather than questions of growth and rates of change. . . . The period covered in detail coincides with the worsening breach with the Soviet Union and in the economic field the steady pressure for the substitution of simpler, often traditional Chinese ways or large-scale improvisation for sophisticated professionalism." (New Statesman) Bibliography.

Reviewed by E. S. Kirby

Ann Am Acad 337:181 My '68 330w

"The most comprehensive book that has yet appeared on the economic system of Communist China. . . . Contains an exhaustive bibliography of Western and Chinese literature.

No serious student of Asia or of socialist economic systems can afford to ignore this . . . scholarly work."

Choice 5:836 S '68 200w

Reviewed by Wen Chao Chen
Library J 92:2560 J1 '67 120w

"Written largely with the China expert or economic development specialist in mind, . . . this is a stimulating book, the result of many years of careful research by a distinguished economist. . . . That [it] does not go beyond 1966 in no way detracts from its value as a contribution to knowledge. . . . The only points that can be made concern questions of emphasis. For instance, in the absence of quantitative data are we justified in assuming that the restoration of the private sector in agriculture was largely responsible for the economic recovery of the early Sixties? . . . Again, to what degree does the sophisticated Chinese phenomenon of superficial conformity still exist?" Brian Hook

New Statesman 74:776 D 1 '67 430w

"[Miss Donnithorne's] statements are properly documented and are taken mainly from sources in Chinese, a welcome distinction when so many western 'experts' rely wholly or largely on translations. The forty-one pages of close-packed bibliography and the references in the text would by themselves make the book invaluable to future students. . . . But because this is so impressive a book that it will inevitably be regarded as authoritative its mistakes of detail and interpretation must be criticized. There is a consistent tendency to put economic performance in the worst possible light, and to take examples of things going wrong, even when quoted from obviously hostile sources, as typical of things as a whole. In her determination not to be fooled by the communists she shows an occasional perverse gullibility the other way round that can be staggering."

TLS p1264 D 28 '67 600w

DONOGHUE, DENIS. The ordinary universe; soundings in modern literature. 320p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

820.9 English literature—History and criticism. American literature—History and criticism 68-17514

The authors considered "include Tennyson and Hopkins as well as Eliot and Yeats, Wallace Stevens and William Carlos Williams, Eugene O'Neill and Saul Bellow, Ezra Pound and D.H. Lawrence. . . . [Donoghue challenges the assumptions] that the dialogue of man with himself is the only valid activity for creative artists; that the only significant conditions are those of extremity and violence; that if a work is consistent with its own terms it is necessarily valuable. . . . He suggests that sanity is quite as interesting as near-insanity; literature can still compass many other states besides those of alienation and despair." (Economist) Index.

"There are many ways to grind an ax, some better than others. Donoghue, an Irish critic with deep learning in American literature, knows how to do it. You don't have to infer that his book has a thesis to propound; he tells you so in the introduction. If his argument sounds like steel on a grindstone, at least the rasping keeps the reader keen. And there are sparks; the prose is brilliant. . . . Although I want to disassociate myself from many of his assumptions, 'everything of intensest significance' exactly describes my feelings about Mr. Donoghue as a critic. On the battlefield of ideas, he handles his broadax with the finesse of a fencer; and as for style, there is more splendor in [this book] than in any book of its kind I have read in a decade." Colin Campbell
Christian Science Monitor p13 S 5 '68 470w

"The various studies, each in itself highly intelligent, are linked to one another by Mr Donoghue's sustained interest in modes of knowing and ways of responding. He is equally interested in subtleties of verbal expression. His own writing is conspicuously civilised, but at the same time energetic; the reader is admitted to a discourse whose witty allusiveness sometimes makes quite heavy demands on his alertness of mind. . . . [Donoghue's] sympathies draw him to poets who, like Hopkins (himself no stranger to torment), celebrate 'the world's body.' . . . But he is far too discerning and sensitive a critic to write as a partisan."

Economist 228:50 J1 20 '68 390w

Reviewed by B. W. Fuson

Library J 93:3140 S 15 '68 250w

"[The author here] defends Life and Substance against the formalism of modern art and modern criticism. In the end I got rather lost. There is an axe to grind, but it is not ground very hard. Mr Donoghue . . . obeys two impulses as a critic—one to submit himself with candour and humility to works that he admires; the other to uphold his own scale of values. In writing of modern literature he does not find it easy to bring them together; they alternate rather than combine. . . . It occurs to me that Donoghue is not altogether an English reader. The standard Anglo-American literary valuations are natural to him; and perhaps this is right. . . . The first strength of this book is that it calls up so many questions and outlines so much that is worth further development. . . . Its second great virtue to me is in arousing comprehension and awareness of poetry with which I am not naturally in sympathy, such as Pound's Cantos. . . . Both those who accept and those who refuse Mr Donoghue's argument will still want the conversation to continue."

Graham Hough

New Statesman 76:18 J1 5 '68 600w

TLS p1134 O 3 '68 1000w

DONOSO, JOSÉ. This Sunday; tr. from the Spanish by Lorraine O'Grady Freeman. 177p $4.95 Knopf

67-18600

"This novel begins with a prologue told by a grandson, who recalls his 'old and absurd' grandfather Alvaro and his [grandmother] Chepa, frivolous in her senility. Then the novel proceeds with an anonymous narrator until the epilogue. . . . Don Alvaro, sexually inert with his wife, remembers his servant Violeta as the only woman who ever made him happy, his sense of life gained through her degradation. Chepa despises her husband and the men in her circle, but falls in love with a prisoner whom she visits weekly and whom she is finally able to parole. On yet another plane, the grandchildren invent fictitious playmates, entertain them and concoct elaborate burial services with mock prayers, while Chepa is attacked by a horde of animalistic children, also seemingly at play, as she begins a catastrophic search for her lover." (N Y Times Bk R) First published in Spanish under the title Este domingo.

"Through [this] pleasing translation . . . José Donoso reappears for the American public with a new novel that promises to be more successful than 'Coronation' [BRD 1965]. Artificiality and family traditions are viewed through the lustful relationships between capitalist aristocracy, the lower classes, and the criminal outcasts. Time and again, Donoso pounds on the necessity, moral and otherwise, which the rich have toward the poor to continue their vain and shaky position. Even charity comes only as a result of a need for passionate expression, which formal society bars from its midst. Man appears so self-conscious of his social status, so trapped by the System that he fears to leave his miserable existence under any and all conditions. . . . The seemingly simple tale of a typical Sunday achieves special significance when viewed as the continuation of the symbolic trends established by James and Proust." Saul Sosnowski

Best Sell 27:366 D 15 '67 240w

Reviewed by L. S. Thompson
Library J 93:571 F 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by O. T. Meyers
Nation 206:351 Mr 11 '68 1500w

"Donoso's world is composed of equal parts of violence and idleness. The descriptions of rituals in the ancestral home are richly and lovingly done . . . but the author never glosses over the lurking sense of brutality and repressed sexuality. 'This Sunday' formulates the conflict between authority and the self in faintly Jamesian terms. . . . It is a complex and suggestive world, one that would, incidentally, delight a Marxist critic. The inhabitants of this world are exact parodies of the roles they so laconically play. . . . [Through] to the meticulously calculated finale, Donoso's cool and biting intelligence demonstrates once again that he is one of the major novelists now writing in Latin America." Alexander Coleman

N Y Times Bk R p66 N 26 '67 650w

"Donoso has demonstrated without fireworks that it is possible to write a lean and supple kind of prose without aping Hemingway, to dive deep without Dostoevskian ballast, to be evocative without effeminacy and poetic without ambiguity. Stranger yet, and worth making a note of as an exemplary instance of the discretion the craft imposes on the true craftsman. . . . This Sunday is peopled by characters with wills of their own, who go to the devil in their own ways, rough-hewing their own ends and making a wretched job of it. . . . Here is a very fine novel. . . . The author is a first-rate artist." Gerald Kersh

DONOSO, JOSÉ—Continued

Sat R 50:30 D 9 '67 650w

"The dialogue [of Donoso's novel] is rich with the overtones of the subtle interaction between the 'civilized' and educated manner of his upperclass characters and the virile Chileanisms of popular speech. His work is consequently very difficult to translate, and perhaps more so into American than into English. Indeed, in this American version of Este Domingo the central character, Chepa, comes off badly as a lady of the higher ranks of Chilean society. With her use of 'bastard' and 'gotten' she appears incongruously tough. There are other things about the translation which cannot be interpreted as transatlantic variations. Many sentences pile qualifying clause upon qualifying clause and are disagreeably over-extended and jerky. Where it occurs, the Spanish historic present is left in the present, to no apparent advantage. And certain key words and phrases are translated too loosely."

TLS p173 F 22 '68 150w

DONOVAN, FRANK R. Wild kids; how youth has shocked its elders—then and now! 287p $6.50 Stackpole bks.

364.36 Juvenile delinquency. Youth 67-21671

The author "states his purpose was to prove that today's 'wild kids' are no wilder than those of previous generations and that, in fact, they are much tamer than some of their predecessors. In support of these views, he presents . . . [accounts] of young people in many countries and cultures." (Library J)

"This is a lively history of juvenile delinquency from the dawn of civilization to the present. . . . [Mr. Donovan's] descriptions of the 'unmerry children of merry England' and of the slum children of 19th-Century America are particularly appalling. However, I feel it is stretching a point to compare today's delinquents to the temple girls of ancient Babylon. Mr. Donovan's final chapter on today's young people is especially pertinent, though I suspect there will be some who quarrel with his conclusions. I do not. Recommended for parents, teachers, and others interested in teen-agers." Lola Dudley

Library J 92:3653 O 15 '67 130w

"In his treatment of both savage and civilized societies, Donovan frequently confuses license with legitimacy. During seven-league strides from ancient Greece and Rome through medieval and Elizabethan Europe to colonial, Depression, atomic, and narcotic America, however, he gives cause for reflection about values and how to teach them." John Calam

Sat R 50:74 D 16 '67 60w

DONOVAN, JOHN C. The politics of poverty. 157p il $5.75; pa $1.45 Pegasus

323.1 Economic assistance, Domestic. Poverty. U.S.—Social policy 67-25505

"What were the central concepts of the war on poverty as it was conceived late in 1963 and early in 1964? Who formulated them? Who sponsored them? When and where did President Johnson lose the political initiative and for what reasons? How far did the Johnson administration intend using federal power and federal funds to stimulate fundamental change in the Negro ghettos of the great cities? Does the nation have the resources to fight a two-front war, one in Vietnam, the other in the dark ghettos? These are some of the basic questions to which this study of the poverty program addresses itself. . . . [The author maintains that] the war on poverty is helping to reshape American politics." (Intro.) Bibliography. Index.

"A sketchy, highly superficial but readable review of the formation of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 and of the political issues involved in its first two years of operation. . . . Donovan's book is a frightening one for several reasons. First, it clearly demonstrates how irrational our decision-making system can be. . . . Second, [it shows] that the administration, either wittingly or unwittingly, created hopes for winning the war on poverty without developing and supporting a program for that purpose. . . . Third, the book implies, convincingly, that Johnson failed completely in his attempt to fight the war in Vietnam and the war on poverty. After identifying the war on poverty as his personal crusade, the President virtually abandoned it. . . . Finally, I am troubled by Professor Donovan's overly optimistic view as to how a solution of this country's racial problems can be achieved. . . . [His] hope in the present political power of Negroes is naive. Militant community action . . . is more likely to be the answer." J. H. Strange

Am Pol Sci R 62:636 Je '68 800w

"Donovan, chairman of the department of government and legal studies at Bowdoin College, and formerly manpower administrator for the Department of Labor . . . has given us a readable, illuminating study of the politics of poverty. . . . It is [vital] for us to understand why the Negro poor are angry. Mr. Donovan's book is one that will help us achieve that understanding. Highly recommended for public and academic libraries." David Cooley

Library J 92:4008 N 1 '67 200w

Reviewed by Paul Marx

New Repub 59:33 Jl 6 '68 380w

DOOB, LEONARD W., ed. Ants will not eat your fingers; a selection of traditional African poems. 127p $3.95 Walker & co.

896 African poetry—Collections 66-22514

An "anthology of . . . poems, chants, songs, prayers, and proverbs from [a number of] African ethnic groups, selected, translated, and edited by an . . . Africanist psychologist from . . . ethnographies and folklore collections of the past." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[This selection] is frankly designed for reading pleasure. To this end, Doob has felt free to alter, to omit, and even to add occasional words or phrases, thereby destroying the work for most scholarly uses, but he has appended a complete bibliography of the original sources. Although this cavalier approach may seem unintentionally patronizing to some, the poems themselves turn out to be alternately witty, elegant, and profound, and a real pleasure to read. . . . Comparable to [A.] Tibble's African-English Literature [BRD 1967] in readability if not in scope, this unusually attractive collection deserves wide circulation in school and out."

Choice 4:1122 D '67 150w

Reviewed by R. K. Burns

Library J 91:5625 N 15 '66 140w

DOOB, LEONARD W., ed. A crocodile has me by the leg; African poems; il. by Solomon Irein Wangboje. unpag. $2.95 Walker & co.

896 African poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature 67-23097

A collection of previously published translations of anonymous African poems from the oral tradition. Professor Doob has occasionally modified the poems "so that they could be more easily and quickly understood." (Pref) "Age nine and up." (Book World)

"Suggested for ages 9 up, it seems to me the book also has strong interest for younger ages and all the way up to adults. . . . These 'unwritten songs' (as Willard Trask calls such material) speak directly of love, joy, hunger, the sorrows of death: the great elemental chain of life. There is genius in many of these verses." Eve Merriam

Book World pt 2, p26 (children's issue) N 5 '67 120w [YA]

"The illustrations by a Nigerian artist are delightful, especially the title sketch and the ambiguous two-faced woman. Though the projected audience may have been youthful, the book is to be recommended for college libraries as well. Nothing quite like it exists in the field."

Choice 5:969 O '68 160w

"[This collection] belongs in all school and public libraries, as well as in any home whose children and grownups enjoy poetry. The emotional range of each is wide and the literary merit consistently high." M. L. Birmingham

Commonweal 87:184 N 10 '67 20w [YA]

Horn Bk 44:187 Ap '68 200w

"A Nigerian artist's striking woodcuts in brown and orange on cream-colored paper and general excellence of format distinguish this book of African folk poems. Consisting mostly of short chants, songs, or laconic observations, the poems have gone through one or more translations and rarely convey the sense of personal communication which many people associate with poetry; however, some of them contain a wry and understated humor, as in 'Song of an Unlucky Man.' The poems are authentic, and translations and sources are acknowledged, making this a good purchase for cross-cultural studies." Della Thomas

Library J 93:1309 Mr 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Harry Behn

N Y Times Bk R p22 Mr 10 '68 110w

DOOLEY, D. J. The art of Sinclair Lewis. 286p $5.50; pa $2.25 Univ. of Neb. press

813 Lewis, Sinclair 65-17173

The author's "major purposes are to provide a chronicle of Lewis's life and literary career and to achieve a balanced critical assessment of his work that will temper the general disrepute summarized in Mark Schorer's judgment of Lewis as 'one of the worst writers in modern American literature.'" (Am Lit) Bibliography. Index.

"Appropriately, Mr Dooley's book avoids the earlier tendency to dissect and classify Lewis: rather, it treats him seriously and sympathetically as a writer who still speaks to us, as a man, and as a thinker. . . . [Dooley] has written a solid, carefully researched, clear, readable, and sensible book that views Lewis's life and work in accurate perspective and provides a comprehensive introduction and overview. This is neither a strikingly original nor profound book, but it is a sincere and useful one. Although Mr. Dooley relies heavily on extant scholarly and critical sources, including Schorer's Sinclair Lewis: An American Life [BRD 1961], he does not hesitate to draw his own conclusions. He is especially to be commended for his succinct and even occasionally fresh chronicle of the central events of Lewis's life. . . . Despite the promise in the title, . . . [Dooley] has given us an account not of the art, but of the career." S. N. Grebstein

Am Lit 40:100 Mr '68 600w

"Dooley (Toronto) offers . . . a well versed but cautious approach to materials of Lewis' life and work and a dutiful, brief, on-the-fence handling of previous Lewis criticism. . . . [His] mildly psychoanalytical approach (e.g. Lewis wrote for escape from the conventional milieu) backs up frequent complaints about Lewis' problem-novel methods but prevents due praise of his wit, satiric art, and power. Intended as an introduction to Lewis, it treats less of his art (despite the title) than of Dooley's own distaste for Lewis' American shrewdness, gusto, and zap. . . . Index includes names and titles only."

Choice 4:1115 D '67 200w

DOREN, MARK VAN. See Van Doren, M.

DOREY, T. A.; ed. Latin biography; chapters by Edna Jenkins [and others]. 209p $5.95 Basic bks.

870.9 Biography (as a literary form) 67-19467

"There are in this book eight chapters, by different authors, about various ancient and medieval biographers. The preliminary discussion [of the] . . . origins of Latin biography appears in the first chapter." (TLS) Index of names.

"E. Jenkinson writes on Nepos, E. I. McQueen on Quintus Curtius Rufus. . . . T. A. Dorey on William of Poitiers' Gesta Guillelmi [and] D. H. Farmer on William of Malmesbury's Life of Dunstan, and Life of Wulfstan. . . . Unfortunately there seems to be little agreement among the authors on what biography is or how it should be approached critically. . . . More can be learned from [R.] Southern's St. Anselm and His Biographer [BRD 1964] than appears here. Although scholars welcome a series of up-to-date essays, the general reader is less adequately served, since little attempt is made to place the essays into any understandable framework."

Choice 5:618 J1 '68 190w

"It is surprising, in a book about Latin biography, to come upon a chapter on the Greek author Plutarch, but he very much formed a part of the Roman as well as the Shakespearian scene, and A. J. Gossage has written about him usefully. . . . Influence is also stressed in the excellent analysis of Suetonius. . . . A. R. Birley's discussion of the exasperating, lunatic, fraudulent Augustan History sums up the current state of research efficiently. . . . Rosalind Brooke's account [of the biographies of St. Francis of Assisi] makes one reader at least want to turn to the original."

TLS p991 O 19 '67 700w

DORMON, JAMES H. Theater in the ante bellum South, 1815-1861 [by] James H. Dormon, Jr. 322p il $8 Univ. of N.C. press

792 Theater—U.S.—History. Southern States 67-26033

This study "describes the development of theater, amateur and professional, in the South and Southwest, during the 45-year period preceding the Civil War." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by L. B. Wright

Am Hist R 73:1636 Je '68 500w

"The work is reliable, and generally, though not completely, free from errors. . . . Chapters on audiences and programs include some of the most interesting material." M. S. Shockley

Am Lit 40:258 My '68 750w

"Although there is a great dependence on secondary sources, [this volume's] value as a reference book is great. The almost pedantic use of footnotes, however, has produced a tedious narration."

Choice 5:362 My '68 130w

"Dormon, professor of history at the University of Southwestern Louisiana, sets out to show that the American theater was the most important entertainment medium in the period between the Wars of 1812 and the Civil War. . . . [He] is extremely thorough in his coverage of actors, troupes, plays, playhouses, audience and critical reaction to various sorts of theater throughout the South. His bibliography is almost excessively thorough and quite valuable. This is an important book for any theater or Southern history collection." C. A. Raines

Library J 92:4024 N 1 '67 130w

DORN, JACOB HENRY. Washington Gladden; prophet of the social gospel. 489p $8 Ohio state univ. press

B or 92 Gladden, Washington 67-17173

A biography of the Congregationalist minister from Columbus, Ohio who "became famous in the 1880's and 1890's as a proponent of labor-capital cooperation and related causes, including urban reform and international peace." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"This conscientious biography adds a useful chapter to the history of liberal religion in late 19th- and early 20th-century America. . . . For graduate students in the field, rather than general circulation. Excellent bibliography."

Choice 5:357 My '68 150w

Christian Century 85:236 F 21 '68 60w

DORNBERG, JOHN. The other Germany. 370p $6.95 Doubleday

914.3 Germany (Democratic Republic) 68-11763

The author, "currently bureau chief for Eastern Europe at Newsweek, was born in what is today East Germany. In 1939, while still a child, he and his parents fled the country and came to the United States. . . . [His theme is that] East Germany's most bitter and disillusioned people have turned into a nation 'defiantly and defensively proud of [its] achievements,' and a formerly chaotic and hopeless economy has developed into the world's eighth largest industrial power." (Sat R) Bibliography.

"Here we have an authoritative account of what East Germany is like today. . . . [Dornberg] employs a Guntheresque technique without Gunther's personal style, which means that he has not Gunther's fluency or wit, and indeed his writing is at times awkward. Never mind. The content of the book is what matters, not its manner. It gives the best account you could find in English of that land. . . . [which] calls itself the German Democratic Republic."

Vincent Sheean

Book World p3 J1 28 '68 750w

Christian Century 85:844 Je 26 '68 50w

DORNBERG, JOHN—Continued

Reviewed by Paul Wohl

Christian Science Monitor p13 S 27 '68
800w

"According to Mr. Dornberg, East Germany has made enormous economic progress since the Wall was built in Berlin, and is now one of the major industrial countries of Europe. To that extent, his analysis is supported by those of other experts. But the general validity of some of Mr. Dornberg's other observations and sweeping statements may be open to doubt. Nevertheless, this is an informative and interesting book on a Soviet satellite country about which we ought to know much more in an era of increasing unrest in Central Europe. The book is recommended for larger public libraries and for academic libraries with comprehensive collections on European affairs. The bibliography is very inadequate." F. E. Hirsch

Library J 93:2886 Ag '68 250w

Reviewed by Flora Lewis

N Y Times Bk R p16 O 27 '68 600w

"Dornberg has visited the German Democratic Republic repeatedly since 1960, observing its transformation from the grim last bastion of Stalinism to a country burgeoning with confidence and nascent nationalism. . . . Carefully researched and bolstered by page after page of reasoned argument based on eyewitness observation, Dornberg's book acts as a needed corrective for wishful thinking in the West." L. L. Snyder

Sat R 51:33 JI 13 '68 700w

DORSEN, NORMAN. Frontiers of civil liberties; with a pref. by Robert F. Kennedy and an introd. by Louis H. Pollak. 420p $8.95 Pantheon bks.

323.4 Civil rights. U.S.—Constitutional law
67-13321

This volume "presents a panoramic view of contemporary issues in civil liberties. . . . It is divided into four sections: . . . general civil liberties . . . First Amendment rights, due process, and discrimination." (Publisher's note) Index.

Christian Century 85:1342 O 23 '68 40w

"Professor Dorsen writes authoritatively of the struggle to preserve and enlarge individual freedom. He presents documentary material hitherto unfamiliar except to specialists, along with highly readable and perceptive commentary, and in so doing gives the layman an excellent idea of the work of a civil liberties lawyer. . . . A preface by the late Senator Robert F. Kennedy emphasizes the book's central theme, that the liberty of all is threatened by denial of individual rights." L. A. Teclaff

Library J 93:3115 S 15 '68 140w

"This is a collection of the raw materials with which civil liberties law is made. . . . Dorsen has written prefaces and postscripts to each brief, conference report, article etc., explaining lucidly the occasion or problem that prompted the effort and then the legal and other developments that have taken place since its writing. These notes, and the clarity with which Dorsen writes, make this a book that can be read easily and with enormous profit not only by lawyers but by anyone interested in public affairs. Clearly and openly, it is a work of advocacy, expressing a civil-libertarian viewpoint on the hot issues of our times. Yet there is a calm reason, a judiciousness, and a fundamental fairness in analysis." A. F. Westin

N Y Times Bk R p36 N 24 '68 1100w

Reviewed by Albert Vorspan

Sat R 51:34 N 9 '68 1000w

DORSETT, LYLE W. The Pendergast machine. 163p maps $6 Oxford

329 Kansas City, Missouri—Politics and government. Pendergast, Thomas Joseph. Pendergast, James 68-15892

The author traces the development of an urban political organization from its origins to its decline. "Each of the chapters covers a stage in the organization's growth by demonstrating how the Pendergasts continually searched for ways to serve, and find areas of agreement among the numerous individuals and groups that had interests to protect and goals to attain. The emphasis is on the successive steps of expansion from the control of a single ward to eventual domination of the whole city. And finally I show how the political leaders of Kansas City, once they had organized their community, were able to extend the range of their influence throughout the entire state." (Pref) Index.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 221:113 My '68 160w

"[This book] will be useful to students of urban history and municipal politics. Dorsett's major thrust is an analysis of the growth of a classical political machine against the backdrop of a dynamic city. . . . By the mid-1930's, the Pendergast machine was a controlling force in Missouri politics and exerted influence on the national level as well. Dorsett eschews judging the merits or shortcomings of the Pendergast organization. Instead, he focuses on the structural and functional facets of machine politics in order to explain the emergence and persistence of the 'boss' in American politics."

Choice 5:861 S '68 150w

"Dorsett has written a lucid account of the political fortunes of James and Thomas Pendergast. . . . The present concern with the development of new modes of citizen participation has lent great importance to historical studies of the growth of cosmopolitanism and the re-orientation of urban politics. . . . [But] Dorsett never really stops to examine these issues because his focus is almost solely upon the 'machine' itself rather than upon the broader fields of government or political behavior and attitudes." S. J. Mandelbaum

J Am Hist 55:423 S '68 310w

Reviewed by Mitchel Levitas

N Y Times Bk R p48 My 12 '68 200w

DORST, JEAN. South America and Central America; a natural history: phot. by Rolf Blomberg and others; maps drawn by Kenneth Thompson. (The continents we live on) 298p $20 Random house

574.9 Natural history—Latin America. Animals—Latin America
67-22633

After "describing the topography and climate of each of the 16 ecological regions into which he has . . . divided the area, [Dorst] depicts characteristic features of the natural habitat of that region and describes some of its most typical mammals and birds." (Library J) Index.

"This is a superb work of literature and art. No books on natural history can claim illustrations superior to those found in this presentation of the flora, fauna, and topography of Central and South America. Many of the illustrations are full-page color photographs, and the choice of subjects is excellent. Highly recommended."

Choice 5:518 Je '68 60w

"From the point of view of geology, climate, vegetation, and native animal life, South America is perhaps the most diverse continent. In this fifth volume in a notable series, Jean Dorst of the Museum of Natural History in Paris concentrates on the diversity. . . . The text seems to be authoritative, and the illustrations are generally excellent. For academic and public libraries." Louis Barron

Library J 93:1010 Mr 1 '68 160w

Reviewed by Peter Farb

Sat R 50:46 N 25 '67 130w

TLS p272 Mr 14 '68 400w

DOSTAL, RUDOLF. On integration in plants; tr. by Jana Moravkova Kieley; ed. by Kenneth V. Thimann. 218p il $5.95 Harvard univ. press

581 Botany

67-27083

The investigations described in this book are concerned with "the interrelations among the different organs of plants and the ways in which the various components of the plant correlate to form an integrated whole." (Publisher's note) Bibliography, Index. Published originally in 1959 entitled O Celistvosti Rostliny.

Choice 5:643 JI '68 110w

"Dostal, professor emeritus of botany at the College of Agriculture in Brno, Czechoslovakia, is a pioneer in plant biology who has done extensive research in hormonal control. His dominant interest has been the influence of one plant organ upon the other, for example, the relationship between leaves and tubers. In this book he presents a group of plant experiments [which] . . . lead to the conclusion that in plants one infrequently discovers a regulatory mechanism comparable to the neurohormonal system of animals. . . . Professor Dostal's concisely written text is accompanied by excellent illustrations. . . . This book will serve as a meaningful outlook to biological history. Highly recommended for large public libraries and science collections. Both the lay reader and the professional botanist will find some stimulus here." D. S. Kalk

Library J 93:1644 Ap 15 '68 190w

"[This book] has been carefully edited, somewhat updated, and critically annotated by Kenneth Thimann. We owe deep thanks to all concerned, for the volume furnishes a unique glimpse into the scientific thoughts, prejudices, and fancies of a provocative and versatile botanist. This is a book completely without graphs or tables, but studded with many simple sketches of plants showing morphological and growth responses to surgery, chemical treatments, and environmental stimuli. The absence of 'hard' data makes some of the conclusions difficult or impossible to accept, but does increase the readability and charm of the author's message. Thimann has wisely protected the reader against some of the unwarranted conclusions by carefully placed and worded footnotes. . . . Yet other dubious points have been permitted to remain unchallenged, and some misinformation is therefore bound to be communicated. Dostál is a convinced Michurinist, or at least writes like one. In this post-Stalin era, such views come as a bit of a shock. Thimann handles them gently, almost paternalistically." A. W. Galston

Science 160:657 My 10 '68 420w

DOSTOEVSKII, FEDOR MIKHAILOVICH. See Dostoevsky, Fyodor

DOSTOEVSKY, FYODOR. The notebooks for The idiot; ed. and with an introd. by Edward Wasiolek; tr. by Katharine Strelesky. 254p il $6.95 Univ. of Chicago press

891.73

67-25513

"The notebooks reveal [that] Dostoevsky went through at least eight plans for this novel, and many variations of each plan. It appeared in installments in The Russian Messenger, and after the first . . . part was complete, Dostoevsky had no idea how he was going to continue; as Wasiolek points out, the second part begins like a new novel. He was not able to deliver it on his original deadline and . . . the whole novel was almost eighteen months in the writing." (Publisher's note) Name and topic index.

"[Dostoevsky's notes] are fragmentary and disjointed. Wasiolek, one of the leading scholars of comparative and Russian literature, has done an admirable job of bringing order out of chaos in his prefatory essays to each of the plans, concisely summarizing the developments of each successive draft, both in relation to the earlier plans and to the final form of the novel. The difficult job of conveying Dostoevsky's notes with his own deletions and corrections is handled in a scholarly yet readable fashion. For the specialist—either for non-Russian reading Dostoevsky scholars or for students of the literary creative process. Excellent name and topic index."

Choice 5:350 My '68 160w

"[This is a] companion volume to the 'Notebooks for Crime and Punishment' [BRD 1967], again superbly edited by Edward Wasiolek, and well translated, (despite difficult problems of rendering) . . . from the 1931 Russian edition. . . . This invaluable material provides readers with the illuminating experience of coming into intimate contact with a creative genius during the gestation period of a literary masterpiece. . . . These copious notes, each nearly always brief, are a form of creative shorthand of pondered matter which can spark pages of text in the finished novel. . . . Unlike the notebooks for 'Crime and Punishment,' there are relatively few passages of dialogue, and some of the content, unused in 'The Idiot' turns out to have a curious relevance to characterizations and episodes in later novels, especially 'The Possessed' and 'The Brothers Karamazov.' " E. J. Simmons

N Y Times Bk R p1 F 18 '68 1500w

Reviewed by Harold Rosenberg
New Yorker 44:159 O 5 '68 8000w

Va Q R 44:cxvi summer '68 160w

DOTY, ROBERT. Adolph Gottlieb, by Robert Doty and Diane Waldman; pub. for the Whitney mus. of Am. art and the Solomon R. Guggenheim museum. 121p il col il $8 Praeger

759.13 Gottlieb, Adolph

68-19542

The authors "have combined in their text biographical information including an account of Gottlieb's early training and connections with various schools, his sources of artistic stimulation such as aboriginal and Freudian myths, and his thoughts on his revolt from the mainstream of painting." (Library J) Bibliography.

"The 85 illustrations of which 19 are in color offer a generous sampling of Gottlieb's paintings from 1936 to the present. The text . . . is a valuable addition to the growing list of exhibition catalog-monographs of the older contemporary artists. One hopes, however, that future scholars will not accept all that is written in this catalog as well as similar ones as gospel. It is difficult to imagine that the writers can be sufficiently free of pressure from the artists and the sponsoring museums in whose interest it is to establish the prestige and historical significance of the exhibition on bases which cannot be reasonably established for works as recently executed as some of the ones in this book. . . . Excellent bibliography and documentation of the artists. Recommended."

Choice 5:764 S '68 170w

"This book may well serve as a model for the illustrated, brief essay used to introduce an artist to the reading public. Both the color and black-and-white reproductions are clear, rich in tone, and arranged chronologically for easier comprehension of the artist's development. . . . The authors explain what the artist is trying to say and how his style enhances his pictorial form of personal speech. The book is recommended for collections dealing with contemporary painting." R. L. Enequist

Library J 93:2849 Ag '68 140w

DOUGLAS, JACK D. The social meanings of suicide. 398p $8.50 Princeton univ. press

301.1 Suicide. Durkheim, Emile

67-14408

An associate professor of sociology at Syracuse University "argues that the official statistics on suicide, which Durkheim and other sociologists have used to construct their theories, are highly unreliable. He demonstrates that sociological analyses of social meanings based on these statistics are largely the result of biases in the official statistics and that Durkheim's explanations of suicide rates, in terms of abstract social meanings, amount to little more than ad hoc imputations of meanings that fit his own preconceived theory. Douglas presents a new general approach to the analysis of social meanings, analyzes some common patterns of meanings of suicidal actions, and sets forth material to illustrate how the social meanings of actual cases should be studied." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Though this review is negative, the book's significance is not questioned. . . . Douglas makes an admirable effort to assemble evidence on the reliability question [of official suicide rates]. Unfortunately, however, he ignores his own admission that we have very little evidence and subsequently indulges in non sequiturs. . . . Most sociologists who use official suicide rates express doubts about reliability . . . [but] they use official rates for a good reason—there is no feasible alternative. . . . They assume that the relative reliability of the rates makes them better than nothing, but Douglas demands a substantiating demonstration. I submit that if sociologists had to demonstrate the reliability of their data, macroscopic research would terminate. . . . Douglas writes as though a sociological study of suicides is possible. But the procedure for identifying cases is not specified, and the change in terminology from suicide to suicidal 'phenomena' or 'actions' is not helpful." J. P. Gibbs

Am J Soc 74:201 S '68 2200w

Reviewed by R. E. L. Faris

Am Soc R 33:642 Ag '68 650w

"The critique of Durkheim pervades the volume; the tightly reasoned exposition must be read to appreciate the depth of the treatment. . . . Douglas amasses a number of reasons why suicide rates are unreliable. This reviewer is not convinced, however, that all official rates are as unreliable as to be of no value to scientific analysis. . . . The positive contribution of the book lies in the discussion of the situational or social meanings of suicide acts—intentions, such as revenge, atonement; the conception of death itself; and the significance of common sense definitions of suicide. Thus, the suicide incident must be grounded in the primary language of 'the presentation of self.' Although this position is insightfully portrayed, it is not presented as an alternative to other approaches. At times the treatment borders on the polemic. . . . The thoughtful analysis in this volume, however, should bring suicide research closer to the empirical data and their explanation." A. L. Wood

DOUGLAS, J. D.—Continued

Ann Am Acad 378:200 J1 '68 430w

"Suitable as a reference for an advanced course in social pressures. Adequately indexed; good bibliography."

Choice 5:652 J1 '68 140w

DOUGLAS, MARJORY (STONEMAN). Florida: the long frontier. 307p col maps $6.95 Harper 975.9 Florida—History 64-18051

The author "traces the development of Florida from its geological formation to the completion of Mr. Flagler's Overseas Railroad in 1912, and brings Florida history up to the present by means of her 'Personal Prologue,' which describes her impressions of Florida in 1915. An epilogue covers the years after her return to Florida in 1920." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Lacking literary grace, plagued by sweeping generalizations and dubious judgments, leaning on too many pot-boilers, old wives' tales, and legends-in-pamphlets, this book will not please scholars. . . . Some of the careful scholars—especially of the Spanish period—tell the story better and just as clearly and more carefully (albeit not so breathlessly). School and public libraries in Florida should have it. Undergraduate college libraries with limited budgets would do well to lean on the more dependable and standard works."

Choice 5:549 Je '68 200w

"To cram five centuries and 60,000 square miles between the covers of a book is quite a feat, but Mrs. Douglas has managed to do this, even though the transitions from region to region and from period to period are often abrupt and difficult to follow. Throughout the book she emphasizes the frontier aspects of Florida and the social problems of such a society. She ends her book with a plea to save Florida's unique natural heritage. Even though it is filled with facts, the book gives a vivid impression of the area and brings out the color and excitement of its history. Recommended for high school libraries, travel collections, and all Florida libraries." Elizabeth Thalman

Library J 92:3996 N 1 '67 200w [YA]

DOUGLAS, PAUL H. In our time. 228p $4.95 Harcourt

330.973 U.S.—Economic conditions. U.S.—Social conditions 68-20066

Eight chapters based on lectures given by former Senator Douglas at the New School for Social Research, New York in 1967. Index.

Reviewed by J. C. Dougherty

Best Sell 28:385 D 15 '68 600w

"Douglas, for many years a professor of economics, discusses current economic issues about which he feels, with some justification, the public has not fully informed itself. . . . His revelation of the powerful forces which can be massed to oppose reform movements, told without rancor, is both enlightening and disturbing, especially since these forces often react in ignorance of a bill's true purpose. . . . In the chapter on truth in lending he explains legislation which has been, to most Americans, hardly more than a slogan. In sum, he has given us a valuable and concise compendium of economic problems which must be dealt with in our time. For public libraries." Susanne Hoffner

Library J 93:3568 O 1 '68 190w

"This short book let it be said at once, has no central theme. . . . It is not about 'economics,' though occasionally former Professor Douglas's knowledge in that field shows through. Rather, the book is a set of essays . . . [on] subjects that have roused the author's interest and indignation. . . . Each of the first four essays—on tax loopholes, the oil shale problem, political ethics and the cost of elections, and truth in lending—is a compact discussion of subjects that are not simple but can be grasped by anyone wishing to pay attention. . . . The section on poverty ought to be read by the growing host of intellectuals and others who are devoting increasing attention to the problem. Here is a combination of careful scholarship (almost too many statistics on exactly who the poor are, for example) and a former politician's sense of the realities of what the American people will accept." E. L. Dale

N Y Times Bk R p46 N 24 '68 800w

DOUGLAS OF KIRTLESIDE, SHOLTO, 1st Baron. Combat and command: the story of an airman in two World Wars, by Lord Douglas of Kirtleside with Robert Wright. 806p il $12.95 Simon & Schuster

940.5 European War, 1914-1918—Aerial operations. World War, 1939-1945—Aerial operations 66-11063

A "retired Marshal of the Royal Air Force [who is the] former Chairman of British European Airways . . . deals primarily with military affairs: air fighting in 1915-18, the inter-war years, and World War II in which he became a Commander-in-Chief; and with the brief period in which he was the post-war British commander in Germany." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[An] exciting, fast moving autobiography.

This issue combines the two volumes published separately in England as Years of Combat and Years of Command. Douglas writes in a dynamic and captivating style. His adventures in World War I . . . are probably the very best firsthand accounts of aerial combat in that war. No collection of World War I would be complete without this story. His second volume, while not quite as exciting, is nevertheless, most valuable for a view of the British air command in World War II. The personal glimpses and evaluations of most of the political, as well as the military, leaders are extremely penetrating. Douglas' views of the American officials and his narrative of Germany in the immediate postwar period, when he was Military Governor of the British Zone, are fascinating and revealing. This autobiography is among the best written of war memoirs—humorous, humanistic, and, above all, very honest."

Choice 4:1164 D '67 170w

"This very large volume dwells at length upon a wide range of problems and incidents, not to mention persons, with which [the author] has been acquainted over a long and active life . . . One of the important British memoirs of our day." Robin Higham

Library J 91:2836 Je 1 '66 120w

DOUGLAS OF KIRTLESIDE, WILLIAM SHOLTO DOUGLAS, 1st Baron. See Douglas of Kirtleside, S.

DOUGLASS, FREDERICK. The mind and heart of Frederick Douglass; excerpts from speeches of the great Negro orator; adapted by Barbara Ritchie. 201p $4.50 Crowell

815 Slavery in the U.S.—Juvenile literature 68-13587

The Life and Writings of Frederick Douglass by P. S. Foner is the source for this collection. It "attempts to present a picture of an . . . American Negro and the status of his people through selections from speeches made between 1841 and 1886. [List of speeches. Index.] Age twelve and up." (Book World)

Reviewed by P. M. Angle

Book World p30 (children's issue) My 5 '68 150w

"The relevancy of [these] speeches to today's problems is such that it often seems as if Douglass were a contemporary speaker. The use of violence in achieving ends, the North's complicity in maintaining discrimination, the establishing of Negro political organizations, and the Negro's role as an American soldier are only a few of topics sure to engage the interest of many young people. . . . For purposes of looking up the entire speech in Foner's volumes. . . . references are not sufficiently complete. Unfortunately, no introductory paragraph to each speech, placing it in context, is provided. . . . In spite of these flaws, the book is both useful and readable enough to be a welcome addition to all collections." S. E. O'Neal

Library J 93:1809 Ap 15 '68 120w

"Seen through the perspective of an emancipated slave, [the period of emancipation and Jim Crow] takes on heightened meaning. Barbara Ritchie's adaptation and arrangement of the material is not chronological; thus it fails to show Douglass' growth as a public speaker and thinker. And one wishes that his July 4th (1852) speech, 'Why Am I Called to Speak Here Today?', perhaps his most famous, had been given in its entirety. But these drawbacks are minor, for the selections reveal Douglass' wit and eloquence—and pertinence for today—as well as his prophetic understanding of America's race problem." Mel Watkins
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p49 My 5 '68 80w [YA]

DOUTY, ESTHER M. Forten the sailmaker; pioneer champion of Negro rights. 208p il $4.95; lib bdg $4.79 Rand McNally

B or 92 Forten, James—Juvenile literature 68-23534

This "is the life story of a [little]-known champion of his people's rights, James Forten, a . . . respected and successful sailmaker of Philadelphia. . . . The author has based her account of his activities on his own writings and on scattered references to him. . . . [and shows] the relationship of these activities to the struggle for civil rights during his lifetime." (Horn Bk) "Ages eleven to fifteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by E. L. Buell

Book World p35 (children's issue) N 3 '68 190w

"[This book helps] to round out the literature on the subject of the Negro in America. . . . The reader becomes acquainted with Forten as a person, experiences with him joy and sorrow as the Negro's cause is advanced or suffers a setback. He cannot help but admire Forten's courage, integrity, and compassion in reading about his reasoned opposition to the resettlement of American Negroes in Africa, his financial and moral support of William Lloyd Garrison's Liberator, or his establishment with his son-in-law of the Vigilant Committee of Philadelphia to aid escaped slaves." M. M.
Horn Bk 44:568 O '68 210w

"Forten's life and era contained much drama, but the writing in this book, which reads in parts like a revised thesis, does little justice to either the man or his times. So many extraneous details are included that readers will have difficulty obtaining a cohesive picture of Forten. With no overall appraisal of his effects as a leader or comparison of him to other Black leaders of the day, . . . [he] is not put in true perspective. Basically interesting material and good historical background, this is, unfortunately, not for beginning students." Susan O'Neal

Library J 93:3979 O 15 '68 230w

"An enlightening book and an engrossing one, impressively researched." Milton Lomask

N Y Times Bk R p42 O 27 '68 220w

DOWDELL, DOROTHY. Sierra Nevada; the golden barrier, by Dorothy and Joseph Dowdell. 190p il maps $4.50 Bobbs 979.4 Sierra Nevada Mountains—Juvenile literature. California—History—Juvenile literature 67-23038

This book describes the geological formation of the mountain and portrays the early Indian tribes, the explorers and the settlers, the prospectors for gold, the coming of the railroads, and present-day water conservation projects. The natural history of the region is also covered. Bibliography. Index. "Grades four to six." (Library J)

"With the help of photos, maps and charts, the authors tell the story of the mountains and of some of the men who accepted the challenge of Sierra Nevada. Recommended."

Best Sell 28:226 S 1 '68 80w

"A simply written, adequate history and geography of the Sierra Nevada from pre-history to the present day. . . . A few chapters merely list one fact after another. . . . Each chapter opens with a fictional anecdote about the subject or period to be covered. . . . [These anecdotes] sometimes detract from the factual text. Many libraries in California and other western states will find this useful. . . . The format is attractive, with wide margins and clear photographs." M. I. Purucker

Library J 93:3300 S 15 '68 150w

DOWDELL, JOSEPH, jr. auth. Sierra Nevada. See Dowdell, D.

DOWNEY, FAIRFAX, ed. Races to the swift; great stories of the turf; il. by Don Stivers. 334p $3.95 Doubleday 798 Horse racing. Literature—Collections 67-7410

The eighteen selections, both fiction and non-fiction, are devoted to "various types of horse racing. [There are] excerpts from Enid Bagnold's National Velvet [BRD 1935] and an account of the chariot race from Ben Hur. Lesser-known works range from the racing of Indian ponies to Max Farrand's account of the 'Great Race' of 1832 between the best of Northern and Southern horses. Other writers include Lincoln Steffens, John Marquand, and Donn Byrne." (Library J)

"It might be considered a little too much like putting temptation in the way of the impressionable to include this collection . . . for young people, but [the stories] are excellent in their own way. . . . One doubts that these 'Great Stories of the Turf' will make bettors of the boys."

Best Sell 27:222 S 1 '67 90w

"A strong choice for YA collections." J. A. Bollas

Library J 92:4634 D 15 '67 70w [YA]

DOWNING, ANTOINETTE F. The architectural heritage of Newport, Rhode Island, 1640-1915, by Antoinette F. Downing and Vincent J. Scully Jr. 2d ed rev 526p il maps $22.50 Potter, C. N.

720.9745 Architecture, American. Newport, Rhode Island 67-24838

This second edition of the history of architecture in Newport recounts the "gains in preservation and restoration made since 1952. It also recounts the loss of 50 buildings and tells of the imminence of further losses. . . . [The authors have] corrected the text and brought it up to date by using marginal references to footnotes at the end of each chapter." (Library J) Index. For the first edition see BRD 1952.

"There is a double need for a book like [this]. It both records what is fast disappearing, and it stimulates interest in what remains. . . . [Its] most attractive feature is that it is so visibly a labor of love. The notes, the detailed street plan giving some account of almost every ancient building, the portfolio of measured drawings, the occasional photographs of significant detail . . . make this a most companionable book for the Newport lover. . . . This second edition is better organized than the first, with one exception: the numbering of the illustrations in the index does not accord with the numbers on the plates. No pagination is given in the part of the book devoted to illustrations, so that these are hard to turn up." Alan Pryce-Jones

Arch Forum 129:74 S '68 1300w

"Libraries that do not have the original edition will wish to consider this; however, substitution will not be entirely necessary." Paul von Khrum

Library J 92:2755 Ag '67 130w

DOWNING, JOHN. The i.t.a. symposium. See National foundation for educational research in England and Wales

DOWNS, ROBERT B., ed. Bibliography: current state and future trends; ed. by Robert B. Downs and Frances B. Jenkins. (Ill. Univ. Ill. contributions to librarianship) 611p $3.95 Univ. of Ill. press

010 Bibliography 67-21851

"Originally published as the January and April 1967 issues of Library Trends, this collection of 37 articles derives from a plan 'to review comprehensively the current status and future outlook of bibliography, general and special, at home and abroad, in every major area." . . . [Among the contributors are] Shoemaker on general bibliography, Childs on government documents, Burke on manuscripts and archives, Duckles on music, Coman on economics, Price on Anglo-American law, Brock on political science, Daniel on psychology, Mellon on chemistry, Brodman on medicine." (Library J) index.

DOWNS, R. B.—Continued

Am Lit 40:265 My '68 110w

"The subject bibliographic articles are especially informative, e.g. James Humphry on 'Architecture and the Fine Arts,' Vincent Duckles on music, Lawrence Thompson on 'Continental European Literature.' A fine survey that will be referred to by college librarians in the next few years."

Choice 4:1363 F '68 70w

Reviewed by Felix Reichmann

Col & Res Lib 29:317 J1 '68 1200w

"While comprehensiveness has not been achieved . . . [this] is the first substantial overall critique of bibliographic resources, problems, and directions since Van Hoesen and Walter's estimable (albeit now hoary) Bibliography: Practical, Enumerative, Historical [BRD 1928, 1929] appeared. . . . The general caliber of contributors is most impressive. . . . [and exemplified] the editors' care and determination to produce not just a current review of bibliography but an authoritative, scholarly one. While all but a few of the essays in the symposium reflect this high standard, they do vary considerably in approach and depth of treatment. Several do little more than present an annotated bibliography of bibliographies in essay form with a 'trend' statement tacked on the end, while, at the other extreme, a few concentrate almost entirely on questions involving bibliographic behavior. . . . In general, however, the majority of contributions to this survey are balanced, informative, convincing, ponderous, perceptive treatises." K. F. Kister
Library J 93:1118 Mr 15 '68 550w

"On the whole [this collection] achieves its goals admirably, but there are two serious gaps: (1) There is no thorough consideration of analytical and descriptive bibliography. Although this branch of the discipline has flourished both in this country and in England. . . . (2) For enumerative bibliography there is too little attention to basic philosophy. An enumerative bibliography, after all, is not simply a list; it is an organized list of identified items. But precisely how are these items to be identified and how are they to be arranged? . . . Portions of some chapters are conglomerations of titles strung together with the usual words with concern only for comprehensiveness and little attempt to evaluate the books for clarity and style of entry and usefulness of arrangement. Finally, the index lists bibliographies only by titles with no attention to authors or subjects." P. S. D.

LRTS 12:226 spring '68 350w

DOWSON, ERNEST. The letters of Ernest Dowson: coll. & ed. by Desmond Flower and Henry Maas. 470p il $20 Fairleigh Dickinson Univ. press

B or 92

67-29136

"For a period of something over eleven years there are 403 letters [written by this English literary figure of the 1890's] and eighteen recipients; but by far the greater number of letters is addressed to two friends, Arthur Moore and Victor Plarr." (TLS) Bibliography. General index. Index of recipients.

Reviewed by Phyllis Grosskurth

Canadian Forum 47:287 Mr '68 470w

"This large, expensive volume stands as a fine example of professional editing and printing. . . . The volume is complete, including not only detailed transcriptions of Ernest Dowson's letters, but also . . . the locations of the letters, . . . appendices, instructive prefatory essays for each of the five divisions of letters, [and] an epilogue. . . . The text is well annotated and the book contains interesting photographs from Dowson's era, 1867 to 1900. Obviously, the volume has been prepared with completeness and accuracy; academic and scholarly libraries will want to purchase it." Duane Schneider
Library J 93:1888 My 1 '68 100w

"No English poet, except perhaps Dylan Thomas, ever had a rougher deal from immediate memoirs. Congratulations, then, to Messrs Flower and Maas, whose edition serves ■ a biography as well as a collection of letters. . . . and demonstrates that Dowson was a good deal more complex character—and, simply, a nicer man—and a good deal more the victim of his circumstances, than his detractors would allow. . . . The account of his last few months does not make pleasant reading. But it makes a good book, a thoroughly sympathetic and understanding account that at last gives Dowson his due." Timothy Hilton

New Statesman 74:474 O 13 '67 500w

Reviewed by D. C. Goddard

N Y Times Bk R p12 J1 7 '68 270w

"The centenary of Ernest Dowson's birth appropriately falls in a context of Beardsley exhibitions. . . . It would be unjust if Dowson were to be passed over in this orgy of revival and reevaluation, since it can be claimed for him, no less than for Beardsley or Wilde, that he stood in a symbolic relationship to his age. . . . [Flower's and Maas'] work is elegantly and minutely performed and takes its place with recent editions of the letters of Wilde and Shaw as an essential document in a period of which gossip has been legion and scholars few. . . . [This volume] supplements and partly supersedes the biography [Ernest Dowson, BRD 1944] by Professor Mark Longaker . . . and the mere act of assembly places Dowson's life and development as an artist in a finer perspective. . . . Dowson's talents were distinctly confessional and it ■ the confessional letters in this collection that are the most fascinating." TLS p1034 N ■ '67 1350w

DOYLE, SIR ARTHUR CONAN. The annotated Sherlock Holmes: the four novels and the fifty-six short stories complete; ed. with an intro, notes, and bibl. by William S. Baring-Gould; il. by Charles Doyle [and others]. 2v maps $25 Potter, C.N.

809.3 Fiction—History and criticism 67-22406

A "collection of the Holmes canon. . . . [Here are] the Sidney Paget, William Hyde, and Frederic Dorr Steele illustrations, and many others. . . . Stage and film versions are discussed, and the . . . work of many followers, including William Gillette, Vincent Starrett, Dorothy Sayers, and Christopher Morley is cited." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography.

Reviewed by M. M. Ferguson

Library J 93:753 F 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by Theodore Roszak

Nation 207:122 Ag 9 '68 700w

"Baring-Gould's chronology is not accepted by all students, but he always makes a coherent argument for his dating. He has established the first sound text of the canon to appear in America outside of the Limited Editions Club. . . . He has boiled down an entire library into two volumes, so skillfully that the neophyte in matters Sherlockian can stride ahead without difficulty, and the jaded veteran can be certain of finding something new. . . . The collection acutely needs an alphabetical index of titles. . . . There is an equal need for adequate bibliographical background: the precise first appearance of each story in magazine and in book form." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p1 Ja 21 '68 2300w

"[If Baring-Gould] had lived to see his definitive work through the press it would have been a better job, but it is a fine one as it is. The greatest shortcoming is its weight (ten pounds), which is likely to produce acute dislocation of the lap. There are hundreds and hundreds of pictures." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:30 Je 29 '68 110w

"[The text] was edited by an American for Americans, which means that a good proportion of the notes . . . must necessarily strike the British eye as slightly superfluous. . . . What is far less permissible in a would-be definitive edition of this kind is the extreme looseness and inaccuracy of the commentary. It is difficult to open the book at any double-page spread without soon encountering a misprint, a misdating, a footnote lacking the corresponding numeral in the text, or something of the sort. . . . What, however, really renders these volumes almost useless for serious students is the absence of an index or at least, of an adequate system of cross-references. The roll of commentators at the end of the book is staggering. . . . Yet even so, in the nature of things, the tale is incomplete, for this bibliography appears to stop about 1965, and even before that date important items are absent."

TLS p472 My 9 '68 750w

DRAPER, THEODORE. Abuse of power. 244p
$4.95; pa $1.25 Viking

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations. Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- 66-18668

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by G. R. Winham
Am Pol Sci R 62:686 Je '68 600w
Choice 5:262 Ap '68 120w

Reviewed by Alastair Buchan
Encounter 30:79 Ap '68 1000w

Reviewed by G. F. Eliot
Nat R 20:248 Mr 12 '68 950w

Reviewed by J. H. Herz
Pol Sci Q 83:296 Je '68 370w
TLS p283 Mr 21 '68 500w

DRAPER, THEODORE. Israel and world politics; roots of the third Arab-Israeli war. 278p
$5.75; pa $2.25 Viking
956.94 Israel-Arab War, 1967-. World politics—1945- 68-13280

The author of Abuse of Power (BRD 1967)
"describes the manifold origins and the day-by-day sequence of events both on stage and behind the scenes. 'There had been antagonisms and rivalries between Arabs and Israelis, Arab and Arabs, Arab and non-Arab Moslem states, United States and USSR, Russian Communists and Chinese Communists,' says Mr. Draper.
'The battle of June 1967 was not the result solely of differences between Arabs and Israelis, and it probably would not have broken out when and how it did if they had simply been left alone.'" (Publisher's note) Bibliography.
Index.

Reviewed by Ronald Steel
Book World p1 Je 23 '68 450w

"Mr. Draper's book is a valuable addition to the literature which last year's hostilities have already produced. In fact, it is as thoughtful, as well-researched, and as readable an analysis of the events immediately preceding the war as has yet appeared. [He] fits the pieces intelligently together. . . . [However] when it comes to the whole sweep of the 20 preceding years, the record which he presents is gently (if unintentionally) slanted in Israel's favor." Geoffrey Godsell

Christian Science Monitor p9 J1 9 '68
700w

"Mr. Draper of the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution and Peace at Stanford University is concerned . . . with the events leading to the June war in the Middle East. . . .
His conclusions, especially those about what he calls 'war by proxy,' are thought provoking.
. . . Recommended to both academic and public libraries." David Shavit

Library J 93:195 Ja 15 '68 150w

Reviewed by M. J. Bandler
Nation 207:443 O 23 '68 300w

Reviewed by R. Mackenzie
Nat R 20:918 S 10 '68 120w

Reviewed by Amos Elon
N Y Rev of Books 11:14 Ag 1 '68 3750w

"This is an engrossing narrative, briskly written, without the repetition of stale arguments that usually encumber books about the Arab-Israeli problem. There is also a highly useful set of appendices, including some of the relevant documents bearing on the genesis of the 1967 fighting. [Mr. Draper] delivers a telling indictment of Arab and Soviet policy toward Israel. . . . [He] has performed a service in detailing the lunacy of Syria's present leadership, bent as it is on waging a 'people's war' against Israel. The discussion of Nasser's position is less convincing. . . . One may also regret that there is not a single reference in this book to the far from static Arab refugee problem. . . . Mr. Draper is at his sardonic best when he points out the bankruptcy of American policy in the Middle East, especially the pretentious effort to construct a Middle Eastern defensive system in the image of NATO." Welles Hangan

Sat R 51:37 My 18 '68 1150w

TLS p1363 D 5 '68 700w

DRENNAN, ROBERT E., ed. The Algonquin wits. 176p $5.95 Citadel

817 American wit and humor 68-19122

A gathering of "witticisms from the writings
(essays, biographies, reviews) of the Round Table set, a casual lunchtime gathering of friends at the Algonquin hotel [during the 1920's and '30's]. Alexander Woolcott was among them, so were Dorothy Parker, Robert Benchley, Franklin Pierce Adams, Heywood

Brown, George S. Kaufman." (Christian Science Monitor)

"The group around the Algonquin's Round
Table was certainly livelier than the average alumni luncheon, bankers' club get-together or a publisher's cocktail party. Still . . . it seems to me that repartee, while an honored guest at those luncheons, was not really the master of the revels. This book is simply and directly a joke book. . . . In reading through it one is impressed by the number of lines drawn not from the reported talk but from the writings of the Round Tabliers. . . . Of course, the talk was good but not perhaps of that order where only a tape recorder is needed to create a book."
H. H. Brown

Book World p6 My 12 '68 800w

"The most vocal members of the group are allowed to speak in turn. First Mr. Drennan introduces the speaker with a photograph and a few words, then hands over a page or two for sample wisecracks. Adams is here with:
'The average man is a great deal above average,' and 'Money isn't everything, but lack of money isn't anything.' . . . After a while, even in a book as short as this one, a diet of crumbs from the Round Table begins to pall.
[The book] is strictly for dipping into." P. M.

Christian Science Monitor p11 My 16
'68 600w

"The mutual interests of the 20 odd men and women who made the 'two or three hours for lunch' famous, were the spirit of the times, literature and the theater. . . . The Wits and their 'words' are arranged alphabetically by members.
Altogether this is an excellent reference book to answer 'who said this?' Buy this tribute to the columnists of the post World War I period."
K. T. Willis

Library J 93:2658 J1 '68 160w

DREXLER, ROSALYN. The line of least existence, and other plays; with an introd. by Richard Gilman. 242p $4.95 Random house
812 67-25076

This anthology of six plays by an off-Broadway playwright includes "Home movies; The investigation; Hot Buttered Roll; Softly, and Consider the Nearness; The Bed Was Full." (Choice)

"In this her first anthology of plays [the author] offers six standup, knock down, slapstick comedies rippling with pratfalls, non se-quiturs, and word play inventions that generate one delightful surprise after another. . . . It is the measure of these plays that [a certain] kind of mad, strangely connected language does succeed on more than one level, and that transformations do occur that send funny farces searching far beyond themselves with probes of hot light into the weird realities of contemporary life. Definitely recommended for any library."
Choice 4:1401 F '68 200w

"Mrs. Drexler is one of the more highly rated
Off-Off Broadway playwrights. Her 'Home Movies' is thought by some to be among the best plays of the movement. Notwithstanding, the six plays here, including 'Home Movies', will be offensive to many readers because of language, choice of subject, depicting of character, even because of Mrs. Drexler's craftsmanship. . . . The credo by which former Newsweek critic Richard Gilman measures these plays is that 'Imagination equals style, equals play.'
This would appear to have a built-in limitation if imagination primarily equals sex, as it does here. The worst failing of the plays, however, is that they are utterly dull reading." Irving Wortis

Library J 92:2940 S 1 '67 180w

DREYFUS, GUSTAV. Renaissance medals: from the Samuel H. Kress collection at the National gallery of art. See United States.
National gallery of art

DRIMMER, MELVIN, ed. Black history: a reappraisal; ed. with commentary by Melvin Drimmer. 553p $6.95 Doubleday
301.451 Negroes—History 67-19105

"This collection of essays in Negro American history is intended to make available works of recent historical scholarship on the Negro.
. . . [All but three of the essays] were written after 1945, with the majority appearing in the 1960s. . . . [They] do not pretend to answer the questions or solve the problems of white-Negro relations . . . [but attempt to] clear away some of the prevailing myths about the Negro and, [to] provide the historical perspective for an understanding of what has been going on and why. . . . A short introduction has been written for each selection [to place it] . . . in its historical framework." (Introd) Some of these articles have previously appeared in such periodicals as the American Historical Review, Partisan Review and The Journal of Negro Education. Bibliography, Index.

DRIMMER, MELVIN—Continued

"Offering as it does the best of recent scholarship on its subject, [this book] will make a valuable addition to college libraries. It complements two recent documentary collections—The Burden of Race, edited by [G.] Osofsky [BRD 1968], and The Negro in Twentieth Century America, edited by J. H. Franklin and I. Starr—as well as A Documentary History of the Negro People in the United States, an older work, edited by H. Aptheker [BRD 1952]. Strongly recommended."

Choice 5:1357 D '68 220w

"[The editor] has collected the writings of white and black writers who, in his opinion, best express and understand ethnic problems. Most of these writers are historians such as W. E. B. Du Bois who was also a sociologist, Carl Degler, Oscar Handlin, John Hope Franklin, James MacPherson, Lawrence Reddick, Kenneth Stampp, [and] Carter G. Woodson. . . . Mr. Drimmer's adequate notes provide the context for the articles. His selection emphasizes the revisionist position, which takes issue with the apologists for white America. His book is highly recommended for history collections." Ruben Kugler

Library J 93:2004 My 15 '68 160w

"Philip Curtin's essay on African history is particularly stimulating and the excerpt from Stanley Elkins' Slavery [a Problem in American Institutional and Intellectual Life, BRD 1960] is worth re-reading. Unfortunately, the contributions reflect a single basic viewpoint and the unwary reader may conclude from the book's essential unanimity that open historical questions are closed ones. . . . The book is also marred by Dr. Drimmer's tendency to moralize and engage in revolutionary exhortation where critical commentary would have been more appropriate." Nathaniel Weyl

Nat R 20:1022 O 8 '68 360w

DROST, WALTER H. David Snedden and education for social efficiency. 242p $8.50 Univ. of Wis. press

B or 92 Snedden, David Samuel 67-25945

"The book presents the whole life story of Snedden from his childhood, through his days as a public school teacher and administrator, . . . as a professor at Stanford and at Teachers College, as Commissioner of education in Massachusetts, and as a leading champion of vocational education and other 'social efficiency' movements." (Mod Lang J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by K. V. Lottich

Am Hist R 73:1663 Je '68 650w

Choice 5:842 S '68 140w

"[Drost] devotes too much space to detailed resumés of innumerable speeches and papers by Snedden. Some of these statements are significant, but the vast majority are repetitive and puerile. The author's discursive method distracts the reader's attention from the book's main themes. Snedden, professor of educational administration, emerges from these pages as the very prototype of the stock pedagogue-philistine figure of modern times, half-educated, anti-intellectual, instinctively hostile to humanistic culture. But the reader has to infer this from the facts which are spread before him; the author carefully avoids making it explicit. . . . 'Sneddenism' was early noted by John Dewey as an educational system which would sacrifice democracy to social efficiency. There is much detail in this volume to justify Dewey's judgment." Willis Rudy

J Am Hist 55:170 Je '68 500w

"Dr. Drost's use of primary sources, his clear writing style, and his conciseness have produced a first-rate biographical study of ■ important figure in American educational history. Moreover, it is also ■ highly readable story of an important era, a formative time in education. The author effectively weaves other significant and better-known men in and out of Snedden's life: Cubberley, Finney, Dewey, Counts, Charters, Judd, Thorndike, and many others. The feeling of 'being there' at some of the great decision moments in American educational history is very real. . . . Some of Snedden's thinking can only be labeled ■ 'quaint' from today's perspective . . . but some of his insights were far ahead of his time, and bear careful examination today. . . . This book is a welcome and scholarly addition as supplementary library reading in courses on the history of education." C. E. Beck

Mod Lang J 52:168 Mr '68 1000w

DROTNING, PHILLIP T. A guide to Negro history in America. 247p $4.95 Doubleday

301.451 Negroes—History 68-14168

This book covers the period from pre-colonial times to the present date. It is an 'alphabetic guide, by city within state, recounting the contributions of well-known and virtually unknown Negroes to American development. Most of the subjects . . . are represented by some mark on the land—a building, a monument." (Library J) Index.

"There are many . . . interesting and significant places enumerated in this valuable if, admittedly, special guide book. Worth investing in for high school libraries."

Best Sell 28:323 N 1 '68 90w

"Mr. Drotning has exercised considerable selectivity in admitting Negroes to the pages of history. . . . [However] Martin Luther King's grave is not mentioned under 'Atlanta,' nor his death under 'Memphis' although a marker has been erected there. . . . The book is useful for what it records, but disappointing in what it omits." J. M. Elrod

Library J 93:2994 S 1 '68 150w

Reviewed by Marcia Keller

Library J 93:3996 O 15 '68 250w [YA]

DROYSEN, JOHANN GUSTAV. Outline of the principles of history (Grundriss der historik) with a biographical sketch of the author [by Hermann Krüger] tr. by E. Benjamin Andrews. 122p $6 Fertig

907 Historiography. Buckle, Henry Thomas —The history of civilization in England

67-13644

This is the reprint of the first edition of a work published in German in 1867 and first published in English 1893, in which Droysen "sets forth his philosophy of the nature, method, and construction of historical writing." (Library J) Index.

"Given the immense concern for historiography . . . [since 1867], we cannot expect Droysen to provide still valid principles of historical method and theory in all respects. [His] value lies rather in what he reveals about the transfer, not to say vulgarization, of Hegelian principles by a practicing German historian of the mid-19th century. Droysen differentiates between the conception of history (Historik) and philosophy of history, which he insists he is not writing; but to the modern reader his distinction does not hold. . . . The appendices, including a review of Thomas Buckle's History of Civilization in England, exceed the Outline in length and, because they are less abstruse, are more easily grasped. Recommended as a historical document for all college libraries with collections in historiography and philosophy of history."

Choice 5:845 S '68 180w

"Droysen, a giant among the scholars of his time, was a major architect of a school of German historiography which exerted great influence upon European and American historical writing. . . . His views were applied in his monumental 14-volume History of Prussian Policy, a glorification of the Prussian 'mission' to unify Germany. Though his conception of historical writing is no longer widely held, his philosophy is still of interest to serious students of historiography." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:547 F 1 '68 140w

DROZ, JACQUES. Europe between revolutions, 1815-1848; tr. by Robert Baldick. 286p maps $6.95 Harper

914 Europe—History—1789-1900. Europe—
Economic conditions—1789-1900. Europe—
Social conditions 67-22496

In this study the "professor of history at the Sorbonne places major emphasis on economic and social forces, but he includes a chapter on international relations and . . . one on the church." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Droz's work is an excellent addition to the History of Europe Series." C. L. Hohl
America 118:614 My 4 '68 100w

"Droz fills an important gap since this book is the first general study of the first half of the 19th century which embodies the latest research and presents it succinctly and attractively. . . . Droz emphasizes unusual but reasonable points of view on various unresolved subjects—for example, in his interpretation of the Holy Alliance as reflecting a basic Russian interest, or of the July Revolution as a popular one. He makes incontestably clear what can be established, for example, the essentially bourgeois and liberal character of the Vormärz. An excellent account of the period, it should be ordered for college libraries, and would make the perfect basic text for an undergraduate course on post-Napoleonic Europe."

Choice 5:670 Jl '68 160w

"Even though the book is not meant for the uninformed, it is too bad that Mr. Droz has not defined his terms as an aid to the reader.

The translation, presumably from the French, reads smoothly, but the editing and index are less than perfect. Several names are misspelled. Some errors are chargeable to Mr. Droz. Every historian should know by now that Lola Montez was not an Andalusian dancer, but was of British origin. And to write that Young Germany was an intellectual movement inspired by the writings of Heine and Börne is misleading since these two authors were principal members of Young Germany. The book is of value to the careful reader." John Neufeld

Library J 93:1478 Ap 1 '68 300w

DRUKS, HERBERT. Harry S. Truman and the Russians, 1945-1953. 291p il $7.50 Speller

327 U.S.—Foreign relations—Russia, Russia—
Foreign relations—U.S. Truman, Harry S.
66-29505

The author seeks "to describe and defend President Truman's actions vis-à-vis the Russians and world Communism during his tenure as Chief Executive. Attention is focused on Potsdam, the Trieste and Berlin crises, the peace-treaty negotiations, events leading up to the Truman Doctrine, the Marshall Plan, NATO, and the Korean War." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Druks has written a highly favorable account of the diplomacy of the United States from 1945 to 1953 and credited President Truman for most of the good results. . . . The book's account of American policy is highly factual, and it is difficult to quarrel with most of it, except for emphasis. The section on the Marshall Plan, perhaps the greatest achievement of Truman's presidency, is extremely short. There is nothing on the independence of Israel, which the Truman administration encouraged. The proposed special mission of Chief Justice Vinson to Russia in 1948 receives little attention. . . . The book lacks rumination and thoughtfulness; the narrative marches along in black and white. It has a curious lack of recent documentation, as the bibliography lists no secondary work published later than 1963." R. H. Ferrell
Am Hist R 73:625 D '67 270w

Reviewed by Lee Denson

Am Pol Sci R 62:688 Je '68 1000w

"This amateurish, cliché studded work uncritically praises Truman for having taken 'a tough stand towards Russia,' and thereby 'saved the peace and averted the disaster of another world war.' Although Druks has had access to several important manuscript collections, the book is based largely on newspaper accounts and on memoirs whose reliability the author never questions. It is devoid of any serious analysis of either American or Russian postwar policy ('containment' is not even mentioned) and cannot be recommended for purchase to any library."

Choice 4:1296 Ja '68 80w

Reviewed by R. W. Schwartz

Library J 92:236 Ja 15 '67 110w

DRUMMER Hoff; adapted by Barbara Emberley; il. by Ed Emberley. unp lib bdg $4.25 Prentice-Hall

393.8 Nursery rhymes

67-28189

In this version of "a rhyming folk verse a cannon is assembled by a team of soldiers, while poker-faced Drummer Hoff stands at the ready [to fire it off] and the ornate headgear of the militia protrudes like ramrods from a trench below. . . . The firing is shown in a double-page spread . . . and the last picture displays a . . . scene in which time has erased all scars and the cannon is covered with flowers and spiderwebs." (Sat R) "Kindergarten to grade three." (Library J)

"Ed Emberley has style. He has originality, superb technique and a lively sense of humor. All of these qualities find rich expression in this colorful picture-book. . . . No small boy should be able to resist this one." P. G.

Book World p22 F 4 '68 100w

Horn Bk 44:53 F '68 120w

"An old folk rhyme is the perfect vehicle for this talented author-illustrator team. The rising excitement of Barbara Emberley's rat-a-tat-tat retelling about the firing of the cannon . . . and Ed Emberley's heavily stylized black woodcuts, embellished with vivid color, unite to make this one of the liveliest picture books of the year." Della Thomas

Library J 92:4602 D 15 '67 90w

Reviewed by Eve Merriam

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p71 N 5 '67 70w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 50:35 D 16 '67 150w

DRURY, ALLEN. Preserve and protect; a novel. 394p $6.95 Doubleday

68-26725

"This novel continues the action of Capable of Honor [BRD 1966]. President Harley Hudson is killed in an air crash . . . the Speaker of the House becomes President and calls the National Committee to select new nominees for the coming election. In an atmosphere of dangerous violence in Washington, Orrin Knox, Secretary of State, is chosen over Ted Jason, Governor of California. Jason, as a compromise, is selected to be the candidate for Vice-President. As the nominees are about to make their acceptance speeches at the Washington Monument, one of them is killed." (Library J)

Reviewed by H. T. Anderson

Best Sell 28:256 O 1 '68 500w

"[Drury] simply isn't the workman and storyteller he was in Advise and Consent [BRD 1959]. . . . The characters . . . have lost dimension and taken on a cutout appearance, with a few notable exceptions. . . . Drury had the materials for an engrossing novel. From his viewpoint . . . the frequent interpolation of protests against the rising tide of violence in the country . . . and attacks on the 'liberal' press and 'liberal' columnists belong in the story. From the viewpoint of this reader . . . they were so labored and intrusive that they did little more than slow down the action. . . . Portions of the book . . . move quickly and well, and occasionally there is some of the excitement which the earlier Drury novels offered. . . . But if a smooth-running story may be compared to a smooth-running motor, then [this book] needs its points adjusted." Robert Cromie

Book World p6 S 15 '68 1050w

"The theme of this novel is violence in American life—violence promoted, sponsored, and condoned by liberals who are always fools, dupes, or actively evil. . . . [Drury's] political diatribes overwhelm the novel. Despite these reservations libraries will find this book popular with the large number of readers who liked the other Drury novels." Muriel Weins

Library J 93:3154 S 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by M. S. Evans

Nat R 20:1225 D 3 '68 800w

Reviewed by W. G. Rogers

N Y Times Bk R p59 S 29 '68 360w

Reviewed by Saul Maloff

Newsweek 72:100 S 16 '68 550w

"Taking on an Allen Drury political melodrama is like harpooning a blimp at three feet. . . . There are Drury's characters. . . . ideological wind-up toys carelessly slapped down to accommodate the easily distracted. There are the plots that are not plots but crisis situations on which each character is obliged to comment. . . . Above all, Drury writes the most impenetrable prose. . . . After pages of superfluous background, oversimplified opinion and bloodshed . . . Drury concludes the book with a 'dreadful thing' that occurs on the rostrum as the candidate receives the party's acclaim. . . . What happened to whom, how and why are questions that the author undoubtedly plans to answer in his next book. But after Preserve and Protect, the really important question is: When will Drury cease and desist?"

DRURY, ALLEN—Continued

Time 92:110 S 20 '68 450w

DRURY, ALLEN. "A very strange society"; a journey to the heart of South Africa. (Tribent press bk) 465p $6.95 Simon & Schuster
916.8 Africa, South. Africa, South—Race relations 67-23586
For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:393 My '68 170w
Reviewed by W. H. Hutt
Nat R 20:142 F 13 '68 2000w
Reviewed by David Lytton
New Statesman 75:620 My 10 '68 200w
Reviewed by Edward Callan
Sat R 51:30 F 3 '68 1000w
TLS p876 Ag 15 '68 800w

DRURY, CLIFFORD M. William Anderson Scott, "no ordinary man." 352p il $6.50 Clark, A.H.

285 Scott, William Anderson 67-22431
"Despite limitations of physical lameness and incomplete schooling, Dr. Scott [1813-1885] possessed abilities that enabled him to rise rapidly to positions of influence and prestige in the Presbyterian church in the South and in California. By his forties . . . [he] was elected moderator of the Old School General Assembly. At the same time, [he] became the center of controversies involving a Henry Clay campaign, the slavery issue, Bible reading in the public schools, and vigilantism in San Francisco. The approaching centennial of San Francisco Theological Seminary, which Dr. Scott helped to establish, was partly the occasion for this biography." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"Scott was probably the leading Presbyterian preacher and churchman of his generation. . . . Yet his life was not as firmly rooted in the history of the Far West as this highly detailed biography would imply. . . . [The work] is filiopietistic in the better sense of that word. The author documents Scott's every gesture with sympathy and understanding. It is a religious biography of the old school, half monument and half reference book on denominational history. Indefatigably the author piles up a vast amount of detail on matters often peripheral to an understanding of the man or his denominational significance. . . . For historians of Presbyterianism on the frontier there is some interesting information on Scott's early career in the old Southwest. . . . For a work whose chief value will be for reference this book deserved a better index, especially since there are no footnotes and only two pages describing the extensive material examined. The book is profusely illustrated." M. S. De Pillis

Am Hist R 73:1240 Ap '68 300w

"Scott had the good fortune to have an experienced biographer and professional historian write his biography. Thus this book . . . is a thorough and competent study of the life of a capable, important, and controversial clergyman. . . . Professional historians will miss specific documentation; but Drury's reputation, his bibliography, and his account of investigating his topic in the appendix indicate the solid research for the book. Despite his obvious sympathy for his subject, the author's judgments are discerning. This is a substantial biography by a mature scholar and improves the reader's understanding of the early years of Protestantism on the West Coast." D. K. Gorrell

J Am Hist 54:658 D '67 240w

DRURY, MICHAEL. Advice to a young wife from an old mistress; as told to Michael Drury. 125p $3.95 Doubleday
301.42 Love, Marriage 68-22668
Recounted here is advice proffered by an elderly "woman who was 30 years the mistress of a prominent man. It is a plea to wives not to subject love 'to instructions and manuals, as if it were a kind of cooking school.' At the same time the book is [an] apologia pro vita sua." (Library J)

"[This is done] in a style and genre redolent of Disraeli. This mistress is the Eric Hoffer of marriage and, like the oracle of the waterfront, she dispenses occasional gems of wisdom along with bushels of banalities and sightless insights." J. J. Conlin

Best Sell 28:242 S 15 '68 440w

"The title of this small book is misleading, and the reader who expects some spicy 'true confessions' will be disappointed. Instead, it is a remarkably thoughtful and philosophical little treatise. . . . Although according to Michael Drury, the author claims to believe that marriage is the more enviable state, her descriptions of a liaison sound more enchanting, and one cannot help wondering if now she recalls only the happier moments. However, there is no quarreling with her basic conclusions, and young wives—indeed, all wives—would do well to heed much of her advice." Lola Dudley

Library J 93:3125 S 15 '68 190w

DRYDEN, JOHN. The works of John Dryden [21v] v9. Plays: The Indian emperour, Secret love, Sir Martin Mar-All; ed: John Loftis; textual ed: Vinton A. Dearing. 451p $10 Univ. of Calif. press

822

(55-7149)

This, "the second of nine volumes to be devoted to Dryden's dramas in the California edition of his works, contains [three plays] first produced between 1665 and 1667. . . . The Indian Emperour; Or, The Conquest of Mexico by the Spaniards . . . suggests the intellectual dimension of exploration. . . . In his commentary Mr. Loftis examines the background in travel literature and historical fiction for Dryden's account of the conquest. . . . The serious plot of Secret Love [a tragicomedy] is based on the events leading to the abdication of . . . Queen Christina of Sweden. Sir Martin Mar-all . . . [is an] English adaptation of a five-act play of Molière." (Publisher's note) Index to the commentary.

"[This volume] adheres, in format and textual procedure, to the high standards established by its predecessors. . . . Thanks to the amplitude of the projected edition, Dryden's critical prefaces here accompany his plays, the present volume providing the important 'Defence of an Essay' and the preface to Secret Love. Of special value to the undergraduate are Loftis' commentaries, tracing the stage history of each of the plays, and focusing on such important problems in the texts as Dryden's critical quarrel with Howard, the element of primitivism in The Indian Emperour, the tragicomic structure of Secret Love and the Duke of Newcastle's contributions to Sir Martin Mar-all." Choice 4:1240 Ja '68 160w

"[In this volume] Dryden emerges as a mature dramatist in three quite different kinds of drama. . . . [The] volume is indeed a scholarly addition to the 'California' Dryden; and with its full investigation of sources and of contemporary ideas, and its relevant and well-informed annotation, it should provide the student of Dryden with all that he needs for the understanding and enjoyment of those three plays." TLS p1206 D 14 '67 650w

DU BOFF, RICHARD B., jt. auth. America's Vietnam policy. See Herman, E. S.

DU BOIS, VICTOR D. Churches and states: the religious institutions and modernization. See American universities field staff

DUBOIS, W. E. B. The autobiography of W. E. B. DuBois; a soliloquy on viewing my life from the last decade of its first century [ed. by Herbert Aptheker]. 448p il $10 Int. pubs.

B or 92 Negroes—Civil rights 68-14103

This is the third autobiographical volume by the late Dr. DuBois, a leader in the movement for black liberation. Completed in 1960 when DuBois was past ninety, the book gives "an account of his life in the Negro movement . . . [and] includes sections on his travels in Russia and China and his harassment as a political suspect during the McCarthy years." (Harper) Bibliography. Chronology. Index. Previous volumes were entitled Darkwater; Voices from within the Veil, and Dusk of Dawn: an essay toward an autobiography of a race concept (BRD 1940).

Reviewed by Peter Shaw
Am Scholar 38:136 winter '68 2250w
Christian Century 85:268 F 28 '68 20w

Reviewed by Richard Kostelanetz
Commonweal 89:161 N 1 '68 1300w

"The Autobiography is by no means an entirely new piece of work. . . . Nevertheless, [it] is a work of considerable importance. Parts of it, dealing with Du Bois's youth and early years, form a classic of American narrative: composed in a lovely if old-fashioned formal prose, rich in portraiture of late nineteenth-century New England, and packed with information and opinion about the early years of Negro protest. Other parts read as if they came from the very heart of a mimeograph machine. . . . What grips one in reading these pages is the story of a life that on almost every outward level follows the pattern of American industry and ambition yet must carry within itself the certainty of frustration." Irving Howe

Harper 236:143 Mr '68 4350w

Reviewed by R. F. Kugler
Library J 93:2475 Je 15 '68 230w

"Its publishers have not done DuBois or his book a service by featuring Herbert Aptheker so prominently as its 'editor.' This implies that the book had to be worked over to such a degree that its editor deserved 'billing'. . . . It goes against the remark in the editor's preface that 'it is published as Dr. DuBois wrote it: changes have been few and only of a technical nature'. . . . Technically, [the book] is not as DuBois wrote it, or left it, at his death." Truman Nelson

Nation 206:574 Ap 29 '68 1900w

"About a third of Du Bois' Autobiography is devoted to his New England youth and this constitutes, from a literary and psychological viewpoint, the most compelling part of the book. . . . Though [his] personal narration of public events is well worth having, it does not provide the materials nor suggest the need for any large-scale reevaluation of Afro-American history; on the contrary, it corroborates rather than alters the general lines of our previous understanding. The same can be said of what the Autobiography reveals of Du Bois' own ideological progression. It fills in some details. . . . But it does nothing to change our view of Du Bois as a man of paradox, nor to clear up any of the particular ambiguities in his thought. . . . What it does do is give additional proof of the confusions produced in both the man and the movement by . . . a dual identification with the Negro race and with the American nation." Martin Duberman

New Repub 158:36 Mr 23 '68 2450w

New Yorker 44:174 Ap 6 '68 200w

"[This autobiography] contains not the least hint of crabbiness or senility. Du Bois was in full control of his thoughts to the end; his style [is lucid and crisp]. . . . What is especially unique about the Autobiography . . . is the insight it offers into his personality. . . . The other fresh contribution made by the Autobiography is its synthesis of Du Bois's activities and thought since the Great Depression. . . . These highly controversial years are the ones the general public knows least about and seems most confused over." Gilbert Osofsky

Sat R 51:42 F 24 '68 900w

DU BOIS, W. E. B. The Philadelphia Negro; a social study; introd. by E. Digby Baltzell; together with a special report on domestic service, by Isabel Easton. 520p $8.50; pa $2.95 Schocken

301.451 Negroes—Philadelphia. U.S.—Race relations. Servants 67-26984

This study was first published in 1899. It is "a sociological study of a black community of 40,000 in a major city at the end of the 19th century [and] presents data . . . on Negro economic, social and institution life. [It concludes that] the Negro community was subjected to brutal discrimination and somehow managed to maintain its dignity and fight back in the face of extraordinary difficulties." (Nation) The introduction to the 1967 edition discusses the life and intellectual background of W. E. B. Du Bois; the place of the book in the history of sociology and the climate of intellectual opinion, and the social conditions of the era in which the book was written. It also contains an up-to-date supplementary bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by E. D. Genovese
Nation 207:86 Ag 5 '68 340w

"[This book] is important because of the later role of DuBois; it is revealing because, nearly seventy years later, the problems of the Philadelphia Negro in 1899 are the problems of the Washington and Chicago Negro in 1968. . . . The DuBois study is not merely highly intelligent; that we can expect from the young scholar who had written his brilliant Harvard thesis on the slave trade. It reflects, in some ways, in DuBois a criticism of his 'race' (an ambiguous term in one of so mixed if not at all 'Anglo-Saxon' ancestry). . . . DuBois saw, admired, and practised white bourgeois virtues or cultural traits, even if he was already moving away from the acceptance of an inferior role involved, for that generation at least, in the theory and practice of Booker T. Washington."

TLS p329 Ap 4 '68 420w

DUCKAT, WALTER. Beggar to king; all the occupations of Biblical times. 327p $5.95 Doubleday

220.8 Occupations. Bible—Antiquities

67-19112

"More than 200 alphabetically arranged entries [describe] the skills, techniques, and historical significance of . . . Biblical 'trades' from accountant to governor to wrestler. . . . [based on] texts Egyptian, Babylonian, Phoenician, Hebraic, Greek, and Latin, as well as works of contemporary scholarship." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"Duckat, director of vocational guidance of the Federation Employment and Guidance Service, New York City. . . . has also cited the Rabbinic literature where this would clarify the occupations he has discussed. [He] has performed a useful service in gathering his information from scattered sources in a number of books. His selected bibliography makes no reference to journal articles nor has he cited the latest editions of some of the books he has used. Cross references enhance the value of this book which is recommended for public libraries and theological collections." W. S. Sparks
Library J 93:2008 My 15 '68 200w

"The extent and variety [of Biblical occupations] will surprise most readers. . . . There was little opportunity for vocational choice, the child nearly always following the father's occupation. As for strikes, they were resorted to in Biblical times when working conditions became intolerable, but were likely to be spontaneous and unorganized. These and many other revelations about Biblical work and workers can be found in [this book]." J. M. Connoles

N Y Times Bk R p31 Je 23 '68 300w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon
Sat R 51:69 N 16 '68 130w

DUCKETT, ELEANOR. Death and life in the tenth century. 359p $8.75 Univ. of Mich. press 940.1 Tenth century. Civilization, Medieval 66-17022

In the first part of this book, the author, professor emeritus of Latin at Smith College, discusses "the political history of the age with special reference to the Ottonian empire. . . . In the latter part of her book she turns to the positive achievements of tenth-century Europe in art and letters, in religion and scholarship." (TLS) Genealogical tables. Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[Miss Duckett uses] essentially a biographical approach, [and] introduces us to the monarchs of the period. . . . We get the special feel of this period as it appeared to participants in its courts, its scholarship, its art, and its religious institutions. . . . But some elements are missing from her picture. We never meet the common man . . . and we get no inkling of the economic and demographic changes that were taking place. . . . Nor do we see institutions at work or sense the harshness of the age. Ottonian and papal government are not explained; they are simply assumed to exist in their special form. . . . These are mere caveats, however, concerning a book which, like her previous ones, enriches our appreciation of a little-known period of the Middle Ages." A. R. Lewis

DUCKETT, ELEANOR—Continued

Am Hist R 73:1122 Ap '68 400w

Choice 5:1353 D '68 190w

Christian Century 84:1162 S 13 '67 20w

"[This] book is fully up to [Professor Duckett's] high standard of good scholarship and excellent writing. . . . The tables of emperors, popes, and nobles will prove very useful to readers who are not thoroughly familiar with the period. This work is recommended for all college libraries and for public libraries where the general reader will find it of interest." H. L. Adelson

Library J 92:4501 D 15 '67 140w

Reviewed by R. C. Smail

N Y Rev of Books 11:39 N 21 '68 2600w

"[Miss Duckett's] detailed study . . . [is] concerned to distinguish between the enduring and the ephemeral results of medieval endeavour. . . . In the latter part of her book . . . she may be followed with both interest and instruction. Particularly valuable is her analysis of the historical writing of the period, and of its productions in verse. Miss Duckett carries her learning so lightly that there is some danger of underestimating the wide erudition which pervades these chapters, while her verse translations of tenth-century poetry are often a delight to read. . . . Attractively illustrated, [this volume] may, in short, be confidently welcomed as providing a suitable introduction to the realities of the medieval world." TLS p188 F '22 '68 180w

DUCKLES, VINCENT, comp. Music reference and research materials; an annotated bibliography. 2d ed 385p $5.95 Free press

016.78 Music—Bibliography. Bibliography—Bibliography 67-17657

This edition "has added a 'Jazz and Popular Music' bibliography, one alphabet for printed and MSS sources of early music, called 'Catalogs of Private Collections,' 200 entries, and cited more book reviews." (Choice) Index of authors, editors and reviewers. Index of subjects. Index of titles. For first edition see BRD 1965.

Choice 4:636 S '67 60w

"In the three years since its first edition [this work] has already become a standard tool of the music librarian and music researcher. . . . [This edition contains corrections and] an improved index. . . . No small improvement, too, is the replacement of informal type with professional printing that not only makes the entries and subdivisions stand out better but saves space. . . . If Duckles' new edition does not quickly acquire that used, dog-eared, thumb-through look, it is the reader's and not the compiler's fault." W. S. Newman

Music Lib Assn Notes 24:265 D '67 700w

DUDLEY, DONALD R., ed. & tr. Urbs Roma; a source book of classical texts on the city & its monuments; sel. & tr. with a commentary by Donald R. Dudley. 339p $11.50 Phaidon

913.37 Rome—History—Sources. Rome (City)—Antiquities [67-100815]

"This book contains a selection, in English translation, of passages from ancient authors and inscriptions dealing with the growth of Rome and its monuments, from the earliest times to the death of Constantine in A.D. 337. . . . Following the source material, the author provides a . . . summary of what is known about each topic." (Publisher's note) Indexes of ancient authors, of inscriptions, of names, and of places.

"A highly recommended assembly of ancient testimonia on the monuments of Rome. . . . It is good, especially for undergraduates, to have [these references and photographs] brought together. The ancient texts are reproduced in full, quite frequently in both Latin and English—particularly useful in the case of inscriptions. The book disclaims being a guide to Rome's antiquities, but the student seriously interested in the city's ancient monuments and the evidence for their identification would profit from a visit with a copy in hand."

Choice 4:1223 Ja '68 120w

Reviewed by W. S. Anderson

Class World 61:250 F '68 290w

"[This handsome volume] has the scholarly content and elegant finish that have come to be associated with the name of Phaidon. It is basically a sophisticated guide to the architectural and sculptural remains of ancient Rome, and aims to please scholars and educated laymen. . . . The combination provides a fascinating link between art, architecture, and literature, and will be read with pleasure and profit by many." T. M. Robinson

Library J 92:3627 O 15 '67 110w

"Not least of the merits of the present collection is that, viewing familiar material from an unusual angle, it helps to strike a balance between the achievements of Roman architecture and what the Romans thought—or failed to think—about it. Text and plates alike have been well selected and well reproduced. More might perhaps have been made of the Severan marble wall-map of the city, which occupied one of the halls of the Forum of Peace, and which is the principal and at times the only contemporary source for some of the vanished buildings. There are a number of small errors and misprints that should be corrected in a second edition; and there are some odd gaps in the bibliography. But these are minor blemishes in a book which deserves to be widely popular outside the circle of teachers and students for whom it is intended." TLS p112 F 1 '68 500w

DUFF, RAYMOND S. Sickness and society [by] Raymond S. Duff and August B. Hollingshead. 390p $12.50 Harper

362.1 Hospitals. Medicine—Practice 68-15988

"This book focuses on the relationship between the care of hospitalized medical and surgical patients and the social environment of a university and community hospital. Do the patients receive optional care? Does the social system hinder or enhance such care? Is the psychosocial environment sufficiently considered in rendering such care? By studying the medical care of three 'social classes' of patients—those in ward, semiprivate, and private accommodations—through detailed interviews and observations, the authors provide answers to these questions. . . . The main message of the book is [that]: . . . The patient's care is far from what it could and should be!" (Foreword) Index.

"[The authors] describe with abundant detail the setting and methodology of the study, relations of patients, and attitudes of family and health personnel. Some portions of the book seem highly subjective in contrast to others where data are rigorously analyzed. While the anecdotes will fascinate the general reader, statistical presentations require training and experience for correct interpretation. Most of the quotations from hospital personnel would not be reassuring to readers who are ill. This is an important book for the medical care collection." C. M. Brosky

Library J 93:1152 Mr 15 '68 110w

"Drs. Duff, a pediatrician at Yale University School of Medicine, and Hollingshead, a Yale sociologist, have taken a long, hard look at the way patients are treated in an unnamed university medical center (obviously their own) and found conditions that would make Gillespie and Kildare consider turning in their licenses. Their book is based on personal observation of the care given to 161 men and women admitted to the hospital. . . . The result is an important social document that studies the effects of a patient's past, his emotional status, and his environment on his illness, and examines how adequately the health team takes these factors into account in treating him." Matt Clark

New Repub 159:21 Ag 3 '68 550w

DUFFUS, R. L. Tomorrow's news; a primer for prophets. 169p $4.50 Norton

901.94 Civilization, Modern 67-11891

A former reporter and editorial writer "considers some of our human dilemmas [and tries] to guess how serious they are and what to do about them. These 'dilemmas,' . . . are overpopulation; the exploitation of scientific knowledge to military ends; over-reliance on military solutions to political problems; failure to develop the potential of the United Nations; cultural self-satisfaction; uncontrollable wanderlust; an unreasoning preoccupation with space exploration; increasing bureaucratization of government, industry, and labor; the growing obsolescence of employment, and spiritual clumsiness." (Sat R)

"Could go down in journalistic history as the longest editorial ever written. It is the composed work of an individualist who, fortified by a background in journalism and teaching, has cast a jaundiced eye on the state of today's world. The title is somewhat of a misnomer, for rather than a book on how things will be, it is a thesis on social syndromes that are diseasing man's freedom of will, and the inevitability of degeneration unless we recognize them. While not a journalist type handbook, it is an extremely well done book, both in writing and in thought. It is an old-fashioned hard look at ourselves. . . . 'Must' reading for a future journalist who believes that responsibility is more than seeing that names are spelled correctly."

Choice 5:468 Je '68 200w

"Duffus speaks for a venerable tradition of amiable, sentimental realism. He'd like to think that men will have the fortitude, wisdom, and ordinary charity to manage their affairs affably, or at least with minimum violence. But his optimism is tinged with the contradictory view that in nature's grand plan it hardly matters. That is the elusive paradox of this book—Duffus wants to be taken seriously, but not quite. . . . [His] mild-mannered irony is proof of his good nature, and it lends his book an undeniable charm. [This] book, less informative than inquisitive, is too slight to be taken seriously, but too pleasant to refuse." C. M. Curtis

Sat R 50:41 My 20 '67 500w

DUFFY, MAUREEN. The paradox players; a novel. 221p $4.95 Simon & Schuster

68-25745

Sym, the hero of this novel, is "a writer in his thirties cut loose from his wife and child, [who] buys a houseboat moored off an island in the Thames, upriver from London, and lives through a bitter English winter with an . . . eccentric group of river people—serious social dropouts like himself. These are the paradox players of the title: those who refuse to play the game of conventional social life." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Arthur MacGillivray
Best Sell 28:256 O 1 '68 200w

"Miss Duffy's sparse, restrained style captures the brooding emptiness of river living, but the reader is ever aware of the pulse and flow of the life there. A book well worth reading, it is one very few readers, if any, will forget. A sense of 'rightness' of character, tone, and mood is apparent throughout. Except for a slightly contrived ending, this is a brilliantly conceived and beautifully executed novel." David Lawson

Library J 93:2688 J1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Sara Blackburn
Nation 207:346 O 7 '68 100w

"Miss Duffy's hero is a Hemingwayish sort of fellow. . . . [who] takes up life and letters on a houseboat where he falls in love with Sassie, who, just for a change, is a whore with a heart of gold. There is also one of those noble savage types, actually called Walden and everyone spends a lot of time in the most mundane philosophical chat imaginable while Miss Duffy beats the reader about the head and shoulders with detailed description." Stanley Reynolds

New Statesman 74:366 S 22 '67 150w

Reviewed by Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk R p20 Ag 11 '68 220w
New Yorker 44:181 O 5 '68 230w

"The paradox which [Miss Duffy's] novel is about: to discover a reality in oneself beyond the delusion of 'getting and spending,' it is necessary to reduce life to simple survival; yet, in opting out of materialistic society, one risks believing in the permanence of ideals and ideal situations. . . . Too many questions about the purpose of society, the values in marriage, the virtues of total honesty, are asked and remain unanswered—Miss Duffy is nothing if not earnest in her intention to spread the gospel of self-doubt. . . . [However] her great gift, this time as before, [is] in the descriptions of precise, moment-by-moment physical experience. . . . [This book] may be more subdued than Miss Duffy's previous novels, but perhaps its plea for the protesting minority will prove memorable precisely because she has allowed the facts of experience to project doubts and a kind of dogged resilience rather than the mouthings of rejection and disgust."

TLS p868 S 28 '67 650w

DUGAN, ALAN. Poems 3. 61p $4.50; pa $1.45
Yale univ. press

811

67-24496

The author of Poems (BRD 1961) and Poems 2 (BRD 1964) presents a third collection of verse.

Reviewed by Peter Davison
Atlantic 221:141 F '68 170w

"What strikes one about these poems—mostly in short lines, mostly unrhymed—is the absolute assurance of the poet. . . . By being himself and somehow putting the self into terse, stripped-down poetry, he creates a kind of verse that is very much his own. Whether he deals with geography, the plain facts of love, or anything else that catches his fancy, he goes at it bluntly and with power. . . . Formidable poetry, written by a man who sounds as though he were born without illusions and is therefore not disillusioned."

Choice 5:339 My '68 200w

Reviewed by Jerome Cushman
Library J 93:1149 Mr 15 '68 200w

"[Dugan's] songs are not really songs at all, but 'counter-songs,' snatches of back-alley spleen, scraps of lust, habits, and habitats, 'army verse I've said and heard . . . in enlisted men's latrines.' He is unsparing in tone, and rather rough in matters of craft. The second collection was not up to the first, and the third is not up to the second. Yet even the slightest of Alan Dugan's efforts, even his short barks of disgust, has something of his particular stamp, density, and mind. . . . What is striking in [his] poetry—the rancorous insights, the self-mocking wit—is paramount in the literature of today, a literature of limitations, an all encompassing grinding down, one that knows you test the strength of a man's character less by what he denies himself, than by what he's been denied." Robert Mazzocco

N Y Rev of Books 9:19 N 23 '67 1600w

"The freedom of [Dugan's] verse bodies forth a fierce, solipsistic freedom of spirit and vision. When his first book (which won the Pulitzer Prize in 1962) appeared, the English critic A. Alvarez called him 'a poet utterly—and mercifully—without charm.' But there is no lack of rhythm or of a certain Webern-like music, always deriving from the particular experience of the poem." William Meredith

N Y Times Bk R p24 D 17 '67 360w

Reviewed by Louise Bogan
New Yorker 43:137 Mr 30 '68 60w

Reviewed by Barry Spacks
Poetry 112:270 J1 '68 500w

"Dugan is wordier than ever . . . and writes with an anger at society that moves from artless outcry to black resignation in the face of the world's evils, and back again. . . . [He] still has inside him the touch that gave us in his first two books some fine poems I still quote from memory and without which I would not teach a class in modern poetry. Hints of it occur all through this book, but only hints. There is too much of the man here and not enough of the poet, a continual expectation of what is not delivered. I am not sure what Dugan is working out between himself and his poems, and I am willing to wait and see; but the feeling finally in reading Poems: 3 is one of disappointment." Miller Williams

Sat R 51:33 Mr 9 '68 170w

TLS p388 Ap 18 '68 100w

Reviewed by S. F. Morse
Va Q R 44:507 summer '68 170w

DUGGER, RONNIE. Dark star; Hiroshima reconsidered in the life of Claude Eatherly of Lincoln Park, Texas. 254p pl $5.95 World pub.

B or 92 Eatherly, Claude Robert 67-24473

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by G. P. Elliot
Commentary 45:75 Ag '68 800w

Reviewed by John Thompson
N Y Rev of Books 10:26 Ap 11 '68 1250w

N Y Times Bk R p24 Mr 31 '68 310w

Reviewed by Edita Morris
Sat R 51:29 Mr 2 '68 850w

DUHRSSSEN, ALFRED. Memoir of an aged child; a novel. 184p $4.95 Holt

67-19052

This first novel, concerned with the growth of a boy from childhood to manhood, "begins when the boy is seven and his parents are divorced. He is shunted from one . . . meaningless, loveless experience to the next. Incidents and events are recorded in the first person. . . . The boy views his life as though he were outside himself, watching someone else going through the motions of living. His affair with Isabel follows the same aimless, amoral drift. She appears and disappears throughout his adolescence and college days, while at the same time having an affair with his father. Isabel and the 'aged child' of the title end up living together on her houseboat, drifting aimlessly." (Library J) Portions of this novel originally appeared in Harper's Bazaar.

"Duhrrssen makes furtive advances to profound questions in his exposition of the mind of this child, but he shies away from any exploration of them, even as the child of his novel might have when faced with these questions. Vivid images flash occasionally through the pages of this short work, but they always die an undeveloped, meaningless death. These images and allusions are pointless as the work as a whole seems to be pointless. . . . The book is not lurid, not obscene in sexual matters in attempting to portray ideas and images relating to the sexual awakening of the adolescent. It is not funny, not sad, not touching. Just distasteful." J. D. Foreman

Best Sell 27:276 O 15 '67 400w

Reviewed by Suzanne Lennon
Library J 92:3054 S 15 '67 190w

Reviewed by Gillian Tindall
New Statesman 75:844 Je 21 '68 120w

"Duhrrssen is a virtuoso at presenting images that may mean no more than themselves; nevertheless, they captivate and delight like Ingmar Bergman's lingering close-ups. Through vision, fantasy and stunningly vivid shards of reality, there is gradually assembled the mosaic of a personality. Names, place-names, most geography are omitted; the protagonist grows to manhood in a vaguely exotic background sometimes evoking Europe, sometimes America, laced with dreams and sharply remembered episodes. . . . [This] novel sees the world at once through the eyes of a sad child and a consummate artist." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p51 S 24 '67 200w

"The book is not an argument, aesthetic or psychological, for or against the outlook of a child. Mr. Duhrrssen simply presents some of the emotions and sensations that the outlook entails, indicating beautifully how freakish and suggestive it can be, and how the proper sense of time and perspective that one ordinarily develops to deal with strangeness and surprises both deprives and protects."

New Yorker 43:232 D 2 '67 150w

DUIGNAN, PETER, jt. auth. Burden of empire. See Gann, L. H.

DUIGNAN, PETER. Handbook of American resources for African studies. (Bibl. ser) 218p $6 Stanford univ. Hoover inst. on war, revolution, & peace

016.916 Africa—Bibliography. Art, African—Catalogs 66-20901

"Gathered largely by responses to questionnaires, the Handbook describes the African resources of . . . library and manuscript collections, . . . church and missionary libraries and archives, . . . art and ethnographic collections, and [business archives]." (Col & Res Lib) Index.

"[Contains] clear descriptive essays of U.S. public, academic, and special libraries as well as pertinent government agencies. Good index. Libraries underwriting solid African studies programs will value and use Duignan's annotated sources for guidance in acquisitions and library loans."

Choice 4:1103 D '67 100w

"Entries range from a laconic line-and-a-half to a very extensive description (40 pages) of the holdings of the National Archives compiled by Morris Rieger, director of the National African Guide Project, which will appear later as a separate monograph, and by E. J. Algoa of the National Archives of Nigeria. Americans—particularly those new to African Studies—will be surprised at the extent of American involvement in Africa prior to the Civil War. There is a very extensive index which will be a big help to reference and interlibrary loan libraries." David Jolly

Col & Res Lib 28:445 N '67 270w

"In its present form the Handbook will be helpful to the fourteen hundred members of the African Studies Association and all libraries in the United States as well as to scholars and libraries overseas. . . . [However,] the lack of a standard of uniformity in the descriptions makes the assessment of the weight of each collection rather problematic. The variation in quality as well as in kind is wide. For example, the Northwestern University Library description is of little use because of its generality. . . . It is a pity that so little attention is given to the section on art and ethnographic collections. The book is well printed but not bound to withstand institutional use." H. E. Panofsky

Library Q 37:397 O '67 1650w

DUKES, PAUL. Catherine the Great and the Russian nobility; a study based on the materials of the legislative commission of 1767. 268p $9.50 Cambridge

947 Russia—History. Nobility. Catherine II. Empress of Russia [67-13802]

This volume is concerned with "social changes in 18th-century Russia, the rise of the nobility and decline of the peasantry with consequences felt to the time of emancipation in 1861 and beyond." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"A thorough and detailed study. . . . The work is based on primary sources but depends heavily on known authorities and scarcely presents any insights or views different from those reached by Russian historians. However, being the only study in depth of a crucial phase of Russian social history in English, [it] might be useful to anyone with no command of Russian or no access to the sources. Recommended, for large collections dealing with Russian history."

Choice 5:854 S '68 100w
TLS p111 F 1 '68 650w

DULLES, ALLEN, ed. Great true spy stories. 393p $6.95 Giniger; Harper

327 Spies 66-20733

The "former CIA director has produced this anthology of [39] stories dealing with classic and semiclassical espionage cases throughout the ages. Not all of the inclusions have previously appeared in book form. The emphasis is very heavily on the 20th Century although Civil War spies, Casanova, and Herodotus are also included. Mr. Dulles has contributed an introductory essay on intelligence work and has added . . . evaluative comments to each excerpt. In addition, he has grouped the items by broad subject headings, such as 'Double Agents,' 'Defections,' 'Codes and Ciphers.'" (Library J)

Reviewed by Michael Burke
Book World p4 Mr 24 '68 650w

"Not an essential purchase although it would make good bedside reading." Norman Horrocks
Library J 93:195 Ja 15 '68 120w

Reviewed by Janet Hellerich
Library J 93:2134 My 15 '68 100w [YA]

"Most of [these spy stories] are neither great nor true. [They are,] in fact, opaque and meaningless; but the public, doubtless, will gobble up these murky tales." Colin MacInnes
New Statesman 76:398 S 27 '68 1200w

"[This] collection is required reading for Espionage A, or whatever the relevant institutions call the first broad course in that delicate and many-sided art. . . . Mr. Dulles's introductory remarks to each section are short, lucid and commonsensical. . . . All the way, you have the feeling that you are in the hands of an old-world maître d'hôtel, conjuring up dish after exotic dish. . . . [But] the considerable accomplishment of this collection is less than the intent. Mr. Dulles has taken all history as his province . . . [and] the five scattered and rather arbitrary selections from earlier days add little. Modern times would have been enough to draw on, say since 1900. . . . Such a quibble is a little like complaining about a rickety chair at a banquet. For what a feast the 34 modern selections do make. . . . Inevitably, some of the selections are too fragmentary. . . . [But] both average reader and serious student will find rich rewards." Burke Wilkinson

N Y Times Bk R p48 Mr 1 '68 1300w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:52 F 24 '68 20w

DULLES, ELEANOR LANSING. Berlin; the wall is not forever; foreword by Konrad Adenauer. 245p $6 Univ. of N.C. press

943.1 Berlin wall (1961- ) 67-17032

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by W. E. Wright

Am Pol Sci R 62:295 Mr '68 750w

Choice 5:252 Ap '68 180w

TLS p847 Ag 8 '68 700w

DULLES, FOSTER RHEA. The Civil rights commission 1957-1965. 274p $7.50. Mich. state univ. press

353 U.S. Commission on Civil Rights

67-30556

The author traces "the first eight years of the activities of the United States Civil Rights Commission, basing his account mainly on the records of the Commission." (Library J)

"The analysis is somewhat lacking in depth, probably because many important materials are not yet open to the historian. The book is a useful summary of the commission's findings, recommendations, and activities, especially for libraries which do not have the firsthand sources themselves."

Choice 5:1038 O '68 130w

"Professor Dulles, a distinguished historian, has written a scholarly account. But it needs to be supplemented by the commission's reports themselves in which innumerable Negroes tell their unforgettable tale of injustice."

Economist 228:42 Ag 3 '68 350w

Reviewed by J. S. Auerbach

J Am Hist 55:431 S '68 460w

"As a historian should, [Professor Dulles] places the Commission in the context of its times. . . . The book will be valuable for collections on recent civil rights developments." R. F. Kugler

Library J 93:2631 J1 '68 100w

TLS p1191 O 24 '68 390w

DULLES, JOHN W. F. Vargas of Brazil; a political biography. 395p pl maps $8.50 Univ. of Tex. press

981 Vargas, Getúlio. Brazil—Politics and government 67-20502

"While the narrative presents personal data on Brazil's most renowned political leader, the work is not a biography that interprets the relationship between a man's intimate and public life. It is, instead, the writing of a [historian] who has consulted primary sources, derived and assembled the facts that entered into the political life of Vargas from his election to the Gaucho State Assembly in 1909, to 1954 when he committed suicide." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by T. E. Skidmore

Am Hist R 73:1270 Ap '68 400w

"[Dulles' work] offers a more detailed account of the politics of the Vargas era [than other recent works] but it is more recitative than analytical. Along with a promised sequel to cover the period from the suicide of Vargas to the revolution of 1964, it will furnish an indispensable compendium of information which goes far beyond [José Maria Bello's A History of Modern Brazil, 1889-1964, BRD 1966] . . . and is likely to remain the last word on what can be gleaned from the printed sources, interviews, and U. S. State Department records. Unfortunately, the use of such sources tends not only to cause a concentration on politics but also to overemphasize the role of the U.S. in Brazilian affairs. Dulles' scholarly apparatus and the assumption of a great deal of knowledge of Brazil make the book attractive only to specialists."

Choice 4:1168 D '67 220w

"The work is of value mainly to specialists seeking a thorough source from which to glean facts for interpreting Brazil's political development. The content of the book is complemented by unique and previously unpublished photographs of Vargas and the many figures that participated in Brazil's emergence into the 'isms' of the first half of the 20th Century, the period when Brazil assumed its present significant but troubled position in Latin America." A. D. Trejo

Library J 92:2922 S 1 '67 170w

"Professor Dulles's book is, without doubt, the most detailed narrative account of Brazilian political history in the 1930s and 1940s available in English (and some of the photographs are of unusual interest). Yet it is not well written (the least said about the 'résumé' the better). Nor will it make the events of these years intelligible to the non-specialist. There is no serious attempt to analyse the significance of the 1930 Revolution, nor the factors behind Getúlio's rise to national prominence, . . . nor the way in which he maintained himself in power, nor the changing nature of his regime. . . . The man himself, the master of compromise and consensus politics, remains an enigma. In his preface Professor Dulles quotes the opinions (not entirely helpful) of others. . . . But he offers few fresh insights of his own."

TLS p1293 N 14 '68 1100w

DUMAS, FRANÇOIS RIBADEAU. Cagliostro; tr. from the French by Elisabeth Abbott. 308p pl $6.95 Orion

B or 92 Cagliostro, Alessandro, conte di, originally Giuseppe Balsamo. Occult sciences 68-346

This is a biography of the eighteenth-century figure who travelled throughout Europe "as Freemason, alchemist, and faith healer [and] was widely accepted as a person capable of performing miraculous feats. He became involved in a French court scandal, was finally condemned by the Inquisition and died in prison." (Library J) First published in French in 1966 under the title Cagliostro.

"Dumas suggests that [Cagliostro] resembled Christ in his goodness to the poor and suffering. . . . The picture is of a man of good intentions whose meddling in the occult made him seem to some men 'a modern Faust.' Dumas scarcely knows whether to credit his friends or his foes. He leaves his readers with the same dilemma." J. J. McAleer

Best Sell 27:416 F 1 '68 600w

"Mr. Dumas, lecturer in history at the Sorbonne, claims to settle many of the arguments [about Cagliostro] through research in unpublished sources, but if he has intended this book for the scholarly community, he omitted the necessary apparatus. If, as is more likely, he intended it for a popular audience, it should be fast moving and readable; yet his penchant for involved genealogical paragraphs and his tendency to list rather than to analyze slows down reading and comprehension. Either audience should be aware that the book is not without error of fact. . . . Patrons fascinated with 18th-Century occultism will doubtless dwell at length upon [these] tales . . . but the reviewer would recommend it only with great hesitancy." E. K. Welsh

Library J 93:985 Mr 1 '68 210w

"That [Cagliostro] has his defenders even today is shown by Dumas, whose [book] would be more convincing if accompanied by an index, bibliography and the scholarly disciplines which these imply."

TLS p316 Mr 28 '68 40w

DUNBAR, ERNEST, ed. The black expatriates; a study of American Negroes in exile; ed. and with an introd. by Ernest Dunbar. 251p $5 Dutton

325.273 Negroes. Americans in foreign countries 67-11363

"Interviews by a senior editor of Look magazine of 16 American Negroes who for various reasons decided to leave America to live elsewhere, such as Africa, Western Europe, and Scandinavia. Those interviewed are intellectually superior with careers as teachers, artists, and musicians; even those living in the same area report markedly different experiences." (Library J)

Reviewed by Albert Murray

Book World p10 My 19 '68 370w

Choice 5:1050 O '68 100w

"The locations in Africa and Europe and the personalities from university professor to hard-up photographer are perceptively introduced.

DUNBAR, ERNEST—Continued

Although not a scientifically selected random sample . . . and although the questions [the author] puts to the interviewees differ, there is much of interest here for those concerned with the love-hate relationship America develops with many of her children—a relationship which seems to cause these black expatriates to remain American, unlike emigrants from other Western cultures. This is a book of interest to the general reader." J. M. Elrod

Library J 92:4428 D 1 '67 120w

Reviewed by Valeria Gregory

Library J 92:4638 D 15 '67 80w [YA]

"Dunbar became a writer for Look in 1954, and has been a senior editor of that publication for about a decade. He is one of only four or five Negro editors in the magazine and book industries combined, and it is reasonable to assume that he wrote [this book] with a certain partisanship. Nevertheless, his skill and experience have resulted in a perceptive and often painful book. He has visited Europe and Africa every year since 1958, and was in Africa three times during 1960-61." J. A. Williams

Sat R 51:30 Ja 27 '68 650w

TLS p1130 O 3 '68 1700w

DUNBAR, JANET. Peg Woffington and her world. 245p il $7.95 Houghton

B or 92 Woffington, Margaret 68-22385

This biography tells the story of a poor Irish girl who "became the toast of [the] London and Dublin [theater in the middle 1700's]." (Christian Science Monitor)

"Miss Dunbar's gentle imagination has enabled us to follow Peg through countless theater ovations . . . and through a few chilling silences when, after a good play well acted, the audience sat grim and silent. . . . So far away in time; yet time cannot conceal her utterly while this book remains. . . . Miss Dunbar's pleasant volume reminds us of a civilized, handsome, ugly, reasonable, savage era. The author has earned our thanks." Neil Millar

Christian Science Monitor p13 S 26 '68 700w

"[The author] is like an artist who does not quite trust the quality of her colours and who is anxious lest they will run out before she has finished her picture. There is, superficially, material enough, as the bibliography shows, for a full-length study, but the sources are sometimes contradictory and not always to be trusted, and so Peg eventually emerges more as a study for a portrait, and a somewhat shadowy study at that, than as the detailed, finished article."

Economist 229:31 D 28 '68 500w

"An epilogue, author's note, carefully selected illustrations and notes on them, and a list of parts played by Peg Woffington are added to the text to make a complete story of the tempestuous, brilliant and beloved Peg. . . . Mrs. Dunbar is a Scottish writer who has distinguished herself by writing several excellent books. This one is worthy of 'top of the list!' Theater, and 18th-Century collections will add Peg Woffington's story, and the general reader will find it a most satisfying account of a successful, endearing, (and not quite respectable) woman of history. A delight to read, buy it." K. T. Willis

Library J 93:4546 D 1 '68 90w

"Mrs. Woffington's was an ever-evolving artistry and we are indebted to Miss Dunbar for showing us how she achieved a new status as a tragedienne after her encounter in Paris with Madame Dumesnil. . . . Miss Dunbar rightly stresses the true professionalism with which Mrs Woffington always tackled her work. . . . It is hard to appreciate the extent to which the playgoer entered into the life of the eighteenth-century playhouse. Miss Dunbar makes this aspect of her subject amply clear, showing the love-hate relationship of player and public. . . . The age abounded with eccentric, picturesque personalities and with a rare sense of relevance Miss Dunbar has given them their place in the biography. . . . This study is just in its assessment. Such flaws as it has are minor and few . . . and the book leaves us with the picture of an outstandingly able actress, a woman of great charity and loyalty, with a spirit and a beauty that still compel admiration."

TLS p1054 S 19 '68 700w

DUNCAN, OTIS DUDLEY, Jr. auth. The American occupational structure. See Blau, P. M.

DUNCAN, ROBERT. Bending the bow. 137p $5; pa $2.25 New directions

811

68-15879

A collection of poetry by the author of Roots and Branches, BRD 1965. This "book continues his open series of poems, 'Structures of Rime,' and begins a new one, 'Passages.' And there are as well a . . . set of disconnected poems." (Va Q R) Some of these poems have appeared previously in the following periodicals: The Paris Review, The Nation and Audit.

Reviewed by Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p9 J1 23 '68 350w

Reviewed by Louis Simpson

Harper 237:74 Ag '68 500w

"The use of mythology, religion, symbolism, not always easy going, seem to heighten [Duncan's] awareness of what's what today. The poems are a continuum and they range from the lyrical 'Moon' to an abstract poem dance, 'Spelling', meant to be performed. The Duncan of the old San Francisco days shows up in 'Multiuniversity,' in which he identifies with the Berkeley protesters in a ripping sardonic poem. He is increasingly universalizing his experience and as such is an important voice among today's poets. Recommended for public, college, and university libraries, along with some of his other books." Jerome Cushman

Library J 93:2247 Je 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Jim Harrison

N Y Times Bk R p66 S 29 '68 800w

"The main, and unfortunate, characteristic of Duncan's new book is its tediousness. The poems go on talking and talking and, to this reviewer, they are terribly self-conscious. What Duncan seems to lack is the ability to make choices; it is as if anything that comes to mind gets poured into a poem. His verses are filled with fragments of political or social ideas that are never sustained or fully dramatized, and what imagery occurs is incidental if not lost. . . . A poem is something to be loved for its voice, for its way of saying things; if it becomes merely a voice of complaint or attack, it is no more than propaganda for the élite. Take, for example, the opening lines of Duncan's 'Up Rising': . . . Here we have clumsy and pretentious language, dull rhythms, glib phrasing, and accusation that dulls any meaningful distinctions regarding the causes and complexities of human evil. The passage sounds to me like groupthink." Robert Pack

Sat R 51:39 Ag 24 '68 390w

"Complete with footnotes and an allusive richness breathing life into dust, Duncan is truly an academic poet. His lines are the hard-earned result of an intensive classical education of the traditional mode. . . . Attacks on President Johnson comparing him to Hitler and Stalin rub shoulders with quotations from Victor Hugo and Jacob John Sessler. Duncan uses the insane rantings against Johnson to show the hollowness of such modern academic 'protest' poetry. And they are insane, screaming, pointless, absurd. How rich and true then does his woven texture of the past appear, cool, intelligent, with the curves of marble in every line. How brilliantly he has shown the lie of his anary contemporaries in the classic calm of his inquiring poetic mind."

Va Q R 44:civ summer '68 140w

DUNCANSON, DENNIS J. Government and revolution in Vietnam: issued under the auspices of the Royal inst. of int. affairs. 442p $9.50 Oxford

959.7 Vietnam—History. Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- 68-19954

The author, who served on the Thompson Advisory Mission to Vietnam from 1961 to 1965, "explores the beginnings of Vietnamese national history, and the country's traditional forms of government and of revolution. . . . He shows how Ho Chi Minh adapted Bolshevism to [Vietnamese] traditions and . . . analyses the impact on Vietnam of French colonial rule . . . and of the rise and fall of Ngo Dinh Diem. . . . Mr. Duncanson supports the aims of American policy, but seeks to explain why they have been so hard to realize, and to suggest sounder approaches to the total configuration of the Vietnamese enigma." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney

America 118:605 My 4 '68 160w

Choice 5:868 S '68 110w

"Duncanson has written a most learned and comprehensive book on the background of our troubles in Vietnam from the viewpoint of a moderate hawk. His historical account lays blame on all sides and calls for modest revisions. Readers will be informed about Vietnam's past but given little guidance about its and our future."

Christlan Century 85:457 Ap 10 '68 50w

Reviewed by W. S. Wong

Library J 93:2248 Je 1 '68 160w

"Duncanson takes his detailed narrative of the Vietnam war only as far as the fall of Diem's government in 1963. But all the arguments and elements—or nearly all—that now cloud the issue were already present. The sloppy assumptions and slogan thinking of so many editorials and columns and reportages look shabby after Duncanson. . . . It's fair to say that no conventional liberal or left-wing assumption can survive the book unscarred. But, despite his detachment, Duncanson does have an attitude. . . . While the history unfolds, Duncanson is concerned to demonstrate . . . [that the Americans should follow the] successful Malayan example and methodically fight on the ground to win land and people." Nicholas Tomalin

New Statesman 75:416 Mr 29 '68 450w

"[The author] nowhere says explicitly what he means by revolution. But in reading [this book] one realizes that Mr. Duncanson . . . believes that revolution is anarchy. . . . Despite Mr. Duncanson's extensive firsthand experience—his understanding of Communist revolutionary war strategies goes far beyond that of American policymakers—his insights into the nature of revolution are stunted to the point that his book will mislead the layman just as it will exasperate the specialist. He refuses to acknowledge that the success of a revolutionary conspiracy in overthrowing the government indicates the government's lack of support rather than the strength of the conspirators." J. T. McAlister

N Y Times Bk R p6 J1 21 '68 800w

Reviewed by C. W. Yost

Sat R 51:30 My 11 '68 430w

"Mr. Duncanson has produced by far the best analysis that has yet appeared of the Vietnamese problem as a whole, although it will be said that he accepts the American case against North Vietnam too readily and that he is unduly generous to the record of the Americans and of Diem in the South. The book is well-documented, excellently arranged, and there is a good bibliography."

TLS p199 F 29 '68 2000w

Va Q R 44:clxxvi autumn '68 120w

DUNLOP, AGNES MARY ROBERTSON. See Kyle, E.

DUNN, A. M. S., jt. auth. Mongooses. See Hinton, H. E.

DUNN, DOROTHY. American Indian painting of the Southwest and Plains areas. 429p 124il 32col il $25 Univ. of N.Mex. press

759.01 Indians of North America—Art

68-19736

The author who "established an experimental art class in the Sante Fe Indian School in the early 1930's [which] has continued to the present day . . . traces the traditional bases of American Indian motifs and style from pre-Columbian times to the present. . . . The book has two major divisions, pre-modern and modern painting, with 'modern' being roughly defined as post-1885. The first section . . . presents historical and archeological data as well as some general statements on primitive art. The second section is more autobiographical, treating in large part of persons and events of which the author has had personal knowledge. . . . [It includes] analysis and description of modern Indian art and some partial biographies of Indian artists." (Science) Index.

Reviewed by Lee Ash

Library J 93:3121 S 15 '68 170w

Reviewed by N. S. Momaday

N Y Times Bk R p6 J1 28 '68 650w

"The present volume [is] the most complete record yet published on the development of North American Indian painting . . . [and] is clearly destined to become a classic in the field. . . .

The section 'Painting Before the Modern School' is devoted to the earliest work in the Southwest, and considers the prehistoric and recent eras tribally and geographically. Dunn's well-organized treatment of this topic is excellent, and serves to place the early painters in their true role as progenitors to contemporary Indian artists. Always concerned more with the individual than the art, she provides insight into the personalities of many of those who have made a mark in the art world. . . . Unfortunately, many works selected for illustration are not the best Indian art available, and the quality of reproduction is only average. More open to question is Dunn's use in several instances of three or four examples of the same individual's work . . . to the exclusion of equally important artists. . . . [The book suffers from] abysmally poor editing." F. J. Dockstader

Sat R 51:61 Je 22 '68 1300w

"[This work is] not only an art book but also, to a considerable degree, a culture history of the Southwestern and Plains Indians. As such it will have wide appeal. The author's objective, to analyze modern Indian painting in light of Indian cultural heritage and ideology, has been effectively furthered by 33 color plates and 124 black-and-white figures of American Indian paintings. The color illustrations are published for the first time, and they are an impressive and interesting collection. . . . [though] the color reproduction is disappointing. . . . It would also be desirable to indicate the size of the originals. . . . The material [in the second section] is handled with an enthusiasm that comes from personal involvement over a span of many years. . . . There is no other book with the scope of this one, and it is unlikely that it will have a rival in the near future." M. S. Garbarino

Science 161:35 J1 5 '68 400w

DUNNE, JOHN GREGORY. Delano; the story of the California grape strike; phot. by Ted Streshinsky. 176p $4.95 Farrar, Straus

331.89 Delano, California—Strike, 1965-

67-22438

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by P. A. Carey

America 118:44 Ja 13 '68 410w

Choice 5:655 J1 '68 120w

Reviewed by Victor Salandini

Commonweal 87:567 F 1 '68 850w

Reviewed by C. L. Tefft

Library J 93:315 Ja 15 '68 60w

Va Q R 44:lxixii spring '68 140w

Reviewed by N. C. Mills

Yale R 57:620 summer '68 1500w

DUNNER, JOSEPH, ed. Handbook of world history; concepts and issues. 101lp $20 Philosophical lib.

909 History—Dictionaries

66-10222

This volume consists of essays which seek to provide "reference information on the origins and applications of . . . those historical ideas, concepts and events that can be considered keys to the explanation of present day socio-political life in the world." (Publisher's note)

"Unfortunately, many of the brief sketches are of questionable value. Several of the essays are polemical in character, and the general balance of the book is marred by the fact that some of the relatively marginal or less important subjects receive longer treatment than some of the crucial concepts and movements. . . . The entire book was planned as a handy reference work. It fails to fulfill that purpose." H. H. Adelson

Library J 92:4397 D 1 '67 150w

"Each of the 350 articles defines its subject and develops it historically or logically, and many of the contributors to this useful volume add a bibliography. Among the subjects, which sweep from Abolitionism to Zoroastrianism, are the Aesopian Language. . . . Fascism, Historical Space-Time Continuum. . . . Islam, Junta, Satyagraha, Sufism, and Zionism—but nothing on agnosticism or atheism." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:46 My 18 '68 120w

Reviewed by W. H. McNeill

Social Studies 59:286 N '68 370w

DUNNING, STEPHEN, comp. Reflections on a gift of watermelon pickle . . . and other modern verse [comp. by] Stephen Dunning, Edward Lueders [and] Hugh Smith; design: Donald Marvine. 139p $3.95 Lothrop

811 Poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature
67-29527

The compilers, all professors of English, have selected one hundred and fourteen poems for young readers "not ready for a formal study of poetry through the ages. . . . More than half of the poems in the book are those that young people chose from the selections we felt were good enough. Most of them were written during the lifetime of today's young people." (Compilers' note) Index. "Age ten and up." (Sat R)

"The uniqueness of the collection . . . consists in the pairing—on imaginatively designed pages—of significant, sharp, and beautifully composed photographs with many of the poems. Interesting in themselves, these pictures could lure a young reader to read the accompanying poems and see comparisons between verbal and visual images." P. H.

Horn Bk 44:73 F '68 170w

"This compact, handsome anthology . . . should do at least two things for the young reader: help train his ear away from the iambic stress of traditional verse and teach him that subjects for poetry need not be 'poetic.' . . . The qualities these poems possess most is hardness. They impart a sense of tangibility, of concreteness. . . . There is a solidity to the poetry that is bound to leave a mark on the reader's mind. And a handful of poems . . . have that explosive and reverberating quality that will convince the reader he is touching the real thing. . . . This superior collection . . . is worth recommending and buying." Thomas Lask

N Y Times Bk N p38 D 10 '67 320w

"This is an absolutely delightful book, dignified in format and profusely illustrated with excellent photographs. . . . [The poems] are of uniformly high quality although they are in every other way varied: in subject, in mood, and in form. Some of the poets are well known, some less so; all of the selections mirror life today." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:35 Ja 27 '68 80w

DUNPHY, JACK. Nightmovers. 318p $5.95 Morrow

68-12147

This novel "is centered around a childless, middle-aged Irishwoman whose husband has recently died. She has also just lost her only other connection with a meaningful past—the family fish store, now condemned to make room for further changes in her once-comfortable old Brooklyn neighborhood. Her only real contact is with an aging, misunderstood priest, Father Rose. . . . [Her life] is both complicated and transformed by the arrival of a young man, LeRoy, who claims to be her cousin from Ireland. . . . Ultimately, their relationship is regenerative, leading her away from her own sorrow." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Carefully and delicately a story is etched out against a grimy red brick Brooklyn background. . . . Jack Dunphy is an author who has been in those regions where only the heart and spirit dwell, else he could not have fashioned this story. . . . The essential elements cry out intimately to all: the dizzying fear of loneliness, the healing power of human love. . . . Nightmovers does not need a great deal of . . . analysis. Just enjoy, enjoy." Anne Keehan

Best Sell 27:422 F 1 '68 500w

"There are many poignant passages in the book. On balance, however, the writing is erratic, the story line elusive and weak. The novel is not likely to generate and sustain wide reader interest." S. L. Simon

Library J 93:571 F 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by Stanley Reynolds
New Statesman 76:177 Ag 9 '68 150w

"[This novel] is a series of short, sometimes lyrical epiphanies in the lives of several people, all of whom share a feeling of isolation, an overpowering sense of loss. . . . Each of the characters' lives and fortunes fit into the central, tragic theme like stones in a mosaic. Mr. Dunphy is able to deal with nuances of feeling while skirting sentimentality, because of the unflinching quality of his own mercy." Peter Collier

N Y Times Bk R p37 F 4 '68 600w

TLS p975 S 12 '68 280w

Va Q R 44:lv1 spring '68 100w

DUNSHEATH, PERCY. Giants of electricity. 200p il $4.50 Crowell

920 Scientists—Juvenile literature. Electricity—Juvenile literature 67-6584

A collection of biographies of men whose work was essential to electrical progress. They include late eighteenth and early nineteenth century scientists, such as Franklin, Galvani, Faraday, Ohm, Maxwell and others. Bibliography. Index. "Grades eight to ten." (Library J)

Reviewed by H. C. Stubbs
Horn Bk 44:81 F '68 180w

"The author has provided interesting biographical information but has failed to explain clearly the nature of many of [the] scientific contributions. The descriptions of experiments suffer from a pedantic style and a paucity of diagrams. The selection of scientists whose lives were considered is arbitrary; . . . others such as Edison and Bell might have been included. Nevertheless, this is the only collection of biographies which covers some of these men specifically for teen-agers." Paul Goldstein
Library J 92:4621 D 15 '67 100w

DUPRE, HUNTLEY. Two brothers in the French revolution: Robert and Thomas Lindet. (Archon bk) 174p $6.75 Shoe String

944.04 Lindet, Robert. Lindet, Thomas. France—History—Revolution, 1789-1799 67-19458

This is "more a survey of the French Revolution, than a monograph on the brothers Lindet. . . . [Thomas] was a reforming priest, who became a constitutional bishop and whose thought was 'the echo of the lower clergy.' He was also a member of two revolutionary assemblies, the National Assembly and the Convention. Robert, on the other hand, was a lawyer, a member of the Legislative Assembly and the Convention, as well as a prominent member of the Committee of Public Safety, whose responsibility was to provide food provisions for France and for the revolutionary armies." (Choice) Index.

"This volume leans heavily on French published sources, especially the works of Amand Montier, published in 1899. It is less a contribution of new research than a skillful weaving of the narrative of the French Revolution, embodying some of the recent interpretations, with the careers of [these] two brothers. . . . The biographical information on Thomas is newer than that on Robert, but the volume will be useful particularly to students of the Revolution who do not read French. To me, the author relies too much on what the brothers say or write each other . . . without sufficient consultation of contrary sources. I miss a bibliography. . . . The volume leaves room for a more thorough investigation, at least for the years after 1793." B. F. Hyslop

Am Hist R 73:1540 Je '68 360w

"Despite the significant administrative and ecclesiastical positions held by the Lindets during a period of political, social, and religious crisis, no intensive interpretation of their thought or opinions is given. Numerous quotations are prevalent throughout the book, but gleaned primarily from secondary sources, rather than first-rate source materials. In addition, several errors are evident. There is no standard work in English on the Lindet brothers, and, unfortunately, this book has too many limitations. . . . Recommended only for students of the French Revolution."

Choice 5:252 Ap '68 280w

DUPUIS, JOSEPH. Journal of a residence in Ashantee; 2d ed., ed. with notes and an introd. by W. E. F. Ward. unpag maps $37.50 Barnes & Noble

916.67 Ashanti [66-67401]

"A reissue of Dupuis' account of his residence in Ashanti in 1819-20 that is complete except for two drawings and a conjectural map of part of West Africa he did not visit." (Choice)

"This is still a useful source book for West African historians and ethnologists, containing Dupuis' long out-of-print memoirs as Consul to the Gold Coast (present-day Ghana), and his extended notes on native Ashanti traditions."

Choice 4:1154 D '67 60w

"The journal of Joseph Dupuis is an important document for historians of the Gold Coast (modern Ghana). . . . [W. E. F. Ward] has written a scholarly introduction and supplied explanatory notes. The reproduction is a clear, accurate copy of the original. Of the plates, all but three are included. It is regrettable that Ward did not see fit to reprint 'A Map of Wangara and Soudan.' [He] suggests that the map is 'of no great interest for modern readers'; however, Joseph Dupuis's long explanation of his compilation makes the missing plate a real loss. A long and detailed work, this not for the casual reader; but as a rare and important source, in an excellent facsimile, it is a necessary purchase for specialized African history collections." H. K. Flad

Library J 92:4151 N 15 '67 270w

DURANDEAUX, JACQUES. Living questions to dead Gods; tr. by William Whitman; with an introd. by Gabriel Vahanian. 160p $3.95 Sheed

231 God 68-13851

The author, "a French Catholic philosopher-theologian, here engages in a . . . dialogue with himself about the death of God, or rather, about the death of those justifications of faith which have not survived the cultural changes brought about by Marx, Freud, and Einstein. He reflects . . . on the problems of dialogue between the philosopher and the believer, and on the conditions which are necessary to enable the believer to be authentic in his beliefs." (Library J)

"This book is one of the first serious efforts within the Catholic tradition to propose a new starting point for theological thought in the 'post-Marxian, post-Freudian, post-Einsteinian era.' [It] serves as a cogent explanation of the Death of God phenomenon to those Christians who are most familiar with the traditional Scholastic approach to metaphysics. . . . [Durandeaux] sees God's presence as an irruption into man's personal life which is totally unanticipated by the believer. The question of belief, then, is one posed not by man but by God. . . . Some of Durandeaux's asides lack the clarity that his underlying argument enjoys. . . . Nor does [he] successfully divorce himself from the standard faith/reason approach. . . . But the tension his dialectic sets up effectively depicts the dilemma of the traditional Christian in today's world." J. A. Capozzi
America 118:816 Je 29 '68 800w

"[This book] will seem at once too simple and too complex, depending on the reader's background. The translation seems clear and fluent. . . . Any competent undergraduate student with some background in philosophy would profit from this; graduate students in philosophy, theology, or psychology would find it not repeating the familiar discussions of the relation of philosophy to theology, but taking a stand in the person who is both philosopher philosophizing and believer believing. . . . [The] introduction by Vahanian which restates his views on the need for a radical rethinking of the God question . . . is not essential to the book."

Choice 5:792 S '68 210w

"[This] book offers an intriguing potpourri of Barthian theology, analytic philosophy and Catholic mysticism, all served up with more than a dash of existentialism. . . . If Durandeaux's point of view is largely familiar, it is his style that makes his theological meditation most compelling. He begins with a brief prose poem in which he confesses his 'suspicion' that God is present. He then moves to a line-by-line commentary on the poem, critically examining its assumptions, its difficulties, its convictions. Finally he reflects upon these reflections. . . . Durandeaux manages to convey his own reflective process so that the reader experiences . . . an inner dialectic that moves between believer and philosopher, between faith and doubt. . . . Yet something more is needed. . . . A reiterated Barthian transcendence mediated by mysticism can scarcely be hailed as the 'good news' for which our troubled generation [waits]." L. J. Averill

Christian Century 85:788 Je 12 '68 650w

Reviewed by Anselm Atkins
Commonweal 88:339 My 31 '68 950w

Reviewed by W. C. Heiser
Library J 93:1147 Mr 15 '68 110w

DURANT, ARIEL, Jr. auth. The lessons of history. See Durant, W.

DURANT, WILL. The lessons of history, by Will and Ariel Durant. 117p $5 Simon & Schuster

901 History—Philosophy 68-19949

The authors of the ten-volume Story of Civilization (BRD 1967) offer a survey of human experience. "With the completion of their life's work they look back and ask what history has to say about the nature, the conduct and the prospects of man, seeking in the great lives, the great ideas, the great events of the past for the meaning of man's long journey through war, conquest and creation—and for the great themes that can help us to understand our own era." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The] Durants have attempted to distill for the reader their monumental [study] . . . into one slim volume of less than ninety full pages of actual text. . . . [The book] is divided into thirteen fact-and-comment-filled chapters, and is presented . . . to the public in an extremely large print. The result is a series of loosely connected insights on the history of world civilization designed for near-sighted readers and fanatical fans of Will and Ariel Durant. The book is not, in its own right—apart from 'The Story of Civilization'—a profound and original work of history and philosophy as its publishers claim on the book's jacket." M. D. De Michele

Best Sell 28:199 Ag 15 '68 290w

Reviewed by Anthony Hartley

Book World p13 S 8 '68 650w

Reviewed by Arnold Beichman

Christian Science Monitor p11 O 10 '68 800w

"While the professional historian will probably find some of the themes developed by Mr. and Mrs. Durant as a result of their studies and presented here too elementary and may not agree with some of the Durants' conclusions, the general reader will find them extremely interesting and stimulating. The chapters, 'Hesitations,' 'Race and History,' and 'Is Progress Real?' are particularly good. In demonstrating to the general reader that there is more to the Muse Clio than the mere chronology of the rise and fall of the nations, the Durants have performed a great service." J. Adelson

Library J 93:2654 Jl '68 110w

"[This] is a modest, balanced and helpful statement of the beliefs and values that have resulted from the Durants' immersion in historical investigation these many years. Here are their fair-mindedness, their respect for human dignity, their exaltation of reason, their horror of bigotry and their faith in education as the clue to the betterment of the human condition. To be sure, their book is not without a few weaknesses. . . . [It] contains its share of platitudes, but at least it is reassuring that the Durants make no phony claims to originality. And like every history book that has ever been written, 'The Lessons of History' has its share of errors. . . . [However, this] will be a welcome book to the host of readers who have been encouraged to explore the past because of the extraordinary ability of the Durants to inspire them." Herman Ausubel

N Y Times Bk R p24 S 15 '68 700w

Time 92:85 Ag 9 '68 440w

DURAS, MARGUERITE. L'Amante anglaise; tr. from the French by Barbara Bray. 122p $3.95 Grove

68-31618

"Claire Lannes, who may or may not be insane, has killed her deaf-mute cousin Marie-Thérèse, chopped her up and dropped ten pieces of her from a viaduct to the cars of various trains passing below. . . . Claire has confessed before the book begins. A writer comes to the town to interview a cafe owner, Claire's husband and Claire. He records their versions, all different in crucial details, in an effort to discover some essential truth about the crime." (Book World) The title refers to Claire's misspelling (la menthe anglaise) of her favorite plant, English mint.

"The metaphysical point of the story seems to be that the deeper one digs for meanings, the more one discovers mysteries at the center of everything. It is a threadbare speculation, but one which Mme. Duras comes to so openly that her novel refreshes it for us. Finally, the tapes lead from chaos to chaos, despite the fact that each character tries to respond perfectly clearly to each question. . . . Mme. Duras has an unusual capacity for complications. Her prose is always clear; we always know what is going on at a given moment. But her words, in the aggregate, leave us mystified. . . . Her talent is beyond question. But there is something too often missing here, some vitality the reader increasingly wearies of doing without." Geoffrey Wolff

DURAS, MARGUERITE—Continued

Book World p16 N 10 '68 440w

Reviewed by Florence Casey

Christian Science Monitor pB10 N 29 '68 600w

Reviewed by Janice Elliott

New Statesman 75:589 My 3 '68 300w

"[Robbe-Grillet] applauded Raymond Roussel because his work 'cannot to the slightest degree increase our knowledge of human characters or emotions.' Madame Duras's latest novel, which is a defective, rather than a detective story, excites a similar admiration, and reflects Robbe-Grillet's disdain for 'explanations.' . . . True, one modern definition of neurosis is not knowing the reasons for one's actions. But Madame Duras has managed to be stolidly un-fascinating about madness. . . . [Fidelity to objects] and the negation of character or motive bestow a debilitating boredom." Nora Sayre

N Y Times Bk R p80 N 17 '68 850w

"[This] is quite unlike any other crime novel, and far more disturbing. The brutal murder is at once less spectacular—since it is committed offstage and springs directly from the routine passions of provincial life—and more so. The dialogue form is sustained throughout, and there is something profoundly unsettling in the neutral tones of the anonymous questioner. His preoccupation with the whereabouts of the head—the center of human life—is disquietingly significant. He becomes a Faustian figure, meddling blindly with the facts of death, evil, and madness, and asking ceaseless questions to which, as becomes increasingly apparent, there are no answers. The translation is competent."

New Yorker 44:237 N 8 '68 180w

Reviewed by Anna Balakian

Sat R 51:67 N 23 '68 400w

TLS p545 My 30 '68 220w

DURGNAT, RAYMOND. Films and feelings.

288p il $6.95 Mass. inst. of technology

791.43 Moving pictures

67-20174

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:74 Mr '68 180w

Reviewed by John Coleman

New Statesman 75:46 Ja 12 '68 150w

Va Q R 44:xxxx summer '68 100w

Yale R 58:XXXII O '68 1050w

DURGNAT, RAYMOND. Luis Bunuel. 152p il

$4.95; pa $1.95 Univ. of Calif. press

791.43 Moving pictures. Buñuel, Luis

68-17758

"Durnat, who has written two previous studies of the film, traces Buñuel's career from the surrealist shocker he made with Dali in 1928, Un Chien Andalou, to the current Belle de Jour, and includes [the] Mexican 'B' movies he directed in the 1950's." (Library J) Filmography and bibliography.

"A model of concise organization and succinct statement. Bunuel's influences and themes are carefully indicated; the plots of his various films are related in sufficient detail. The illustrations, mostly film stills, are both ample and apt. Bunuel . . . is certainly worthy of a study of this length. His faults are noted but there is a tendency to gloss over them; the biographical details are quite sparse. Otherwise this book is a must for any library with a film collection. Libraries holding Kyrrou's Luis Bunuel: [An Introduction, BRD 1964] will want this more recent study as well. Detailed list of all of Bunuel's films through 1968."

Choice 5:978 O '68 170w

"[An] imaginative and analytical study. . . . Mr. Durnat eloquently explores the ambiguities and complexities of Buñuel's themes and symbols so that the flavor and character of his art vividly emerges. This is a splendidly conceived and executed critique of a film maker who is both poet and moralist, Freudian and Marxist, humanist and cynic. . . . Warmly recommended." J. W. Palmer

Library J 93:2895 Ag '68 90w

Reviewed by John Coleman

New Statesman 75:46 Ja 12 '68 80w

"Mr. Durnat is characteristically erratic. He pours out everything that comes into his head, seemingly without a second thought. Sometimes it makes no sense at all, sometimes a possible idea is pursued into quite impossible regions of speculation and hypothesis, sometimes some quite remote incidental preoccupation of the author is dragged in by its hair just because he happens to be thinking along those lines at the time. And yet, just when the reader is about to fling aside his book in impatience, up comes something really good."

TLS p15 Ja 4 '68 150w

DUROSELLE, JEAN BAPTISTE, jt. auth. In- troduction to the history of international relations. See Renouvin, P.

DURRELL, GERALD. Rosy is my relative.

239p $4.95 Viking

68-11416

"Adrian Rookwhistle is the hero of this novel. For thirty years he has lived a tepid existence and constantly longs for a change in his routine. This comes in the form of an inheritance from his uncle—namely an alcoholic elephant called Rosy who promises to broaden Adrian's pitiable horizon immediately. With the advice of a friend, he sets out toward the coast where he hopes to deposit the booze-drinking pachyderm in a travelling circus. The expedition proves that Rosy has a mind of her own and that she positively cannot hold her liquor." (Best Sell)

"[Durrell] has turned his interests as a naturalist toward the writing of a first novel. The result is very entertaining. Picaresque in structure, splendidly comic, and at times splendidly satirical, [it] is a descendant of the traditional rambling, good-natured British novel which goes back at least as far as Smollett, and it is encouraging to see signs that the tradition is being revived." Peter Corodimas

Best Sell 28:99 Je 1 '68 420w

Reviewed by D. W. Morgan

Christian Science Monitor p17 O 3 '68

260w

Reviewed by Jane Manthorne

Horn Bk 44:448 Ag '68 140w

Reviewed by J. B. Lopez

Library J 93:771 F 15 '68 170w [YA]

Reviewed by Richard Lockridge

N Y Times Bk R p47 My 26 '68 290w

New Yorker 44:125 Je 1 '68 180w

"[The dust jacket] fails to reveal whether [the] . . . novel is meant to be read by adults. Certainly, nothing in the book itself gives any clue: it is a fantasy of such arch triviality that one can only attempt to keep it from adult and child alike."

TLS p114 F 1 '68 100w

DURRELL, JACQUIE. Beasts in my bed; with footnotes by Gerald Durrell. 178p pl $4.95

Atheneum pubs.

591 Animals—Habits and behavior. Durrell, Gerald Malcolm

67-27225

The author has written an account of her life since her marriage to the naturalist Gerald Durrell, author of The Overloaded Ark (BRD 1953) and Two In the Bush (BRD 1967). "Mrs. Durrell had studied operatic singing, but eloped with Mr. Durrell and went on several . . . animal collecting expeditions with him to South America, Africa, New Zealand, and Australia." (Library J)

"[Jacquie] writes pleasantly, simply, amusingly. . . . For regular Durrell readers, Jacquie's travel notes will take them back to familiar places and reacquaint them with old friends (bird, beast, and human). But the adventures are seen freshly through her eyes, so it isn't a case of twice-told trails. Photographs amplify the text. As his contribution to the present literary exercise, Mr. Durrell has provided a number of disrespectful husbandly footnotes." John Beaufort

Christlan Science Monitor p5 D 28 '67

550w

"The entertaining, informative adventures of the Durrells should please animal lovers. . . . Recommended for young adults and general readers." G. F. Dole

Library J 92:4167 N 15 '67 120w [YA]

DURRELL, LAWRENCE. Tunc; a novel. 359p $6.95 Dutton

68-12452

This story is set in Athens, Istanbul and London. It "is told by scientist Felix Charlock; a 'thinking weed' he calls himself. He has created a computer named Abel, a giant memory-bank that can recall or predict just about everything. Abel, and Felix's other inventions, attract the attention of Merlin's, an international firm with holdings in all industries, and it soon adds Felix to its assets. . . . [Other] personalities [include] Benedicta, the girl who so bemused Felix by her strangeness that he married her; Iolanthe, the green-eyed prostitute who later became a movie star; Hippolyta, political maneuverer; Caradoc, the architect; Sipple, clown of the brothel; and Julian, Merlin's . . . elusive chief." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by J. R. Lindroth
America 118:757 Je 8 '68 550w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 221:109 My '68 550w

Reviewed by W. B. Hill
Best Sell 28:25 Ap 15 '68 850w

Reviewed by Alan Pryce-Jones
Book World p12 Ap 14 '68 500w
Choice 5:1304 D '68 150w

Reviewed by Roderick Nordell
Christian Science Monitor p13 Ap 11 '68 550w

Reviewed by Anthony Burgess
Critic 27:65 Ag '68 920w

Reviewed by Richard Mayne
Encounter 31:79 Ag '68 1150w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson
Harper 236:91 My '68 380w

Reviewed by Karl Nyren
Library J 93:2258 Je 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by Kenneth Rexroth
Nation 206:673 My 20 '68 700w

Reviewed by G. S. Fraser
New Statesman 75:483 Ap 12 '68 850w

Reviewed by Bernard Bergonzi
N Y Rev of Books 11:37 Jl 11 '68 1450w

"Even [the] hollowness [of this novel] is interesting, because its author is so gifted, and may be moving in a new direction. . . . One gets the impression that in this book Durrell has deliberately thrown overboard the charm that won him so many readers in 'Justine.' He seems to go out of his way to try to jolt a now shock-proof audience with schoolboyish indecencies. . . . As it stands, in its mid-way position, 'Tunc' seems as unreal as any of a hundred movie thrillers. The fantasy apparatus is still working, but without lyric passion. The question is, why did Durrell write it? . . . The answer is, I think, that [Durrell], a born romantic, warmed for over 30 years by a Mediterranean sun, seems to be trying to come to grips, at least in concept, with 'the real world.' . . . [However, he] has not yet proved equal to the new task he has imposed upon himself." Gerald Sykes

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ap 14 '68 700w

"Lawrence Durrell has always been an over-writer of luscious proportions. . . . Now he has produced a one-volume parody of his best work, that levantine tetralogy called 'The Alexandria Quartet' [Justine, BRD 1957; Balthazar, BRD 1958; Mountolive, BRD 1959 and Clea, BRD 1960]. . . . The flip tone is wrong. It betrays Durrell's loss of confidence in his own baroque style. He can still produce endless strings of glittering aphorisms. He can still heap up infinitely unfathomable complexities of attitude. But now the murky sensuality of his typical cast of grotesques has been camped up, as if Durrell, reduced to mannerism, needed sensationalism of the most obvious sort to keep his lava tongue flowing. . . . A past master of pyrotechnical prose and a marvelous craftsman of obscene verse, Durrell is up to his old tricks. But they have lost their magic." Howard Junker

Newsweek 71:125E Ap 8 '68 300w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks
Sat R 51:37 Ap 13 '68 1000w

"Tunc is governed by a quavering image of the computer as truth giver. . . . The Alexandria Quartet was in large part about an artist's struggle for freedom within his culture; Tunc, which in Latin means 'next,' deals with the similar struggles of a scientist. . . . The novel is basically a study of the ironies and ambiguities that result when a man tries to stand apart from society. . . . There are reams of . . . beautiful travel and nature writing. . . . But there is also much overwriting. . . . Yet all the annoying nits are brushed aside by Durrell's gaiety, originality, raw talent and rebellious exuberance. And there is more to come. . . . [He] is already at work on a sequel, to be titled Numquam [Now or Never]."

Time 91:108 Ap 5 '68 2000w

TLS p413 Ap 25 '68 1850w

DUVOISIN, ROGER. The missing milkman [Il. by the author]. unp $3.25; lib bdg $3.19 Knopf

67-3127

"One night Mr. Milkman has a nightmare about going up and down the side streets and lanes exchanging endless banalities on the weather with his customers. So, the next morning, he loads up his truck Amelia and, with his dachshund Sylvia, drives to the country where he finds a lake in the middle of a forest. Here he camps until Amelia's store of milk, eggs, and cheese is exhausted, and he begins to miss his customers despite their vacuous chatter. . . . Kindergarten to grade one." (Library J)

Reviewed by B. N. O'Doherty
Book Week p14 Je 18 '67 170w

"The drawings are not up to Mr. Duvoisin's best, and the rather adult motif of escape from a humdrum life is not appropriate to a children's picture book." S. A. Kailin

Library J 92:1310 Mr 15 '67 90w

"Duvoisin has told a pleasant, perceptive story and dedicated it to all the milkmen who rarely miss a day on their routes. His blithe and brightly colored illustrations have a vitality that helps keep a long and leisurely text from lagging too much." M. F. O'Connell

N Y Times Bk R p27 Mr 12 '67 140w

"Altogether, this book, with its straightforward, lively pictures and its humorously told story about a real person in a convincing situation, is both unusual and refreshing."

TLS p587 Je 11 '68 100w

DVORNIK, FRANCIS. Early Christian and Byzantine political philosophy; origins and background. 2v $20 Dumbarton Oaks center for Byzantine studies, Harvard univ. trustees; for sale by Augustin

320.09 Political science. Kings and rulers

67-4089

This book "begins with Pharaonic Egypt and reaches down to the period of Justinian. . . . The first three chapters are concerned with the ancient Near East. They discuss Egyptian notions about the ruler as a human being divinized by the gods, as well as Sumerian ideas about divine rulers. . . . Babylonian notions about kings being the adopted sons of gods [and] the Iranian concept of hvarena, 'the awful royal glory.' The next two chapters take up Greek political theories and realities from Mycenaean days to the end of the Hellenistic period. . . . Further chapters deal with Jewish and Christian views on kingship and on messianism. . . . [The last two chapters describe] the conflict of Christian Hellenism with its critics." (Am Hist R)

"[The sweep of] this monumental work . . . is enormous. . . . [Its] focus on kingship gives [it] its theme and its unity. . . . It deals primarily with the history of political ideas, but demonstrates a thorough awareness of the political and social realities underlying the development of thought. It includes translations of the principal texts from Pharaonic to Byzantine times and thus provides, among other things, a kind of anthology of ancient political thought. . . . Each chapter can stand by itself and be read with profit by persons who do not subscribe to the author's historical outlook, but want information on topics such as the Assyrian views on kingship or on Hellenistic ruler cults. The book concludes with a bibliography of almost one hundred pages that covers the entire range of ancient political thought down to Justinian." P. J. Alexander

Am Hist R 73:777 F '68 850w

"[This] specialized monograph on Byzantine civilization . . . crowns the long career of one of the most creative Byzantine scholars in this century. . . . As in his other studies, [the author] avoids treating theological issues directly. . . . One wonders, however, whether the main conclusions of his book would not be even clearer if, instead of starting the study of the 'origins' in Egypt and Mesopotamia, the author had continued his investigation into the post-Justinianic age, where his competence really lies. For of this almost 1,000-page book only the second part of the second volume is devoted to Byzantium, and it is certainly this best part which will remain of permanent value to the historian."

DVORNIK, FRANCIS—Continued

TLS p20 Ja 4 '68 240w

DYE, THOMAS R. Politics, economics, and the public; policy outcomes in the American states. (Am. political res. ser) 314p $5 Rand McNally

353.9 State governments. Political science—Research 66-19442

An analysis of the "relationships between party, economic, and structural variables, and policy outcomes in American states through the use of aggregative data. . . . [The author] seeks to account for differences among the fifty states in policy areas of education, welfare, taxation, and regulation of public morals, by questioning the roles of such economic factors as urbanization, industrialization, wealth, and adult education. . . . [An] empirical model is constructed with socio-economic variables treated as inputs, policy variables as outcomes, and in which political system variables can be treated as having an important independent mediating effect. . . . [The study finds] that political system characteristics appear to have relatively little independent effect on policy—that economic development shapes both political systems and outcomes." (Ann Am Acad) Index.

Reviewed by J. J. Spengler
Am Econ R 58:647 Je '68 500w

"[An excellent book]. What lends credence to Dye's interpretation is the comprehensive basis on which it is founded. . . . More than 90 different outcomes are described and analyzed. The time base is a single period, the early 1960's. . . . Dye's lucid and careful analyses deserve continuing updating and application to values other than the five most important ones he has selected. On its face, this brilliant effort appears to have been pretty much a one-man job." J. A. Robinson

Am Pol Sci R 61:1113 D '67 700w

"This book is a significant professional contribution to our knowledge of state political systems. It should be especially useful in courses in state politics, for care is taken to explain and to justify the tests, procedures, and models utilized, and a useful review of relevant literature is provided." T. M. Watts

Ann Am Acad 374:193 N '67 390w

"Dye uses correlation analysis as his chief tool. Nowhere in the literature is this significant work of Dye's replicated. Some earlier regional studies, such as [D.] Lockard's New England State Politics (BRD 1959) or [V.] Key's Southern Politics (BRD 1949), attack pieces of the relationship and articles investigate specialized aspects of state policies and environment. In spite of its heavy style, this is a significant book."

Choice 4:1414 F '68 140w

Reviewed by J. M. Buchanan
J Pol Econ 75:896 D '67 500w

DYKSTRA, ROBERT R. The cattle towns. 386p il maps $8.95 Knopf

978.1 Cattle trade—Kansas. Frontier and pioneer life—Kansas 68-12677

"Refuting the Elkins-McKittrick thesis presented in the Political Science Quarterly in 1934 in which the authors equated democratic, co-operative efforts with successful community development, Robert Dykstra . . . documents the histories of five Kansas cattle towns . . . to illustrate his premise that internal conflict plays an integral and essential part in the entrepreneurial impulse responsible for community growth." (Library J) Appendix A: The Elkins-McKittrick Thesis. Appendix B: A Note on Methodology. Index.

"In this important book, one that may well set off a good deal of rethinking by writers on the West, Professor Dykstra has put the towns of Abilene, Ellsworth, Wichita, Dodge City and Caldwell under the microscope. He has run them through a computer and analyzed the chemistry of their politics. And they emerge from this process no more romantic historically than Lima, Ohio." Don Russell

Book World p16 My 12 '68 650w

Choice 5:1032 O '68 180w

"A few shortcomings need to be mentioned. Examination of the confrontation between southerners and northerners might not only have provided more insight into the role of the cattle towns during Reconstruction but also have clarified some of the homicides that occurred when southern cowboys met northern sheriffs. Also, a lack of discussion of brothel sections . . . detracts from the usually thorough coverage. And, although the work is almost free from errors, [there are] some. . . . Such a level-headed, illuminating study has long been needed, and Dykstra has shown that a historian can write an important work on a popular subject." R. A. Van Orman

J Am Hist 55:659 D '68 500w

"The weight of the evidence coupled with the use of annotated footnotes within the text make this book slow and difficult reading; the narrow scope of this revamped doctoral thesis limits its use to academic and specialized library collections." J. W. Stevenson

Library J 93:2238 Je 1 '68 110w

"Mr. Dykstra has presented his case in clear and lucid prose. The narrative and analysis remain always close to the sources and hence remain consistently persuasive. Unfortunately, however, he feels it necessary to intrude intramural historiographical problems into his study. . . . In general, however, the impressive academic apparatus is concealed by a graceful style and a considerate attention to the needs of the general reader. Most of all, [this] is a refreshing corrective to established conceptions about this colorful epoch." R. C. Wade

N Y Times Bk R p26 N 17 '68 650w

DYSON-HUDSON, NEVILLE. Karimojong politics. 280p il pl maps $7.20 Oxford

320.9676 Karimojong, Uganda [66-69464]

"This volume, the author's first, [describes an African pastoral group]. . . . The Karimojong of Northern Uganda are a 'political community' for whom 'political policy' is concerned with the maximization of cattle interests for the community as a whole. Local groups of elders [who] operate as representatives of a corporate office within the age system . . . formulate and implement public policy. Junior initiates exercise force under the elders' direction. The author emphasizes the harmony between leaders and led. . . . A chapter on territory and society . . . presents the nature of small neighborhoods, the more inclusive subsections, and the ten sections making up the Karimojong political community." (Am Anthropol) Bibliography. Index.

"A valuable addition to the monographic literature on African pastoral groups. As with similar earlier studies, it will repay careful study. . . . The book has a useful discussion of politically significant differences among sections. At various points and especially in the last chapter, differences are related to long-term processes within Karimojong and within the 'Karimojong Cluster' of societies. . . . The description [has] an orderliness that is not overly schematized. That this is so depends in large part on field materials used in the excellent chapter on ecology and society. . . . There is one of the clearest accounts available of the relation between the formal aspects of an age system and the exigencies of life in which people are not born in big labeled batches. The ethnography shows, too, that there is no clear-cut cultural division between the so-called Nilo-Hamites and their Bantu neighbors. Here is a book to be welcomed."

Am Anthropol 70:136 F '68 650w

"Dyson-Hudson has great insight into Karimojong society. He lived with the tribe for 33 months (1956-58), learning the language well enough to conduct his interviews and research without the aid of an interpreter or field assistant. This work is not a general account of Karimojong life; rather, its scope is well defined in the title. . . . Too specialized to be of use to most undergraduate students, but may be valuable to those in an upper level course. There is no general study of the Karimojong, and, other than articles by the author and J. Brasnett and P. H. Gulliver, little material has been published."

Choice 4:1049 N '67 160w

E

EDUNET; report of the summer study on information networks; conducted by the Interuniversity communications council (EDUCOM) authors and eds: George W. Brown, James G. Miller [and] Thomas A. Keenan. 440p $3.95 Wiley

029.7 Information storage and retrieval systems 67-21328

This is the report of a conference held at Boulder, Colorado in July 1966. "At this conference 180 people representing governmental, educational, and industrial organizations met to 'assess the desirability of an educational communications system.' After considering existing networks and resources and identifying the needs of an educational network, the conferees discussed the probable applications, organizational setup, and design of such a network. From these explorations, the group formulated the design Edunet 'through which colleges and universities of all sizes and in all parts of the country can have quick access to information and can share their human, library, and computer resources.'" (Library J) Glossary of terms. Index.

Reviewed by J. P. McGowan

Col & Res Lib 29:159 Mr '68 800w

"Should be considered for purchase by libraries serving the educational community. Library administrators, particularly in academia, should find [this book] of interest." C. R. Johnson

Library J 93:70 Ja 1 '68 200w

"Each chapter begins with a summary of [its] subject matter . . . and then proceeds to give excerpts from reports submitted by many individuals. The excerpts are woven into a narrative account and are identified as to authorship and date of presentation. The resulting volume can hardly be called a masterpiece of felicitous prose, nor does it carry the reader along in compelling fashion, but it is a remarkable achievement in the presentation of a wealth of material in intelligible form. . . . One should not quibble over . . . the considerable number of minor errors of style, spelling, and exact fact. The material is here, it is comprehensible, and it is well organized." W. L. Williamson

Library Q 33:195 Ap '68 700w

Reviewed by John Sherrod

LRTS 12:225 spring '68 360w

"In essence the book brings together all the essentials needed for the initial conceptual design of a communication network between universities. . . . The needs of libraries are singled out for special consideration. . . . [However] no attention was given to the definition and fundamental concepts of information. . . . EDUNET appears to be an attack on the information problem through the development of a new system based on theoretical concepts rather than the evolution of existing systems toward the same goals. . . . This book is an invaluable contribution to the current study of the information problem. . . . [It] tells us . . . what is technologically and managerially possible. . . . Yet the whims of chance and the present lack of adequate design data suggest that the ultimate system will probably look much different from the one presented in the book." Thomas Minder

Special Libraries 58:661 N '67 750w

EAGLETON, TERENCE. Shakespeare and society; critical studies in Shakespearean drama. 208p $5.50 Schocken

822.3 Shakespeare, William—Criticism, interpretation, etc. 67-12293

"Eagleton isolates what he calls 'one major crisis' in Shakespeare's work—the tension between spontaneous life and society.' He examines this theme in nine plays: Troilus and Cressida, Hamlet, Measure for Measure, Coriolanus, Antony and Cleopatra, Macbeth, A Winter's Tale, The Tempest, and a note on Timon. In the earlier plays he finds a conflict between authentic, spontaneous individuality and social responsibility, but in the last ones he detects a fusion brought about by 'grace,' so that 'it is natural and spontaneous to act responsibly . . . one's most authentic self-expression is in terms of others, in terms of society.'" (Choice)

"The reading of these plays is closely and well-supported, though it is less Shakespeare the dramatist than Shakespeare the social scientist that Eagleton finds. . . . [The book] provides fresh insights not only into several of Shakespeare's plays, especially Troilus, Hamlet, and Measure, but it also suggests directions of thought for today regarding the individual and society. A readable book, for both undergraduate and graduate libraries."

Choice 4:1115 D '67 140w

TLS p617 J1 13 '67 200w

Yale R 57:290 D '67 500w

EARL, DONALD. The moral and political tradition of Rome. 167p $4.95 Cornell univ. press

172 Rome—Moral conditions. Rome—Politics and government 67-20630

The author concentrates on the political/ethical "tradition as it was interpreted by major authors at [different] stages of Roman history. After two chapters on the Republic, the story centers successively on the Augustans, Tacitus, Ammianus Marcellinus and Augustine." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Zeph Stewart

Am Hist R 73:1487 Je '68 440w

"At the outset, Earl makes three assumptions which dictate his eventual conclusions and totally constrain his scope of investigation. One, a moral and political tradition exists only with respect to the nobility and/or those portions of other classes which from time to time intrude into the ruling oligarchy. Two, one assesses a moral and political tradition on the basis of belief rather than behavior. And, three, the essence of that tradition is contained in a few summary concepts, the meaning of which one can examine overtime to determine the continuity and variation which occurs in the tradition. Depending on what one wants from the book, these assumptions may or may not be detrimental. If one wants only a description of some basic Roman beliefs over time . . . then the book is perfectly adequate. If, however, one wishes to investigate the manner in which certain beliefs and values affect the political world in which they exist, then the above assumptions are quite inhibiting and the book somewhat of a major disappointment. One should hasten to acknowledge that Earl is a Classicist, not a political scientist, and that he is obviously writing for different purposes than that for which he is being read." D. E. Neubauer

Am Pol Sci R 62:609 Je '68 900w

Choice 5:1194 N '68 180w

"As Dr. Earl reasonably points out, he can describe the viewpoint of none save [the] 'small, literate upper class' [of Rome]. This, however, he does with remarkable skill, and he is unduly modest in thinking that scholars will 'find little that is new anywhere in this book.' His attempt to define what virtus Romana meant at any given moment will challenge and stimulate every reader. . . . Those familiar with his earlier writing will find some of it restated here. Moreover, his methodology may arouse qualms; he may attribute undue importance to the differences and resemblances that Cicero, Horace, Vergil, Tacitus and especially Ammianus Marcellinus display on the relationship of gloria to virtus. Nevertheless everyone will find this a lucid and well-written exposition." E. T. Salmon

Class World 61:252 F '68 400w

"[This] is a literary approach to the subject, dealing with the thoughts of writers who mostly looked backwards and preserved, with continual changes, many of the values which they attributed to the Republic. One's only criticism is that Mr Earl is too little of a sociologist."

Economist 225:187 O 14 '67 120w

Reviewed by T. M. Robinson

Library J 92:3636 O 15 '67 60w

"The essential theme of 'virtues' such as gloria and libertas and dignitas (which never quite mean what they seem to) is enlivened by insights which are particularly valuable in the case of Ammianus, of whom classicists, trained as they are on earlier periods, do not usually know much."

TLS p878 S 28 '67 270w

EARLE, AUGUSTUS. Narrative of a residence in New Zealand. [and] Journal of a residence in Tristan da Cunha; ed. by E. H. McCormick. 271p pl $8.80 Oxford

919.31 New Zealand—Description and travel. Tristan da Cunha. [67-74061]

An account by an itinerant painter who "spent eight months on Tristan da Cunha in

EARLE, AUGUSTUS—Continued

1824 and six months in New Zealand in 1827-28." (Pacific Affairs) Bibliography. Index.

"[This edition] should provide primary source material for readers with interests in the Maori, early 19th-century shipping, missionary endeavors, and the pattern of initial European contacts with non-Westerners. McCormick has supplied a bibliography on 'the wandering artist'; an account of the reception of the 1832 publication, especially by the missionary societies Earle heartily criticized; an excellent background piece on early European contacts in New Zealand; lavish annotations, and clarifications; a catalogue including 23 plates of Earle's paintings and drawings on the two areas, of which more should have been in color; [and] a critical preface."

Choice 4:1030 N '67 150w

Reviewed by Robert Kubicek
Pacific Affairs 40:439 fall-winter '67-
'68 190w

EARLE, OLIVE L. Strange fishes of the sea; written and ill. by Olive L. Earle. 61p $2.95; lib bdg $2.94 Morrow

597 Fishes—Juvenile literature 68-10362

The author "has chosen twenty-three examples of the strange shapes and habits to be found among saltwater creatures, creating in text and illustration a . . . portrait of each one." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grades three to five" (Library J)

"[A] carefully written and illustrated book. . . . It is a strange world, and Miss Earle opens some new windows into it with her usual care and liveliness."

Christian Science Monitor p5 J1 11 '68
70w

Horn Bk 44:442 Ag '68 20w

"Although bits of this text are confusing—and there is a reference to fish wearing jackets and overcoats—the facts are accurate. . . . The soft pencil drawings are accurate and clear delineations of the text. The information and easy writing style should interest young readers." J. F. Waters

Library J 93:868 F 15 '68 70w

EAST-WEST PHILOSOPHERS' CONFERENCE. The Chinese mind. See Moore, C. A., ed.

EAST-WEST PHILOSOPHERS' CONFERENCE. The Indian mind. See Moore, C. A., ed.

EASTHAM, GEORGE. Soccer science; how to play and win [by] George Eastham with Ken Jones. 128p il $4.95 Quadrangle bks.

796.33 Soccer 67-20982

"Instruction on techniques, methods, strategy, and tactics of the game . . . plus a section on its rules and records." (Library J)

"The concept of the all-around, fluid, modern game of soccer is well described by several of England's top players. It is all the more meaningful because of references to game experiences and because of the authority of success. The speed and skills needed in each position and the integration of the players into a well coordinated team are emphasized. Individual tactics, team strategy, and various offenses and defenses are more for the advanced player. The sequence pictures illustrating skills are good, but this is not a typical skills and playing fundamentals book. There are many excellent game photos that add to the lively reading."

Choice 5:374 My '68 110w

"Some Anglicisms will look strange to American eyes, but the explanations are easy to follow, and with the rules of the game included, the book makes a first-class guide. For most public libraries and school libraries; it would make a good present for any sports lover." P. W. Filby

Library J 92:3052 S 15 '67 80w

Reviewed by J. A. Bolas
Library J 92:4634 D 15 '67 60w [YA]

EASTMAN, ARTHUR M. A short history of Shakespearean criticism. 418p $7.95 Random house

822.3 Shakespeare, William—Criticism, interpretation, etc. 67-22319

"In an introductory chapter Professor Eastman of the University of Michigan scans the field of Shakespearean criticism prior to Dr. Johnson; then in 17 chapters he reviews and analyzes comments of 39 principal critics since [in] a sequence basically chronological, but also by style and method. Most of the critics he discusses are English, although Goethe, Lessing, Schlegel, and Tolstoy are here and a few Americans, all 20th Century." (Library J) Index.

"[A] span of critical comment . . . judiciously and interestingly drawn together. . . . Professor Eastman omits some critics and barely mentions others of interest. He gives the general reader little information about the people behind the less familiar names he includes. But this is, after all, a short history—and an excellent combination of generalization and detail. . . . And, when it comes to the anti-Shakespeareans, Professor Eastman handily catches the mood." Roderick Nordell
Christian Science Monitor p9 Ag 1 '68
750w

"Mere editors, or writers of exhaustive studies on obscure minutiae, are skipped. Those critics are included who have made original contributions in the field. . . . Mr. Eastman found this study like 'a pleasant tour' through an ever-lengthening picture gallery of criticism far too long for anyone to inspect in complete detail; he felt it was 'exhilarating,' but only fellow scholars are likely to find so long a book quite in that category. Many who enjoy seeing Shakespeare on the stage, or reading his plays and poems, will enjoy occasional passages here. Highly recommended for literature collections, academic libraries, and for Shakespeare collections elsewhere." F. N. Jones

Library J 93:2242 Je 1 '68 270w

EASTMAN, LLOYD E. Throne and mandarins; China's search for a policy during the Sino-French controversy, 1880-1885. 254p $6 Harvard univ. press

951 China—Foreign relations—France. France—Foreign relations—China 67-12098

Eastman "identifies the forces involved in policy making; . . . the throne represented by the Empress Dowager, high officials by Li Hung-chang, and literati opinion by low and middle-ranking officials. . . . After placing the problem in historical context, he traces the indecisive and fluctuating course of Sino-French diplomatic and military confrontation, clarifying the reasons for Li's vacillations, the influence of conservative bureaucrats as guardians of Confucian moralism, and the shrewdness of the Empress Dowager who sought above all to preserve her political authority." (Choice) Bibliography. Glossary. Index.

Reviewed by M. E. Cameron
Am Hist R 73:878 F '68 450w

"A significant and timely study of Chinese policy-making process in her confrontation with France over Viet-Nam in the 1880's. Eastman (Ohio State) carefully and succinctly states his objectives [and] defines his terms. . . . In analyzing the role of literati opinion, Eastman makes a particularly valuable contribution. . . . Recommended as a work that presents new perspective on Ch'ing political process."

Choice 4:1030 N '67 110w

Reviewed by F. H. H. King
Engl Hist R 83:423 Ap '68 340w

"Eastman focuses on the decision-making processes of the Chinese government, and incidentally gives us one of the best pictures to date of the Ch'ing political system as opposed to formal institutional structure. In particular, he underlines the importance of ch'ing-i, in the context, 'literati opinion,' especially that of comparatively junior officials. . . . It is not so much that ch'ing-i or the court conference were previously unknown. . . . but that Eastman provides for the first time a thorough analysis of their modus operandi. He thereby makes an important contribution to the old problem of the extent to which Imperial China was an autocracy. Turning to foreign relations . . . Eastman's analysis undermines the stereotype of nineteenth century China as the passive victim of European imperialism. He shows . . . that there were two sides to the Sino-French dispute and also that the Chinese armed forces involved were neither insubstantial nor unsuccessful." S. A. M. Adshead

Pacific Affairs 40:373 fall-winter '67-'68 330w

TLS p1158 O 10 '68 600w

EASTON, LOYD D., ed. Writings of the young Marx on philosophy and society. See Marx, K.

EASTWOOD, ERIC. Radar ornithology. 278p pl maps $13.50 Barnes & Noble

598 Birds—Migration. Radar [68-72108]

The director of research of the English Electric Group discusses radar and its techniques for monitoring bird passage, as well as "bird migration in Europe and America, flight habits in all sorts of weather conditions, ocean passage, navigation, altitudes, and identification of species by their radar signature." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[Eastwood's book] holds one fascinated. The lowly starling comes in as exemplifying airport terminal control to the nth degree. Extended references, a very complete index and about 100 photographs, line drawings and graphs add to its value. It will stand for a long time as a basic reference text. No previous work of this scope is available."

Choice 5:366 My '68 110w

"An interesting history is given of the development of radar in Great Britain to meet the threat of the Luftwaffe. Although there are insufficient details for the radar engineer, there is an extremely readable account of the principles of radar and of the display and interpretation of radar targets. The author should convince any remaining skeptics once and for all that radar records the movements of birds in the airspace. . . . Most of the material on bird migration has been presented by Eastwood and other investigators in earlier papers, which are ably abstracted in the book. . . . The author uses many maps to demonstrate the passage of birds in relation to geography and weather. The influence of weather on bird migration is treated only superficially. . . . This book is a valuable contribution to the ornithologist interested in radar and to the radar engineer." Frank Bellrose

Science 160:369 My 24 '68 550w

Sci Am 218:143 Ap '68 380w

EATON, QUAINANCE. The miracle of the Met; an informal history of the Metropolitan opera, 1883-1967. 490p il $10.95 Meredith

782.1 New York (City). Metropolitan Opera 67-24431

The author describes "New York's international opera company from its beginning to the happenings of last summer and forecasts for the present season." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"A popular history of the Metropolitan Opera has long been needed. . . . [for] those who do not wish to wade through the morass of [L.] Kolodin's year-by-year (and sometimes almost day-by-day) chronicle [The Metropolitan Opera, 1883-1966; 4th ed., BRD 1967]. Eaton, whose previous works include a history of the Met's annual spring tour (Opera Caravan [BRD 1957]), has done a quite admirable job, once she gets beyond a too-detailed account of the New York society families who were instrumental in building the opera house. She is especially good on the recent decades, striking a fine balance between praise and criticism and avoiding the partisan attitudes of a Kolodin. . . . [She] includes excellent chapters on the demolition of the old house on 39th Street, the ill-fated Paris junket in the spring of 1966, and the first two seasons at Lincoln Center. . . . Enough new information and a sufficiently refreshing viewpoint offered to warrant purchase by most libraries in addition to the standard history of Kolodin."

Choice 5:494 Je '68 200w

"[The author] writes in more informal, more personal style [than Kolodin]. She is more concerned with human interest and has gathered much, if not all, of the backstage gossip of the years. Many of the incidents she recounts have been told countless times before in every book of opera anecdotes, but there is justification for bringing them together between two covers. Not very often has the spotlight been turned on the society figures who built the old house in the first place. . . . She is [also] frank in her judgments of management, past and present. . . . [The special appeal of this book] will be to the opera buff, whose avidity is proverbial." P. L. Miller

Library J 92:4418 D 1 '67 300w

EBERHARD, WOLFRAM. Guilt and sin in traditional China. 141p il $5 Univ. of Calif. press

170 Ethics, Chinese. Sin

67-12297

A professor of sociology at the University of California, Berkeley, seeks to prove "that although some sociologists classify world cultures into 'guilt-oriented' (urban or Western) and 'shame-oriented' (primitive or oriental) cultures, the truth is that in old China 'shame' and 'guilt' operated in the same way and existed at the same time. Drawing his sources from a number of popular stories and some so-called shan-shu (literally, 'virtue books') written by people from the upper or middle classes for the masses, Mr. Eberhard concludes: 'There is, I think, no way to find out the true values of average people in traditional China.'" (Library J) Glossary of Chinese terms. Bibliography. Index.

"The least the book should accomplish is to reopen those minds still holding to the notion of Freudian universal validity. It ought also to dispel European fantasies of the free and open attitude the Chinese are supposed to have had about sex. Finally, it should provide much material to those social scientists interested in the allegedly diagnostic dichotomy of guilt versus shame in culture classification. Eberhard displays in this work his usual imaginative speculation tempered by critical caution."

Choice 5:129 Mr '68 120w

"If the application of social science techniques to the study of history is to be encouraged, this book will be an excellent addition to college, research, and larger public libraries." Yushu Pu

Library J 92:1847 My 1 '67 110w

EBERHART, MIGNON G. Woman on the roof. 213p $4.50 Random house

67-22626

"Susan had married Marcus Desart only two months previous, some five years after his former wife Rose had been murdered on the terrace of his duplex penthouse apartment twelve stories above the streets of New York. She had been engaged to Jim Locke, a Navy pilot, but he had been shot down and given up for dead months ago. Then, all of a sudden, there was Jim returned from the dead." (Best Sell)

"Eberhart can always be counted on to produce a well-plotted and expertly written mystery story and there is no reason to change that opinion after reading [this novel]. . . . Excellent, with good strong suspense to the end."

Best Sell 27:457 Mr 1 '68 130w

"[The author] has been giving us romantic mysteries since 1929, and [this story] is more romantic than ever." M. K. Grant

Library J 92:4437 D 1 '67 130w

Reviewed by Sumika Yamashita

Library J 93:1820 Ap 15 '68 110w [YA]

"I am not a passionate admirer of [the author, but this book] seems to me a good solid specimen for Eberhart fans—plenty of romance, smooth construction and good exploitation of the setting, almost entirely within a Manhattan penthouse." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p41 Ja 28 '68 50w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:52 F 24 '68 30w

EBERHART, RICHARD. Shifts of being; poems. 88p $3.75 Oxford

811

68-19310

A collection of new poems by the winner of the 1966 Pulitzer Prize for poetry.

"Eberhart's poems have grown increasingly abstract. Throughout 'Shifts of Being' the words, 'nature,' 'order,' . . . and 'radiancy' recur all too frequently. They drain the poems of color. They give the feeling of poems as Plato might have written them, with ideas in the foreground, images well to the rear. . . . But it would be unfair to select only the Pla-

EBERHART, RICHARD—Continued

tonic elements from this book. In more than one poem, Mr. Eberhart still demonstrates his ability to convey an image. . . . On the whole, however, I feel that his latest book will not add to the stature he has already achieved as one of our top American poets." Victor Howes
Christian Science Monitor p9 J1 23 '68
 350w

"The poet's special eyes . . . notice the unnoticed and reveal the ordinary and the bizarre as unique, valuable, and necessary parts of the universe. Some of these poems are inspired by travels, and concern themselves with the uniqueness of place, like 'Marrakesh.' Others are about poetry and what it is for, like 'To the Mad Poets.' But most of the poems are about the crossing in the poet's mind of the tensions between extremes: calm and violence, love and death. The poet's task in these poems is to understand these extremes and make the reader feel them without moderating them. And he succeeds. Mr. Eberhart is one of the true giants of modern poetry, and this volume should add another solid block to the edifice of his reputation." T. E. Luddy
Library J 93:2663 J1 '68 190w
 Va Q R 44:cxlviii autumn '68 190w

EBON, MARTIN. Prophecy in our time. 238p $4.95 New Am. lib.

133.8 Divination. Prophecies 68-17055

The "former editor of the International Journal of Parapsychology covers prophecies of the great disasters of our times and the more personal tragedies which occur every day. Cayce, Dixon, Croiset and the theories of Freud, Jung, and the Rhines are among those Mr. Ebon presents in an attempt to give an objective picture of the claims of modern-day prophets." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Mr. Ebon's material is not organized in any definite way. He simply provides twenty chapters, ranging over psychoanalytic flirtations with ESP, Jeanne Dixon, the sinking of the 'Titanic,' Hitler's prophets, and other assorted subjects. He does not establish a premise in one chapter and use it in the next. The failure of the book to build is disappointing. . . . This is a dissatisfying book relative to its aspirations and what could have been done. Most religious believers accept prophecy as a fact. . . . The reviewer's feeling is that Mr. Ebon is knowledgeable enough in the subject that he could have made a presentation which would convince critical thinkers. Instead, he provided, essentially, another collection of anecdotes. Too bad." R. B. Nordberg
 Best Sell 27:478 Mr 15 '68 700w

"[Ebon's] own pet thesis, illustrated in his discussion of the assassination of president Kennedy, is that some things may be 'foreseen' because of the life style of the subject. President Kennedy, for example, quite possibly had a self-image of the 'Young Hero Destined for Death,' a fatalism. This work is not well documented enough to be scholarly; yet unfortunately it presupposes a familiarity with psychology and parapsychology beyond that of the general reader. Recommended for large, relevant collections." Patricia Schuman
Library J 93:1006 Mr 1 '68 150w

ECKARDT, A. ROY. Elder and younger brothers: the encounter of Jews and Christians. 188p pl $4.95 Scribner

296.3 Christianity and other religions. Judaism. Jewish question 67-23687

The chairman of the department of religion at Lehigh University begins his book with an "interpretation of the nature of the evil of anti-Semitism. [He follows it] with a theological exposition of the meaning of Israel as the people of God: 'Two major ways of viewing the relationship between the original Israel of God and the Christian church are considered, the one placing its emphasis upon "discontinuity" between the two faith-communities, the other putting its stress upon "continuity." His concluding chapters comprise "endeavors at theological-ethical reconstruction in a way that mediates between yet goes beyond these two positions.'" (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Granted that Eckardt has the self-assurance and arrogance to attempt to impose his own spiritual dilemmas on his Jewish neighbor, why didn't he at least make a real book out of it? Why did he settle for a pastiche of straw men, citations, commonplaces and photographs? . . . The fundamental weakness of Eckardt's explication of the relation of Jews and Christians is his failure to appreciate the fact that hatred is neither produced nor dissipated by ideology." L. D. Streiker

Christian Century 85:558 Ap 24 '68 440w

"The task which [this book] undertakes to perform is nothing less than the cleansing and purgation of Christian teaching. . . . Christian though Eckardt is, believer though he remains, he has set forth the possibilities of a tough-minded theological humanism which stands beyond and against the dogmatic narrowness of Christian arrogance and Jewish exclusiveness. . . . He has unfolded a dialectical interpretation of the covenant of salvation according to which Jew and Christian, despite their ongoing confrontation, are also turned outward to the world. Jew and Christian, in this interpretation, are both immanent faces of God. . . . [The book] is sadly concluded by an Appendix written by the author and his wife in dismay at the attitude of official American Christendom to the recent Israeli-Arab war. In a curious way the Appendix makes one rueful about the intrinsic merit and success of Eckardt's luminous argumentation." A. A. Cohen
 Commentary 45:79 Je '68 1050w

"Eckardt's book, the result of 25 years' reflection by a Protestant on the Christian attitude and behavior toward Jews, is a 'theological-ethical exposition, criticism and reconstruction' which he hopes will 'help in the breaking down of barriers between Christians and Jews and in the advancing of brotherly thinking and action on the part of Christians in the presence of the Jewish people.' . . . Recommended for theological libraries and public libraries serving readers interested in the Jewish-Christian relationship." E. H. Weeks
Library J 92:4004 N 1 '67 210w

ECKARDT, WOLF VON. See Von Eckardt, W.

ECKERT, ALLAN, W. Bayou backwaters; with an introd. by Marlin Perkins; il. by Joseph Cellini. (Marlin Perkins' wild kingdom) 155p $4.95; lib bdg $5.70 Doubleday
 591.9763 Animals—Louisiana—Juvenile literature 68-11758

The Louisiana bayou region "is a richly populated stronghold of plant and animal life. Mr. Eckert builds up a . . . word-portrait of the area by letting us observe a number of its inhabitants on their daily rounds through its woods and waters. [Index.] Ages eleven to fifteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

"These vivid, unsentimental nature dramas each center around one creature, giving its habits and life cycle in a manner informal enough to appeal to non-science readers. Among those covered are the Louisiana heron, alligator, armadillo, raccoon, water moccasin, snake bird and spotted skunk. Other animals in the environment (bobcat, white-tailed deer, squirrels, rabbits, etc.) are discussed naturally as they pertain to the central subjects. This is excellent regional material not only for Louisiana but also for Alabama, Florida and Georgia, where swampy areas provide similar ecology. A good index adds reference value and the epilogue makes a plea for conservation. Beautiful watercolors by Joseph Cellini are the noteworthy illustrations." M. H. Edmonds
Library J 93:13314 S 15 '68 90w

"Nature study is full of pitfalls, Disney only knows, and it is a pleasure to report that Allan W. Eckert has avoided them all in this beautiful book. . . . Often, in the search for food, predators become prey in their turn. . . . If this suggests that Mr. Eckert is preoccupied with the cruel and ugly aspects of nature, the overall effect is precisely opposite. Thanks to his eye for detail, his sense of the rhythms of the natural world, his feeling for its beauty and balance, [this book] is a celebration of life in all its forms. And a word of thanks to Joseph Cellini, whose handsome, expert illustrations are perfectly in tune with the prose." Robert Berkvist
 N Y Times Bk R p26 Je 30 '68 210w

ECKERT, ALLAN W. The king snake; with il. by Franz Altschuler. 143p $4.75 Little 598.1 Snakes—Juvenile literature 68-15388

 The fictionalized account of the life cycle of a male king snake. "Grades five to eight." (Library J)

"[This is] a fine introduction to ecology for young readers. Through the snake's adventures the author is able to give fine examples of the study of nature. The book is recommended for all libraries and will be particularly helpful for students of biology."

Best Sell 28:195 Ag 1 '68 110w

Reviewed by Julian May

Book World p34 (children's issue) N 3 '68 40w

"Physiological details (such as the uses of the flicking tongue, the jawbone, and Jacobson's organ) are included, but greatest emphasis is accorded the snake's repeated battles for survival. The author's skill is in evoking such interest and compassion in the reader that he actually identifies himself with the serpent. In a complete reversal of roles the reader hopes that the snake will outwit his human captor." Jane Manthorne

Horn Bk 44:578 O '68 140w

"[This book] unique for this age group, deals solely with the natural history, behavior and ecology of the king snake. Although the illustrations are not particularly helpful, the author's style is simple, direct and interesting. Eckert portrays the snake accurately and, fortunately, dispels the popular impression that the king snake is the rattlesnake's chief enemy and only source of food." A. C. Haman

Library J 93:4402 N 15 '68 80w

ECKLUND, GEORGE N. Financing the Chinese government budget; mainland China, 1950-1959. (Social science research council. Com. on the economy of China. Publication) 133p $5 Aldine pub.

336.51 Budget—China (People's Republic of China). Taxation—China (People's Republic of China). China (People's Republic of China)—Economic policy 66-15201

This "monograph describes and evaluates the revenue system fashioned in China to facilitate the Communist party's economic development program. The budget is explained in the context of achieving such specific economic ends as socialization and rapid industrialization. The different sources of revenue are analyzed and related to both changing Chinese economic conditions during the 1950's and the priority goals of the party. The growing significance of the turnover tax and enterprise profits is . . . explained. The various taxes and nontax revenues are appraised in terms of incidence, incentive effects, and administrative efficiency and cost." (Ann Am Acad) Bibliography. Index.

"The appearance of [this] tight little work on the structure and functions of revenue mechanisms in the People's Republic of China heralds an important event which may mark an end to the grave lacunae in information on China. This informed book is the first in a series of monographs on China written under the auspices of the Committee on the Economy of China of the Social Science Research Council, which has been supported by the Ford Foundation." Charles Hoffmann

Ann Am Acad 372:180 JI '67 390w

"[This study] differs from (but complements) Kang Chao's The Rate and Pattern of Industrial Growth in Communist China [BRD 1966], which deals primarily with the measurement of industrial production in that country. Ecklund lucidly describes the tax policies developed by the Chinese, impressing the reader with the flexibility of the system and with the inventiveness displayed by the communists in matching the changing structure of the economy with appropriate taxes. . . . [There are] a number of tables necessarily (for lack of more recently published data) based on pre-1960 official Chinese statistics. The book, while not technically demanding, will probably interest primarily graduate students of China and/or comparative economic systems."

Choice 4:377 O '67 170w

Reviewed by H. S. Camenson

Library J 92:1132 Mr 15 '67 180w

ECKMAN, FERN MARJA. The furious passage of James Baldwin. 254p $4.50 Evans, M.&co. B or 92 Baldwin, James 66-11165

A biography of the author of Another Country (BRD 1962), The Fire Next Time (BRD 1963), and Blues for Mr Charlie (BRD 1964).

"[This] is a breezy account of Baldwin's life which contributes in no significant respect to an understanding of his art. . . . From the newspaper world, Mrs. Eckman has learned the art of trivialization. She conducts exhaustive researches into insignificance, ferreting everything out, leaving no document unturned.

Nothing is missing except a shaping intelligence. Mrs. Eckman's style is corrupted by the technique of the taped interview. . . . She fails to preserve a necessary distinction between the spoken and the written word. . . . The canker at the center of this book is the author's value system. Mrs. Eckman counts upon a vulgar concept of success and a vulgar curiosity to attract and hold her readers. Shreds of literary gossip and patches of inside dope are her stock in trade. James Baldwin deserves a less American biographer." Robert Bone

Am Lit 39:428 N '67 470w

Economist 227:50 My 11 '68 330w

"The first few pages in this book read like the worst kind of adulatory campaign biography. . . . [However] this first biography of the Negro novelist and essayist does get better—considerably better—as Mrs. Eckman overcomes her opening awe and admiration and begins to reveal the interesting contradictions in her subject's character. . . . She also begins to eliminate at least the deeper purple shades from her prose. The book is helped along enormously by the ample quotations from Baldwin himself. . . . There are some fascinating high spots in the fragmentary and often vague story which will add greatly to the book's controversiality and readership. . . . One still has to hope for a more definitive work about Baldwin, but until it comes along this one is sufficiently informative and interesting to deserve a place on the shelves of most college, public, and high school libraries." Eric Moon

Library J 91:5598 N 15 '66 260w

"After the songs of white innocence . . . the cry of black experience. That is 'the furious passage of James Baldwin'; and F. M. Eckman can add little that is not already in Baldwin's published work. What she can add, however, is the irritating rhetoric of the white sympathizer and the distortions of the public relations office. . . . What emerges more clearly [in this book] than in [Baldwin's] own writing are the roots of his predicament: which are not wholly racial. Sexual ambivalence in his theme as much as racial ambivalence. . . . [His] own deepest crisis of identity, it is instructive to read, was not racial at all. . . . Born of an unknown father, he was rejected by his step-father. . . . The rejection, the discrimination, the exploitation even, began not in the white society of mid-town Manhattan then, but in his Negro home. This itself explains the width of his appeal."

TLS p570 Je 6 '68 800w

ECKSTEIN, OTTO, ed. Studies in the economics of income maintenance. (Nat. com. on gov. finance. Study of gov. finance) 254p $6 Brookings

368.4 Insurance, Social 66-28714

This book is concerned with "social insurance and welfare problems. . . . In two of the four studies . . . multiple regression analysis is [used]. The studies were originally prepared as doctoral dissertations at Harvard. . . . They analyze particular aspects of Federal Old-Age, Survivors and Disability Insurance (Henry Aaron); of unemployment compensation in Massachusetts (Charles Warden, Jr.); of federally supported State welfare programs (Lora S. Collins); and of unemployment caused by the closing of the Mack Truck Plant in Plainfield, New Jersey, in 1961 (John W. Dorsey). In addition, comparisons are made of social security expenditures in 22 countries (Henry Aaron)." (Am Econ R) Index.

"For the most part, the results of these studies are suggestive rather than definitive. Numerous relationships are explored and tentatively assessed, but generally, additional testing of hypotheses is necessary before they can be accepted with confidence. . . . Although many of the statistical results are fairly commonplace and make dull reading (particularly the 75 pages on public assistance expenditures), some results are quite interesting and should stimulate further investigations. Warden's initial reflections on experience rating in unemployment compensation in the light of his industry benefits analysis are one example. . . . One hopes that other doctoral theses will carry this type of analysis of social insurance and welfare expenditures further and help to clear up some of the mysteries, inconsistencies, and questionable conclusions that plague this subject area." R. A. Lester

Am Econ R 57:1417 D '67 900w

ECKSTEIN, OTTO—Continued

"Highly recommended as good examples of careful statistical analysis of an important economic problem. Useful in undergraduate courses involving the topic of income distribution."

Choice 4:1021 N '67 120w

The ECONOMIC impact of TVA: ed. by John R. Moore. 163p $4.95 Univ. of Tenn. press

333.9 Tennessee Valley Authority 67-12217

"Eight specialists set down their thoughts on [Tennessee Valley Authority's] impact—its nature, extent, and direction. The essays range from a discussion of the political factors in regional resource development and a review of the controversy surrounding TVA to a broad inquiry into TVA's future. . . . This volume grew out of the Fifth University of Tennessee Symposium, held to recognize the completion of TVA's first thirty years." (Publisher's note) Index.

"One neither expects nor finds much coordination of subject matter. Stefan Robock confesses a professional embarrassment over the lack of a single scholarly work evaluating TVA as a means of social and economic development, and suggests a possible approach. The volume will not leave him or anyone else much better off. None of the authors had space enough to get off the ground, although many comments are not without meaning or interest." M. A. Adelman

Am Econ R 58:628 Je '68 440w

"The topics are wide ranging: the place of electric power in economic development with lessons from the TVA experience . . . by Bruce Metschert and John Oliver; the involvement of the TVA in various problems (natural resource conservation), by Joseph L. Fisher; political pressures and activities in the development of the TVA, by Norman Wengert; antitrust, . . . by Ronald H. Wolf; and the prospects for future TVA activity, . . . by Stefan H. Robock; extension of TVA's regional development activities beyond the traditional power generation, flood control, and navigation, by Gilbert Banner; and a general look at the future, by Aubrey J. Wagner. The topics represent the diverse backgrounds of the authors . . . as does the unevenness of the quality. Good as thought provoking material for undergraduates in political science and economics (development, industry, micro, fiscal) courses. Rather short, however, on analysis."

Choice 4:1019 N '67 220w

EDDY, ELIZABETH M., jt. auth. Rehabilitation for the unwanted. See Roth, J. A.

EDELSTEIN, J. M., ed. A garland for Jake Zeitlin, on the occasion of his 65th birthday & the anniversary of his 40th year in the book trade. 131p ll $15 G. Dahlstrom & S. Marks; for sale by Dawsons bk.

658.8 Zeitlin, Jake 68-311

Librarians, bibliographers, collectors, dealers, and artists are among the contributors to this festschrift for the California book dealer.

"There is more Fest than Schrift in the volume, which is not unbefitting the effervescent personality of the honoree. Two of the essays, however, make serious contributions to scholarship. The first is a selective bibliography of the steam locomotive by Everett L. DeGolyer, Jr. . . . J. M. Edelstein (also the editor) supplies an expert bibliography of the twenty-nine editions published between 1929 and 1936 by the Primavera Press, of which Jake Zeitlin was a cofounder. The other contributions are chiefly reminiscent and, deservedly, panegyric." H. W. Liebert

Col & Res Lib 29:237 My '68 430w

TLS p92 Ja 25 '68 500w

EDELSTEIN, LUDWIG. Ancient medicine; selected papers of Ludwig Edelstein; ed. by Owsei Temkin and C. Lillian Temkin; trs. from the German by C. Lillian Temkin. 496p $12.50 Johns Hopkins press

610.9 Medicine—History 67-12425

The first part of this book "treats different aspects of the Hippocratic problem. . . . The second group of essays takes up . . . topics such as the relationship of Greek skepticism to medical empiricism of medicine to religion and magic, the influence of the Alexandrians, Herophilus and Erasistratus, on the development of scientific anatomy, and contemporary attitudes toward dietetics. In the third section Edelstein discusses . . . the changing and evolving ideals of the ancient physician from an earlier Hippocratic preoccupation with medical etiquette to the loftier ideals of the love of humanity as expressed by Scribonius, and he examines the relationship of medicine to philosophy to distinguish the essential Hellenism of Greek medicine. The final group of essays is on [more general themes]." (Am Hist R) Index.

"The striking feature of Edelstein's approach . . . is his vigorous, forthright, and highly objective attack upon the myths and traditions that have so long encumbered our view, notably of Hippocratic medicine. He applies his very great talents as classicist and philologist to an exacting and detailed analysis of the many problems of ancient medicine and pursues his thought with great intellectual courage; in the process he overthrows many cherished opinions while reaching for a new and highly original interpretation.

These essays, many of which are highly original, will long exemplify scholarship at its best and constitute a major contribution not as an illustration of some sociological theory but as the examination of historical phenomena and their place in the elucidation of the human forces contributing to scientific advance." J. B. deC. M. Saunders

Am Hist R 73:1484 Je '68 600w

"Unfortunately, this . . . collection does not include all of Edelstein's writings on ancient medicine. [It] contains 18 pieces, [six] of which have been translated into English for the first time. . . . Ten first appeared in the Bulletin of the History of Medicine. For large collections of medical history and Greek and Roman History." W. K. Beatty

Library J 92:3050 S 15 '67 110w

EDELSTEIN LUDWIG. The idea of progress in classical antiquity. 211p $8 Johns Hopkins press

180 Progress. Philosophy, Ancient 67-16483

In tracing the history of the idea of progress through the Hellenistic age, the author "concludes that the ancients . . . formulated most of the thoughts and sentiments that later generations down to the nineteenth century were accustomed to associate with the blessed or cursed word—'progress.'" After equating Seneca, the Roman Stoic, with Condorcet, he asserted that in the Hellenistic Age, the centuries after Alexander the Great, "in good and bad fortune men lived for progress, and what this meant for them was not unlike what it was to mean in the nineteenth century." (N Y Rev of Books) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is an extraordinarily well documented study challenging the belief that the idea of progress is of modern origin. With a full muster of facts based on original sources, Edelstein shows he had a master's command of his subject. . . . It is a book to challenge the mature student, and the fine bibliography shows the painstaking care so characteristic of Edelstein. It should be welcomed by a wide audience interested in the history of ideas. Highly recommended for undergraduate libraries."

Choice 5:846 S '68 200w

"[This book is] a full-scale assault in defense of the Greeks. . . . The argument throughout rests on a (no doubt subconscious) confidence trick, and it is no exaggeration to repeat Schumpeter's adjective, absurd. . . . The confidence trick consists simply in confusing progress in certain branches of knowledge (but not all)—geometry, astronomy, physics, music, less certainly philosophy—with what we mean by the idea of progress (and have meant for more than a century)." M. I. Finley

N Y Rev of Books 10:36 Je 20 '68 1150w

"Is the world getting any better? Do man and his society improve from one age to the next? . . . It has been said that the affirmative answer to [these questions] is characteristic of modern times, that the ancients were unaware of such notions. It is the purpose of this thoughtful, thoroughly documented monograph . . . to demonstrate that the idea of progress in human society was indeed prevalent in ancient times. . . . The book presents the evidence from Greek and Roman sources down to 30

B.C., collected and analyzed in persuasive detail, to bring forth a rousing affirmative. The extensive bibliography attests to the thoroughness of the research, the firm basis on which the argument rests."

Va Q R 44:xxxxii summer '68 160w

EDGERTON, ROBERT B. The cloak of competence: stigma in the lives of the mentally retarded 233p $5.75 Univ. of Calif. press

362.3 Mentally handicapped 67-14116

This book contains "research into the everyday lives of [53] mildly retarded adults who were released from Pacific State Hospital, California, from 1949 to 1958. Dr. Edgerton, an anthropologist, has documented... social and cultural facts concerning ways in which these adults have... rejected the stigma of retardation and, assisted by normal 'benefactors' have tried to assume a 'cloak of competence' in the outside world." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"A refreshingly different book... It provides selected detailed case studies in addition to well written analyses of variables related to 'life on the outs,' e.g. making a living, sex and marriage, and use of leisure... Useful for a general adult readership as well college students. Excellent bibliography."

Choice 5:412 My '68 90w

"A unique study aimed at cultural anthropologists, social scientists, and students, this collection of detailed portraits should influence attitudes, policies, and programs for the mentally retarded." C. E. Lucifora

Library J 92:2425 Je 15 '67 460w

EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY CONFERENCE ON PSYCHOLINGUISTICS, 1966. Psycholinguistics papers; the proceedings of the 1966 Edinburgh conference; ed. by J. Lyons and R. J. Wales [sponsored by the Res. bd. of the faculty of social sciences]. 243p $7.95 Aldine pub.

401 Language and languages—Psychology 66-23172

In these papers "Thorne (department of English language, Edinburgh) examines the role of grammatical competence in understanding speech; Wales (psychology, Edinburgh) and Marshall (psycholinguistics, Oxford) take up the meaning of linguistic competence in the light of the varieties of linguistic performance; McNeill (psychology, Harvard) pursues with further evidence the hypothesis that a child creates his own language from an innate set of base structures; Fodor and Carrgett (psychology, M.I.T.) examine the goals of psycholinguistic explanation; Klima (humanities, M.I.T.) and Bellugi (social relations, Harvard) chart the grammatical progress of three children through several stages of negation and interrogation in the development of their English language." (Choice)

"An up-to-the minute account of events in a rapidly changing field, that, in addition, provides penetrating critical comments by participants on the ideas put forth. The five papers reflect the varied backgrounds of their authors, yet show a common focus on the relation between formal linguistic grammars and the psychological explanation of language."

Choice 4:1376 F '68 180w

"All praise to the editors and the publishers for producing such an excellent volume so quickly. The theme was the relation between competence and performance... in adults and children. The main contributors were mostly hard-line Chomskians; indeed they sometimes went further than their master, who analyses language as a thing by itself but does not claim understanding of the mechanism of speech. Some of them seem to ignore the warning which Professor Chomsky tucked away in a footnote to one of his earlier papers against 'the prevalent and utterly mistaken view that a generative grammar in itself provides or is related in some obvious way to a model for the speaker'."

TLS p1073 N 16 '67 330w

EDINGER, JAMES G. Watching for the wind: the seen and unseen influences on local weather [Ill. by Kenneth E. Crook]. 148p $4.50 Doubleday

551.5 Weather. California—Climate 66-24874

An associate professor of meteorology at the University of California at Los Angeles discusses the interaction of "local terrain, temperature and wind dynamics, and how these phenomena are in turn influenced by wider weather patterns." (Library J) Index.

"Edinger has fashioned an interesting, accurate nontechnical anecdotal introduction to meteorology for nonspecialists... There are an index and a few simple line drawings, but no bibliography."

Choice 4:1276 Ja '68 110w

"The appearance of a scientist with a genuine gift for writing is a moment for rejoicing... Happily, we now have the assistance of Dr. Edinger... writing on micrometeorology, that branch of the science which deals with local (neighborhood) weather conditions... By constant reference to the conditions prevailing in and around his home country of Los Angeles, he succeeds in making vivid the largely invisible processes of weather formation. His manner is amiable and admirably suited to the purpose of the Anchor Science Study Series. This is his first book, may there be many others like it." A. L. Fessler

Library J 92:249 Ja 15 '67 150w

"A basic and practical presentation of common weather systems and patterns of movement... More diagrams would have helped." Kenneth Hoffman

Library J 92:2046 My 15 '67 50w [YA]

EDMONDS, WALTER D. The musket and the cross: the struggle of France and England for North America; with maps and devices by Samuel H. Bryant. 514p $10 Little

973.2 U.S.—History—Colonial period 68-11527

Narrative covering the period 1609-1689, which describes "the early colonial experience in North America with particular reference to the colonists' relations with Indian tribes and competition for the fur trade. It gives a detailed background of the French failure on this continent... [Edmonds] describes the settlement of Quebec and its early years: the coureurs de bois, the Jesuits, government officials, progress of the colony. The narrative moves to New York under the Dutch, then the English; to the New England colonies (with... descriptions of the Indian Wars there); to Virginia, the middle colonies, and back again to Quebec." (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by J. F. Bannon

America 118:517 Ap 13 '68 230w

Reviewed by F. C. Brown

Best Sell 28:11 Ap 1 '68 800w

"Edmonds has achieved still another success... Although the book is not definitively documented, the scholarship throughout is apparent."

Choice 5:1130 N '68 170w

"[Mr. Edmonds] author of Drums Along the Mohawk [BRD 1936]... focuses on the role of Church and State in [the] conflict [between France and England], with major emphasis on New France and New England... His point of view is fresh and makes the account both readable and informative, even for readers versed in the story of the early colonial settlements. The absence of documentation will probably restrict the usefulness of the book, which also suffers somewhat from episodic form and uneven writing. It should be useful in general collections." R. D. Johnson

Library J 93:990 Mr 1 '68 220w

"The French story abounds in vivid portraiture and high adventure... Indispensable maps are provided... Equally indispensable in so complex a story would be a chronology of events. Often Edmonds introduces episodes out of order, like Stuyvesant's surrender to the British, and aside from that, it sometimes requires extraordinary alertness on the part of the reader to orient himself in time. One may quarrel occasionally with details... These are quibbles. Edmonds has constructed a vivid panorama and told a tale that fascinates the reader as much as his novels. And above all he has provided perspective. One hopes for another volume to complete the epic of French Canada." Marion Starkey

N Y Times Bk R p34 My 12 '68 400w

"Page after page of [this history] show that [Edmonds'] gift for vigorous narrative and vivid scene-painting did not desert him. Unfortunately, however, the book also indicates that he did not try hard enough, with the proper intensive research and reflection, to be a true historian... Instead of a concentrated piece of real history, with a close analysis of the forces and trends that underlay the surface events, [he] elected to pen an episodic chronicle. . . . A narrower range would have suited Mr. Edmonds's indisputable talents. At his best he can be forceful, spirited, and lively without losing accuracy or vision. . . . At any rate, he tells just what part the Indians played; and a fuller introduction to their culture . . . would be hard to find." Allan Nevins

EDMONDS, W. D.—Continued

Sat R 51:39 Mr 23 '68 550w

EDSON, LEE. The wind and beyond. See Von Kármán, T.

EDSON, PATRICIA, jt. auth. Spring Grove: the education of immigrant children. See Burgin, T.

EDWARD VI, King of England. The chronicle and political papers; ed. by W. K. Jordan; pub. for the Folger Shakespeare library [Eng title: The chronicle and political papers of King Edward VI]. 214p $5.75 Cornell univ. press

942.05 Great Britain—History—Tudors, 1485-1603 65-27564

This book consists of a private diary covering the years 1547 to 1552, and six papers dealing with "the reform of abuses in Church and State, arguments for establishing a trading mart in England, a memorandum on ways and means, two papers discussing the business and the organization of the King's Council, and a . . . disquisition on the English occupation of France in the reign of Henry VI." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

"This is an unusual production for a lad who was ten years old when he began his chronicle and only fifteen when he discontinued it. Edward gives us very little about himself, almost nothing about his half sister Elizabeth, and in some sixteen one-line references speaks unfavorably of his half sister Mary. His diary is serious, precocious, matter of fact, and laconic. . . . [Jordan] has a high score for accuracy." L. H. Carlson

Am Hist R 72:969 Ap '67 300w

"All these works were printed by J. G. Nichols for the Roxburghe Club in 1857-8, but those two volumes, though scholarly, were heavily encumbered with notes and are now hard to come by. Dr. Jordan's careful, compact and inexpensive edition is thus extremely useful. So too is his introduction, which puts the documents effectively in their setting and makes some interesting remarks about their author. . . . Dr. Jordan sometimes makes rather bold claims." Penny Williams

Engl Hist 83:163 Ja '68 310w

Reviewed by Christopher Hill

New Statesman 73:624 My 5 '67 400w

"Students of the period will recognize that there is nothing new here; all of it has already appeared in print. Yet this fresh edition will be welcomed by serious students. . . . The text, annotations, and a concise and illuminating introduction reach the highest standards of scholarship, and provide an inexpensive and indispensable source for the reign of this enigmatic young man. . . . The editor brings together in his introduction some of the evidence available for an estimate of the king's personality. His own inclination is towards a considerable revision of the traditional view that he was nothing more than a pawn in the hands of unscrupulous advisers: we are left, however, with the feeling that not even this editor's discerning analysis succeeds in solving the mystery of a character and personality over which, to borrow his expression, there is a brooding uncertainty." TLS p1150 D 8 '66 600w

EDWARDES, MICHAEL. British India, 1772-1947; a survey of the nature and effects of alien rule. 396p il $13.95 Taplinger
954 India—History 68-11579

This "assessment of what British rule in India attempted to do and what effects it had on Indian culture and society explores, within the historical framework, the nature of British rule . . . its philosophy and practice, its adherence to Western codes of law and ideas of property, and its encouragement (sometimes intentional, sometimes not) of the process of Westernization in the economy, in education, in literature, art, religion, and in politics. The author also examines the attitudes of the British community in India to the country, its culture, and above all to Indians themselves, as well as devoting a section to the effect of Indian influences on art and literature in the West." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author's] approach tends to be narrative and descriptive rather than analytical. The book is 'popular,' not scholarly history, yet even on these grounds it must be criticized. Despite occasional sharp insights, Edwardes fails to provide the lay reader with adequate background to appreciate those insights. His style is disjointed, his coverage uneven, and his judgments often unsubstantiated. The outrageous price . . . can perhaps be justified to the gift shop trade by the 60 illustrations, many of them very quaint. Academic libraries might better save their money for use on more substantial works of scholarship."

Choice 5:663 Jl '68 140w

"At the end of Mr Edwardes's excellent book are two short chapters on the effects of Indian culture on the West. . . . The shortness of the chapters implicitly makes the point. The inter-penetration was amazingly limited. . . . It was the Mutiny that was the watershed in the relationship. . . . [It] destroyed the belief, implicit in so much of Indian history in the previous eighty years, that something fundamental could be changed in Indian society. . . . Mr Edwardes does not give us enough about the economic relationship; but elsewhere his ideas are beautifully clear, for expert and non-expert alike."

Economist 226:50 Ja 13 '68 650w

"[The author,] a leading authority on India, has attempted to design the study for the use of the student, and at the same time he has made it possible for the general reader to understand the problems of Empire. This work is required in any scholastic institution, and most public libraries should have a copy." P. W. Filby

Library J 93:2487 Je 15 '68 100w

"An interesting, knowledgeable and skilfully arranged work which manages to convey the broad outlines of the story of the Indian connexion within a more valuable framework of imaginative comment. . . . There are two main parts, the first dealing with the company rule of 1772-1857 and the second with the imperial period of 1858-1947. These are divided by a section on the Mutiny which [Edwardes] chooses as the pivotal moment in India's and Britain's joint experience of each other, as the event that turned India in Britain's eyes from a power-house of trade and commerce into 'a series of laboratories for experiments in political economy'. . . . The disciplines imposed by the writing of an extended gloss such as this have unfortunately left Mr Edwardes small room to develop those of his arguments which most catch the attention. Perhaps he will do so in a future, less compendious, work."

TLS p178 F 22 '68 550w

EDWARDS, FRANK. Flying saucers—here and now! 261p il $5.95 Stuart, L.

629.13 Flying saucers 67-26546

In this book, the author of Flying Saucers—Serious Business (BRD 1966) seems to have decided "that no contact has yet been made by earthlings with beings from outer space and that 'the only flights human beings have ever made in UFO's appear to be flights of fancy.' But he [thinks] it reasonable that ultimately our astronauts may get acquainted with some of these pilots of flying saucers." (Library J)

Choice 5:1156 N '68 180w

"[Mr. Edwards] quoted with pride the opinions of reputable scientists such as Dr. J. Allen Hynek of Northwestern University and Dr. James McDonald of the University of Arizona who seem to believe in the existence of extraterrestrial UFO's. These testimonies give his last work a hopeful ending. . . . Readers of his previous best seller will all want to look at this one." E. T. Smith

Library J 93:196 Ja 15 '68 200w

"[This book is] written in a popular non-technical style. . . . Edwards was a newsman, and unabashedly wrote as a newsman. . . . His utter disregard for documentation will be galling to the intelligent readers; still, he tells many a good story—and some of them might just be true. . . . All of the many UFO stories he cites were reported in just a sixteen-month period centered about 1966. He does not go into the past to dig up the worn UFO classics, but he works exclusively with well-reported sightings of the very recent past. [This] carries on the unfortunate reportorial tradition of 'a story at any price,' let the facts fall where they may. Truth is outraged throughout." J. A. Hynek

Natur Hist 77:24 Mr '68 800w

EDWARDS-REES, DÉSIRÉE. Ireland's story.

214p il maps $5 Barnes & Noble

914.5 Ireland—History

68-264

This book describes "Ireland's distinguished prehistory to her divided present." (TLS) Bibliography.

"It is difficult to see for what audience this book would be particularly useful. Too many questionable statements are put down without supporting evidence or adequate discussion. . . . College libraries looking for a survey of this kind . . . would do better to . . . choose The Course of Irish History edited by [T. W.] Moody and [F. X.] Martin [BRD 1963]."

Choice 5:854 S '68 90w

"The late Miss Edwards-Rees carefully tailored her account to the capacity of the lay and younger reader. Her love of Ireland shines on every page, but she is free of those religious, political, and geographic bases that mar so many histories of Erin. She is as fair with Cromwell as with de Valera, and she passes firm judgments on both of them. Her intended audience will not mind that she inclines rather to tell a story than to explain a situation; they will enjoy reading her book to the end." R. R. Rea.

Library J 93:991 Mr 1 '68 100w

"The reader comes to view with understanding not merely isolated events in Irish history, but also the characters of a continuous story; it is a remarkable achievement. Nor does Britain emerge in contrast as the villain of the piece. . . . The full story reveals the long background of the differences between North and South. . . . The main causes of discontent, religious, economic and political, can be seen in perspective. . . . It is a luminous picture which reveals the passionate idealism of the Irish, their humour and liveliness and their long memory. Only the long bibliography seems disorderly."

TLS p264 Mr 14 '68 300w

EGAN, E. W., jt. ed. Kings, rulers and statesmen. See Wise, L. F.

EGBERT, VIRGINIA WYLIE. The mediaeval artist at work. 93p 54il $7.50 Princeton univ. press

709.02 Art, Medieval. Artists

67-12344

"This picture book portrays sculptors, painters (illuminators, panel painters, and muralists), goldsmiths, and wood and ivory carvers at work. The representations . . . are arranged chronologically from the sixth to the beginning of the fifteenth century. . . . The text, which consists of a . . . commentary on the pictures, includes quotations from contemporary writings which supplement the illustrations in casting light on mediaeval artistic processes. . . . An appendix gives a list of all the representations of artists at work known to the author, compiled alphabetically by location, with information concerning kinds of artists, dates, and references for illustrations." (Publisher's note)

"A very serviceable book written by a member of the research staff of the Princeton Index of Christian Art. . . . No comparable book is available: almost all books dealing with medieval artists are limited to a discussion of architects, and none covers the entire medieval period. . . . Illustrations of good quality. . . . Useful for all colleges and universities with courses in medieval art or history."

Choice 5:764 S '68 170w

"This book is pure pleasure, for Mrs. Egbert . . . investigates an unusual aspect of mediaeval art and presents her findings in a most felicitous way. . . . This book will appeal to readers who like what is odd and different. . . . The price is moderate and the contents illuminating and entertaining." Julia Sabine

Library J 93:743 F 15 '68 190w

EGGERT, GERALD G. Railroad labor disputes; the beginnings of federal strike policy. 313p $6.95 Univ. of Mich. press

331.89 Strikes and lockouts. Railroads and state. Railroads—Employees

67-11984

This work "describes the federal government's methods of dealing with railroad labor problems in the last quarter of the nineteenth century and shows how the beginnings of federal strike policy evolved. To explain the bias of government officials against the working man and for railroad management [the author] examines the backgrounds, interests, and ambitions of the shapers of federal policy." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by D. L. McMurry

Am Hist R 73:1249 Ap '68 400w

"Well documented and well indexed with an extensive bibliography. Students of history in many fields—government, law, labor—will find it useful. It is not a substitute for any available book but is a good supplement to books on labor union history and public policy toward labor."

Choice 5:233 Ap '68 140w

"The dramatically violent conflicts between capital and labor during the last quarter of the nineteenth century continue to attract scholarly attention, and more than enough research has been published in the last decade to warrant an attempt at synthesis of certain aspects of the labor problem in emergent industrial America. [In this admirable study] Eggert's major conclusions, based on a thorough exploration of manuscript and printed sources, are eminently sound but hardly novel. . . . The most polished chapters, comprising more than a third of the work, concern Cleveland's second administration. Attorney General Olney is properly the protagonist. . . . Intimately acquainted with Olney's Career, Eggert writes these climactic and concluding chapters with confidence and authority." E. W. Sigmund

J Am Hist 54:686 D '67 490w

EGNER, G. Contraception vs. tradition; a Catholic critique. 205p $4.95 Herder & Herder

261.8 Birth control

67-14144

The author, a priest writing pseudonymously, argues that "the 'traditional' stand of the Church on birth control and on the whole subject of sexuality is untenable today. Throughout the work, he [uses] the statements of many Church spokesmen over the centuries, most notably Aquinas and Augustine, [attempting to] prove that the position of ecclesiastics has not been as static as many traditionalists claim. [He goes on to discuss] such topics as original sin, the natural law, sterility, and chastity." (Library J) Index of sources and references.

"Written in 1964, this work . . . is a valuable contribution to the current debate. The position taken is basically that of the majority of the Papal commission on birth control . . . and provides a most thorough and effective analysis and criticism of the traditional arguments against contraception. . . . The book covers some of the same ground as [J. T.] Noonan's Contraception [BRD 1965, 1966], and the author promises a commentary on that important work in an appendix; however, . . . the concluding 70 or 80 pages (though referred to in the preface, text, and index) are not included in this edition."

Choice 4:1254 Ja '68 200w

"This is a provocative book addressed more to theologians than to the Catholic layman. It should increase the religious ferment in this country as it has in England. For large collections in college and public libraries." E. T. Smith

Library J 92:1935 My 15 '67 160w

EGOFF, SHEILA. The republic of childhood; a critical guide to Canadian children's literature in English. 300p il $5 Oxford

028.5 Children's literature—History and criticism. Children's literature—Bibliography. Canadian literature—History and criticism

68-79060

The author is associate professor in the School of Librarianship at the University of British Columbia. This book contains chapters on Indian legends; "history and biography; historical fiction; fantasy, folk and fairy tales; other fiction; and illustration and design. . . . The final chapter discusses nineteenth- and early-twentieth-century books." (Horn Bk) Bibliography. Book-of-the-year awards. Index.

EGOFF, SHEILA—Continued

Choice 5:932 O '68 220w

"The author of this thoughtful, well-organized book is a distinguished children's librarian. Her knowledge of books is prodigious, her ability to judge them remarkably sharp and objective. . . . English and American books are included in the discussions to emphasize areas of weakness or strength in Canadian publications, but the annotated lists following each chapter are confined to books by Canadian authors. . . . With a few exceptions the books considered were all published between 1950 and 1965. . . . Adults will be interested in the discovery of the number of 'Canadian books that have already joined the mainstream of children's books in English' and of the debt that children's literature owes to Canada, especially in the categories of Indian legends and realistic animal stories. The general observations on children's reading and children's books throughout the world are important for anyone interested in the field." R. H. V.

Horn Bk 44:337 Je '68 280w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:42 Ag 24 '68 550w

"Miss Egoft's authority is unquestionable; she has also a right philosophical basis for her work which enables her to draw general conclusions from these local instances. She groups her material in categories, not chronologically, and appends valuable reading lists to each chapter. Much of this material will be unfamiliar to English readers, and some of it is difficult of access. Miss Egoft's work is not the less valuable. A little dull, perhaps, but lit throughout by an inner integrity." Marcus Crouch

TLS p1370 D 6 '68 500w

EHRENBURG, ILYA. Post-war years, 1945-1954; tr. by Tatiana Shebunina in collaboration with Yvonne Kapp. 349p pl $6.50 World pub.

B or 92

67-13851

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:252 Ap '68 150w

Reviewed by R. H. Johnston
Library J 93:179 Ja 15 '68 180w

Reviewed by Helen Yglesias
Nation 206:121 Ja 22 '68 500w

Reviewed by D. W. Treadgold
New Repub 158:30 Mr 16 '68 1300w

EHRENPREIS, IRVIN. Swift: the man, his works, and the age; 3v; v2, Dr Swift. 782p $17.50 Harvard univ. press

B or 92 Swift, Jonathan (62-51793)

"This is the second volume of [a projected] trilogy, and deals with the period 1699-1714. . . . Swift's ecclesiastical career, his search for preferment and the gradual transformation of his social life are examined. The author also scrutinizes Swift's attachment to Esther Johnson and Esther Vanhomrigh, the evolution of his political principles, and his unconscious motivations. . . . Ehrenpreis concentrates on Swift's literary works of this period; and of some of these, such as An Argument against Abolishing Christianity, The Conduct of the Allies, and A Discourse of the Contests and Dissensions, he provides analyses." (Publisher's note) For the first volume, Mr Swift and his Contemporaries, see BRD 1963.

"[This volume] particularly drags with it an unwieldy bulk of specialized data and judgments which only other Swift specialists could or would wish to debate. Also, the biographer too often becomes exclusively the critic; one has the feeling that the book is a series of essays, some biographical, some critical. Withal, the book remains valuable, definitive in many ways, and a necessary part of large libraries." John Rycenga

Library J 93:1996 My 15 '68 200w

"[This volume] is roughly three times the length of its predecessor. . . . It would be unfair to suggest that this is a dry-as-dust, pedantic work, though every fact is there down to the exact card games Swift played with his friends and the minutiae of English and Irish politics that stimulated each of his many pamphlets. The style flows easily, a thought too easily perhaps. . . . Nevertheless the accumulation of fact and background does produce a portrait. . . . Much of the value of [the] book lies in its completeness and its usefulness as a work of reference."

TLS p250 Mr 14 '68 1200w

"[This] work is not only a scrupulous record of Swift's public and private life but in part a panoramic view of fifteen crucial years in English history and vivid recreation of the issues and personalities that gave significance to the period. . . . There are skillful vignettes of a gallery of prominent personages with whom Swift was associated, including Addison, Congreve, Steele, Bolingbroke, King, Wharton, Burnett, Ormonde, [and] Arbuthnot. . . . Mr. Ehrenpreis writes in a style consistently admirable for efficiency and solid competence. . . . [But the absence of an index] is a handicap to the host of scholars who will mine this massive, richly detailed biography." Austin Wright

Va Q R 44:341 spring '68 2000w

EICHRODT, WALTHER. Theology of the Old Testament; tr. by J. A. Baker. v2 573p $7.50 Westminster press

221.6 Bible. O.T.—Criticism, interpretation, etc. Theology (61-11867)

"In Volume I [published in 1961], Dr. Eichrodt dealt with 'The Problem and the Method' of Old Testament theology and established in detail his thesis that the concept of the covenant is the key to the understanding of the Old Testament message. Volume II elaborates the great themes of the Old Testament message in the light of this covenant concept. Here Dr. Eichrodt discusses the self-manifestation of God, God's cosmic powers, creation, man, the world, celestial world, and underworld. He explores the individual and the community, man's personal relation with God, Old Testament morality, sin and forgiveness, and immortality." (Publisher's note) Translated from the German, entitled Theologie des Alten Testaments, Teil 2/3, fifth edition, 1964. Index of subjects. Index of modern authors. Index of biblical passages.

"Eichrodt organizes his material by using a pattern drawn from the dialectic of the Old Testament itself, which tells of a national God who also shows himself to be the God of the world and of individual men. . . . [The present volume] is devoted to an exploration of the other relationships which were necessarily a part of Israel's 'world view': cosmology, creation, providence, and the modes of God's self-manifestation. . . . Eichrodt's view, that the religion of the Old Testament, despite all the changes throughout its history, was a self-contained unity of constant basic tendency, is in sharp contrast with that other great work, Old Testament Theology by G. von Rad [BRD 1963, v 1 and BRD 1966, v2] which denies that there is any one unifying theology, only a succession of 'theologies.' Both works are definitely recommended."

Choice 5:68 Mr '68 190w

"[The translator] makes accessible in lucid English this valuable study of what Israel's religious thinkers . . . had come to think about the nature of God and his dealings with Israel and with the world. . . . The first edition of Eichrodt's work appeared in 1933; . . . in the interval an immense amount of new knowledge about these surrounding civilizations had accumulated. Although Eichrodt did not fail to take notice of this in later editions of his great work, he still tends to minimize the extent to which Israel's religious beliefs and practices were influenced by the neighbouring civilizations. . . . The tribute by Professor Eichrodt's translator is well deserved: This is incomparably the greatest book in its field."

TLS p919 S 28 '67 1000w

EICKE, EDNA. What's your name? unp il col il $7.95 Harper

759.13 Children in literature and art—Juvenile literature 68-16823

This volume collects some of the author's cover illustrations for The New Yorker with a line of text added to each to produce a 'book of reminiscences about common childhood experiences.' (Commonweal) "Age eight and up." (N Y Times Bk R)

"The reproductions are first-rate and the pictures are so evocative that children of all ages will spend long hours 'reading' this book." L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:285 N 22 '68 50w

Harper 237:131 D '68 180w

"The times and places of the scenes are common to the past of us all: follow-the-leader schoolward-bound on a rain-washed April street; a cluster of children around an ice-cream wagon at twilight; anticipating the arrival of guests at a birthday party; counting freight-cars from the overpass. . . . Maybe—if you look long enough, hard enough, the scenes will come to life; that's how evocative they are." G. A. Woods

N Y Times Bk R p38 O 20 '68 160w

EIDELBERG, LUDWIG, ed. Encyclopedia of psychoanalysis. See Encyclopedia of psychoanalysis

EIMERL, SAREL. The world of Giotto, c. 1267-1337, by Sarel Eimerl and the eds. of Time-Life books. 198p il col il $7.95 Time

709.45 Art, Italian. Giotto di Bondone 67-23024

"An account of the artistic developments in Tuscany during the period spanned by the career of the great Florentine master." (Choice) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"This volume is clearly aimed at mass circulation. It is bright, readable, and well illustrated, and, in the fashion of this genre, it treats history as an extension of story telling. The substance of the information, reflecting a commendable acquaintance with the professional literature, is most generally accurate, and it is conveyed to the reader in a manner intended to spare him the harsh and intractable complexity of reality."

Choice 4:1232 Ja '68 180w

"The illustrations more than make up for the somewhat pedestrian text."

Library J 92:4640 D 15 '67 10w [YA]

EINAUDI, MARIO. The early Rousseau. 294p $7.95 Cornell univ. press

848 Rousseau, Jean Jacques. The State 67-15958

"The book covers the period from 1730 to 1756, with emphasis on the several years immediately following the decision in 1749 to write the famous first Discourse. The author's stated purpose is 'to show how much of decisive importance Rousseau had said in the course of these twenty years, how indeed most of what he was to say later in his major works is to be found in this early period of vigorous polemics and creative thinking.' A preliminary chapter outlines the contemporary setting and climate of opinion against which Rousseau was to react. Successive chapters then trace the development of his own distinctive analysis of his society." (Am Hist R) Index.

"Students of Rousseau's thought used to make much of a supposed sharp contrast between the early Rousseau of the two Discourses and the later Rousseau of the Social Contract, but the current trend is to emphasize the essential unity of Rousseau's philosophy. Professor Einaudi, who is in agreement with this general thesis, makes a useful contribution to the subject here. . . . Much of the book is devoted to a précis of the writings with commentary, and there is at times too much citation of other writers. Yet such a summary of the early writings, some of which are scarcely known, and such a review of recent research have value." G. H. McNeil

Am Hist R 17:1539 Je '68 470w

Reviewed by E. T. Gargan

Ann Am Acad 337:175 My '68 550w

"Not a biography, this eminently elucidating discussion . . . offers a valuable contribution to the dossier of Rousseau studies. Judicious notes; index of names, works, and subjects facilitates the use of this thoughtful, engaging study."

Choice 4:1385 F '68 240w

"This is a solid, intelligent account of the essays that preceded Emile. . . . There are, to be sure, some debatable interpretations. . . . These doubtful interpretations are, however, part of all that is illuminating and convincing in this study. For it is designed to impress upon us not only Rousseau's intellectual independence, but also the very 'objective,' rather than introspective, character of his thinking. . . . It emphasizes Rousseau's preeminence place in the history of egalitarian radicalism. This is Professor Einaudi's aim and in this his lucid and devoted commentary succeeds, above all because it helps Rousseau's own texts to speak directly and clearly to us." J. N. Shklar

Pol Sci Q 83:477 S '68 600w

EINSTEIN, CHARLES. How to coach, manage, and play Little league baseball; a commonsense instructional manual; foreword by Willie Mays. 142p $3.95 Simon & Schuster 796.357 Little league baseball 68-12167

This book provides "advice on strategy, tactics, and techniques of coaching. [It stresses the] differences between Little League and professional baseball." (Library J)

"Einstein, veteran baseball writer who has had experience in Little League as an official and manager (and father), provides sound advice. . . . This book is well written, and will be in demand in communities that have Little League teams. Recommended to public libraries of any size." George Whitbeck

Library J 93:769 F 15 '68 100w

N Y Times Bk R p41 My 5 '68 170w

EINSTEIN, CHARLES. My ups and downs in baseball. See Cepeda, O.

EINSTEIN, CHARLES, jr. auth. A pitcher's story. See Marichal, J.

EINSTEIN LEWIS. A diplomat looks back; ed. by Lawrence E. Gelfand; with a foreword by George F. Kennan. 269p $7.50 Yale univ. press

327.73 Diplomats. U.S.—Foreign relations 67-24497

The author "represented the United States in important diplomatic posts such as the Algiers Conference in 1906, the old Czech capital of Prague in 1921, the London embassy until the outbreak of World War II, with important posts between. These recollections form the basis for [his understanding of] many of the political events from 1900 to 1950." (Library J)

"Gelfand, a capable diplomat historian, has edited [these memoirs] with 'only slight alterations' and has added a useful introductory essay. Einstein was an exceptionally cultivated man with wide interests, and his recollections are perceptive and informative. His sketches of famous personalities, such as Theodore Roosevelt, Charles Evans Hughes, and Jan Masaryk, are acute, and his descriptions of events in his various posts will be helpful to historians studying American policies of the period."

Choice 5:1358 D '68 170w

"This is an important contribution of source material to the history of our foreign relations. . . . Copious footnotes, beautiful prose, a 17-page biographical directory of political leaders of this period, and a bibliographical list of Mr. Einstein's works add to the book's value for any academic library or special collection." Eugene Holtman

Library J 93:3125 S 15 '68 110w

Reviewed by A. J. P. Taylor

N Y Rev of Books 11:18 O 10 '68 1700w

"The astonishing thing about [these] memoirs is their even-tempered tone, marked by wit and good humor. Einstein had some cause for bitterness, but there is none here, only a sharp and occasionally rueful awareness of political and human realities. . . . Einstein's world is now remote . . . but these highly civilized memoirs should help keep his name alive." Robert Berkqvist

N Y Times Bk R p50 O 20 '68 390w

EISENBERG, DENNIS. The re-emergence of fascism. 348p $7.50 Barnes, A.S.

335.6 Fascism. History, Modern—20th century 68-14401

This "survey of post-World War II Fascist movements . . . covers Latin American and 18 other nations, with the United States and Great Britain receiving most attention . . . [and is concerned with] the dangers of Fascism in the 1960's. . . . [The author] names groups, leaders, and shows how national Fascist groups cooperate with each other." (Library J) Index.

EISENBERG, DENNIS—Continued

"What might have been a most valuable acquisition . . . is seriously compromised by [Eisenberg's] pamphleteering approach. He fails to adequately define fascism and to tell how it is distinguished from other conservative political groups. . . . [He] makes no attempt to document or substantiate what he says. He gives no footnotes, references, or bibliographies. He uses quotes extensively but the reader has no way of checking the original source. He consistently uses broad adjectives rather than specific figures or names. While not recommended, the book may fill a hole in pertinent collections." W. C. Robinson

Library J 93:4149 N 1 '68 210w

"This book is little more than a thorough collection of press-snippets punctured by cries of alarm (the latter being, in many cases, entirely justified). . . . The quality of inference is often purile. . . . Dates are not always accurate and the spelling of a number of German titles does not inspire confidence. . . . Despite this almost total lack of a responsible framework and of any critical judgment, Mr Eisenberg's Index Maleficorum has its uses. It can serve as a quick reference guide to the underworld of anti-semitic hysteria, Nazi charades and lunatic obsessions in which the Rockwells, the Colin Jordans, the Goran Ordessons strut about. It rightly reminds us of how many mass-murderers walk among us unpunished and even rewarded. . . . [The author's] chapter on Austria is valuable. In no country have the consequences of Nazism been more profitable or more casually accepted."

TLS p236 Mr 23 '67 800w

EISENHOWER, DWIGHT D. At ease: stories I tell to friends. 400p $6.95 Doubleday

B or 92 67-13781

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 4:1312 Ja '68 180w

Reviewed by Douglas Gill
New Statesman 75:207 F 16 '68 480w

TLS p75 Ja 25 '68 1300w

EISENMENGER, ROBERT W. The dynamics of growth in New England's economy, 1870-1964. (New England council. The New England res. ser) 201p $9 Wesleyan univ. press 330.974 New England—Economic conditions
66-23926

"The New England region is poorly endowed with raw materials; it is distant from most consumer markets in the United States; and it has an unaccommodating climate. How then does it experience continuing growth, and what factors may account for its per capita income being higher than the national average? The documentation of this puzzle, and its solution, constitute the subject of Dr. Eisenmenger's book. . . . [His] calculations suggest that two-thirds of the labor intensity differential between the United States and New England is simply due to differing output composition. The additional important elements in the region's growth are the fondness of business executives for living in the area, and the presence of agglomeration economies accruing from the high degree of urbanization in the region." (Am Econ R) Bibliography. Index.

"Although the author weaves supporting evidence into his presentation, this reader does not feel that all aspects of the thesis have been rigorously proved. . . . Neglect of the quantitative dimension of locational factors is exhibited in Eisenmenger's discussion of the residential preferences of executives and their role in the region's growth. He says: 'Unless their firms are failing these men do not consider relocating to improve their profit position'. . . . No evidence for such a sweeping generalization is found in the book, readers would have liked to know whether these firms are not, typically, the very small ones, and, if so, whether their contribution to New England's growth is quantitatively significant. . . . On the positive side, Eisenmenger has succeeded in presenting a generally interesting study of the New England economy. In doing so, he relied heavily on traditional price theory and incorporated a great deal of current and relevant data into his analysis. This approach has produced a book which will be helpful to students of regional economics." Matityahu Marcus

Am Econ R 57:1348 D '67 490w

"No general growth model used; a good survey of wage theory accompanies an illuminating discussion of New England wage patterns. New England manufacturing specialization in high-skill industries is shown to require 'capital-intensive' labor. Compact; well written; a model study. Well produced. Numerous tables clearly presented. Mistitled: prime interest is labor market and pattern of manufacturing specialization; no discussion of capital accumulation."

Choice 5:233 Ap '68 140w

"Despite the title, the reader should not expect to find any extensive treatment of the historical development of the New England economy, nor should he expect to find the use of any explicit growth model in the analysis of changes in the recent past. Instead, the book is a series of essays dealing with selected aspects of the New England economy. From the point of view of general economists, the examination of the specialization of the area's manufacturing firms is probably the work's most notable contribution; but the author's analysis of the cause of intercity wage differentials is also of considerable interest. The lack of unifying model is, however, quite apparent. . . . [The volume] is well bolstered with data, including some wage and productivity figures that are not available elsewhere, and its extensive Bibliography will certainly be useful to any student of the region." L. E. Davis

J Pol Econ 75:427 Ag '67 600w

EISENSTEIN, LOUIS. A stripe of Tammany's tiger, by Louis Eisenstein and Elliot Rosenberg. 300p $5.95 Speller

329.3 Tammany Hall. New York (City)—
Politics and government. Politics, Practical 66-29504

"Eisenstein, 40 years a participant in New York City politics, has collaborated with journalist-historian Rosenberg to produce this 'inner history' of [the Democratic party organization in the Borough of Manhattan from the 1900's through the 1960's]." (Choice) Index.

"The anecdotes [Eisenstein] tells are entertaining and sound authentic, but are undocumented. Like other reminiscences based on memory, hearsay, and strong opinions of men and affairs, this one must be read with caution. It is very useful, though, for measuring the size of the average precinct worker in Tammany Hall. . . . [Such men] regularly delivered the vote for Tammany, Eisenstein says with pride, no matter who the candidates were or what they stood for. He further makes the point that the stakes of politics are, and ought to be, jobs and favors. . . . He never in his life, moreover, thought of improving the East Side; in fact, he sneers at efforts to use politics as an instrument for social change." Arthur Mann

Am Hist R 73:935 F '68 360w

"Written in a lively journalistic style and spiced with numerous anecdotes, this volume is neither a personal memoir nor a case study of a political machine. Rather, it is a precinct captain's impressions of politics and politicians. . . . By focusing on the period 1900-60, Eisenstein and Rosenberg are able to illuminate the 'golden years' of Tammany. But by so narrowing their focus, they lose historical perspective and seriously weaken the utility of their work. . . . Openly laudatory of the older breed of politicians exemplified by Eddy Ahearn and Charles Francis Murphy, the book is critical of men like LaGuardia and Robert Wagner, Jr. There are valuable insights here for the specialist in local politics and for those interested in the peculiarities of New York affairs. Lack of documentation and absence of analysis reduce the usefulness of this book for the serious student."

Choice 4:1444 F '68 210w

Reviewed by Paul Sarnoff

Library J 91:5626 N 15 '66 140w

EISNER, J. MICHAEL. William Morris Leiserson; a biography. 144p $6.75 Univ. of Wis. press

331.15 Leiserson, William Morris 67-13557

This is the story of a "mediator, arbitrator, and public servant [who] served as a midwife to the birth of contemporary collective bargaining in [the United States]. . . . It contains separate chapters on Leiserson's activities in the areas of unemployment compensation, industrial democracy, arbitration, mediation, and his four years of service on the National Labor Relations Board." (Choice) Bibliography of Leiserson's works. Index.

"A well-conceived biography of Leiserson would provide fresh perspectives on the immigrants' experience in America, the rationale of pioneer labor arbitrators, and the administrative difficulties of the New Deal. But this book offers no such insights. Too brief for a full-scale biography and too diffuse for an essay, the book substitutes platitudes and truisms for hard historical analysis. . . . Never does the reader discover what actually made Leiserson so different from other first-generation Jewish immigrants." Melvyn Dubofsky

Am Hist R 73:940 F '68 650w

"[This] volume is a repetitive and superficial report on whichever of Leiserson's papers and manuscripts seemed available. . . . It could all be boiled down to one useful journal article on the [National Labor Relations Board]. The chapter on the Board is the most interesting and the best researched even if, as Eisner reports, it was Leiserson's 'most difficult' job. Except for the section on his government service, there is no attempt to relate Leiserson's activities to the development of policies or procedures in industrial relations. Leiserson did play an important role in the formation of public and private labor policies, but no one would ever know it, except by assertion, from this book. . . . It cannot be recommended."

Choice 4:1420 F '68 210w

"[The subject of this biography, a] refugee from Estonia and New York's East Side, matriculated at Wisconsin and became a disciple of John Commons and those pragmatic progressives, Ely, Ross, Turner. Their philosophy, honed by his own experience and intelligence, gave [him] the values which he attempted to introduce into the unmapped world of industrial relations. . . . While brief, this vignette is surprisingly full; and the research and complete Leiserson bibliography make it a valuable addition to industrial history. Emphasizing the need for a free collective-bargaining climate, in which the individual rights of both employer and employee were recognized, Leiserson reiterated the Progressive tradition of reform by rationality rather than by imposed edict." R. J. Graf

J Am Hist 54:703 D '67 180w

J Pol Econ 75:900 D '67 220w

EKELÖF, GUNNAR. Selected poems; tr. by Muriel Rukeyser and Leif Sjöberg. 109p $4 Twayne

839.7 66-16109

In this "selection of the Swedish poet's work—three themes—time, death, and self—recur." (Library J)

"Ekelöf did not take a degree at any university but became interested in poetry, more especially the school of the surrealists and the poetic expression of the Orient. Since his debut in Swedish Literature in 1932, he has received almost every honor in his country except the Nobel prize. [This volume of his] poetry now presented in English is excellently translated. It is easily and pleasantly read, but hard to understand. It is a clean and beautiful volume, but many will be baffled by it."

Choice 4:1388 F '68 120w

"In poem after poem, the themes are explored, expanded, and modified, but seldom is an idea, an image or an attitude repeated, so varied are Ekelöf's feelings and so skillful is his recording of them. His poems seem grounded in a sub-atomic physics whose laws unfold in a resonance of wild and strange language. I am not able to say what is lost, if anything, in these translations; but what is gained is clear: an introduction to one of the most exciting, profound and original poets writing today." John Demos

Library J 92:2584 J1 '67 150w

"[The] translations seem flat, often exclamatory and seldom even tense. . . . If there were only the present volume to judge by, the grounds for Ekelöf's native reputation would remain, on the whole, a mystery. (There are exceptions. The very short 'Sunstripe In Coffee House' suddenly is completely alive.) But in fact there have been other glimpses of Ekelöf that make clearer, in English, what the vitality and hallucinatory power of the original may be like." W. S. Merwin

N Y Times Bk R p6 Mr 17 '68 400w

ELAM, STANLEY, ed. Educational requirements for the 1970's; an interdisciplinary approach; ed. by Stanley Elam and William P. McLure; pub. for Phi delta kappa. 266p $6.50 Praeger

370.1 Education—Aims and objectives

67-20476

"These symposium proceedings represent the initial step taken by Phi Delta Kappa's Commission of Education, Manpower, and Economic Growth 'to generate ideas for research and practice through the interaction of scholars from different fields.' At the symposium . . . papers relative to future educational requirements were presented by each of four economists, a social psychologist, and a cultural anthropologist; dialogue of the discussants followed. . . . The [six] major addresses [with their discussions] are found in this book." (Library J) The seventh chapter by John K. Folger provides a summary of the ideas expressed.

Choice 5:1188 N '68 130w

"Throughout the proceedings the reader is made aware of the need for adequate educational planning for the future, and is impressed by the ideas drawn from economics, sociology, and anthropology that might prove helpful in such planning. Recommended for extensive education collections." T. J. Cole

Library J 92:3037 S 15 '67 160w

"Solon T. Kimball's richly persuasive essay [tells] of an American psychic pattern that submits children to the opposite strain of prudence and competition. Following in order are Fred L. Strodbeck on social detail, Arthur M. Ross on full employment, Leonard A. Lecht on manpower, Hector Correa on economic growth, Gerhard Colm on national goals, and John K. Folger on social change. There are no editorial apologies for the fact that 45 per cent of the text is discussion. Nor need there be. The cut and thrust of argument adds substantially to the volume's effectiveness." John Calam

Sat R 51:80 Mr 16 '68 80w

ELBERT, GEORGE, House plants [by] George Elbert and Edward Hyams. 208p col il $7.95 Funk

635.9 House plants 68-12857

The authors "tell who should grow what and under which conditions. After several chapters on . . . general matters affecting all indoor horticulture, they make specific suggestions for each plant group, from the Amaryllis family . . . through the sagittate-leaved Syngonium, and on to the biggest Aspidistra." (Sat R) Index.

"The book here reviewed is a hybrid production . . . out of Hyams (an Englishman) by Elbert (an American). The British influence is unfortunately too strong for [America]. . . . There are places where English practice conflicts with what is suitable for our part of the world. . . . And there are other places where recommendations and suggestions more helpful to Englishmen than Americans creep in. That is the debit side. On the credit side it must be said that the text is a good one that deals fairly adequately with a wide range of plants . . . and provides good discussions of artificial light gardening and other garden practices. The colored illustrations are mostly quite good, some very good. Recommended with slight reservations." E. C. Hall

Library J 93:4156 N 1 '68 310w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:68 N 16 '68 90w

ELDRIDGE, H. WENTWORTH, ed. Taming megalopolis; ed. with a pref. and headnotes by H. Wentworth Eldredge. 2v 576:580-1166p ea $9.25; pa v 1 $1.95 Praeger; v2 $2.45 Doubleday

301.3 Sociology, Urban. Metropolitan areas. City planning 67-9839

Among the contributors to this collection are "Christ Tunnard, Alan K. Campbell, Melvin M. Webber, Abel Wolman, and Edward L. Ullmann. There are 60 articles on 23 subjects running the gamut from aesthetic goals to social planning, from new towns to the urbanization of developing nations." (Library J) Some of these articles have previously appeared in such publications as National Civic Review and the Journal of the American Institute of Planners. Chapter bibliographies. Volume indexes.

ELDRIDGE, H. W.—Continued

"[This] assemblage of papers attempts to display—and, to a considerable extent, succeeds in displaying—the state of thought in the field which we used to designate comfortably as 'city planning.' . . . Taking the papers in these volumes as a sample, one might conclude that the major contributions of sociology to thinking about urban policy has been the depiction of the miseries of poverty and the discovery of 'urban villagers' in the path of the bulldozers. . . . It might be worthwhile for sociologists to look at a collection of materials like this one in such a way as to treat it as a collection of data to be processed by the conceptual apparatus of sociology. How adequate is that conceptual apparatus for dealing with megalopolis descriptively and for illuminating the policy problems which arise in that institutional setting? Are not sociologists, in fact, missing some of the action?" L. R. Peattie

Am J Soc 73:639 Mr '68 800w

"Those interested in topics related to the city, urban development and so on, will find at least one of their favorite authors represented in this organized anthology which brings the urbanized world, its care and feedings, into real knowledgeable perspective. . . . [There] may be more than any one reader wishes to know, at any time, but as a reference source and as a historical base it has great value . . . for public, community, and college libraries." H. L. Roth

Library J 92:4017 N 1 '67 120w

"Since sociological theory has been in continuous and increasingly intensive development for the last half century, one could reasonably expect a display of concrete solutions, a challenging paradigm or at least a consensus of views from the galaxy of academic experts gathered within the covers of 'Taming Megalopolis.' So it is frustrating to discover that any decision maker seeking comprehensive guidelines to action in these volumes would be quite disappointed. Indeed, he would feel an intruder in these generally precious pages. . . . The characteristic spirit of the majority of this heterogeneous grab bag of papers [is] what Robert Wood, Under Secretary of [Housing and Urban Development] describes as the basically misdirected central thrust of the academic community (though 'thrust' would seem a misnomer for, say, strategic withdrawal)." Clive Entwistle

N Y Times Bk R p1 D 31 '67 2650w

"Eldredge has tried to gather contributions from the total range of disciplines that bear on urban planning and development. He obviously fished with a wide net in the professional literature and government reports, here and abroad, to gather articles and excerpts on urbanization, esthetics, urban economics, housing, transportation, New Towns, social planning, metropolitan planning, and something called macroplanning. A host of well-known authorities is represented. . . . Some of the material is good (the chapter on New Towns is most fresh and interesting). But the total result is an uneven, undigested, and indigestible potpourri that is long on theory, short on the specific problems of city dwellers, hard on the reader, and unfair to the distinguished contributors. Regrettably, the editor's contributions only add to the struggle." J. R. Lowe

Sat R 51:47 Ap 13 '68 650w

ELDRIDGE, LAURENCE H. Trials of a Philadelphia lawyer; a Philadelphia bulletin book. 257p $5.95 Lippincott

347.9 Law ■ a profession. Trials 68-12483

"Eldredge, with forty years of experience as a Philadelphia lawyer . . . recounts a dozen [cases, some of which] he lost, and [tells] why. . . . 'The Strangest Case of All' named him as defendant, but was, in truth, directed at the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. . . . [The author] introduces his narrative with [an] account of events that led him . . . to the law as a profession. He concludes with a statement of his basic philosophy that it is the caliber of men in government rather than the Constitution itself that primarily determines our rights as citizens." (Publisher's note)

"In chapters intriguingly labeled 'Surprise Witness,' 'The Strangest Case of All,' and 'The Case of the Dog That Shot His Master,' [the author] shows in sharp detail all the intricacies of investigation, preparation, and cross-examination which are demanded of the barrister. In total honesty Eldredge offers a sampling of his legal successes and his grievous errors." Jane Manthorne

Horn Bk 44:340 Je '68 150w

"Unlike standard career books which are more apt to frustrate than satisfy students who want to know the real score on a given profession, Eldredge's personal look at law and the courtroom is a stimulating discussion, especially for those readers interested in the law as a career." Carol Kalamaras

Library J 93:2552 Je 15 '68 100w [YA]

"Variety is the keynote here: libel, medical malpractice, a contested will, and a fascinating cluster of consumer-protecting Better Business Bureau court tests." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:50 Ap 27 '68 50w

ELGIN, KATHLEEN. The Quakers; the religious Society of Friends; written and il. by Kathleen Elgin; with a foreword by Richmond P. Miller. 96p $3.95 McKay

289.6 Friends, Society of—Juvenile literature 68-17511

"The history of the sect and its contributions to America and to the world. A question and answer section . . . [explains] the beliefs of the Friends. The lives of some famous Quakers are detailed, including Levi Coffin, George Fox and William Penn, and a list of other well-known Quakers is included. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades six to eight." (Library J)

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:295 N 22 '68 10w

"This first book of a new series presents a clear, interesting and accurate account of the Quakers, [and] their religious position. . . . With handsome illustrations, this . . . is a good beginning to what promises to be a useful series for readers at this age level." Phyllis Shumberger

Library J 93:3979 O 15 '68 90w

"In this book, which launches the Freedom to Worship series, the author attacks her subject in piecemeal fashion. . . . Despite this format, and the frequent use of awkward grammatical constructions, the text conveys a strong sense of how Quakers have followed their convictions in the face of great opposition. Quaker rebels of the 17th and 18th centuries have relevance for young rebels of today." Polly Longworth

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p42 N 3 '68 160w

"Especially useful in the study of comparative religion is the section that describes the Quaker creed, the marriage ceremony, the Meeting, and the position of Friends on such subjects as divorce, oath-taking, war, et cetera." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:68 N 9 '68 80w

ELIOT, ALEXANDER. Creatures of Arcadia, and creatures of a day; il. by Eugene Berman. 157p $6.50 Bobbs

292.2 Mythology, Greek 67-25174

The author "tries to explain the relevance of myths for the modern age and, to illustrate his point, retells some 13 pre-Christian animal myths ranging from the tribulations of Io and the conquests of Perseus to the fabulous accounts of the deaths of Aeschylus and Cleopatra." (Library J)

"[Eliot's] medium is a colloquial-poetic manner, a mingling of high and low. This is a very difficult style, for the high must not fall into bathos, and the low must keep the harmonies of poetry. Does he succeed in his gallant enterprise? Not, I fear, for this reader. The magic myths should cast a spell; but the mingling of styles alternately allures and rebuffs, makes magic only to destroy it. The artifice shows through. . . . The book is illustrated with a dozen drawings by Eugene Berman. They are well done, of course, but they suffer from the need to compress immensity to a page. They seem to me to diminish instead of expand; they are less than their subject." Morris Bishop

Book World p40 D 3 '67 700w

"[Eliot] makes no attempt to explain the messages inherent in the stories he recounts; rather he recreates them poetically in the modern idiom, wisely preserving that ambiguity of meaning and significance from which myth derives so much of its strength. What results is a delightful excursion into a dream-world. . . . For the general reader who has the time and inclination to dream." W. J. Roscelli

Library J 92:4503 D 15 '67 250w

ELLENTUCK, SHAN. A sunflower as big as the sun. unp col il $3.95; lib bdg $4.70 Double-day

68-11200

"Uncle Vanya plants a seed and boasts about how fast it grows—and so it does. He brags that it is as high as his knee—and so it is. Every time he carries on, the flower grows. It blots out the sun, and the townspeople beg Uncle Vanya to stop lest the world come to an end. When he finally tells the truth, the sun shines, the flowers revive, and the people celebrate with a party to end all parties. . . . Ages five to eight." (Sat R)

"This is an excellently told and substantial tale set in an old Russian village. It is the story of Vanya, the most human and lovable boaster whom this reviewer has ever encountered between the pages of a book. . . . The pictures have a familiar Russian peasant credibility." Elinore Standard

Book World p4 (children's issue) My 5 '68 80w

Reviewed by K. G. Burt

Christian Science Monitor pB2 My 2 '68 90w

Horn Bk 44:315 Je '68 90w

"This humorous fantasy fails, because both successful humor and good fantasy must be rooted in shrewdly observed human behavior, and children, having experienced the uncomfortable consequences of boasting, will recognize the sham quality of this story's make-believe. The pictures are color-washed black-and-white drawings of unattractive country bumpkins posed against a vaguely Slavic background." Elva Harmon

Library J 93:1783 Ap 15 '68 90w

Reviewed by M. F. O'Connell

N Y Times Bk R p22 Jl 21 '68 140w

"Vital, colorful pictures splash across the pages of this tall-tale picture book. . . . The casual humor and the conversational style make the story a joy to read aloud." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:36 My 11 '68 90w

ELLER, VERNARD. Kierkegaard and radical discipleship; a new perspective. 445p $12.50 Princeton univ. press

230.0924 Kierkegaard, Søren Aabye. Church of the Brethren 67-21021

"Professor Eller argues that Kierkegaard was first and foremost a religious thinker, and that Kierkegaard himself felt his works could be best understood if they were read with this in mind. In order to show that Kierkegaard's religious thought is essentially that of classic Protestant sectarianism, Mr. Eller has selected a typical sect—the Brethren—against which to measure Kierkegaard. . . . [He] establishes parallels between Kierkegaard's thought and Protestant sectarianism in general [and] then moves on to more detailed analysis of specific points by comparing Kierkegaard's works with the writings of the eighteenth-century Brethren." (Publisher's note) Index of names. Index of subjects. Index of the works of Kierkegaard as quoted and/or cited herein.

Choice 5:637 Jl '68 150w

"This volume is first of all an exposition of Brethren thought. Eller uses the intellectual schemata provided by Kierkegaard's theology (especially as set forth in Point of View) as a foil for his presentation of the beliefs of his church. He carries out the task in masterly fashion. . . . Anyone who wants to find out how a Brethren survives intellectually in our post-Christian era should read his book. It is Eller's contention that . . . those interpreters of Kierkegaard (e.g., William Barrett, L. Harold De Wolf, William Earle, James M. Edie, John Wild) who attempt to get at him from a philosophical, psychological, social or aesthetic perspective have missed the point entirely. . . . I think Eller is correct. But I consider his conception of the proper approach to Kierkegaard falsely polarized, and his findings as to the essence of Kierkegaard's thought too simplistic and too narrow. . . . Even so, Eller's book is an excellent account of Brethren theology in relation to Kierkegaard and other non-Brethren theologians." W. A. Johnson

Christian Century 85:760 Je 5 '68 440w

"[An] associate professor of religion, La Verne College, California, has written the first significant study in English of the relation of Kierkegaard to the pietist and sectarian movements. His subject is the Dunker movement.

It is possible to bring Kierkegaard and the Dunkers together since Mr. Eller's object is to compare the meaning of discipleship and the nature and function of theology. The book is an intensely personal document. . . . There is a good deal of information also about the Brethren in the book which will make it useful to church historians because all too little has been published about this significant sect. The interpretation of Kierkegaard, though not always heralding a new day in Kierkegaard studies, is solid and well founded. Unfortunately, Mr. Eller has not used most of the material published in Europe on the relation of Kierkegaard to pietism. [The book] is recommended for libraries professing a serious interest in religion and/or philosophy subjects." R. L. Perkins

Library J 93:2246 Je 1 '68 180w

ELLIN, STANLEY. The Valentine estate. 274p $5.95 Random house

68-28541

Elizabeth Jones, "a tall, stoop-shouldered, bespectacled girl learns that she will inherit the million-dollar estate of a one-time family acquaintance if she can produce a husband by a certain date, and, having no beaux, she offers [Chris Monte] a young, penniless, has-been tennis star . . . fifty thousand dollars for his hand in marriage. His acceptance is catalytic: she throws off her glasses and straightens up and becomes beautiful, and he finds himself surrounded by homicidal enemies." (New Yorker)

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:3024 S 1 '68 110w

Reviewed by A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p60 O 20 '68 110w

"[The] action is very tricky, utterly preposterous, and highly diverting."

New Yorker 44:240 N 8 '68 100w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:58 N 30 '68 40w

"Readers pretty soon guess who is in it for what, but Chris does not. Pursued and attacked by this lot and that, he eventually makes his way to London and truth: sufficiently exciting but somewhat contrived."

TLS p1086 S 26 '68 60w

ELLINGSON, CARETH. The shadow children; a book about children's learning disorders 254p $6.50 Topaz bks.

371.9 Exceptional children

67-23849

This is a book about children with "subtle learning disorders. They are not blessed with the sunlight of normal perception; nor are they cursed with the total darkness of hopeless abnormality. They stand in the shadows between light and dark. They are educationally gray—the shadow children. . . . [The author] defines the problems; . . . tells of the children's subtle learning disorders and gives identifiable patterns; discusses general testing methods used today; and [provides a] cross-reference directory of the nation's testing and teaching clinics, and the specialized schools and centers available to the shadow children." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography.

"Contains rather brief descriptions of dyslexia and minimal brain dysfunction with briefer comments on testing and teaching children so affected. . . . The major portion of the book is composed of a comprehensive directory of facilities available in the U.S. . . . Although scientifically naive, this publication should be of some value to parents of 'shadow children.' Serious students might better spend their time reviewing the contributions of E. A. Doll, S. D. Clements, Leon Eisenberg, W. M. Cruickshank, Samuel Kirk, Marianne Frostig, and A. A. Strauss."

Choice 5:386 My '68 110w

"[This] represents a translation for parents and teachers of the technical professional literature that already exists. It is a primer for the virtually uninformed, describing in layman's language the nature of the problems of children with learning disabilities, and the educational techniques which will help them adapt to the expectations of modern society. . . . Parents are indeed fortunate that Mrs. Ellingson has written this book for them. She spells out, from the professional literature, the characteristics of dyslexia, and of the minimal brain dysfunction syndrome. She advises parents how to go about finding the most competent professional advice . . . she lists and describes the most effective tests and their purposes; and she discusses the costs involved. . . . Most important, she has genuine empathy for the dilemma of parents seeking help for their child." E. W. Colvin

ELLINGSON, CARETH—Continued

Sat R 50:72 D 16 '67 800w

ELLIOTT, BRENDAN JOHN. Hitler and Germany; foreword by William J. Jacobs. 134p 11 maps $4.50 McGraw

943.086 Hitler, Adolf—Juvenile literature. Germany—Politics and government—1933-1945—Juvenile literature. World War, 1939-1945—Germany—Juvenile literature 68-17181

The author tells of the life of Adolf Hitler, of twentieth century "Germany and her people—those who fought against Hitler and those who aided him in his rise to power." (Publisher's note) Chronology Bibliography. Index. "Grade six and up." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 28:112 Je 1 '68 90w

"The author has selected a subject about which there are already several books for teen-agers, besides the enormous amount of adult material which is read by high school students. This treatment adds nothing new and lacks the vividness and power of William Shirer's The Rise and Fall of Adolf Hitler and Louis Snyder's Hitler and Nazism [BRD 1961], both of which were written for junior high school. In Elliott's book, Hitler does not come through either as a man or as the prime moving force in Nazism." Leora Oglesby

Library J 93:2546 Je 15 '68 90w

"A terrible parable of the efficacy of brutality against decency. . . . The relative failure of this conscientious book seems to derive from the author's inability to grasp so much evil." David Cort

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p26 My 5 '68 80w

ELLIOTT, GEORGE P. An hour of last things, and other stories. 292p $5.95 Harper 68-16310

Fifteen short stories which have previously appeared in such publications as Epoch, The Hudson Review and Harper's Magazine. The title story "is about Betty Hollander, widowed by an automobile accident and so freed into a new life, all her own; fairly young, quite well off, she can have, or do, almost anything she wants." (N Y Times Bk R) "In 'Sandra' the narrator needs a housekeeper but is persuaded to buy a sturdy slave instead. . . . There follows a weirdly logical series of relationships, including manumission, cohabitation, morganatic marriage, and finally restoration of slavery with harsh corporal punishment. . . . 'In a Hole' presents the victim of an urban cataclysm trapped in a deep fissure. His only hope is to find the right words to summon help, but there seem to be no other survivors around, and every call dislodges stones from above that endanger his life and make rescue decreasingly likely." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Sr. M. Marguerite

Best Sell 28:133 Je 15 '68 750w

Choice 5:1306 D '68 150w

Reviewed by L. W. Griffin

Library J 93:2019 My 15 '68 170w

"[In this collection the author shows] an increasing predilection for fable and 'message,' compared with his widely praised first collection Among the Dangs [BRD 1961]. Fortunately, his talent for giving a story its head puts a skin on almost all he says, so that the old bones implied by the formidably eschatological title of this new book are for the most part decently covered. . . . Elliott is a paleface. Though certainly not a mandarin writer, neither is he a black humorist. . . . His strength is his refusal to be modish, his tenacity in following his line, the hard moral core, the unapologetic message of his fictions. An Hour of Last Things refuses to capitalize on the success of its predecessor, and is not so distinguished a collection. But there's a stubborn integrity that can be seen also in Elliott's control, his complex clarity." Stanley Poss

Nation 207:153 Ag 26 '68 1300w

Reviewed by Jack Richardson

N Y Rev of Books 11:13 Ag 1 '68 550w

"Elliott is a moralist, if ■ questioning one, and some of his stories have an air of being truths which he has seized on and saved from the chaos surrounding us. . . . [He] is not a moralist simply because he sees evil and wants to preserve the world from it. He also sees joy. If he holds up to our horror what lack of love can do, it is because he understands love and fulfillment. There are stories here which do more than assert this, which show us how love and joy can delight and serve human beings. In our perilous state, we may still find the paths that lead between tabus and duties to festal communion; as a little boy experiences a sacred moment in 'The Miracle Play.'" Elizabeth Janeway

N Y Times Bk R p4 Je 30 '68 1000w

"[Elliott] is an experimenter with an itchy imagination. . . . His mind ventures far into wild, exotic regions to find and shape its literary materials, and he knows how to bring back good stories to those waiting safely on the shore. This is the Age of Exploration: Tomaso Landolfi's straightfaced surrealism, Jorge Borges's never-never lands and fake library references. . . . Donald Barthelme's elocutionary absurdities. Elliott seems at home with the best of them. . . . and now and then he even cuts his risks and speaks clearly, so that we don't have to strain to get the message. But . . . he sometimes labors too hard and foists on his readers a fatigue and boredom that discourteously requite their attention. . . . [Still] there is much good in Elliott's collection. Many of the thirteen tales merit close rereading and, in fact, taking to heart. S. I. Bellman

Sat R 51:27 J1 6 '68 950w

ELLIOTT, GEORGE P., ed. New and selected poems. See Scott, W. T.

ELLIOTT, JOHN R., ed. The prince of poets: essays on Edmund Spenser; ed. by John R. Elliott Jr. 332p $8: pa $2.45 N.Y. univ. press 821 Spenser, Edmund 68-16827

"This volume includes essays written by poets and writers from Gabriel Harvey to Virginia Woolf, and scholars and critics from William Hazlitt to Richard Hurd and Robert Ellrodt. Mr. Elliott has placed the essays under five headings: 'The Poets' Poet,' 'The Critics' Poet,' 'The Scholars' Poet,' 'The Minor Poems,' and 'The Faerie Queene.'" (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Some of the earlier pieces (poetic tributes by contemporaries) are interesting but seem valueless to reprint. However, the selections would provide the young Spenser student with an introduction to trends in Spenserian criticism and allow for the development of a certain perspective. The essays include materials on . . . The Shepherds Calendar, and the minor poems. Elliott's introduction . . . is especially good in its description of the rationale behind the selection and the arrangement of the materials."

Choice 5:950 O '68 170w

"Because it contains many important essays on Spenser's poetry, a wide spectrum of responses to Spenser's poetry, and much material that is not readily accessible to beginning students, this anthology will be welcome in many libraries. Because it is available in a less expensive paperback edition, it will find a place in the personal collections of many students of literature." Walter Waring

Library J 93:1485 Ap 1 '68 140w

ELLIS, AMABEL WILLIAMS. See Williams-Ellis, A.

ELLIS, FRANK H., ed. A discourse of the contests and dissensions between the nobles and the commons in Athens and Rome. See Swift, J.

ELLIS, HAMILTON. The pictorial encyclopedia of railways. 591p $10 Crown

625.1 Railroads

67-26797

"A sampler of pictures chosen to show as much about railroads in as many countries as possible. Some attention is given to the railways of the United States, but primary emphasis is on British and European railways.

Illustrations, mostly photographs, are grouped under broad subject headings like buildings, signals and telegraphs, mountain railways, and so forth. About 40 per cent of the book is devoted to 20th-Century steam locomotives, Victorian steam, and carriage design." (Library J)

"Unhappily, neither the 800 interesting illustrations nor the 30,000 words of text—nearly all in captions—can make this handsome book into an encyclopedia. . . . The quality of the illustrations is good and captions are generally well written by a knowledgeable and enthusiastic British authority. . . . The book is attractive and interesting. . . . [but] one might question whether libraries will need a work that lacks the organization and content to be anything other than a browsing book for the layman while probably being too general, too unsystematic, and too European in its emphasis for most American railfans." W. C. Robinson

Library J 93:2844 Ag '68 180w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:68 N 16 '68 60w

"There is a great temptation to call this Hamilton Ellis's Bumper Book of Railways for that, in effect is what it is. . . . [There are] more than 800 illustrations, some in colour, for example Turner's 'Rain, Steam, Speed', two Monets and one or two Hamilton Ellis 'primitives'. The scope is very large and embraces every conceivable aspect of railways past and present from level-crossings to lavatories. . . . Anyone who knows Ellis's work will realize that his pen is a match for any picture."

TLS p604 Je 6 '68 160w

ELLIS, HARRY B. Ideals and ideologies: communism, socialism, and capitalism. 256p il $4.95; lib bdg $4.86 World pub.

320.5 Communism—Juvenile literature. Socialism—Juvenile literature. Capitalism—Juvenile literature 68-14697

A "comparison of the three chief economic systems operating in the world today. Concentrating on the United States and Europe, Mr. Ellis outlines the history of these systems but emphasizes how they operate today, discussing the similarities among certain facets of their practical application. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades eight to eleven." (Library J)

"[A] superior book in many respects; it is up to date and it accurately depicts current relationships and events. The author's acquaintance with citizens and officials of the various countries discussed has enabled him to invest his text with a sense of immediacy. . . . Although difficult political and economic concepts are included, the writing style is so clear and the book so well organized that the subject matter should be easily comprehended by most teen-agers." Bernice Levine

Library J 93:1318 Mr 15 '68 150w [YA]

"The first of the many merits of this book is that the author pays his young readers the compliment of taking them seriously. . . . What might seem a heavy dose of history and economic theory is, however, brightened and clarified by Mr. Ellis's use of concrete examples, his fund of personal experiences and his journalistic preference for facts over theory. . . . The author's conclusion—that 'these three politico-economic philosophies all appear to be drawing closer together, in practice at least, if not in theory'—is not so much argued as simply demonstrated. The demonstration is remarkable for its liveliness and wealth of information and so balanced that only the most rigid rightist or leftist could find fault." Richard Horchler

N Y Times Bk R p26 Je 30 '68 260w

ELLIS, JOHN TRACY. Essays in seminary education. 278p $5.95 Fides (U S)

207 Catholic Church in the U.S. Theology—Study and teaching 67-24811

"More than one-half of the book is devoted to the history of seminary education from the apostolic age to the 1960's. The author feels that criticism and reform of seminary education, an institution subject to 'more searching scrutiny and more widespread criticism' than any other today, must proceed with the history of the institution in mind. The concluding chapters assess the seminary today from the viewpoint of academic standing and intellectual training as well as role training." (Critic) Index.

"Monsignor Ellis brings to [this subject] what he usually brings to important discussions: a useful historical perspective and a wealth of intriguing historical details."

Commonweal 88:274 My 17 '68 50w

Critic 26:79 Je '68 70w

ELLIS, MADELEINE B. Rousseau's Venetian story; an essay upon art and truth in Les confessions. 199p $6 Johns Hopkins press

848 Rousseau, Jean Jacques 66-16043

Miss Ellis's aim is to show that this "is a study of literary methods that evolved through a lifetime of discipline and were perfected in the effective handling of great scenes in Les Confessions. In this way it seeks to shed light upon the extraordinary prestige of the memoirs as a piece of literature." (J Aesthetics) Bibliography.

"Miss Ellis' study is devoted to the proposition that Rousseau was wholeheartedly a truth-teller. In the Venetian episode, as throughout the Confessions, he was not only truthful in regard to facts (a disputable assertion, to say the least), but when he modified them it was to attain greater psychological, 'spiritual,' and aesthetic truth. There is some exploration of the rhetorical devices used by Rousseau, and a re-examination of documents and archives. This work is apologetic, but interesting, well written, and contains valuable insights. One cannot doubt the conclusion: that Rousseau was a great artist, a great psychologist, and that he has given a truthful portrait of his own soul." L. G. Crocker

Am Hist R 72:992 Ap '67 200w

"[The author] has accomplished [her purpose]. The work is thorough, well researched, competent, informed and informative, and in the best tradition of present-day literary scholarship in the United States and Canada. The result may be described as a valuable addition to further knowledge and understanding of the VIIIth Book of the Confessions. . . . [However] I wonder whether the author did not read certain parts of Book VII as if it were present-day literature." R. G. Saisselin

J Aesthetics 26:416 spring '68 800w

"[Professor Ellis] prefers to consider [Rousseau] as a conscious artist, whose intention it was to provide not a complete, factual record of his doings but an accurate rendering of his psychological being at the time of the events recorded. . . . [She] brings out a few new facts concerning Rousseau's biography. . . . Her method also allows her to reinterpret in a significant way certain episodes of the Confessions. . . . Most important, the study . . . demonstrates how a reading of the Confessions in the light of artistic transformation of reality can bring new meaning to the text and a new delight to the reader discovering a master work of literature. There almost certainly will be some controversy surrounding Professor Ellis's method and some of her conclusions. . . . The important thing is that the questions raised by [her] book deal with problems of aesthetics and aesthetic evaluation. That, itself, is a measure of its significance." J. R. Monty

Mod Philol 65:398 My '68 950w

ELLISON, HARLAN. Love ain't nothing but sex misspelled; twenty-two stories. 332p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

68-14286

A collection of short stories the subjects of which "range from abortions in Tijuana to neo-Nazism in Detroit." (Library J) Most of these stories appeared previously in such magazines as Knight and Rogue.

Reviewed by J. J. Murray

Best Sell 28:141 Jl 1 '68 900w

"One very long story, 'The Resurgence of Miss Ankle-strap Wedgie,' concerned with an aging movie star's comeback, and 'O Ye of Little Faith' appear for the first time in print. . . . A few of the better ones are of the fantastic fiction variety. Tailored for the male reader who wants action, sex, and surprises, this collection may not be a necessary purchase but it would be read by patrons some librarians are trying to reach." R. H. Donahugh

Library J 93:1652 Ap 15 '68 100w

ELLISON, HARLAN—Continued

"If you don't like his book of racy short stories, Ellison challenges on its jacket 'go find some cornball who'll tell you how nice everything is.' . . . [This book] only pretends tough-mindedness: it reeks with fear. . . . [In the author's] version of the human condition, abortions inevitably end in hemorrhage and death; bully writers prove themselves in all-night drinking bouts with callow Yale men; a bitch-goddess's soul takes up residence in a slot machine; [and] an aspiring young author's favorite girl turns out to be a Lesbian voyeur. . . . Only one of the 22 stories in [the collection] avoids Grand Guignol. 'The Resurgence of Miss Ankle-Strap Wedgie' appears to be an attempt at a novel about Hollywood. Its tone breaks halfway through, but for part of its length we are reading competent writing about authentic people. . . . Ellison usually doesn't describe; he flails. He sets up his characters with minimal sympathy and then batters them down at each story's end." Richard Rhodes

N Y Times Bk R p36 Je 30 '68 410w

Reviewed by Robert Scholes
Sat R 51:32 J1 13 '68 600w

ELLMANN, MARY. Thinking about women.
240p $4.95 Harcourt

809.9 Women in literature and art. Sex.
Characters and characteristics in literature 67-20309

"In this study of stereotyped attitudes about women in literature. [the author, a literary critic] also examines conventional thinking about women more generally. . . . Her literary range is . . . from Jane Austen to Norman Mailer and Anthony Burgess." (Library J) Index.

"[Mrs. Ellmann] establishes no platform and advances no program but her witty, intelligent presentation should cause all readers to reexamine their own attitudes toward women. Mrs. Ellmann carefully scrutinizes reviewers and literary heroines; her trenchant comments reveal much about both. Her dissection is expert and scalpel-sharp; her literary range is wide. . . . Large public libraries should definitely consider acquiring this book." Elizabeth Nelson
Library J 93:3562 O 1 '68 100w

"[The author] has read widely, with the omnivorousness of a professor of English, the persistence of a scholar, and the cumulative instincts of a researcher. . . . In the first two sections of [the book] Mrs. Ellmann is at her wittiest. [The] third section 'Feminine Stereotypes,' is inevitably less funny, though no less acute. . . . [The last two sections] are more strictly literary. The first of these is an analysis of the tones of 'authority' (masculine) and 'sensitivity' (feminine) . . . [and] seems to me remarkably useful to students of style and linguistics. 'Responses,' the last section, studies, almost entirely through literary examples, the possible forms reaction to male-female polarization may take. Mrs. Ellmann's pointed comments and interesting examples are many; yet in the end, almost as though she had tired of the subject, she simply stops. There is no conclusion. Perhaps none is possible." C. G. Heilbrun
N Y Times Bk R p4 N 17 '68 1550w

ELLMANN, RICHARD. Eminent domain:
Yeats among Wilde, Joyce, Pound, Eliot and Auden. 159p $4.95 Oxford
821 Yeats, William Butler 67-25458

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by W. K. Rose
Am Lit 40:415 N '68 450w
Choice 5:774 S '68 140w

Reviewed by Louise Bogan
New Yorker 43:134 Mr 30 '68 220w
TLS p787 J1 25 '68 900w

Reviewed by Robert Langbaum
Va Q R 44:333 spring '68 1600w

ELLUL, JACQUES. A critique of the new commonplaces; tr. from the French by Helen Weaver. 303p $6.95 Knopf

398 Proverbs. Civilization, Modern 68-12681

The author's "stated purpose [is] the exposure and analysis of 20th-Century man's favorite intellectual clichés, shibboleths, and mindless formulas. . . . [He considers] more than 30 'commonplaces' such as technological progress is historically inevitable, man is really master of the machine, human beings can be quantified, political power rests with the people, and national self-determination is possible." (Library J)

"Ellul writes here in a curiously open style, as with humorous Gallic irony he axes the axioms. . . . [He] will doubtless make some new enemies with this entertaining book, which is anything but heavy-think. Counter to the gee-whiz technocrat prophesying cybernized utopias, Ellul toughly questions the blithe assumptions of sci-fi-minded technological forecasters who see panaceas in visionary test-tubes. . . . Ellul's kind of Gestalt analysis and interrelated thinking is impossible to characterize in snippets, but his admirable common sense and erudition bring him into tenuous connection with thinkers such as Eric Hoffer and Jacques Maritain. And few social commentators manage to inject as much raw humanity into a treatise on clinical issues as Ellul does. His place in the top ten is richly deserved." S. K. Oberbeck
Book World p3 Je 9 '68 650w

Reviewed by E. L. Snodgrass
Christian Century 85:1436 N 13 '68 600w

"How well Professor Ellul of the University of Bordeaux achieves his purpose depends largely on whether or not one accepts his particular world view, in which he postulates that an all-embracing, totalitarian technology has subsumed and destroyed society's old ideological values. . . . Throughout the discussion, leading French intellectuals, mainly Sartre and his followers, are attacked for either their failure to comprehend the new commonplaces or their hypocrisy in ignoring them. Frequently, Mr. Ellul's tone is strident and defensive. Originally published in France in 1966, this is his fourth book to appear in English translation, and libraries which bought The Technological Society [BRD 1964 and 1965] should consider this one." K. F. Kister
Library J 93:1154 Mr 15 '68 200w

"The tone throughout Ellul's mortuary of decapitated platitudes is vitriolic and petulant; and the analytic method is thunderingly dogmatic, pedantically assertive, evading most real complications. In brief essays, he can do no more than clear the air where it's smoggiest, and unsettle his reader where he's smuggest, leaving him in routed confusion to pick up the pieces. Ellul stands in great company on his wrecking mission—in the company of such nineteenth-century predecessors in evisceration as Léon Bloy . . . and Gustave Flaubert . . . though he is sometimes leadenly more sententious and heavy-handed, less ironic and witty, and proportionately less definitive in his work of demolition." Saul Maloff

Newsweek 71:102B My 13 '68 550w

ELSNER, HENRY. The technocrats; prophets of automation [by] Henry Elsner, Jr. 252p pl $7 Syracuse univ. press

301.2 Technocracy 67-14522

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Maurice Pinard
Am Soc R 33:332 Ap '68 550w
Choice 5:228 Ap '68 200w
J Pol Econ 75:900 D '67 270w

ELSON, ROBERT T. Time inc.; the intimate history of a publishing enterprise, 1923-1941; ed. by Duncan Norton-Taylor. 500p il $10 Atheneum pubs.

071 Time, incorporated 68-16868

Based on the corporate records of Time Inc., the authors describe how Briton Hadden and Henry Luce founded Time magazine. They discuss the evolution of the Time-style and some Time-writers including Dwight MacDonald and Archibald MacLeish. The origin and growth of Life and other sister-publications and other publishing and broadcasting operations are also related. Index. A second volume will cover the period from World War II to the present.

Reviewed by G. M. Costello
America 120:23 Ja 4 '69 750w

"[This is] written in the readable, colorless clichés that pass for good journalism. It's guaranteed not to offend anybody except the disgruntled few who know where some of the suppressed facts are buried. . . . The book tries to palm itself off as an 'intimate history,' but of course it's no such thing. It's the success story of 'a Great Publishing Enterprise' as told by itself. . . . The only people in the story who don't lie dead on the page are Hadden and Luce; they're allowed to talk enough to make caricatures of themselves, though not believable human beings. . . . When I think of the amount of work that must have gone into this book, I feel faint. Nevertheless, while it's not a bad book as books go nowadays, it is not a good book either. It will partly satisfy some readers' curiosity. It had better not reassure them, however—unless they can really believe that business success is the same thing as salvation." T. S. Matthews

Atlantic 222:126 D '68 1900w

Reviewed by Penn Kimball
Book World p6 O 27 '68 800w

Reviewed by David Cort
Commonweal 89:412 D 20 '68 1150w

"This first volume in the official history of the Luce organization, written by a Time staffer of 25 years, is absorbing reading and, like any Luce publication, highly convincing at the time of reading. . . . Mr. Elson's writing is uncritical and humorless, but he has given us a major source of information on the Time publications. Recommended for all academic and large public libraries." Ervin Eatenson

Library J 93:3779 O 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by Alex Campbell
New Repub 159:37 N 30 '68 800w

Reviewed by John Brooks
N Y Times Bk R p8 N 24 '68 1400w

"[This] is remarkable in its candor. Here is an official history that steps into personality disputes and reports criticism of the boss above a whisper. Naturally, in the main, it is not unflattering. . . . With the resources of company files, research facilities (271 Time employees were interviewed), and editorial expertise, Mr. Elson has set forth a highly detailed but always readable history of the company from the first issue of Time on March 3, 1923, to Pearl Harbor. . . . The author achieves a nice balance of material: technical publishing information, office politics and personalities, journalistic theorizing, and world events. . . . For the most savage criticism of Time one will have to look elsewhere. . . . Probably more than most, however, this official history accommodates self-criticism. . . . [The record] is a fascinating one and should be required study henceforth for everyone in the profession." S. W. Little

Sat R 51:90 N 9 '68 500w

ELTING, MARY. The mysterious grain, by Mary Elting and Michael Folsom; il. by Frank Cieciorka. 118p $4.50 Evans, M.&Co. 633 Corn—Juvenile literature 67-10832

"Included in the historical coverage are stories of the botanists and researchers, starting with Darwin, who searched and experimented and, finally, with ancient corn cobs from caves in Mexico, were able to reconstruct the evolutionary development of the modern cultivated grain. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades five to nine." (Library J)

"[An] absorbing story of the efforts made to find the geographical areas which first supported what we call corn in America—the Europeans mostly call it maize or Indian corn—one of the most basic staple foods since prehistoric days. Where it came from originally was a mystery until 1962. It is dependent on man for survival and it must, therefore, have been cultivated by an agricultural people. The book follows the work of Paul Mangelsdorf, research botanist, and of Richard MacNeish, an archeologist, who together traced it to Mexico. The story has the fascination of suspense and the detective story."

Best Sell 27:222 S 1 '67 130w

"Careful research and clear writing result in an excellent and unique book." Lois Ewald
Library J 93:303 Ja 15 '68 80w

"This book, written for readers in junior high school and up, tells how men came lately to understand how corn arose. It is a story of conjecture, of analogy, of plant breeding, of old pottery and much patient digging. It is full of argument and debate; there were many false starts. . . . The drawings are lifelike and carry much of the persuasion of the book." Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 217:146 D '67 170w

ELTON, G. R. The practice of history. 178p $3.50 Crowell

907 Historiography 67-29612

"The book is divided into four chapters. The first discusses what history is about, the other three discuss research, writing, teaching." (Economist)

"A book of little value to the undergraduate. . . . [Elton's] comments are directed to the established scholar rather than to the beginner or apprentice. His insistence that history is . . . a subject worthy of study for its own sake, by which a reasonably true reconstruction of the past may be achieved is both valuable and valid. But surely these points could be made with fewer inside jokes obscure even for the practicing historian and with no unfair jabs at colleagues. Elton's preference for narrative writing is as clear as is his disdain for social history, while his examples are drawn almost exclusively from his own experience."

Choice 5:845 S '68 180w

"The book as a whole seems to have been written in a hurry, without sufficient prior thought about its aim and intended audience. Professor Elton . . . appears to think, when writing about history as distinct from writing history, that assertion is equivalent to truth. This is particularly so whenever he leaves concrete issues like syllabuses, where he makes good sense, for theory. The arguments at this level range from the uninspired . . . to the shrilly assertive. . . . [The book] leaves the impression that Professor Elton, who clearly enjoyed airing his prejudices, subscribes to the fundamentalist belief that the historian should get on with his job, without reflecting too much on what he is doing."

Economist 225:1061 D 9 '67 400w

"[The author] defends the tradition of an autonomous history which has recently come under attack from a new generation of historians impatient with that tradition. While this book is unlikely to engage the general reader, it is of definite value to the teacher and student of history in that it offers a partisan yet fair insight into a debate now fully under way in Britain, but which has only begun in this country." W. L. Hogeboom

Library J 93:2866 Ag '68 130w

EMANUEL, JAMES A. Langston Hughes. 192p $3.95 Twayne

818 Hughes, Langston 67-24764

A study of the late Negro writer's work. Bibliography.

"Surprisingly, despite his importance, this is the first full length study of Hughes—and even here, Mr. Emanuel cannot do full justice to Hughes's enormous output of plays, poems, fiction, journalism and translations. Moreover, Mr. Emanuel never fully develops Hughes's significance in Negro letters and culture. But these defects are probably as much a result of the inherent difficulties in evaluating Hughes's work as they are of [the book's] prescribed limitations of space. . . . For Hughes's writing lies somewhere between folk material and 'literature' and the usual critical tools are not always applicable. Nonetheless, . . . Mr. Emanuel has done a workmanlike job. . . . A chronology and useful bibliographies are appended." Edward Margolies

Library J 92:2778 Ag '67 150w

"Of the twenty poems judged to be Hughes's best in [this] useful critical study . . . in which readers will find most of their favorites—all but six were written in the twenties. One could trace developments in Hughes's poetry—his movement from blues to bop rhythms, for example—but not artistic growth. . . . Mr. Emanuel's thematic organization and cramped format do not permit him to trace this process in detail. But he does examine closely technique as well as theme in a number of representative poems and stories under such categories as 'The Cult of the Negro' and 'The Christ and the Killers.' Occasionally one may feel that a particular Hughes piece is too slight to bear the weight of Mr. Emanuel's analysis, but generally his commentary is perceptive and sympathetic. . . . A full-scale critical biography of Hughes is still needed. Emanuel's commentary . . . will make the task easier." Kenneth Kinnamon

Nation 205:599 D 4 '67 300w

EMBERLEY, BARBARA. Drummer Hoff. See Drummer Hoff

EMBERLEY, ED. Green says go. 32p il $3.95 Little

535.6 Color—Juvenile literature 68-21165

The author, who won the 1967 Caldecott Award for Drummer Hoff. (BRD 1968) "first shows primary, secondary and complementary colors and then demonstrates how the addition of black or white can darken or lighten colors. The second part of the book plays with some of the color-associated terms in common use . . . and points out various ways in which color is used for communication. . . . Ages five to eight." (Sat R)

Christian Science Monitor pB4 N 7 '68 100w

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:294 N 22 '68 10w

Horn Bk 44:681 D '68 120w

"This picture book attempts to say about colors what the author's The Wing on a Flea [BRD 1961] said about shapes, but it is not nearly so successful. It is illustrated with poorly reproduced colors . . . that combine unattractively with heavy, curlicued silhouettes. The last few pages, which attempt to define and show how colors invoke various moods and characteristics (yellow means cowardice, green means envy) . . . are offered with no textual discussion. Elsewhere, the text is also too cursory to be of any value. . . . Mr. Emberley's previous successes were characterized by more care in conception and execution than is this unfortunate jumble." Marjorie Lewis

Library J 93:4394 N 15 '68 130w

"A bright, gay, and useful book." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:46 N 9 '68 100w

EMBLETON, CLIFFORD, jt. auth. Africa: a new geographical survey. See Mountjoy, A. B.

EMBREE, AINSLIE T., ed. The Hindu tradition. 363p $2.45 Modern lib.

294.5 Hinduism 66-13011

This book "is an exploration of the essential meaning of the Hindu tradition. Selections from religious, literary and philosophic works are preceded by introductory material that summarizes historical developments and cultural movements. . . . The selections range in time from the Rig Veda, composed around 1000 B.C. to the writings of Radhakrishnan, the President of India." (Publisher's note) Bibliography, Index.

"A reliable anthology. . . . Embree draws many of his selections from a more extensive anthology, Sources of Indian Tradition, edited by [W. T.] DeBary [BRD 1960] whose anthology is by far the most comprehensive in the field. Embree's, however, centers on the religious and political aspects of Indian culture to the exclusion of other areas, and is more suitable for a course dealing specifically with the religious issues. . . . Because of the impact of Buddhism, Jainism, and Islam upon Indian history and culture, DeBary's anthology contains lengthy sections on these religions, while Embree reduces each to a single selection."

Choice 3:1027 Ja '67 200w

"As a collection [the texts] have little to recommend them in preference to larger and more complete collections. Moreover, some of the scholarly assumptions which might be used to justify the selection of materials are in doubt. To present such a collection without indicating the historical and sociological questioning which is currently taking place is to mislead both the general public and the beginning student, who are the most probable readers of the Modern Library publication." B. M. Morrison

Pacific Affairs 40:204 spring-summer '67 120w

EMERSON, RUPERT. Africa and United States policy. 117p $4.50; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

327.67 Africa, Sub-Saharan—Foreign relations—U.S.—U.S.—Foreign relations—Africa, Sub-Saharan 67-13354

A professor of government at Harvard University "surveys relations between the United States and Africa south of the Sahara, concentrating particularly on the last decade. . . . The Congo, the Portuguese territories, Southern Rhodesia, and South Africa are examined . . . with emphasis on the extent of American involvement and prospects for the future." (Publisher's note) Bibliography, Index.

"Emerson has packed a large volume of essential information about American interests in and policies toward Africa in this small book. His penetrating survey of African-American relations is distinguished by clarity of thought, a humane philosophy, and a sound grasp of the realities of international politics. . . . In his conclusions the author analyzes with insight the misunderstandings caused by the American tendency 'to look under the bed for Communists' and the African tendency to blame everything that goes wrong on 'the imperialists.'" Vernon McKay

Am Hist R 73:446 D '67 430w

"The chapter on 'The Negro American' is particularly good on Negro-American relations with Africa from slavery to present American 'negritude' advocates. Professor Emerson does not present new data, but analyzes the various factors in American policy-making in a clear and convincing manner, and he demonstrates certain trends in American policy, such as the substantial drop in foreign aid from the peak in 1962. . . . While [he] does not skirt the racial confrontation in southern Africa, his book does not give sufficient consideration to the debate concerning the various policy alternatives for the United States in this area." G. W. Shepherd

Ann Am Acad 375:230 Ja '68 430w

"This is an extraordinary collection of statistics, quotes from policy statements, and experts' observations. Though finding little that is new, Africanists will recognize essential material they had to glean from a reading of a dozen larger tomes. . . . While extremely useful as an introductory study, this book will add little to shelves that are already stocked with basic African references."

Choice 5:406 My '68 160w

EMMA, RONALD DAVID, ed. Language and style in Milton: a symposium in honor of the tercentenary of Paradise lost; ed. by Ronald David Emma and John T. Shawcross. 37ip $11.50 Ungar

821 Milton, John—Paradise lost 67-23512

"The eleven essays which the [editors] have assembled . . . are designed to 'correct an imbalance'. Far more attention has been paid, they maintain, to 'Milton's life, his milieu, ideas, prejudices, opinion, and political and religious persuasions than to the form in which he presented his concepts and feelings'. . . . [Included are chapters] about Milton's grammar, spelling and punctuation, his use of metaphor, and his use of Hebraic motifs." (TLS) Bibliography.

"[This collection of] essays by an international group of scholars illustrates how succinct a thoroughly documented, mechanical dissection of a first rank author's productions can be. For all but the devoted Milton specialist this study in obscurantism offers aridity. [It] is an excellent example of the contemporary canonization of linguistics. In the process, unfortunately, Milton lands in limbo." T. A. Tobin

Library J 93:2874 Ag '68 90w

"The mysteriously selective list of references compiled by the editors omits Eliot and Leavis, and, on the other side, Empson and Lewis. . . . There is no taint of the new criticism between the covers of this volume. The truth is that the eleven stalwarts are our old friends the historical critics, locked in an unfamiliar and sometimes painful embrace with the poem. The editors rightly complain that Milton scholarship has been insufficiently 'smit with the love of sacred song', but there are few signs of rapture among the eleven, as the expected dissections take place with the expected thoroughness."

TLS p795 Jl 25 '68 280w

ENCYCLOPAEDIA of Ireland. 463p il maps $24.95 McGraw

914.15 Ireland 68-54316

Most aspects of Irish life and culture are considered in an "ordered schema, starting with geology and paleontology, flora and fauna, archaeology, history, religion, and so on, working through to the present-day political and economic structure, and . . . [concluding with] such topics as art, literature, and music. . . .

[The work is] illustrated with [nearly] 600 black-and-white photographs, maps, and tables." (Library J) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Although some of the articles are clearly handouts by public relations men attached to the Irish Government, the great majority are written by established scholars. . . . Almost all strike a note of optimism. . . . A new encyclopedic scheme has prevented most of the usual duplication of material. . . . [The Department of Labor's] functions are dismissed in a single sentence. Worse still . . . absolutely nothing is said about the large trade union movement. . . . Indeed the Irish working man, whether in industry or agriculture, does not get much of a showing in this middle-class-oriented encyclopedia. . . . [The section called] Some Irish Thinkers is off-beat to a fault. . . . Literature in Irish, where all three periods are handled by Professor D. W. Greene, is infinitely more coherent and readable than Literature in English which has been split six ways. The great tour de force of the book, however, is the 18 pages on Government and Law: Louis McRedmond tells us with wit and irony not only how the Irish governmental and legal system is supposed to work but how it actually does work." Vivian Mercier

Book World p18 O 6 '68 1000w

"This is one of the most important and definitive books published on Ireland in recent times. . . . The list of contributors, most of them Irish scholars, is impressive. . . . However, because of the high price, smaller libraries may think twice before ordering a book of such limited appeal. Otherwise, the volume is heartily recommended." H. R. Downey

Library J 93:4278 N 15 '68 120w

"[This is not] a very appealing book. The volume is crammed with information, but it is done in such a way that the book is destined for reference and little else." Caskie Stinnett

N Y Times Bk R p2 D 1 '68 80w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:62 N 16 '68 120w

ENCYCLOPEDIA Canadiana [ed.-in-chief, J. E. Robbins]. 10v il col il maps col maps Grolier

031 Encyclopedias and dictionaries

68-116915

Published under a policy of continuous revision, this encyclopedia is "a purely Canadian work of reference about Canada by Canadians for Canadians." Its purpose is to "present Canadian history and geography, people and places, flora and fauna, government, economy, and culture. It is intended to supplement and stand with general reference encyclopedias in libraries and homes." . . . The editorial staff has been expanded somewhat [since the original edition, BRD 1960]. . . . but the key members and the advisory staff are substantially the same. The publisher claims since 1958 a total of 2,997 revised and 140 new articles, in a total of 10,000 articles. . . . All changes are made within the original total space allotment." (Booklist and S B B)

"Encyclopedia Canadiana is a national encyclopedia [which in style is] . . . suitable for students up to the undergraduate level. Its range and depth have not changed significantly from the original edition. . . . There is no doubt about the high caliber of the [editorial] staff. . . . Many major articles have been completely rewritten [but] . . . some articles . . . still require revision. . . . [The encyclopedia] is strong in biography and geography; some 3,500 personal names were selected for inclusion. Even so, the editors were highly selective. . . . Few actual inaccuracies were noted. . . . Lack of a general index is a serious handicap to the user. Excellent material remains inaccessible in spite of cross-references. . . . Short, authoritative bibliographies appear after most major articles, but are missing from some key articles. . . . Few original sources or foreign-language citations are given. Some periodical articles and government publications are included. . . . Illustrated sections . . . are a useful special feature of the set. The numerous interesting charts and diagrams are geared to junior high school level. . . . [But] not all the illustrations help to explain the text. Map coverage is adequate. . . . In physical format and design, the 1966 centennial edition . . . is superior to earlier editions. . . . [It is] recommended for purchase in Canadian homes and libraries. Outside Canada, . . . it is similarly recommended to those who do not own the 1959 revision."

Booklist and S B B 64:457 D 15 '67 1800w

ENCYCLOPEDIA of psychoanalysis; Ludwig Eidelberg, ed.-in-chief. 571p $27.50 Free press 150.19 Psychoanalysis—Dictionaries 67-28974

The nearly six hundred fifty alphabetically arranged entries are clinically defined and illustrated and include, as well as bibliographies, references to related concepts. Bibliography. Index.

"There is a need for responsible and effective intellectual liaison between sociology and such neighboring disciplines and professions as psychoanalysis, and [this work] might have helped to meet that need. Unfortunately, this compendium is compulsively Freudian, in the most orthodox sense. Terms and theories developed by the minor members of the Freudian inner circle are paraded prolifically, while sparse, uneven, and inaccurately disparaging coverage is given to work derived from psychosocial and other 'revisionist' viewpoints. . . . The book contains fewer than five hundred pages of actual content; the rest are indexes, some redundant. The type is so unusually large for a book of this kind and the spacing is so ample that I wonder what market the publisher had in mind. . . . The only credit which may be given is that the coverage of the orthodox Freudian concepts and theories is clear, accurate, and authoritative." K. I. Rothman

Am J Soc 74:100 J1 '68 240w

"Eidelberg and his associates, who are largely affiliated with the psychoanalytic group of the Downstate Medical Center, Brooklyn, N.Y. have prepared a fairly comprehensive compendium of the more important concepts of the classical or orthodox Freudian school. The book is also liberally sprinkled with non-Freudian originated concepts which bear upon the theories of Freud. . . . The material is clearly and concisely written; the book is a worthwhile addition to any special collection in psychoanalysis and the related fields." Louis DeRosier

Library J 93:2471 Je 15 '68 90w

"[The entries] include a few biographies (Abraham, Ferenczi, and Freud himself), but the book's chief value is in the definitions—with their case summaries, references, and bibliographies—of terms which there can no longer be any excuse for using loosely or without sufficient understanding." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:64 My 18 '68 90w

ENCYCLOPEDIA of world literature in the 20th century; general ed: Wolfgang Bernard Fleischmann; an enl. and updated ed. of the Herder Lexikon der weltliteratur im 20. jahrhundert. 3v v 1; A-F. 425p il $22.50 Ungar

803 Literature—Bio-bibliography. Literature—Dictionaries. Literature—History and criticism 67-13615

"An attempt to cover, in some fourteen hundred article entries in three volumes, the major aspects of the literature of the twentieth century, on a global scale. . . . Literary movements of consequence (e.g., Expressionism, Futurism) are covered in separate entries, as are movements in ideas (e.g., Christianity, Existentialism). . . . Each author alive or living in the twentieth century, whose contribution to literature may be considered significant, if not major, is included in a separate biobibliographical article. . . . Roughly fifty percent of the material in the three volumes [of which this is the first] consists of translated Herder articles, either revised and updated or augmented bibliographically. . . . An index to contributors will be included at the front of each volume . . . and an index to the entries will be included at the end of Volume III." (Introd) Bibliographies.

"[The publisher] notes an endeavor 'toward greater comprehensiveness and specificity' in the treatment of Asian and African literatures [than in the Herder Lexikon]. Perhaps the later volumes will support better [this] claim . . . when Neo-African, South African literature in English, Japanese, and Indian literatures are surveyed. . . . The general style of writing is scholarly, and the text is comprehensible to readers at the college level. . . . A comparison with Cassell's Encyclopedia of World Literature [BRD 1954] reveals that of 12 authors checked in both, all but two are represented by biographical sketches in the Cassell. . . . In contrast to Ungar all contributors of articles in Cassell are identified as either being affiliated with an academic institution or as being an author of note. . . . Although the articles in Ungar are generally written by authors of unknown authority, their value is increased by much greater length and resulting comprehensiveness than those in Cassell. In addition, Ungar has that necessity in an encyclopedia of literature in the twentieth century, up-to-dateness. . . . Expense may necessarily deter many smaller libraries from purchasing [this] Encyclopedia. . . . particularly those which purchased Cassell's Encyclopedia of World Literature. Following Committee policy, this review of the first volume of a three-volume set withholds final evaluation until the complete set is available for examination."

ENCYCLOPEDIA of world literature in the 20th century—Continued

Booklist and S B B 65:413 D 15 '68
1350w

"Most valuable to the small library for its information on little known 20th-century European authors, small yet helpful bibliographies, and some excellent survey articles. . . . The European world predominates."

Choice 5:463 Je '68 170w

"This volume is impressive in its scope and detail, in its thoroughness, and in the list of contributors. The general editor of the encyclopedia is professor of comparative literature at the University of Massachusetts and former editor of Books Abroad. Until the publication of this encyclopedia there has been no comparable work in English. . . . The encyclopedia contains excellent discussions by scholars of note on literary movements, criticism, and genres. . . . [This volume] is a storehouse of information found elsewhere only with difficulty. Recommended for public and academic libraries." J. K. Fugate

Library J 93:175 Ja 15 '68 130w

"A valuable literary tool. . . . 'Encyclopedia,' though, is a misnomer. 'Survey of World Authors' would have been a more accurate title for a book whose entries—except for national literatures and genres—are exclusively the names of writers, with no information of the sort one finds strewn through the Oxford Companions [Oxford Companion to American Literature, BRD 1956; Oxford Companion to Music, BRD 1956; Oxford Companion to French Literature, BRD 1960] or The Reader's Encyclopedia [of American Literature, BRD 1963]. The coverage of authors, however, is unusually comprehensive, and there are many penetrating over-all analyses of significant work." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:62 My 18 '68 100w

ENCYCLOPAEDIC dictionary of physics; general, nuclear, solid state, molecular chemical, metal and vacuum physics, astronomy, geophysics, biophysics and related subjects; ed.-in-chief: J. Thewlis; associate eds: R. C. Glass, D. J. Hughes [and] A. R. Meetham. 9v; supplementary v 1 and 2 il $378; to libs & schools $284 Pergamon press; Macmillan (N Y)

530.3 Physics—Dictionaries (60-7069)

Volumes two to seven of this set were reviewed in BRD 1963. Volume eight includes subject and author indexes. Volume nine is a multilingual glossary in English, French, German, Spanish, Russian and Japanese. Two supplementary volumes have been issued. They are designed to deal with new topics in physics; new developments in topics previously covered, and topics which have been previously omitted. Subject index in each supplementary volume.

"The Subject Index which contains approximately 50,000 entries provides comprehensive access to the information in the seven volumes and especially to those terms that are not entered as subjects of articles but are covered in other relevant articles. A few omissions were noted in the Index. . . . The Multilingual Glossary contains a listing of 13,675 English terms and phrases used in the encyclopedia. . . . [It] will benefit those readers whose native language is not English, and because the majority of entries are phrases rather than single words, it will also serve as a useful tool for translators of scientific papers. For a glossary of its magnitude this one appears to be remarkably free of errors. . . . An examination of the two supplementary volumes reveals that they are up to date. . . . Carefully planned and well executed [the set] will be of benefit to graduate students in physics and related fields and to theoretical physicists, chemists, mathematicians, and engineers. . . . [It is] a valuable acquisition . . . for the science and technology reference collections of college and university and larger public libraries."

Booklist and S B B 64:1061 My 15 '68
2050w

"Articles range in length from a sentence to a few thousand words, and cover not only the conventional subjects of physics but also useful mathematics and a number of outlying fields such as aerodynamics, geophysics, and various aspects of physical chemistry. The work is of very high quality in writing, illustration, production, and indexing; somewhat less so in editing, for the editors' hand has been too light on articles which overlap each other and there are too few cross-references. Its chief utility is for looking up specific facts for which one might otherwise search for hours. For this important purpose it is incomparable; no other work is even in the same class. The survey articles are inevitably less useful. . . . Although expensive, the Dictionary is strongly recommended for undergraduate libraries, and the smaller the library the greater the need to acquire it."

Choice 4:636 S '67 220w (Review of v 1-9 and supplementary v 1)

"The authors have been drawn from universities and research establishments. Well over half of them are from British and Commonwealth institutions, although the United States is well represented. In general, the articles are at the graduate level, although a few of them, highly mathematical in character, may be most useful to the specialist. . . . Extensive use is made of charts, line drawings, and photographs throughout the set." J. K. Luckner

Library J 92:995 Mr 1 '67 300w (Review of v 1-9 and supplementary v 1)

ENDICOTT, FRANK S. A college student's guide to career planning; what college students need to know about career planning and jobs. 96p $2.95; pa $1 Rand McNally

378.1 Vocational guidance 67-24745

"The purpose of this book is to provide . . . information directly related to choosing the most appropriate career, selecting college courses wisely, deciding whether or not to go to graduate school, finding the best position, and getting a good start on [the] first job." (Intro) Bibliography.

"[This book] is more appropriate for a counselor to have in his waiting room than a library to have in its holdings. It is terse, oversimplified, and deals generally rather than specifically with . . . questions about career planning. Most responses are far too brief to be of much help to a student. The readership audience would be collegians, especially the lower average and below average, and probably only a small number of these. . . . Perhaps useful as a text for general orientation."

Choice 5:387 My '68 90w

"Entirely too elementary to be of real value to college students." Yvette Schmitt

Library J 92:3875 O 15 '67 70w

ENDLEMAN, SHALOM, ed. Violence in the streets; ed. with an introd. by Shalom Endleman. 471p $10 Quadrangle bks.

309 Violence. U.S.—Social conditions 68-13458

"This book searches for explanations of [violence] in American life. Drawing upon the writings of a wide variety of experts and . . . social observers, Mr. Endleman focuses on [its] origins and forms, . . . its dissemination by the mass media, criminal and racial violence, and the role of the police. [The thirty-seven selections include] contributions by Bruno Bettelheim, Norman Mailer, Lewis Coser, William F. Buckley, Jr., Jane Jacobs, Lewis Yablonsky, Arthur Miller, Kenneth B. Clark, Bayard Rustin, Howard R. Leary, and many others." (Publisher's note) Most of these essays were first published in periodicals. Index.

"The catholicity of editor Endleman's selections is represented by the distance between the two most extreme: William Buck-ley's angry protest against the uncurbed violent assaults in Fun City, and William Stringfellow's equally angry acceptance of violence as the price we must pay for our age-old wrongs to black citizens. . . . If one could extrapolate a consensus from [the] essays it would be something like this: violence is one of the ineluctable facts of life with which we must live on whatever terms we can." A. A. Gross

Christian Century 85:1374 O 30 '68 700w

"The range of readings includes both correlative and anecdotal material about gangs, riots, crowds, mobs, race riots, crimes of violence in every conceivable form, and the emotional and social factors thought to be present as necessary prerequisites to acts of violence. A fair portion of the book deals with the police and their role and community relations. Recommended for sociologists, psychologists, anthropologists and anyone who would understand violence in its contemporary contexts." Harold Blau

Library J 93:2468 Je 15 '68 130w

"[This book] is mostly about contemporary America. It deals with facts rather than abstractions and is sometimes very good indeed. . . . It puts stress not only on the multiplicity of context in which violence is manifested in American life but also on the immense relevance of cultural phenomena, such as films and TV, which act as educational media and train the individual American to regard extreme violence as a normal feature of everyday life. Endleman's contributors are mostly on the side of the angels, but they recognize their limitations. . . . They are self-styled 'experts' who would justify an excess of violence in the mass media on much the same grounds that they would welcome an excess of pornography on the bookshelves: the sheer surfeit may be cathartic." Edmund Leach

N Y Rev of Books 11:24 O 10 '68 800w
TLS p1191 O 24 '68 850w

ENDORE, GUY. Synanon. 360p $5.95 Doubleday

616.86 Synanon Foundation. Narcotic habit 68-15599

A description of an organization dedicated to the treatment of narcotic addiction, "founded in California in 1958. . . . [Endore, a novelist, traces the] growth of the organization. Synanon consists primarily of drug addicts who live together under the same roof in a cooperative, productive community. The focus of Synanon is on group sessions or 'verbal therapy' where the aim is for participants to intercommunicate honestly and grow in self awareness. Mr. Endore's book contains much recorded dialogue." (Library J)

Christian Century 85:728 My 29 '68 20w

"The study, which originated in a series of short personality pieces that Mr. Endore wrote for the foundation's magazine, is almost a house organ in itself. . . . As a self-described interloper or 'square,' in Synanon lingo, Mr. Endore spent many hours and days in the foundation's facilities, and became closely acquainted with and trusted by its personalities. The result is an insider's account that is somewhat unbalanced and one-sided. . . . Written as a pro-Synanon book, this study lacks a solid analysis of the system's shortcomings. . . . But for all its failings, this volume has some memorable moments." M. J. Bandler

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ag 10 '68 950w

"The [recorded] conversations, at times, are graphic, anatomic, and offensive. . . . [The book will be a] helpful contribution to the ever increasing interest in dope addiction and suggested cures." Lawrence Kingsbury

Library J 93:2682 Jl '68 180w

ENGEL, LEHMAN. The American musical theater: a consideration. [introd. by Brooks Atkinson]. 236p il $12.50 Macmillan (N Y)

782.8 Musical revues, comedies, etc. 67-8079

Beginning in 1866, the author "traces the rise and fall of vaudeville, burlesque, the minstrel show, the extravaganza, and the operetta, down to the great era following World War I. . . . Selecting what he believes to be the 11 masterpieces of American musical theater (he begins with Pal Joey in 1940) [the author analyzes] the technical achievement and artistic form [of each.]" (Library J) Discography. Bibliography. Index.

"In this reliable, well-researched and well-written book [the] director of the Musical Theatre Workshop, Broadcast Music, Inc., and of Musical Theatre Development for Columbia Picture Screen Gems, surveys, with comfortable and entertaining ease, the whole history of the American musical theater. . . . He has included an excellent discography, and a list of published librettos and vocal scores. [This book] is the latest in the series of books-with-records published by CBS Legacy Collection. The books in this collection without records are distributed by Macmillan." A. C. Willers

Library J 93:204 Ja 15 '68 210w

"As America's best-known musical conductor and Director of the Composers and Lyricists Workshop, [the author] has had ample opportunity to study the musical intensively. What Engel has to say about the principles of writing good musicals is so true that one wonders why these principles were not formulated long ago. One may argue with his selection of plays or his methods of analysis, but one can find very little to quarrel about over the conclusions which he reaches. . . . Chapter VI deals with some unusual and generally overlooked aspects of the professionally-produced musical, and the topics range from the characteristic composition of the pit orchestra to the problems of acoustical balance. This chapter . . . is of special interest to the theater-goer." Marian Smith

Music Lib Assn Notes 25:244 D '68 650w

"Engel surveys his subject once over lightly, from Tony Pastor to 'Fiddler on the Roof.' His picture layouts are on the stereopticon side, his style is academic—but his book is worthwhile for reasons all its own. Mr. Engel happens to be a veteran conductor who has presided in the orchestra pit over many of the shows he discusses here. . . . Among them are hits as diverse as 'West Side Story,' 'South Pacific,' 'Guys and Dolls' and 'Oklahoma!' His observations are the heart of the book, and it must be added that they are far too technical, too concerned with the pre-curtain carpentry to attract the average theater buff. Students of the musical play, and composers and authors embarking in that difficult but rewarding medium, will find it valuable."

N Y Times Bk R p44 N 19 '67 320w

ENGEL, LEONARD. The new genetics [il. by Howard S. Friedman]. 220p $5.95 Doubleday

575.1 Genetics. Heredity 63-12986

This book is "published posthumously; . . . the final chapters are presented in summary form only, showing the author's intentions. . . . [Engel gives us a] summary of classical genetics and the experimentation that led us to the beginning of the new genetics: the discovery that genes control the chemical machinery of the cell. From there, he describes the key experiments that added to the knowledge in this field [keeping] this knowledge in historical perspective." (Library J) Index.

"A highly readable account of the rise of modern genetics and its impact on biology and medicine. . . . The recent work of Kornberg, Sinsheimer and Goulian on the in vitro synthesis of biologically active DNA must be remembered while reading this book. This synthesis is anticipated in Engel's writing. Highly recommended for college libraries. Every biology teacher should read this volume. . . . Many chapters could be assigned as collateral reading in introductory biology or genetics courses."

Choice 5:520 Je '68 160w

"[This is] a noble monument, bringing to the intelligent nonscientist an orderly, interesting account of the development of molecular genetics. . . . [It] will be useful in public, college, and university libraries." Harold Bloomquist

Library J 92:2168 Je 1 '67 180w

ENGELMANN, BERNT. The weapons merchants; tr. from the German by Erica Detto. 224p il $4.95 Crown

338.4 Firearms industry and trade 68-15211

A "series of portraits of the modern 'merchants of death' who make immense profits selling munitions to all who need them in any wars everywhere in the world. [The author,] correspondent for Der Spiegel and other magazines, talked with many of the men who sold arms to the Algerians fighting the French, the Cubans under Castro, the Israelis, the Arabs, and many others. . . . He tells about their complex intrigues. . . . and their death by assassination as circumstances sometimes require." (Library J) First published under the title Meine Freunde die Waffenhändler.

ENGELMANN, BERNT—Continued

"Melodramatic. . . . It's all familiar and the facts are in this book even if Herr Engelmann is much too longwinded and oversensational about the sordid machinations which are sufficiently startling without embellishment." Allan Angoff

Library J 93:2891 Ag '68 210w

"This little manual is a genuine hair-curler. It is also a sort of yellow-pages rundown of suppliers, both individuals and sovereign states. A terrifying book." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:116 S 14 '68 30w

ENGELMANN, FREDERICK C. Political parties and the Canadian social structure, by Frederick C. Engelmann and Mildred A. Schwartz. 277p $5.95; pa $3.95 Prentice-Hall 329.971 Political parties. Canada—Politics and government 67-18808

"This book constitutes a first attempt to present an account of Canadian parties as forces operating within Canada's political system. . . . [It includes] information on the origin of parties, forms of party organization, leadership, patterns of support, issues, and the relation of parties to the electoral system and government." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"The two authors, a political scientist and a sociologist, abandon the standard institutional approach and proceed in a somewhat eclectic fashion to utilize the various methods and categories of contemporary political sociology. . . . [They] did not have the general reader in mind when they adopted the current terminology of political sociology and paraded new methodology. It is also evident that they did not intend to impress the expert by new techniques or interpretations. The readership that will profit most will be the students who have some knowledge of Canadian affairs. . . . [The severe critic may] note that even the use of the Index does not leave one with any differentiation between the several parties and their . . . policies or between the rival 'nationalisms.'" H. McD. Clotkie

Ann Am Acad 376:208 Mr '68 370w

"One of the frames of reference employed is Eaton's input-output schema. . . . Ethnicity, religion, and economic region—rather than social class—are presented as the key factors in unravelling Canadian political evolution. The style is simple. . . . The wealth of concepts and footnotes sometimes obscures the main thrust of contemporary Canadian politics: one should read George Grant's Lament for a Nation [BRD 1965] along with [this] work. Undergraduate introductory courses should grow up to this book; advanced students will come back to it."

Choice 5:868 S '68 200w

ENGELMANN, PAUL. Letters from Ludwig Wittgenstein. See Wittgenstein, L.

ENNION, E. A. R. Tracks [by] E. A. R. Ennion and N. Tinbergen. il col il $4.25 Oxford 591.5 Animals—Pictures, illustrations, etc. [67-114904]

A "collection of photographs (by Professor Tinbergen) of tracks left by birds, mammals, amphibians, and insects, occasionally 'enlivened' with drawings (by Dr. Ennion) of the animals that made them." (Natur Hist)

"[This] belongs in the elegant coffetable book category. Although handsome and informative, it can be recommended for only the largest collections." Jean Abuhove

Library J 93:1646 Ap 15 '68 40w

"The activities of the animals at the time the tracks were made are deduced, in an almost Sherlock Holmes manner, from small signs likely to be overlooked by the ordinary observer. The authors have provided a fascinating addition to the annals of nature detection." C. B. Natur Hist 77:72 Ap '68 80w

"We have a number of books illustrating animal tracks—by Brunner, Mason, Murie, Seton, and others—drawn in flat black and white or photographed from plaster casts. Here is a different treatment—superb photographs of fresh tracks, in sand or mud or snow, sparkling in the early morning sun and nicely accentuated by contrasting shadows. . . . Both authors are well-known British naturalists, and their subjects are familiar members of the English fauna. The remarkable photographs . . . are delightfully supplemented by [the] lively drawings, sometimes superimposed over the photograph of the tracks, showing the animals in the act of making their telltale sign. The pictures constitute the text, and the brief legends aid in interpreting the action. . . . [This small book] represents the ultimate in nature interpretation, in 'reading sign' of past action." R. H. Manville

Science 160:658 My 10 '68 430w

Reviewed by Philip Morrison

Sci Am 219:128 D '68 100w

ENOMIYA-LASSALLE, H. M. Zen—way to enlightenment. 126p il $3.95 Taplinger 68-17642

294.3 Zen Buddhism

The author explains "the technique and aspirations of Zen as a . . . meditative system, demonstrating its applications for the Christian wishing to deepen religious experience within the framework of his own faith through the observance of Zen methods. . . . Also explored is the nature of Zen in relation to the spiritual requirements of Western man." (Publisher's note)

"An awkwardly translated mini-guide to the Catholic use of za-zen meditation. Its Jesuit author . . . tried his hand, and strained his back, at Zen. And there's the rub: he still believes his only mistake was 'not keeping my back straight and my eyes open.' But there are other things here that might rub an Orientalist wrong. . . . Some more pain might come from his (or his translator's) inability to keep a consistent persona. . . . A man with Enomiya-Lassalle's unique 'experiences' could support East-West cultural ecumenism but only if his vision of things near and far from himself were clear."

Choice 5:1146 N '68 140w

"[The author] has systematically taken part in Zen meditation and appears to have achieved the state of satori which is the goal of Zen. This state is generally admitted to be indescribable, but . . . the first forty-six pages of the book are devoted to doing just this. . . . Fr. Enomiya complicates still further an already complicated question by equating Zen Buddhism with monism. . . . His contention that Zen techniques might profitably be introduced among Christian contemplatives and even among the laity has much to commend it. . . . The only serious query is a purely physical one. Can northern bones be made to accommodate themselves to any of the postures laid down by Zen?"

TLS p603 Jl 6 '67 650w

ENZENSBERGER, HANS MAGNUS. Poems for people who don't read poems: tr. by Michael Hamburger, Jerome Rothenberg and the author. 177p $5.95; pa $2.95 Atheneum pubs. 831 67-25472

This collection of poems by a postwar German poet "expresses his opinions of the Americanization of West Germany, the acceptance or nonacceptance of national guilt, and the poisonous atmosphere of modern life. . . . [It] includes the German original with the English translations facing." (Library J) English translations in this collection have previously appeared in such periodicals as Encounter, Mademoiselle, and The Times Literary Supplement.

"[Enzensberger] addresses his angry verse to the average man, not to members of the literary elite. . . . These first translations of his poems to be published in the United States were done by the author himself, and by M. Hamburger and J. Rothenberg, both poets of sizable reputation. . . . The subject matter and the quality of the work, in a style notable for its use of simple everyday German, should appeal to students at the intermediate level of the language and to readers of modern poetry." M. E. Kelley

Library J 93:1488 Ap 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by Alan Brownjohn

New Statesman 76:638 N 8 '68 300w

"A good deal of what Enzensberger cries out against in Germany is in fact universal. Some of it is trivial. . . . Selection appears to be this poet's weak point. . . . Rilke and Dior, branflakes and bombs—they all feature as expletives in a lengthy curse, all of equal weight apparently or, in the end, of equal weightlessness. To be angry about everything is to be angry about nothing. . . . The last poem in this book is called 'Joy.' . . . It is a more hopeful poem than most. . . . but it is a little too abstract, too willed, and deficient in the urgency and the implied compassionateness of similar poems by Brecht. . . . Yet for me Enzensberger is at his best when at his nearest to Brecht." D. J. Enright

N Y Rev of Books 10:21 Ap 11 '68
110Ww

"The opening poem of this excellent, and excellently translated, selection . . . and poems like 'lachesis laponica,' 'to all telephone subscribers,' 'summer poem,' and 'foam,' . . . are some of the best poems by Germany's best postwar poet. His work is not for people who read poems only in the sense that they are not pretty, but lucid, technically brilliant, contemporary, as critical of the poet himself as of his society and the world. . . . The theme of being and yet not being part of something which is characterized by spiritual destitution is the poet's central conflict and subject. . . . The dominant tone underlying his poetry [is] one of unmistakably pure concealed melancholy." Michael Roloff

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ag 18 '68 370w

"This is mainly protest poetry. . . . [It] is subjective and metaphysical enough to be hard going even for people who do read poems. . . . The trap into which [the translator, Rothenberg] has fallen is that of feeling he has to supply the German poet with the public touch, which he has further erred by identifying with the Common Touch. Such phrases as 'slip me some skin,' 'gullet,' and 'kow-tow' are not suggested by the German original and are, to say the least, inappropriate. . . . [The other translators] avoid 'talking down.' . . . Michael Benedikt
Poetry 113:209 D '68 450w

EPPEL, E. M. Adolescents and morality; a study of some moral values and dilemmas of working adolescents in the context of a changing climate of opinion, by E. M. and M. Eppel. 254p $6.50 Humanities press

301.43 Youth, London—Moral conditions

66-78341

The authors have brought together a series of research reports mainly on the values "of 250 male and female, 15 to 18-year-old workers attending day-release schools in central and east London." (Am Soc R) They have also "made comparative use of other, largely American studies, [and] have looked . . . at some other groups, notably some girls in Borstal." (TLS) Bibliography.

"Lacking a theoretical focus, the empirical execution of the study is of an ad hoc nature. Even the sample lacks a theoretical rationale. . . . We do not know how the respondents were chosen, or what they represent. . . . Neither British nor American readers are furnished with a frame of reference to locate the respondent sociologically or numerically. . . . The major virtue of this book lies in the twenty pages . . . in which raw data compare the responses to specific agree-disagree belief items of the young worker sample . . . and a special sample of English adults attending a university extra-mural summer school. . . . Unfortunately, mere publication of data collection instruments and responses does not suffice." Paul Lerman
Am Soc R 32:1022 D '67 700w

Choice 5:129 Mr '68, 200w

"[This study] is humane, amusing, touching, informative, and may well prove useful. The structure of the book is a little disjointed. . . . Sometimes the exposition is more full than is necessary, but in general the Eppels are easy to read and when they are technical their jargon is always neatly and clearly explained. It is a modest book, but a credit to the values of social psychology and research procedures that usually prove both barren and pretentious."

TLS p1005 N 3 '66 900w

EPPEL, M., jt. auth. Adolescents and morality. See Eppel, E. M.

EPPERSON, GORDON. The musical symbol; a study of the philosophic theory of music. 323p $5.95 Iowa state univ. press

780.1 Music—Philosophy

67-20152

"The work searches views among aestheticians of the past and present to corroborate, clarify, and to test the thesis that music occurs only as an auditory experience and is a non-verbal symbol. This . . . position is traced among such diverse writers as the following: Bergson, Schopenhauer, Nietzsche, Hanslick, Gurney, the Symbolist poets, Jung, Kohler, James, Lessing, Chavez, Coomaraswamy. . . . [The author's] method is to show convergence of theories which in themselves are apparently diverse." (J Aesthetics) Bibliography. Index.

"After a poor historical commentary and a slightly better consideration of contemporary developments, there are two closing chapters that might have been enlarged by themselves to produce a good article. On the whole, the language is loose and simple; the commentary on previous philosophers is poor. Large white spaces on the pages and long quotations indicated that both author and publisher stretched what was a long essay to produce a book. It is sad to see a good university press allow this one to be published as it now exists."

Choice 5:352 My '68 90w

"Admirers of Susanne K. Langer's philosophy of art and music, and those who find intuitionism of some form a plausible account of the musical experience, will find a new champion of their views. And Epperson is a most articulate one, at times a brilliant one. . . . [He] is at home in linguistics, the logic of language, the history and theory of literature and music, and the THEORY of aesthetics. He will clarify thinking on these subjects. His writing is at its best when he gives his own strong views on the questions he raises, but his interpretations of others' views are often transpicuous. . . . Whoever has ambitions to erect a philosophy of music will find it necessary to build from this philosophic account." Allan Shields
J Aesthetics 27:108 fall '68 600w

EPSTEIN, A. L., ed. The craft of social anthropology; introd. by Max Gluckman. 276p il $10.50; pa $5.75 Barnes & Noble

572 Anthropology. Ethnology

[67-107945]

"Eight social anthropologists, all associated at times with either the Rhodes Livingstone Institute or the University of Manchester [examine] . . . fieldwork techniques and analytical procedures exemplified in the study of their chosen areas and problems. The papers range from quantification and genealogies to witchcraft and law." (TLS)

"The authors' experiences and orientations are primarily African but some of them utilize a wide range of the data. . . . New concepts are debated vigorously and old ones are reviewed critically. As field research is basic to anthropology, one of the fundamental concerns relates to the questions or subjects which will be investigated, methods which will be used and techniques which will be employed in the analysis. Not a manual on field techniques, and not as radical as some of the authors seem to think. The writing is clear and direct; the materials and approaches will be interesting and stimulating to most anthropologists. Because of clarity it might be an excellent reader for undergraduate anthropologists in courses dealing with field work, theory, and analytical techniques. Recommended for most undergraduate libraries."

Choice 5:1230 N '68 160w

"Most [of these articles] are new contributions, some have been previously published, others are revised versions of earlier papers; all bear the mark of intensive anthropological training and competence."

TLS p700 J1 4 '68 550w

EPSTEIN, LEON D. Political parties in Western democracies. 374p $8.50 Praeger

329 Political parties

67-24674

In this "comparative analysis of the development of parties in the West (particularly in Britain and America), Epstein suggests that 'American-style' parties have been and still are responsive and effective agencies in political life, and that 'European-style' mass-membership parties are in fact symptomatic of only a certain stage in the early democratization of the electorate. . . . [His study covers] political groups who put up candidates for election, in countries that hold open elections and whose population or culture is of predominantly European origin. . . . He therefore includes material on parties, party organization, and elections in twenty modern nations . . . [and concludes] that American political parties . . . are in fact among the oldest and most durable of political organizations, serving well the needs of a pluralistic society." (Publisher's note) Index.

EPSTEIN, L. D.—Continued

"[The author,] ■■■ usual, displays ■ character-istic lucidity, intelligence, and scholarship. This volume should rapidly become a classic work on comparative parties. . . . He takes as his comparative range all Western democracies, the U.S. included. As those who teach comparative politics know, it is exceedingly rare for the U.S. to be included in the subject matter of anything comparative. Further, Epstein has fused together a sensitive understanding of historical development, contemporary behavioral research results, and theory. The one reservation is that Continental parties and party systems are underplayed. . . . [His] work argues an important case . . . e.g. American parties are not outdated 19th-century relics but functional to American circumstances. A must for college libraries of all sizes and purposes."

Choice 5:556 Je '68 210w

"A broad and thoroughly investigated study of political parties in countries with a Western cultural legacy, excluding those countries with a European ruling class as in South Africa, but including Japan. [The author] uses as his yardstick the democratic climate of these countries. National parties, vote structure, party identification, party behavior, the non-partisan alternative, the role of the primaries in America, the influence in domestic and foreign policy making he explores with scholarly comprehension and a profound knowledge of the problems and literature of the subjects. He fully satisfies the need for a comparative study of political parties on a global scope in this book which should appeal to informed laymen, scholars generally, and specialists." K. J. Frohlich

Library J 93:559 F 1 '68 140w

ERDMAN, DAVID V., ed. A concordance to the writings of William Blake; with the assistance of John E. Thiesmeyer [and others]. 2v 1146; 1147-2313p $25 Cornell univ. press

828 Blake, William—Concordances 66-18608

"Page and line numbers in the concordance refer to the variorum edition of Blake's works edited by Geoffrey Keynes [The Complete Writings With All the Variant Readings, BRD 1957]; the uses of the words are arranged in the chronological order followed by the Keynes text. . . . An appendix provides a frequency count of words used by Blake." (Library J)

"This work is an important addition to the large reference collection. Produced with the aid of the computer, it provides easy access to the vocabulary of Blake's prose and poetry. . . . The work can be used as a reference and as the basis for more extended research on the poet." L. E. Bone

Library J 93:2994 S 1 '68 170w

"This aims to include everything that Blake wrote, in poetry or prose. The comprehensiveness of the project has involved some new editorial work, resulting in additions to the 1957 Keynes text. These are given in a supplement. . . . The compilation has been carried out with immense care. . . . Certain limitations still remain. All entries are in upper-case lettering. There is some cross-referencing, but not enough. . . . One of the pleasures in using a concordance should be a sense of contact with human analytical intelligence at its best; this concordance, for all its virtues, still has something of the air of a mindless machine."

TLS p1098 O 3 '68 500w

ERDMAN, DAVID V., ed. Evidence for authorship: essays on problems of attribution; with annot. bibl. of sel. readings; ed. by David V. Erdman and Ephim G. Fogel. 559p il $15 Cornell univ. press

809 English literature—History and criticism. Authorship 65-24698

The problems involved in "fixing the authorship of works centuries old . . . are defined in the present volume, which grew out of a series of articles in the Bulletin of The New York Public Library and out of papers from an English Institute Symposium in 1958. . . . [The articles] weigh the relative values of internal and external evidence and of literary and statistical analysis. In doing so they attempt to confront such problems as the three texts of 'Piers Plowman,' . . . and the first American novel. The text concludes with [an examination of frauds and forgeries]. . . . An annotated bibliography includes recent developments in the fields of statistical studies and computer applications." (N Y Times Bk R) Index of names and titles. Index of subjects.

Am Lit 39:134 Mr '67 40w

Reviewed by W. D. Paden
Mod Philol 65:432 My '68 1450w

"The volume's essays [are] filled with the gentle alarms of scholarly strife. . . . A rich lode for anyone who cares to mine dense but lusterless metal."

N Y Times Bk R p26 F 18 '68 200w

ERDMAN, HOWARD L. The Swatantra party and Indian conservatism. 356p $9.50 Cambridge 329.954 Swatantra party. Conservatism [67-2128]

"Dr. Erdman examines the background, emergence and growth of Swatantra within the framework of conservative politics in India. He first considers the concept of conservatism, and surveys the doctrines, social bases and political organization of the right wing parties prior to 1959. He then describes how the Swatantra coalition . . . [was founded]. . . . Later chapters examine . . . the internal structure, ideology, leadership and electoral performance of the party, and its relationship with the other major opposition parties in India. The results of the 1967 elections are discussed in an appendix." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This well-written book] deserves a high recommendation to library collections on contemporary Indian politics. Erdman effectively develops his thesis that the party is a tenuous coalition of liberal and conservative elements, but with conservatism dominant. The principles enunciated by the party's platform and its major leaders are dissected to reveal many underlying tensions and ambiguities. Erdman shows how the need to win votes against the ruling Congress party has led liberal Swatantrites like M. R. Masani into conservative alliances, although the resulting contradictions weaken Swatantra's appeal as an alternative to the Congress. Appendices neatly summarize the party's electoral record at both the state and federal levels."

Choice 5:870 S '68 160w

"[This] searching and systematic study of the party's development since 1950 is both fair to its virtues and boldly critical of its failings. . . . [The author] subjects the Swatantra record to a severe examination such as a professor of politics ought to insist upon from his students. . . . It would be a valid comment on Dr Erdman's excellent book to say that perhaps he devotes too much attention to the core and not enough to the support in Swatantra."

Economist 225:1060 D 9 '67 950w

Reviewed by P. R. Brass
Pacific Affairs 41:459 fall '68 500w

"The author has not only read all the relevant literature; he has journeyed around India interviewing every Swatantra leader of any note and issuing questionnaires to the lesser lights. The result is ■ profile of Swatantra which, although necessarily complicated, has all the appearance of authenticity and is not likely to be superseded. . . . What emerges is that Swatantra is indeed the protean thing it appeared to be. Expressive of a variety of contradictory tendencies, it could go in almost any direction except towards communism. Wisely, Dr. Erdman keeps the options open. . . . [His caution] increases rather than diminishes the value of a book which will be essential reading for all serious students of India."

TLS p40 Ja 11 '68 1100w

ERDOES, RICHARD. Peddlers and vendors around the world. unp col il $3.95; lib bdr $3.50 McGraw

658.85 Peddlers and peddling—Juvenile literature 67-25349

Pictures and text introduce children to "peddlers of long ago—a muffin man in early London, a Yankee peddler of old New England—or of today—an Irish tinker, a Lapland reindeer peddler, a Luxembourg chimney sweep, an Indian fakir. . . . Age eight and up" (Book World)

"Author-artist Richard Erdoes loves to travel and has a discerning eye for what is both fun and factual. . . . [The] full-color, poster-like pictures that possess imagination and verve . . . [portray peddlers] in amusing and colorful detail in their proper settings." Polly Goodwin

Book World p24 S 15 '68 60w

"Simple text and colorful, appealing drawings, both filled with stereotypes. . . . The treatments of the mass hypnotism involved in the Indian rope trick and the livelihoods of Southwestern American Indians are misleading. There's a sprinkling of solid information throughout, but it hardly makes necessary the purchase of this attractive, but emphatically quaint, presentation." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 93:3289 S 15 '68 120w

"Going from a Hong Kong street to a Mexican plaza, from an Indian bazaar to New York City's Lower East Side, [Erdoes'] text captures a Flea Market's lore about the men and women who sell food, goods and services."

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p51 My 5 '68 60w

"[This book] shows signs of a flagging imagination. 'Italian street vendors are so friendly that it is hard to buy and run.' Why, the child will ask, should one want to run? The London section is quite misleading: 'On almost every street it is possible to meet a fish-n-chips lady'. We are hardly led to trust the rest of the book."

TLS p1384 D 5 '68 70w

ERDOES, RICHARD. Policemen around the world. unnp il $3.50 McGraw

363.2 Police—Juvenile literature 67-25350

This "picture book depicts policemen of past and present from the Roman lictor to today. . . . Preschool to grade four." (Library J)

"Almost all the stereotypes of nationalities and races are depicted here . . . [such as] the French gendarme who is 'master of the beau geste, the gallant gesture,' the ruthless Russian Cossack, and the Indian policemen who 'often spend more time protecting sacred cows than they do assisting pedestrians or directing traffic.' There are as many misimpressions as there are nuggets of information. Despite its superficial appeal and library requests for this subject, the book's blithe projection of essentially negative national images makes it an unsuitable purchase." Peggy Sullivan

Library J 93:2728 J1 '68 120w

"The best part here is the gallery of cheerful, colorfully drawn pictures of policemen on their beats throughout the world. . . . The accompanying commentary is brief, but it gives enough facts to help the future traveler to recognize different uniforms and to learn about the men who have helped keep the peace since that distant day when King Hammurabi first wrote his code of laws."

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p51 My 5 '68 110w

TLS p1384 D 5 '68 70w

ERICKSON, CHARLOTTE. The freezer cookbook. 411p $8.95 Chilton co.

641.6 Cookery. Food, Frozen 68-21135

The book gives ingredients for "more than 200 recipes . . . in single, double or triple quantities . . . to make it easy for the homemaker to cook enough of any item for [future use. Recipes are included for] . . . appetizers and spreads, breads, quick breads, cakes and icings, fish and seafood, meats, poultry, pies, vegetables, herb and spice cookery, fruits and desserts [as well as] . . . 'unfreezables' like custard pies, delicate pastries and epicurean dishes." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by Gloria Levitas

Book World p5 Ag 11 '68 130w

"A sensible, useful, uninspiring cookbook and manual on freezing and cooking, albeit the price seems rather high. A quick glance at the books available on freezer cooking, however, does not show much choice. The only other books comparable to this one are 1961 and 1964 copyrights. Charlotte Erickson gives some . . . space to explanation of home care of the freezer, wrapping and packaging, do's and don'ts, quick tips, and charts on maximum storage periods for various foods. . . . A number of charts on measurements and equivalents, divided recipe equivalents, substitutions, a time table for roasting thawed meats, and a vegetable preparation chart, add to the book's usefulness." Lelia Saunders

Library J 93:2496 Je 15 '68 150w

ERICSON, DAVID B. The ever-changing sea [by] David B. Ericson and Goesta Wollin; il. by Ingrid Niccoll. 354p $7.95 Knopf

551.4 Ocean. Oceanography 67-18599

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:372 My '68 150w

Reviewed by Holger Lundbergh

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ja 30 '68 500w

Reviewed by Donald Squires

Natur Hist 77:71 F '68 480w

Reviewed by Carl Wunsch

Science 159:969 Mr 1 '68 410w

ERIKSON, ERIK H. Identity; youth and crisis. 336p $6.95 Norton

155.2 Personality. Youth 67-17681

This book by the professor of human development at Harvard opens with a "chapter on 'Foundations in Observation' [and moves] through a systematic description of 'The Life Cycle' (in which the epigenesis of identity is set forth in its various phases) to . . . identity confusion in [life history and case history].

Next, in a 'Theoretical Interlude,' the technical complications of the ego and its environment are discussed. The book ends with analyses of three contemporary issues: youth, womanhood and its specific modality, and race and its wider identity." (Christian Century) Bibliography. Index.

"This latest book by Erik Erikson ministers to wisdom. It enlarges our vision and presents a perspective from which we may judge both ourselves and others. . . . Erikson treats the question of identity from a viewpoint that includes both the psychoanalytic focus and the sociological environment. . . . One of the interesting patterns in ego synthesis which the author describes is the contrast of what he defines as 'wholeness' and 'totalism.' . . . In his explanation of 'negative' identities, Erikson makes a signal contribution to the understanding of the often bizarre attempts of youth to come to terms with the paradoxes and tensions of the identity crisis." S. H. Miller

Christian Century 85:486 Ap 17 '68 750w

Reviewed by Roderick Nordell

Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 7 '68 450w

Reviewed by Robert Coles

Commonweal 89:357 D 6 '68 90w

Reviewed by Louis De Rosier

Library J 93:761 F 15 '68 250w

"Rhetoric—or a calculated stylized nonsense—has come at us from all sides. . . . We are duped by those very people we have all along been assuming shared our own need for illumination and meaning. This can, of course, precipitate despair. The rhetoric employed by many psychologists and sociologists these days is very rich, and that which characterizes Erikson and his followers is indeed among the richest and most effectively delusory. Erikson's work, in this volume, must be viewed in terms of its contemporary relevance rather than in the confines of clinical psychology. . . . What is more important than his bad logic, and Olympian disengagement from human reality, is his apparent unawareness of the profound difference between, and mortal conflict of, Identity and Being. And this reveals the totality of what I feel is his conservatism. . . . Further, it indicates Erikson's crucial flaw as a seriously engaged observer: he has no grasp of (or sympathy for) the political-power matrix of contemporary life." Chandler Brossard

Nation 206:734 Je 3 '68 1800w

"[Erikson] presents us with some of his major papers, written over the past 20 years and now reshaped as chapters for this book. I do not think they are of quite the high order of essay-writing that he gave us in his 'Insight and Responsibility' [BRD 1964] . . . and they do not have, nor do they profess to have, the range and depth of his classic 'Childhood and Society' [BRD 1950] or the arresting bold-

ERIKSON, E. H.—Continued

ness of his 'Young Man Luther' [BRD 1960]. It does not matter. What is contained here is, as might be expected from the author of the earlier works, well worth attention. And, needless to say, this book is written in language that is a pleasure to read. . . . Since there is a good deal about the contexts of human achievement in the book, one can scarcely refrain from the observation that not a little of the book's appeal lies in the light it throws on the contexts of Erikson's own major achievement: the concept of identity crisis." R. A. Nisbet

N Y Times Bk R pl Mr 31 '68 1800w

Reviewed by Kenneth Keniston
Science 161:257 J1 19 '68 1500w

"Erikson's view of identity is a product of some of the central methodological preoccupations of our age; it might, indeed, have been conceived by John Dewey. Erikson's view of identity is functional or pragmatic, historicist, sociocentric, and profoundly relativistic. . . . This volume is described by him as a 'companion work to his famous study of Martin Luther; Erikson here enlarges his view of ideology as a 'normative' developmental aspect of individuals, social groups, and societies in 'crisis'—in process of adaptive change. . . . Much of this volume is intended for specialists in psychoanalysis and human development—the fields in which Erikson is eminent. In consequence, in its theoretical detail, the book may be of limited interest to the general reader."

Yale R 57:XXV summer '68 800w

ERLANGER, PHILIPPE. The age of courts and kings; manners and morals, 1558-1715. 308p il $9.95 Harper

914.03 Seventeenth century 67-28484

The author describes "European life and manners from the accession of Queen Elizabeth to the death of Louis XIV. . . . This was an age in which the amours and intrigues of the courts, the miseries of the peasants and the . . . brutality of the soldiery lay behind many of the most telling political events, an age of religious extremism, of Jansenists and Puritans, and the heyday of the Venetian courtesans." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl
America 118:613 My 4 '68 50w

"The text is superficial though literate and occasionally, through choice bits of detail, fascinating. . . . The volume could have been valuable had appropriate comparisons and contrasts been made. . . . There is a meaningless accumulation of detail. What justifies this book? Great quantities of carefully chosen, well organized, and excellently reproduced illustrations drawn from European archives and museums. Look at the pictures, skim the text, don't buy the book."

Choice 5:546 Je '68 130w

"Erlanger, one of France's leading historians, here gives a penetrating analysis of an age in Europe when court life was dominant. He covers Spain, France, Italy, England, Germany and the Low Countries in this readable book which will fascinate the general reader and add to the special interest of the historian. The book contains analyses and illustrations by contemporaries as well as by Mr. Erlanger. . . . The index of the illustrations is arranged by category or subject. . . . Any library that can afford a rather special purchase should add this diverting, useful history book." K. T. Willis

Library J 92:4501 D 15 '67 180w

ERNEST, EDWARD, ed. The Kate Greenaway treasury. See Greenaway, K.

ERNST, HARRY W., jt. auth. The drugstore liberal. See Sherrill, R.

ERRINGTON, PAUL L. Of predation and life; il. by Dycie Madson. 277p $5.95 Iowa state univ. press

591.5 Animals—Habits and behavior.
Ecology. Wild life—Conservation 67-20153

In this volume, prepared from manuscript after Dr. Errington's death in 1962, the author presents his observations on predator-prey relationships among animals. The book concludes with his philosophy concerning wildlife management and conservation. Most of his field work was done in Iowa's prairies, woodlands and marshes. Bibliography. Index.

"A well written, very readable book. . . . It covers a lifetime of observation and reflection. . . . Any nature lover, conservationist, or student—high school to retired professor—would enjoy the freshness and admire the strict scientific approach. Pen and ink drawings . . . add interest."

Choice 5:1325 D '68 100w

"The text tends to be rambling, especially in the first section, but becomes increasingly more readable further on. The first several chapters are little more than vignettes on individual species, in marked contrast to the last chapter which is a superb presentation of the role of predation. As might be expected, a good deal of the information is derived from Dr. Errington's many years of experience with bobwhites and muskrats. . . . He uses his data to support the conclusion 'that the more a prey population is basically limited by some non-predatory feature of its environment, or by its own intolerance of crowding, the less it can be basically limited by predation.' In the bibliography, the references are unfortunately arranged in the order in which they were cited in the text, rather than alphabetically. Recommended for specialists and informed laymen." J. D. Buffington

Library J 93:1010 Mr 1 '68 130w

"A book about the realities and dynamics of bloodshed in the natural world has inherent interest and this one is concerned not only with 'who done it' but why. . . . The story is told with detachment and in casually colorful language. . . . Its scientific and literary qualities honor its author. . . . [It is free] from specialized jargon and tedious documentation. This does not impair its value as a synthesis and summary for the professional, and . . . the citizen conservationist. . . . [This] is a book I shall recommend to those who inquire, 'Where can I get good, summarized information on wildlife and how it should be managed?' " D. L. Allen

Natur Hist 77:70 O '68 550w

ESCHER, M. C. The graphic work of M. C. Escher [tr. by John E. Brigham]. new ed 69p il col il $7.95 Meredith

760

67-9321

A collection of reproductions, including four in color, by the Dutch graphic artist. Escher's method is to combine "several viewpoints in one print. The spectator has the sensation of viewing the scene simultaneously from above, below and on the same level." (Publisher's note) Originally published in 1960 as Grafiek en tekeningen.

"A reassessment and enlargement of [the first English language edition, published in 1961]. The illustrations, black-and-white and in color, have been enlarged. This tome continues to be the most complete pictorial coverage of Escher's art work available. For those that are not familiar with his graphic works, the first confrontation will assert to the ambiguities of the illusion of the third dimension. . . . On the technical level he manages to add new dimensions and perspectives suffused with human perplexity. Escher's procedure is to make use of commentaries on his works merely as a means of releasing some sort of intelligible meaning, but in no way does he pretend to exhaust their meaning. Although Escher's work may have limited appeal, his world of contradictory elements deserves a place in the library."

Choice 5:40 Mr '68 170w

"Escher has understood more deeply than any artist today the mathematical structure of space, of perception and of pattern. In this brand-new edition the artist gives us quite a few pages never before published in addition to the old familiars. . . . Anyone who likes to use his eyes well, whether in the artist's domain or the scientist's, will be gripped by Escher. This work is at once a challenge and a charm for children, who will work out for themselves step by step new points of understanding." Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 217:145 D '67 200w

ESHUGBAYI, EZEKIEL A. Olode the hunter, and other tales from Nigeria. See Courlander, H.

ESTEP, WILLIAM R. Baptists and Christian unity. 200p $4.95 Broadman

262 Christian unity. Baptists 67-12169

The professor of church history at Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary "traces the ecumenical ideal from the church fathers through the World Council of Churches. After a discussion of Catholic ecumenism, the . . . Protestant councils are analyzed. The second half of the text deals with Baptists who witness within the WCC, and those who witness outside." (Choice)

"Major aim is to provide Baptists with a 'more complete picture of ecumenicity in all its varied hues.' The non-Baptist reader, however, will become better informed about the diverse responses of various Baptist conferences. . . . [The] study is particularly significant in its treatment of the fundamentalist ecumenical structures, which are generally overlooked. The development of the Landmark Movement and the role of the Southern Baptists are given rather full treatment. Here we see the issues, representative of the Radical Reformation and the left-wing of the Puritan Revolt, that continue to challenge the perspective of the more churchly traditions. . . . Clearly written and well organized."

Choice 5:358 My '68 160w

"[The author] apparently intends his book to be read by fellow Southern Baptists. His study, however, is neither an antiecumenical polemic, as some might have expected, nor an attempt to persuade his fellow churchmen to get with it. Instead, [it] is an account of the pros and cons which influence Baptist attitudes toward ecumenical involvement. Nonetheless, Estep's cautious neutrality—in addition to accounting for the book's blandness—serves to enhance the negative position with respect to the World and National councils of churches and to the church union movement. . . . Little space is given to what should have been the book's most significant contribution; discussion of the theological issues which divide the Southern Baptists from other Christian bodies. . . . In summary, while Estep implicitly suggests that Southern Baptist exclusivism is legitimate, he does not justify it; indeed, he casts doubt on it by the explanations he offers." J. R. Nelson

Christian Century 84:974 J1 26 '67 340w

ESTERER, ARNULF, K. Discoverer of X ray, Wilhelm Conrad Röntgen. 191p $3.50 Messner

B or 92 Röntgen, Wilhelm Conrad—Juvenile literature. X rays—Juvenile literature

68-14942

"This is the story of the man who achieved what at that time was considered a 'miracle.' [Bibliography. Index.] Grades six to nine." (Best Sell)

"The biography is informative and easy to read, and young readers should enjoy and profit from it."

Best Sell 28:64 My 1 '68 60w

Reviewed by H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 44:446 Ag '68 190w

Reviewed by E. F. Grave

Library J 93:[3313] S 15 '68 240w

ESTES, ELEANOR. The lollipop princess; a play for paper dolls in one act; written and il. by Eleanor Estes. unp $2.50; lib bdg $2.64 Harcourt

812 67-25602

"Originally planned for inclusion in one of the author's . . . stories about the Moffat family, this . . . play was to have been written and performed by Jane for her convalescent brother. . . . The Lollipop Princess, an only child, has desperate need of a new flavor in lollipops. Naturally a Prince Charming produces the flavor sensation." (Sat R) "Grades two to four." (Library J)

"Even without the inspiration of a sick little brother, children could easily produce and perform this fairy-tale drama, using the author's amusing sketches as guides to costuming and props and perhaps even adding their own variations or embellishments in the form of music or song." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 43:760 D '67 160w

"Illustrations and script for the paper-doll play have a childlike, ingenious quality which will amuse adults as an example of the kind of spontaneous production that children invent for their own entertainment. However, it does not succeed as a picture book, and is unnecessary for young dramatists who ought to be encouraged to invent their own play-adaptations. The only valid audience for this would seem to be insatiable Moffat fans." N. Y. Orr

Library J 92:4602 D 15 '67 130w

"The illustrations, wonderfully stiff, have ■ guileless charm. The plot is one that children might indeed compile from known examples. . . . The directions as well as the dialogue have the right touch, as when the King is instructed to talk importantly, like a superintendent of schools, or when the Chef-Cook lapses from court language to pronto-Moffat, 'Alack, alas! What, oh, what's to be done? For goodness sake!' Diverting to read, this is a nice play that nine-to-eleven-year-olds can stage for younger children." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 50:45 N 11 '67 180w

ETS, MARIE HALL. Talking without words (I can. Can you?) written and il. by Marie Hall Ets. unp $2.75; lib bdg $2.73 Viking

68-27568

The author-artist who won the Caldecott Award for Nine Days to Christmas (BRD 1960) here illustrates twenty-eight "gestures that show various situations in which young children [communicate without speech]. . . . Preschool to grade two." (Library J)

Reviewed by Anne Izard

Book World p5 (children's issue) N 3 '68 70w

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:285 N 22 '68 40w

"A delightfully effective presentation of communication through gestures. . . . A refreshing book, which lends itself well to language enrichment programs as well as individual and group enjoyment." Barbara Gibson

Library J 93:3956 O 15 '68 80w

"[The book has an] old-fashioned flavor and old-fashioned price. . . . Pleasantly didactic [in] fashion. . . . [The author proves] that gesture is often more eloquent than speech. The lesson has its charms but is overlong." S. G. Lanes

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p69 N 3 '68 70w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:46 N 9 '68 90w

EURICH, ALVIN C., ed. Campus 1980; the shape of the future in American higher education; ed. by Alvin C. Eurich and the staff of the Academy for educational development. 327p $6.95 Delacorte press

378.73 Colleges and universities—U.S. Education, Higher 68-20109

Seventeen American educators seek to project future probabilities in American higher education. They discuss such topics as the community college in 1980; the future undergraduate curriculum; higher education and the national interest; a technology of instruction; and other aspects. Contributors include David Riesman, Clark Kerr, J. W. Gardner, Christopher Jencks, Nevitt Sanford and William Birenbaum.

Christian Century 85:1177 S 18 '68 50w

"The book is fairly arbitrarily thrown together; many of its essays are snippets from longer works; there is little harmony of intent or conclusion on the part of its authors; and too many of them write in the cold-blooded jargon of the academic bureaucrat. What saves the book is the profound common sense, the analytical substance, and the devastating insights of a few of its contributors." C. M. Curtis

Christian Science Monitor p9 D 26 '68 650w

"Each essay is on a topic with which its writer is closely associated, but is viewed from the broadest possible angle. All of the writers attempt to envisage the nature of higher education 12 years from now and its place in the larger society. Some make sober prognostications based on present trends, while others give vent to their imagination and recommend way-out possibilities they would like to see come about. . . . While Dr. Eurich's book will find its greatest audience among educators, the informed layman will also find it interesting." S. L. Hopkinson

Library J 93:4290 My 15 '68 160w

Reviewed by F. H. Horn

N Y Times Bk R p6 O 27 '68 1050w

EURICH, A. C.—Continued

"In a chapter on the future of the undergraduate curriculum, Lewis Mayhew mixes his predictions with a considerable amount of wishful thinking. . . . Logan Wilson offers a perceptive discussion of 'Higher Education and the National Interest.' Other contributors discuss the relation of higher education to the cities and to the world. One chapter deals . . . with continuing education. Some of the chapters stand almost in isolation from the others—perhaps it is inevitable that a book with sixteen authors will lack cohesiveness—but if this volume has one dominant theme it is that a way must be found of redirecting the interest of university professors to the education of students." Paul Woodring
Sat R 51:69 S 21 '68 100w

EURICH, NELL. Science in utopia; ■ mighty design. 332p $7.95 Harvard univ. press 321 Utopias 67-14339

"This book presents a view of seventeenth-century utopias, chiefly but not exclusively English, which were concerned to include science and technology in their schemes for society." (Yale R) Bibliography. Index.

"The focus is on the utopian writers of the 17th century—Campanella, Andrea, Bacon, Hartlib, Cowley, Glanvill, among others—and upon the impact of the emerging scientific Weltanschauung on their ideal constructs. The analysis is literary and textual, rather than sociological and comparative. A concluding chapter which attempts to relate the early modern to the contemporary utopias does not succeed in placing them in any clear perspective or coherent relationship. . . . Eurich has made a valuable contribution to the literature on utopias and her work is characterized by an impressive erudition. Recommended for graduate libraries."

Choice 4:1231 Ja '68 160w

"A pleasantly written, unassuming book. . . . [However,] the author's first-hand knowledge of her sources is too limited; she therefore has to rely far too much on secondary authorities, and even here there are bad gaps. . . . The general result of this excessive reliance on modern works is that this book adds very little to what is already known." D. P. Walker
N Y Rev of Books 9:38 D 21 '67 210w

"Against a background involving the Gilgamesh, Old Testament prophecies, heavenly visions from the Christian Apocrypha, as well as the classical texts on utopia and the earthly paradise, Mrs. Eurich makes the scientific element of late-Renaissance utopias stand out in high relief. . . . For science is important in this literature, as Campanella's Città del sole and Bacon's New Atlantis sufficiently demonstrate, in ways significantly different. . . . Mrs. Eurich's last chapter, 'Utopias in Perspective,' reviews her materials and looks to the future, as her utopists did, upon a world increasingly technologized and, I think, increasingly scientific also. She sees that future as invented by her utopists: though this seems a strong assertion to me, it is true that they found the literary devices to domesticate the values of science in fiction." R. L. Colie
Yale R 57:282 D '67 1400w

EURIPIDES. The Trojan women. See Sartre, J. P.

EVANS, BERGEN, ed. Dictionary of quotations; coll. and arr. and with comments by Bergen Evans. 2029p $15 Delacorte press bk.
808.88 Quotations 68-14825

This volume is arranged alphabetically. There is a typical index which is followed by the main section of quotations under topical headings which are arranged in chronological order to show the development in an idea. Index of authors. Subject index.

"For quotes, we have quote-books, of which Bergen Evans' is one of the best. . . . Each key element in a quotation has to be indexed; elaborate cross-referencing is of the essence, since most of us garble things over the years. Bergen Evans is as good here as the [Oxford Dictionary of Quotations, BRD 1941]. . . . But Evans is very much better than the Oxford book in not allowing us to read instant Emerson or Carlyle or Ecclesiastes. He refuses to arrange his quote-stuff under authors' names; instead he has an alphabetical parade of topics. . . . Immense subject index—the structure is very satisfactory. Of the content, one can only say that it's a hard heart that will grumble at omissions. . . . This is a very good book indeed—exact, encyclopaedic, human, humorous, wise, urbane, American, universal and, at 15 dollars, ludicrously, inexpensive." Anthony Burgess

Book World p5 Ap 21 '68 1100w

"The fascinating odds and ends of wit, information, and opinion that constantly creep into italics between his entries obviously give Dr. Evans as much pleasure as they will the reader. Thanks to them [this] is a book for reading as well as reference. . . . The new dictionary includes contemporaries—Churchill, James Thurber, Langston Hughes, Don Marquis are among them and so is MacArthur for his 'I shall return' pronouncement. . . . Its clear type, its entries sensibly arranged under topics; the clear labeling of each page make Dr. Evans's dictionary simple to use." Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p19 Ap 4 '68 900w

Reviewed by B. H. Smeaton
Library J 93:2471 Je 15 '68 230w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon
Sat R 51:44 My 18 '68 100w

EVANS, FRANK B. Pennsylvania politics, 1872-1877: a study in political leadership. 360p il $5
Pa. hist. & mus. comm.

320.9748 Pennsylvania—Politics and government. Republican party 67-66003

In this "description, citing Pennsylvania newspapers and pertinent manuscripts, Evans explains the why as well as the what of all levels of Pennsylvania politics in a period when there was almost constant political campaigning. . . . [He analyzes] the disputed election of 1876 . . . [and tells of] the role of the two most prominent Pennsylvanians in the crisis: Secretary of War J. Donald Cameron, son of boss Simon Cameron; and Sam Randall, Democratic Speaker of the House of Representatives." (Am Hist R)

"Since this era was Republican dominated, the emphasis is on that party, but the Democrats and the third parties are not neglected. Worth reading is the author's analysis of newspapers in the state and of the leaders of the Philadelphia and the Allegheny County rings. . . . Evans believes that Republican ascendancy should be ascribed to Pennsylvania's adherence to two principles: the Union and the protective tariff. Devotion to these issues and firm loyalty to his friends gave Simon Cameron his hold on the state, a hold that on his retirement enabled him to pass on the mantle of leadership to his son. . . . No matter how entertaining present-day politics may seem, dead politicians in overwhelming numbers do not make for the liveliest reading. Nor is all the information presented entirely new. For the most part, however, Evans succeeds in his task: one may disagree with some explanations, but the results of his careful research should prove valuable both for Pennsylvanians and those assessing the national scene." D. D. Gondos
Am Hist R 73:931 F '68 350w

"Another segment of Pennsylvania's political history, one of the most eventful, now has been covered by modern scholarship. Avoiding tedious detail, Evans has produced a highly readable account which anyone with an interest in state or national politics of the 1870s will find useful and absorbing. The story is complex, and the chapters occasionally overlap; but the analysis is clear and convincing. . . . Evans reconstructs the story well but does not settle, for example, the question of whether Simon Cameron's Republican machine depended on corruption. . . . [He] finds that Cameron and his followers, by concentrating on party victory as an end in itself, forfeited the national political influence and recognition which Pennsylvania deserved." W. H. Russell
J Am Hist 54:687 D '67 460w

EVANS, HOWARD ENSIGN. Life on a little-known planet; il. by Arnold Clapman. 318p $7.95 Dutton

595.7 Insects 68-25771

The author of Wasp Farm (BRD 1963) writes about man's most numerous neighbors here on earth—the insects, describing the life histories of cockroaches, bedbugs, flies, locusts and others. Bibliography.

Reviewed by J. D. Buffington
Library J 93:4573 D 1 '68 160w

"[Dr. Evans] is equally fascinated by laboratory experiments such as the training of headless roaches and the flights of migrating dragonflies. . . . This combination of the lore of the laboratory and the open air is something that will enrich us all. . . . Each of the problems considered in these essays is separate, and yet taken together they tell us a good deal about insect life. . . . In spite of the purple prose, this is an excellent example of scientific literature, equally acceptable to specialists and laymen." J. Z. Young

N Y Rev of Books 11:37 N 21 '68 290w

"Evans, a skilled writer in the unlikely guise of a Harvard University entomologist, has the wit and charm to make us care about the life-styles of locusts and bedbugs. . . . The 'little-known planet' of the title is the earth; and Evans is pleading for a greater understanding of earth life—even unto the smallest bug. Seldom, if ever has the case for the natural sciences—and for conservation—been presented with such reasoned, convincing eloquence. . . . What distinguishes this effort is its clarity and its sanity." R. W. Stock

N Y Times Bk R p16 N 17 '68 900w

EVANS, HUMPHREY. The adventures of Li Chi; a modern Chinese legend. 222p $4.95 Dutton

67-11362

The author "tries his hand at creating a 'legendary' figure who outsmarts the Communists with clever maneuvers. Li Chi is supposed to have come from a 'proper' or poor peasant background, richly endowed with artistic talent. Time and again he used his art, directly or indirectly, as the vehicle with which to carry his criticisms of Party policies, or to make life miserable for Party cadres." (Library J)

Reviewed by E. A. Dooley

Best Sell 26:433 Mr 1 '67 850w

"Dealing with the lower echelon of the Party's bureaucratic structure in China, this book presents a more truthful and detailed account of life in Red China than many of the reports put together by foreign journalists after their whirlwind trip through China's major cities. Evans is a veteran China-watcher, working in Hong Kong, who has had extensive contact with refugee-informants from China. . . . Cast in the form of fiction, this book is in reality, a composite biography of at least four separate stories of the superhuman achievements (and weaknesses) of a new breed of 'cultural heroes' from Red China, usually selfless Party workers who set out on deeds and duties of extraordinary proportions against overwhelming odds. Equally legendary and real is Li Chi [the anti-hero] whose resourcefulness, good humor, and sang-froid always enable him to get out of difficulties with the Party cadres. . . . Skeptical readers can . . . turn to press accounts of the Proletarian Cultural Revolution currently going on in China, with its frequent breakdowns of communication and the overturning of Party directives. Evans' book shows signs of careful research; it is also entertaining."

Choice 4:1237 Ja '68 220w

"Although nothing spectacular, this book is occasionally amusing. Mr. Evans's attempt to 'connect' the life of his legendary hero by providing links between episodes has resulted in limiting the range of exploits." Wen Chao Chen

Library J 92:1031 Mr 1 '67 150w

Reviewed by Owen Lattimore

New Statesman 75:875 Je 28 '68 70w

"Since Mr. Evans's book is unlikely to find its way back into China, we must conclude that the reason for inventing this legend (or recording it, if we accept the myth that a legend of Li Chi already exists in China) must be to paint a picture of China for us, the outsiders. Here the book fails lamentably. Must we really believe that all cadres in the Communist Party are stupid, self-seeking, unintelligent louts who join the party for 'material benefits and economic security'? . . . After fifty or so pages the mind ceases to be attracted by the pleasant fairytale stories and is repelled by the underlying current of propaganda. . . . The real story remains to be told. How do the Chinese survive as individuals in their present society?"

TLS p603 Je 6 '68 650w

EVANS, JOHN W. U.S. trade policy; new legislation for the next round; pub. for the Council on for. relations. 112p $3.95 Harper

338.973 U.S.—Economic policy. U.S.—Commercial policy 67-15671

"The principal purpose of the book [is] to survey those policy issues that must be resolved in determining the sort of legislation that will be needed as a successor to the Trade Expansion Act of 1962." (Pref) Index.

"In the haste of 'urgency' this volume proposing post-Kennedy Round legislation was written before the disappointing conclusion of the Kennedy Round and, hence, does not fully draw upon the lessons of that exercise in frustration. This caveat aside, Evans does a good job of briefly sketching the background to and experience of the Kennedy Round. The book will be of use only to beginning students, being too brief for those with a serious interest in the subject."

Choice 5:838 S '68 160w

Reviewed by Alex Campbell

New Repub 156:32 Je 3 '67 220w

EVANS, M. STANTON. The future of conservatism; from Taft to Reagan and beyond. 304p $5.95 Holt

329.6 Republican party. Conservatism

68-12044

"From an analysis of population trends, intellectual tendencies, the dominant mood among young Americans, power relationships within the Republican party, and recent election results, the author [predicts] . . . a continuing increase of conservative strength in coming elections. This book covers the events, personalities, and issues which mark the resurgence of Republicanism since the late 1940's, [and examines] . . . the growth of Republican power in . . . the South and the West. Mr. Evans feels that in the United States there are more conservatives than Republicans, that to maintain our two-party system the Republicans must provide a legitimate alternative to the Democrats. . . . [The author is] an associate editor and regular contributor to National Review." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Evans himself writes as a believing conservative. But nowhere in the book is the nature of American conservatism defined or its contradictions analyzed. A devotion to laissez-faire economics, a dislike of increased federal power, a fervent anti-Communism accompanied by a measure of xenophobia—these, on the face of it, seem to be its tenets. . . . [It is the author's] view that a winning political coalition based on conservative principles (and still more on conservative prejudices) is possible in the future. Vietnam, racial clashes, inflation and the threat to the dollar may produce transformations in the familiar parties and the rise of new forces in political life. The interest of this book lies in the light it throws on one area of American politics from which these forces might emerge." Anthony Hartley

Book World p3 Je 23 '68 600w

"Indianapolis News editor Evans has a bad case of the grumps against liberal Republicanism and belongs to the choice-not-echo school of political ideology. He converts Goldwaterism into a kind of victory for his point of view (despite the ballot count of 1964) on the ground that Goldwater helped the G.O.P. gain a foothold in the South. In assessing the bright future of bipartisan conservatism (which is eventually to make its home in Republicanism) he ignores the fact that what he calls 'new conservative strength' was actually backlash voting."

Christian Century 85:688 My 22 '68 90w

"[The author] has noted the liberals' solicitude for the health of the GOP, and he has some sharp things to say about it. . . . To the question, 'is there a conservative—or liberal—majority?' he points out that there are in fact half a dozen majorities in our complex society, and that several of them are squarely conservative. . . . Not least among the charms of Evans' prose is its serenity. He is frankly partisan, but he never blows his cool; the opposition case is always fairly stated—and then neatly skewered with a wit whose dryness would do credit to a martini." W. A. Rusher

Nat R 20:659 Jl 2 '68 1500w

Reviewed by W. C. McWilliams

N Y Times Bk R p3 O 20 '68 700w

Reviewed by K. W. Thompson

Sat R 51:38 O 12 '68 450w

EVANS, M. STANTON. The lawbreakers: America's number one domestic problem [by] M. Stanton Evans and Margaret Moore. 288p $5.95 Arlington house

364 Crime and criminals—U.S. U.S.—Moral conditions 68-12136

"The first two-thirds of this book consider the disintegrating forces in our society. . . .

EVANS, M. S.—Continued

[The] thesis is that internal restraints, based on religious faith, tradition and common custom and consensus, which used to guide a citizen's behavior, have been eroded by our reliance on positive law, the coercive power of the State and putting most of the blame on poor material conditions." (Best Sell) "Part II of the book contains a . . . description of the Indianapolis Anti-Crime Crusade." (Library J) Index.

"[The author's] thesis seems to me to be fundamentally true. Unfortunately the preachy and moralistic tone . . . will make it difficult for them to convince people who do not hold the same political philosophy as they do. . . . The second part of the book is much different and very helpful." W. H. Schweder
Best Sell 27:434 F 15 '68 600w

"A presentation of concern over the drift in America from a society of interrelated communities to a conglomerate of uninvolved residents. . . . The authors suggest reemphasis of a concept that has existed since before Hammurabi, that of making people responsible for their actions. In addition, they cite the Indianapolis story of community action that reduced crime and delinquency, involving individual as well as group initiative. Although journalistic in style rather than that of a scientific discipline, this does not detract from its authenticity nor the validity of the source data. Well suited for those still concerned with both sides of a question; particularly for courses in criminology, sociology, social sciences, or social problems." Good reference material for topical debates."
Choice 5:878 S '68 170w

"[The authors] point to permissive child training and progressive education (both of which are nearly extinct) and to the 'new morality' as basic factors underlying crime. In the process they misinterpret Durkheim and ignore the logical conclusion that, if they are correct, crime rates should be highest in those classes where they are lowest—the middle classes where these 'causes' have had most impact. Predictably, they are opposed to police review boards, recent United States Supreme Court rulings protecting the rights of the accused, and anti-gun laws; they favor capital punishment and severe penalties. They confuse judicial incompetence and corruption with the bogey of judicial leniency. Throughout the book, they over-generalize, argue by illustration, and ignore evidence contrary to their opinions except to set up straw men to knock down." M. A. Forslund
Library J 93:767 F 15 '68 200w

"By tying, to some extent, crimes such as murder and rape to marijuana and premarital intercourse, the authors weaken their case. Although they properly write 'that the state should not be in the business of policing private ethics,' they allow a great deal of elasticity in determining where 'private' leaves off and the 'public peace' begins. Such things are as rust to their really iron-clad chapters, dealing with such topics as the sickeningly depraved condition of our courts and the state of welfare in the United States. . . . If, however, the authors' discussion of the cause of crime is open to debate, their cure . . . is beyond question effective. . . . The Lawbreakers is studied with examples of the [Indianapolis Anti-Crime] Crusade's effective work." J. D. Kirwan
Nat R 20:510 My 21 '68 1100w

EVANS, OLIVER. Anais Nin; with a pref. by Harry T. Moore. 221p $4.95 Southern Ill. univ. press

813 Nin, Anais 67-11703

This critique of Miss Nin's short stories and novels takes "into account the development of her art, along with an analysis of the primary symbols, metaphors, and images of her prose." (Library J)

"Evans indirectly employs much biographical information. His interpretations make much more palatable for the unaffected reader what might seem like the excessively emotional maunderings of an overly sensitive feminine ego. For the uninitiated but sympathetic reader, Evans supplies clear but occasionally repetitious interpretations. Nin's writings—freighted with symbolism, surrealist effects, and psychoanalytic themes—can stand analysis. Evans has done a clear and competent job."

Choice 5:950 O '68 140w

"The strongest point of the study is [Evans'] sensitive approach to Anais Nin's works. . . . A few objections might be registered, however. . . . [Evans] omits altogether an analysis of Miss Nin's first book [D. H. Lawrence: An Unprofessional Study]. . . . He has a tendency to quote excessively from reviews, an unnecessary device since he is such an astute critic. . . . Despite these very minor flaws, this critical study is very good, indeed. Recommended for academic collections and for many general collections." Duane Schneider
Library J 93:1899 My 1 '68 250w

EVANS, RICHARD I. Dialogue with Erik Erikson. 142p $4.95 Harper

150.19 Erikson, Erik Homburger. Psychoanalysis 67-13707

"Using the question-and-answer technique Professor Evans who teaches psychology at the University of Houston . . . elicits many of Erik Erikson's concepts, among [them his] 'Eight Stages of Man,' his 'Cross-cultural Theories,' and the contributions of his psychoanalytic approaches toward an understanding of the current human situation." (Library J) Bibliography of the writings of Erik H. Erikson.

Reviewed by W. H. Gass
Book Week p6 My 21 '67 1150w

"[This book] is an exciting vehicle through which it is possible to sample many of the major concepts of one of the world's notable contributors to personality theory. [It] is a facile way to introduce students to Eriksonian theories. As a teaching device, both the film, on which this book is based, and the printed conversation can be extremely useful. Such primary source material can—hopefully—stimulate the viewer and reader to go to the original works of the interviewee. [Evans] is a knowledgeable and intelligent interviewer, as well as an able editor. The National Science Foundation is sponsoring this series of dialogues."

Choice 4:1446 F '68 150w

Reviewed by Roderick Nordell
Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 7 '68 450w

Reviewed by Louis De Rosis
Library J 92:2590 J1 '67 80w

"This, the third in Richard I. Evans's series of interviews with prominent behavioral scientists, is somewhat less successful than its predecessor . . . 'Dialogue with Erich Fromm' [BRD 1966]. . . . [In this] volume, despite careful structuring and much forethought, Evans's questions are too long and Erikson's answers too brief to be satisfying. The most informative sections are not the dialogue but Evans's narrative preface and conclusion. At its best, the dialogue illuminates Erikson's debt to Freud as well as his ability to reach beyond Freudianism. . . . As a corollary to Erikson's work the dialogue has value; read without previous knowledge of Erikson's theories it would be more frustrating than fruitful."

N Y Times Bk R p22 J1 9 '67 180w

EVANS, RICHARD I. Resistance to innovation in higher education; a social psychological exploration focused on television and the establishment [by] Richard I. Evans in collaboration with Peter K. Leppman; foreword by Nevitt Sanford. 198p $7.50 Jossey-Bass

371.33 Television in education 67-28627

An examination and evaluation of the attitudes of members of the university community to instructional television viewing (ITV), based on "a study of the attitudes of 319 of 400 faculty members of an . . . urban center of higher education (identified only as 'Metro University') with regard to their professional backgrounds, their academic backgrounds, and their assessments of various teaching techniques. . . . [The authors found] more resistance in certain disciplines, primarily in the humanities rather than in the technological fields. On the other hand . . . the professor who favored ITV tended to extend his interest beyond the university . . . and was often more productive in such non-teaching activities as writing and research." (J Higher Ed)

"Both authors provide a general discussion on the nature of educational innovation and the response of faculty, students, administrators, and the general public to innovation. It is particularly noteworthy that they have buttressed their theoretical position with the specific findings of research on resistance to the use of instructional television. The presentation of this data is a most useful extension of contemporary research regarding American higher education. Highly recommended for all students of American higher education."

Choice 5:1014 O '68 100w

"The authors clearly recognize the tentativeness of their conclusions, particularly with regard to their main objective of throwing light on the whole process of innovation in higher education; a process which they describe as a neglected area of social psychological inquiry. . . . Most university speculation about the best methods of communication has been covered with the mold of mythology. . . . [This] book should provide [an] excellent curative for that old blight." J. H. Trueman

J Higher Ed 39:414 O '68 340w

EVANS, W. MCKEE. Ballots and fence rails; reconstruction on the lower Cape Fear. 314p maps $7.50 Univ. of N.C. press

975.6 Reconstruction. North Carolina—History, Local 67-17036

"In this study of Reconstruction in the Cape Fear area [the author] . . . chronicles events from the military campaign of 1863 and the fall of Wilmington through occupation and radical reconstruction down to the restoration of all-white rule and a return to ante-bellum values at the close of the century." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Evans has used his sources well; his short biographical sketches are good; the socioeconomic analyses are meaningful; and his writing is clear and clean, though at times a trifle flippant. In this good book he shows beyond doubt that the right to vote cannot alone diffuse political power and that the patterns of Reconstruction at the local level were not always the same as those at the state level." C. C. Mooney

Am Hist 73:927 F '68 650w

Choice 5:256 Ap '68 140w

"The book won and deserved the 1966 award of the American Association for State and Local History. Except for some repetition in identifying individuals, the study is a model in researching, writing, and interpreting local history." R. W. Patrick

J Am Hist 54:678 D '67 300w

"Unlike most Reconstruction studies, this one spotlights a small section quite distinct from the mainstream of Southern activities, although many reactions here were typical of the entire South. This is local history in the best sense of that term, scholarly, informed, well written, unbiased, and illuminating. Although it may not appeal to the general reader, this book is an excellent example of the fully documented, small-scale historical study that enriches the total canvas. Recommended for academic libraries." Rice Estes

Library J 92:2402 Je 15 '67 120w

EVARTS, HAL G. Smugglers' road. 192p lib bdg $3.63 Scribner

68-12515

"Because of his difficulties with juvenile authorities young Kern Dawson is put to work in the small Mexican village of La Ribera, helping in a clinic under the direction of Sergeant Bull Kalinski. The young boy rapidly fits into the work of the clinic and then becomes involved in solving the mystery of smuggling that is going on in the area. Art objects are covered over and disguised. Kern matures through the work and the cooperation involved in solving the mystery." (Best Sell) "Grades eight to ten." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:64 My 1 '68 90w

"The harsh beauty of the Baja Peninsula makes an exotic setting for the taut drama of this fast-paced narrative. And Kern's struggle with his own problems is realistic and believable." J. H. Clarke

Book World p24 (children's issue) My 5 '68 140w

Reviewed by Paul Heins

Horn Bk 44:427 Ag '68 240w

Reviewed by L. N. Gerhardt

Library J 93:1809 Ap 15 '68 190w

"[Kern's] stubborn resolve to make good in the eyes of his supervisor, a tough ex-Marine, and the part he plays in exposing a ring of smugglers are deftly interwoven into an action-packed, smartly paced adventure story, although other characters are acceptable in their roles, this is Kern's story all the way. The young reader can identify with him from the opening sentence to the last, particularly since character development is accomplished through incident, rather than exposition, and positive values, implied, not stated, are therefore convincing and palatable. Involvement with the setting is also encouraged by the author's evident appreciation of the beauty of the rugged locale and the dignity of the village people." Della Thomas

N Y Times Bk R p24 Je 16 '68 230w

EVERGOOD, PHILIP. The graphic work of Philip Evergood; sel. drawings and complete prints by Lucy R. Lippard; foreword by Abram Lerner; poem by James A. Michener. 159p $10 Crown

760

65-17022

A biographical account of the work of a contemporary American artist which is "illustrated with black-and-white plates, 121 of Evergood's drawings, and 56 of his prints." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The quality of reproduction is high, and the graphic material gives the reader an idea of the artist's inner world of reflection and experience. Good addition to public and college libraries, particularly undergraduate ones."

Choice 4:1232 Ja '68 80w

"[Lippard], who is New York editor of Art International, has composed a well-written, appreciative account of the [work] of a major American artist. The evolution of [Evergood's] etchings, from the mystical, Blake-like productions of the 1920's to the bitterly critical output of the 1930's, illustrates the development of this representational painter of social problems. A certain exuberance and love of fantasy give his work a classic quality uncommon in social realism. This is a handsomely produced example of American book-making. Recommended." R. N. Van Note

Library J 92:566 F 1 '67 110w

EVERGREEN review reader, 1957-1967; a ten-year anthology; Barney Rosset, editor. 776p il col il $20 Grove

808.8

68-22005

This anthology contains excerpts from the special issues of the Review on the San Francisco Renaissance, Mexico, and Germany; fiction by Mailer, Southern, Burroughs and others; poetry by Evtushenko, Ho Chi Minh, Rexroth, and Olson. "Drama is represented by Ionesco, Arrabal, Gregory Corso and Brendan Behan, with critical essays by Harold Pinter and Jan Kott. Memoirs, biography, philosophy, reverie, . . . reviews of films and jazz . . . [are included as well as] photo-essays . . . [and a] series of drawings by George Grosz and a set of Russian revolutionary posters." (Nation)

Reviewed by Dorothy Curley

Library J 93:4300 N 15 '68 70w

"This handsome, heavy (about 10 pounds), expensive, very slick and very glossy Reader seems to signal the formal incorporation of The Evergreen Review into the national literary scene. . . . To the philosophic its hefty presentability may serve as a reminder that every avant-garde, no matter how good, is eventually overtaken. To anyone at all the anthology is a staggeringly impressive collection of talents, a browser's delight. . . . [The reader] marvels at all the fine writers that [the magazine] has befriended in the last ten years. . . . Most of the book does consist of excerpts from the now familiar and distinctively mad world of Grove Press. . . . There is, of course, much other forbidden fruit besides Grove's hard core. . . . One regrets that the book doesn't make space for any of those fascinating letters to the editor . . . from the beleaguered years of the magazine." Max Byrd

Nation 207:535 N 18 '68 900w

"This anthology dramatically demonstrates that far from being the vehicle for cheap pornography or eccentric experiments that it was once widely regarded to be, this magazine has long been one of the most important literary periodicals in the United States. . . . In its first year alone, Evergreen printed important works by Samuel Beckett, Jean-Paul Sartre,

EVERGREEN—Continued

Eugène Ionesco and Albert Camus, and introduced its readers to beat writers Jack Kerouac, Allen Ginsberg and Lawrence Ferlinghetti. Later, Evergreen was to add to its honor role William Burroughs, Jorge Borges, Friedrich Dürrenmatt and Jean Genet—surely four of the best writers of the century. . . . Recoiling from today's cool, hard, impersonal fiction, the reader may well turn, nostalgically, to [this] testimonial to a vanishing period when some of our best authors sought to deliver themselves, alive and burning, onto the printed page." Edmund White
Newsweek 72:125 N 18 '68 700w

EVERS, MRS MEDGAR. For us, the living, by Mrs Medgar Evers with William Peters. 378p $5.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Evers, Medgar Wiley. Negroes—Civil rights 67-22454

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 5:256 Ap '68 200w

Reviewed by Anne Kincaid
Library J 93:895 F 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:85 My 11 '68 200w

EVERSON, WILLIAM. See Antoninus, Brother

EVERSON, WILLIAM K. The art of W. C. Fields. 232p il $7.50 Bobbs
791.43 Fields, William Claude 67-25179

This is a discussion of the career of the American film star, including all his surviving movies from the earliest, "Pool Sharks" to the last, "Sensations of 1945."

"The value of this well-illustrated book lies in its patient reconstruction of Fields's career. Everson has read widely and has viewed all the surviving films. He writes judiciously and patiently corrects the errors of earlier accounts. He thus provides the material for an understanding of the development of one great American comedian." Oscar Handlin
Atlantic 221:118 Ja '68 250w

"As irritating as anything else in this book is Mr. Everson's bit-part vision. He drops names no one could ever lift. . . . In this soft book . . . there are no insights, no principles, no ideas. There is only buffmanship, a crazy sort of wine connoisseur snob rhetoric. . . . In lieu of poetics there is précis, in lieu of theory synopsis. . . . Commentary, where it exists at all, comes in the form of nonsense, . . . non sequitur, . . . and sentimental speculation." Stanley Elkin
Book World p4 D 24 '67 1600w

Reviewed by G. D. McDonald
Library J 93:1159 Mr 15 '68 180w

"Everson has chosen sedulously to describe every Fields film still extant. The result is that episodes of the utmost hilarity on film will leave his readers . . . wondering what all the fuss is about. . . . [This book] has a lot of very perceptive things to say about the techniques of film comedy in general and about Fields's comedies in particular. . . . [However] divorced from its sight gags, props, and routines, a line like the famous 'And it ain't a fit night out for man nor beast' goes over like the proverbial lead balloon, despite Everson's valiant efforts to breathe life into it." Jay Jacobs
Reporter 38:49 Ja 25 '68 450w

EVIL: essays by Carl Kerényi [and others] tr. by Ralph Manheim and Hildegard Nagel; ed. by the Curatorium of the C. G. Jung inst, Zürich. 265p $8.50 Northwestern univ. press 111.8 Good and evil 66-25369

These papers "which appeared in German in 1961, were originally lectures given in 1959-60. The expression of archetypal form of evil in the individual and in the collectivity is examined over a wide range of areas by European specialists. Mythology, Eastern religion, Antichrist, fairy tales, cinema, philosophy, psychology, and creativity are the major fields in which the Jungian spotlight is used to illuminate the psychic depths and reveal . . . the portrayal and function of evil." (Choice) Index.

"[A] paper entitled 'Aspects of Evil in the Creative' by Karl Schmid is one of the best. All of the essays have relevance to contemporary issues and are not addressed to antiquarians. The papers are written in an erudite, uncluttered, and fluid style which makes them easy to read. Anyone seriously concerned with contemporary problems of society should find this volume a valuable catalyst. Readers with a Jungian background will capture the essence of these essays most readily but may not necessarily profit the most. . . . One essay has bibliography, bibliographic footnotes in the others. Most highly recommended."

Choice 5:38 Mr '68 200w

"The authors include two Jungian analysts, a classical mythologist, two historians of religion, a film critic, a philosopher and a professor of literature. The essays vary in quality, but two are noteworthy—Dr. Marie-Louise von Franz's 'The Problem of Evil in Fairy Tales,' and one by Dr. Liliane Frey-Rohn. In her long and significant essay, Dr. Frey-Rohn discusses the nature of evil as seen by Jungian psychology. According to this view, evil and its accompanying sense of guilt are innate aspects of the psyche and must be consciously accepted to achieve wholeness of personality. For those wishing to contemplate the paradoxical problem of evil in depth this book offers a good beginning." E. F. Edinger

Library J 92:2792 Ag '67 140w

EVOY, JOHN J. The real woman in religious life, by John J. Evoy and Van F. Christoph. 240p $5 Sheed

248.8 Monasticism and religious orders for women. Women and religion 67-13773

Among other themes in these conferences for meditation, the authors discuss "the vows of poverty, chastity and obedience, hinging their counsel on events in the life of Christ." (Critic)

"The twenty-four conferences . . . given by this Jesuit team to a group of religious women make no great contribution to the on-going renewal. . . . [Although the authors discuss the topics sensibly] they show no special insight. The religious women might spend their time to greater advantage considering what many of their own insightful counterparts have to say."

Critic 26:84 F '68 130w

"[This book] will be particularly welcome in the convent libraries, and larger public libraries may find it a good addition to their religious reading collection. The laity, especially laywomen, will find it a valuable source for meditation and gratifying for spiritual reading, especially such sections as 'Hell,' and those passages concerning Christ's Passion. The conferences have Christ's life as a guiding theme, but the message is clearly directed toward development of the 'real woman.'" Elizabeth Nelson

Library J 92:2783 Ag '67 110w

EWEN, FREDERIC. Bertolt Brecht: his life, his art, and his times. 573p il $10 Citadel
B or 92 Brecht, Bertolt 67-25655

This is a study of the life and writings of the poet-playwright which explores Brecht's life and career in Germany before and after World War II and during his wartime years in exile. Bibliography.

Reviewed by F. M. Wassermann
Library J 93:94 Ja 1 '68 220w

"The great thing about Frederic Ewen's luminous biography is that it gently frees Brecht from the bear hugs of the bigots and restores him to us as a whole man, his youth contained in his age, his age in his youth, as is the case with all of us. . . . Primarily a thinker and teacher, Brecht demanded that the writer entertain while he instructs. Ewen, also a born teacher, has enthralingly carried out this dictum, and without any of the embroidery or gossip that so many biographers consider indispensable. . . . In his chapter about the epic theatre Ewen . . . introduces some insights of his own on tragedy, which compel him to find a new category for Brecht's plays." Edith Anderson
Nation 206:310 Mr 4 '68 1550w

"What is particularly striking about Frederic Ewen's biography is that it conveys the excitement, the turmoil and triumph of Brecht's career. . . . Ewen uses Brecht's work—more than 25 plays, opera libretti, a ballet, innumerable poems, a novel, several screen plays, much critical writing—as the pivot around which the personal traits and more emphatically the life of Brecht's time are distinctly traced. With this he brings to his narrative a direct style, a solid literary background, common sense without banality, independent judgment without arrogance. . . . There are revealing passages . . . on Brecht's rehearsal procedure . . . For some reason—perhaps because of his Marxism, a subject on which Ewen is forthright and to the point—the impression many of us have of Brecht is pretty much on the dour side. On behalf of such folk . . . an analogy between Brecht and Voltaire might well be drawn. . . . Ewen's book provides a full profile of a man about whom everything is unexpected." Harold Clurman

N Y Times Bk R p4 D 10 '67 1500w

EWEN, WILLIAM H. Days of the steamboats. 112p il $3.50; lib bdg $3.38 Parents mag. press

386 Steamboats—Juvenile literature 67-7729

"The author invites the reader to imagine that he is on a tour of a steamboat in the early days in the United States. Following general explanation of the boat are chapters which incorporate historic details in the discussion of steamboats from the smallest to the grandest packet, from the Hudson River to inland seas and the Far West. . . . Grade five and up." (Library J)

Horn Bk 43:488 Ag '67 10w [YA]

Reviewed by E. M. Portteus

Library J 92:4259 N 15 '67 120w

"The author of this book, a dedicated steamboat buff and noted collector of steamboat memorabilia, has put together a splendid though mighty sawed-down history of steam transportation on American lakes, rivers and sounds. All the high points are here—from the beginnings to the dreary end. The style is relaxed, graphic, informative—and as cozy as the evening watch in the pilothouse of the Mary Powell above Dobbs Ferry. . . . The illustrations range from romantic to terrifying and are wonderfully done." Richard Bissell

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p24 My 7 '67 170w [YA]

Social Studies 59:190 Ap '68 70w

EXLEY, FREDERICK. A fan's notes; a fictional memoir. 385p $6.95 Harper

67-22514

This "is the story of Mr. Exley, the son of a hero-worshipped high school athlete from upstate New York, doomed by the accepted insanities of America to live out his life as a fan, not just of the New York Giants [and Frank Gifford], toward whom most of his real passion and affection get channeled but of the process of daily survival." (Nation)

"The book is more impressive as a human document than as an artistically achieved work. It is overcrowded and overwritten. . . . But it has a fierce honesty. Exley has chosen a gentleman-of-the-old-school prose, laced with occasional Anglo-Saxon. . . . Though the author circles his materials slowly, shielded by his prose—horror, indignation, passion, humor and commitment ultimately break through. . . . Exley is less successful in trying to identify his story with the story of America; it's a hard thing to do if you're not Norman Mailer, and Exley's rhetoric is too heavily explicit for the job. . . . [He] has sacrificed stylistic niceties and economy for a dogged insistence on his vision. If the vision is not wholly in focus, the effort is admirable." Lucy Rosenthal

Book World p10 O 6 '68 470w

"Mr. Exley's book is very much On the Road [by J. Kerouac, BRD 1957] in perspective. . . . The book is written with thought, patience, and intelligence. In some of the best parts the hero reveals his affection for his parents—something rare in this protesting, black-humored age. The book's fault is its lack of passion, but Mr. Exley has what it takes, and he should develop into a fine novelist. His book is recommended for shelves of modern fiction collections." Allen Cohen

Library J 93:3154 S 15 '68 180w

Reviewed by Sara Blackburn

Nation 207:346 O 7 '68 150w

Reviewed by Rudolph Wurlitzer

New Repub 159:36 N 2 '68 650w

Reviewed by J. P. Sisk

N Y Times Bk R p38 O 6 '68 650w

Time 92:107 O 25 '68 420w

EXMAN, EUGENE. The house of Harper; one hundred and fifty years of publishing. 326p il $8.50 Harper

655.4 Harper, firm, publishers, New York 67-22498

This account of the history of an American publishing company by one of its editors "commemorates the 150th anniversary of the founding of the House. The account [describes] successes in publishing, . . . opportunities passed over, and . . . vicissitudes in the publishing of American and British authors [and] of . . . the magazines, Harpers Bazar (sic), Harper's Weekly, and most recently Harper's (a monthly). . . . Stories of Harper authors, [editors] and artists [are included]." (Best Sell)

Am Lit 40:439 N '68 140w

"Exman joined the publishing house of Harper in 1930 and retired in 1965. . . . [In this volume] his interest is mostly in the years after 1853. . . . This is a book that will amuse and inform, fascinate and intrigue readers of wider range than those merely interested in the publishing business. It is, in fact, a contribution to Americana."

Best Sell 27:298 N 1 '67 190w

"[The author] has aimed at the general reader and this fact will prove a disappointment to the serious student of publishing history, who had hoped for a second in-depth volume picking up where Mr. Exman's excellent The Brothers Harper . . . 1817-1853 [BRD 1965] ended. Nevertheless, the book is a concise, objective, and well written history of one of America's greatest publishing houses, and will be welcomed by both layman and scholar. Recommended for academic and public libraries." M. H. Harris

Library J 92:2768 Ag '67 110w

"[The author] gives an interesting account of the house's wavering financial fortunes in 1896; the influx of J. P. Morgan capital; the reorganization of the company; and the brief but zealous reign of Col. George M. Harvey, the non-Harper manager. The story is brought up through modern times, dominated by Cass Canfield and such editors as Eugene F. Saxon. . . . Edward C. Aswell, who was Thomas Wolfe's editor; and Evan Thomas, who skillfully handled two of the house's hottest recent properties, William Manchester's The Death of a President and Svetlana Alliluyeva's Twenty Letters to a Friend [both BRD 1967]." S. W. Little

Sat R 50:94 N 11 '67 350w

F

FABER, DORIS. The mothers of American presidents. 271p il $5.95 New Am. lib.

920 Presidents—U.S.—Family. Mothers—Biography 68-23843

The author "treats in detail the lives of mothers of 12 Presidents: Rebekah Baines Johnson, Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy, Ida Stover Eisenhower, Martha Young Truman, Sara Delano Roosevelt, Jesse Woodrow Wilson, Louisa Torrey Taft, Martha Bulloch Roosevelt, Eliza Ballou Garfield, Nancy Hanks Lincoln, Abigail Smith Adams, and Mary Ball Washington. There is a brief sketch of each of the other Presidents' mothers." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"A great deal of reading, research and critical judgment went into the making of this book. The author is to be commended for sticking to the facts and their reasonable interpretation in a subject matter that abounds with pious myths or their polar opposites. . . . Many interesting facts are brought to light. . . . All in all, this is a worthwhile study." W. M. Schweder

Best Sell 28:224 S 1 '68 400w

"Miss Faber points out that these women shared several traits: they were quite well educated, deeply religious, married late in life, and coddled and prodded their firstborn sons. Whether these facts are historically significant in the making of a President can be argued and, hence, one may question the value of the book. Still, Miss Faber . . . has conveniently assembled what is known about these women. Her book is recommended for public collections where the general reader will find it appealing; it may be of special interest to mothers." Roberta Wasserman

Library J 93:2649 J1 '68 140w

FABER, DORIS. Petticoat politics; how American women won the right to vote. 192p il $3.95; lib bdg $3.52 Lothrop

324.73 Woman—Suffrage—Juvenile literature. Women in the U.S.—Juvenile literature 67-22599

This book describes how the woman's suffrage movement "began, developed, and was resolved; and emphasizes the qualities which characterized the leaders of the movement." (Horn Bk) Bibliography. Index. "Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

Horn Bk 44:192 Ap '68 120w

"As in Olivia Coolidge's Women's Rights [BRD 1966] and Bill Severn's Free But Not Equal [BRD 1967], the author presents the leaders and their struggles for equality paralleling the Abolitionist Movement. The approach is personal and informal and would probably appeal more to younger girls than do the Coolidge and Severn books. The text of 'The Declaration of Sentiments,' not found in the previous books, is included in full. . . . While her brief imaginary debate between a politician and a professor on the role of women in politics is an interesting addition, the factual material in the Coolidge book . . . makes it still the preferred title." Julia Losinski

Library J 93:880 F 15 '68 130w

FACKENHEIM, EMIL L. The religious dimension in Hegel's thought. 274p $8.50 Ind. univ. press

193 Hegel, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich. Philosophy and religion 68-14601

"The key issue in Hegel's philosophy, and the theme of Fackenheim's work, is the relationship between religious life and philosophical thought. In an examination of Hegel's Phenomenology of Spirit, his Encyclopedia of the Philosophical Sciences, and especially his Lectures on the Philosophy of Religion, Fackenheim tries to show that Hegel ultimately resolves the dualism between religious faith and philosophical knowing. . . . [The author] offers several new interpretations of points in Hegel's doctrine, including the relationship between Nature, Spirit and the Idea." (America) Index.

"While there has been a great renaissance in Hegel scholarship on the Continent in recent years, relatively little has been published in English. Prof. Fackenheim, of Toronto, has written an excellent study . . . [whose] major contribution is its description of the transfiguration of faith into philosophy, as it occurs in Hegel's lectures. The difficulties of Hegel's text are not easily disposed of, however, and this reader still has reservations about the success, and even the intent, of Hegel's enterprise. As Fackenheim admits, Hegel never describes religion except as seen through his own philosophical lenses; hence Fackenheim's chapter-length description of religion as 'it exists without philosophy' is at best a problematic reconstruction." E. L. Donahue

America 119:194 S 14 '68 500w

"The judgment that this is a timely and exciting volume may be startling—not because of the book's author (a highly respected philosophical scholar of German idealism and Judaism) but because of its subject. If any 'god' is to be presumed 'dead' in the 20th century, it is surely the god Hegel. . . . And yet Fackenheim here succeeds in making his subject seem to bristle with contemporary issues. In fact most of our own dealings with our central problems seem less relevant and interesting than Hegel's treatment of them . . . especially in . . . the attempt to reconcile Christianity and the world. . . . In achieving this masterly anatomy of Hegel's synthesis of Christianity and modern culture, [Fackenheim] never allows his profound Jewishness to divert his perceptive and sympathetic estimate of Christianity and of the role of speculative philosophy." Langdon Gilkey

Christian Century 86:52 Ja 8 '69 800w

"[The author] discusses knowledge, the 'Hegelian middle,' the religious basis for Hegel's philosophy, and concludes with a chapter on 'The Crisis of the Hegelian Middle.' He believes that Hegel offers a means of resolving the modern tension between revelation and rationality. The book is valuable for readers concerned with religion in the modern secular world, philosophy, and especially Hegel." Shildes Johnson

Library J 93:2505 Je 15 '68 100w

FADER, DANIEL N. Hooked on books: program & proof [by] Daniel N. Fader [and] Elton B. McNeil, new ed 244p $5.95 Putnam

372.4 Reading. Books and reading 68-19513

Originally published as a paperback and now "rewritten and reorganized, the book is . . . a restatement of the rationale behind the English in Every Classroom program, including a progress report on the continuing program and a summary of a two-year research project directed by the book's coauthor, Dr. McNeil. . . . [The method] calls for devoted teachers committed to the proposition that English is so crucial that it should be taught every hour of the day in every classroom. It calls for a profusion of [books]; . . . for a relaxation of lending rules; for an emphasis on writing and deemphasis on the blue pencil. . . . [McNeil tells of] the two-year research project, which matched the W.J. Maxey Boys' Training school with a control group in a similar boys' training school. . . . [He] demonstrates that the attitude of the teacher is of enormous importance." (Library J) A reading list of 1,000 paperbacks books is included.

"School officials should be cautioned against undue reliance on the [reading] list as a magic solution to reading problems. It makes excellent suggestions for the type and variety of material to be used, but it has many competitors among existing booklists designed . . . for the teenager. It is not a list of books for severely retarded readers. The well-stocked junior high school library will have a large percentage of similar books. . . . None of the ideas [described] is unique, and all have been described in professional literature and tried in the classroom. Only the crash nature of the program, the fervor of Dr. Fader, and the success of the methods are unique. . . . The research report closes on a sombre note. Dr. McNeil deserves the respectful attention of school officials when he says, 'In the self-image of the child, in the teacher's view of him, and in his attitude toward education, the unbright, non-white child is so handicapped that massive educational reorganization may be necessary to help him.'" Maxine Hegland

Library J 93:3935 O 15 '68 750w

"[This book] features a unique combination of the hortatory and the statistical. Fader urges his formula of discursive reading and writing that makes every teacher an English teacher and every student a bibliophile. McNeil checks out his colleague's work in the field and demonstrates significant advantages. What Fader loses in polemics . . . or truisms . . . he gains through his enthusiasm and conviction. As the voice of objectivity, McNeil collaborates unobtrusively to round out an unusually provocative book." John Calam

Sat R 51:56 Jl 20 '68 110w

FAGER, CHARLES E. White reflections on black power. 118p $3.50; pa $1.65 Eerdmans

301.451 U.S.—Race relations. Negroes—History 67-13982

"After describing what are the major elements of the 'Black Power' concept, Mr. Fager goes on to consider the responses to it by both white and Negro critics." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"Pithy, pointed, helpful discussions of a baffling and urgent theme."

Christian Century 84:1000 Ag 2 '67 50w

"Fager's book helps to clarify the debate [between integrationist and black power positions]. Without indulging in the liberal-baiting that so often accompanies discussions of Black Power, he challenges integrationists to demonstrate why 'integration' does not work out in practice to mean assimilation, whereby a few middle-class Negroes are provisionally admitted to white society, leaving others behind in the ghetto as unassimilable. According to Fager, this is certainly the way things have worked out so far. . . . [He] believes, as do other advocates of Black Power, that at the present time the black community is not cohesive enough to enter into coalitions without being swallowed up. As a white radical who until recently worked in the civil rights coalition, he is left with the question of where next to turn his energies. . . . Unfortunately [his] suggestions are exceedingly vague, although they are not much more vague than the strategy of Black Power itself." Christopher Lasch

N Y Rev of Books 10:8 F 29 '68 2100w

FAGIN, HENRY, jt. ed. Urban research and policy planning. See Schnore, L. F.

FAIRFAX-LUCY, BRIAN. The children of the house [by] Brian Fairfax-Lucy & Philippa Pearce; il. by John Sergeant. 190p $3.95 Lip-pincott

68-24418

This story begins "in the days before World War I [when] four Hatton children lived in that splendid English country house [Stanford Hall]. Theirs was a [world] . . . in which they were far closer to kindly servants than to parents who ruled with an iron hand. Sir Robert, intent on maintaining his wife's dwindling estate, was so niggardly that his children lacked good food, warm clothing, proper schooling or friends. . . . The children found their main happiness in small shared adventures, a secret raid on the kitchen garden or a trip to the village to buy cheap gifts for the servants they loved. It was not until war came that three of them escaped. . . . Ages nine to twelve." (Book World)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin
Book World p14 (children's issue)
N 3 '68 200w

Reviewed by Margery Fisher
Christian Science Monitor pB10 My 2
'68 130w

Horn Bk 44:689 D '68 180w

"A book designed to leave its readers down-cast, this is a sad tale . . . a juvenile book reduction of the Sitwells' dilemma. The fantasy play that the Nesbitt characters indulged in under similar circumstances is absent here. . . . Though the theme and tone are more appropriate to an adult short story . . . this slim, well-written novel may have a certain melancholy charm for pre-teen readers. Presenting an emphatically gloomy statement about a side of aristocratic life seldom well and truly exposed elsewhere in juvenile books, this can also be read as a social document—an interesting, if weird, experience for young readers." J. C. Thomson

Library J 93:4402 N 15 '68 220w

"Originally intended as an adult book [this story] by Brian Fairfax-Lucy has been made into a children's tale by Philippa Pearce. Fairer to say she has made it acceptable to both, for each may find in it what the other misses. . . . It's not all wistful, though: there are some wildly funny moments." Barbara Willard

New Statesman 75:694 My 24 '68 100w

"Every so often, one finds a book that speaks for its generation—and 'The Children of the House' is such a book. Set in Edwardian England it tells of . . . two impoverished aristocrats struggling to maintain a way of life. The victims of this struggle are the Hatton children, and the story spans the years of their growing-up. Caught between a penurious father and a class-conscious mother, the four youngsters endure a special misery. . . . These are the memories of Brian Fairfax-Lucy's childhood—and, as told by Philippa Pearce, they are eloquent. The simplicity, truth, and lack of emphasis in this story are virtually Chekhovian, and it is a stouthearted reader who will not weep." B. W.

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p38 N 3 '68 230w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:68 N 9 '68 110w
TLS p579 Je 6 '68 450w

FAIRLIE, HENRY. The life of politics. 271p $5.95 Basic bks.

321.8 Great Britain—Politics and government—20th century. Politics, Practical

68-22854

A British journalist 'now resident in Washington, D.C.' delineates the tasks and qualities which make politicians ordinary or extraordinary. In the central chapters of the book, the author [describes] . . . the logic of the two-party system which lies at the heart of the British constitutional tradition . . . [as well as] the electoral system . . . —its underlying principles, the interests and conflicts involved. . . . Problems which confront constitutional government in the modern age are discussed in the concluding chapters. . . . [It is Fairlie's belief that] Americans should understand their political system better, expect the right things from it, and learn to admire politicians as politicians." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"It is Fairlie's signal merit that he can tell us why the apparent vices of politicians are often their salient virtues. For those who dream of a politics free from twaddle and crudity . . . this book is a useful corrective. Take, as an example, the vice of political windbaggy. In a free society, as Fairlie rightly points out, a politician cannot command. He can only persuade . . . [and] he does not accomplish this by making himself clear. He must sidle around his subject, smudging its outlines and blunting its main points. . . . [This book] is a welcome relief from American political sentimentality. . . . The reader must be warned, however, that Fairlie's discussion is based on British politics and is applicable here only with some effort on the reader's part." Walter Karp

Book World p3 My 19 '68 650w

Choice 5:1038 O '68 180w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Godsell
Christian Science Monitor p9 J1 29 '68
600w

"Fairlie is a master at the craft of political journalism. Which means that for all his qualities of good writing, judgment and scepticism—even at times of cynicism—he brings something else to his job: a love of politics and an affection for the men and women who have the courage to practise the art. . . . His brilliant portrait of the political life is a timely and refreshing defence of our political system, our institutions and our politicians. . . . Everyone will find something in this book to disagree with—sometimes violently so. But only the most sterile political academic (whom Mr Fairlie despises) will fail to find much of the argument stimulating and many of the phrases illuminating. . . . In his sheer intellectual enjoyment of it, Mr Fairlie brings the spice and drama of the game alive. . . . [He] has written one of the best books on British politics in years."

Economist 227:111 Ap 27 '68 850w

Reviewed by H. J. Steck
Library J 93:2884 Ag '68 280w

Reviewed by Richmond Crinkley
Nat R 20:813 Ag 13 '68 1050w

"[This is] an elegant and effusive toast to the glories of the British political tradition. It is—and this should be said straight away—a very impressive performance; and because of that it is necessary to be especially on guard against it. Basically Mr Fairlie wants to change nothing. . . . The only criticism of the system that Mr Fairlie will entertain is that in some way the traditional constitutional balance in Britain may today be out of true—that although we have a popular elective government we have ceased to have an independent representative Parliament. . . . [And] throughout his book there is an undertone of nostalgia for the days when social privilege and economic birthright tempered the workings of the democratic process." Anthony Howard

New Statesman 75:549 Ap 26 '68 500w

New Yorker 44:140 S 7 '68 160w

Reviewed by R. A. Sokolov
Newsweek 71:90B Je 10 '68 700w

TLS p455 My '68 330w

FAIRWEATHER, GEORGE W. Methods for experimental social innovation. 250p $7.95 Wiley

300.72 Social sciences—Research. Social change. Social problems 67-13522

This book presents an "experimental methodology for evaluating alternative solutions to contemporary social problems and considering other arenas of activity for the social scientist. It offers step-by-step procedures for planning, implementing, and evaluating new social programs. It stresses such . . . aspects as establishing the research organization, obtaining administrative commitment required for conducting social research, creating new model social subsystems for comparative purposes, and disseminating the information from such experiments to the appropriate agents of a society." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by R. M. Coe
Am J Soc 73:361 N '67 700w

"This is a worthwhile work—one which is timely and instructive on the research enterprise in general and on experimental social innovation in particular. . . . [However] the writing is painfully redundant; a key term, consensus, is left undefined; the index and bibliography are somewhat lean, and theory is relegated to such an unimportant current role that Fairweather may well be vulnerable to the charge of being atheoretical. Further, an audience identification problem seems to have faced the author. Even so, this reviewer believes that Fairweather's effort should be given wide circulation and discussion." J. W. Rogers

FAIRWEATHER, G. W.—Continued

Am Soc R 33:175 F '68 650w

"[This] reads like an expanded grant proposal for a community research center and thus has a very limited readership. It is inadequate as a text for undergraduates because Fairweather presumes some familiarity with methodology. It is inadequate as a text for graduate students because it is written beneath their level of sophistication. . . . As a method of social change, the approach is naive, dealing only with the individual victims of the status quo and paying scant attention to the massive social, economic, and political forces responsible."

Choice 5:878 S '68 230w

"To understand the values and shortcomings of [this] book, one must bear in mind that 'experimental' is used by Dr. Fairweather as a research concept, not a social value. Practitioners of social innovation, involved in functional programs, may find that Dr. Fairweather's professional paternalism which converts communities into sub-groups somewhat disquieting. However, the book does contain much material of value which could readily be translated to the armamentarium of evaluative techniques for functional programs of social innovation." Tom Levin

Record 63:507 F '68 550w

"[Fairweather] believes that the social scientists can and should foster social progress by designing and evaluating new solutions to major social problems in carefully controlled field experiments. . . . [However] as a methods handbook the would-be social-innovation experimenter will probably find this work inadequate. . . . In no case is the coverage sufficient to make reference to the standard methods texts unnecessary. Furthermore, specific examples are nearly always drawn from the author's own research in the rehabilitation of mental patients. A broader selection of problems, situations, and settings would have greatly enhanced the value of this work as a general reference. . . . [as would] more references to other traditions of action research. . . . [Nevertheless] taken as a whole, [the book] adds to our understanding of how to advance with rational and steady steps toward a better society." R. G. Havelock

Science 158:1037 N 24 '67 700w

FALCONI, CARLO. The popes in the twentieth century; from Pius X to John XXIII; tr. from the Italian by Muriel Grindrod. 400p il $10 Little

282 Popes. Catholic Church—History

68-14744

An "account of the Catholic Church under the tutelage of five men, each of whom brought to the papacy divergent backgrounds and temperaments, each living through an outstanding historical event in Church or world affairs: Pius X and the modernist dispute in the Church; Benedict XV and World War I; Pius XI and the rise of Fascism and the Lateran Pacts; Pius XII and World War II and its aftermath; John XXIII and the Vatican Council and ecumenism. Underlying these five personality studies is Italian historian Carlo Falconi's thesis of the struggle of the Church to emerge from the . . . theocratic conception of its role towards an apex of spiritual and ecumenical glory, without distinction of race, creed, or even religion." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index. Originally published in Italian under the title of I Papi del Ventesimo Secolo.

"Falconi is aware of the fact that he will surprise and shock some of his readers. He is not really anti-clerical, but neither is he writing as a ritual hagiographer. His subjects, whether saints or not, are people. And he treats them as such. This approach is very evident in the handling of Pius X. The author is quite frank in his discussion of the responsibility of the man, Giuseppe Sarto, not the Saint Pius X, in the matter of the promulgation of the Code of Canon Law of 1917. . . . The author is equally critical of the role of Pius X in the matter of 'Modernism' . . . [and of] the next three pontiffs. . . . An interesting book, disturbing, though provoking!" E. A. Doehler

Best Sell 28:49 My 1 '68 1050w

"These princes of the Roman church have faced secularism and totalitarianism in a violent century, and the balance sheet, as Falconi sees it, shows mixed results. The accent here rightly falls on temporal involvements."

Christian Century 85:404 Mr 27 '68 50w

"Signor Falconi's intense feelings, unfortunately, are not counterbalanced by anything resembling a sense of humor or mellow wisdom. . . . Though Falconi has made a clean and honorable break with a religion he can no longer accept, he has not as yet freed himself of a certain penchant for declamatory homiletics. There's a good deal of preaching in these essays, some very tired debating techniques, and a neophyte's delight with the interpretive possibilities of psychology. This is all the more regrettable since in general the better part of [Falconi's] judgments are sensible and quite acceptable to the relaxed believer and unbeliever."

Serge Hughes

Commonweal 88:445 Je 28 '68 850w

"Well-documented and authoritatively written." Leo Etzkorn

Library J 93:998 Mr 1 '68 200w

TLS p723 Jl 11 '68 1400w

FALES, MARTHA GANDY, jt. auth. The Heritage foundation collection of silver. See Flynt, H. N.

FALK, IRVING A., jt. auth. On-the-spot reporting. See Gordon, G. N.

FALK, RICHARD A., ed. The Vietnam war and international law [sponsored by the Am. soc. of int. law]. 633p $15; pa $3.95 Princeton univ. press

341.3 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- 67-31295

With the exception of the article by Eliot D. Hawkins this volume comprises articles gathered from various journals. The pieces on the main substantive issues "are preceded by a cluster of contributions designed to give one a proper framework for studying the specific problems of Vietnam, and followed by a group of essays dealing with civil war and intervention in a perspective wider than merely that of Vietnam. Lastly, there are some 70 pages of documentary appendices." (Economist) Index.

"[An] extremely valuable collection. . . . Authors of several persuasions are represented as well as legal documents that would allow disparate interpretations. The reader is presented with material that enables him to make his own independent judgment on the legality of the U.S. effort in Vietnam. . . . Strongly recommended to college libraries: either for the general collection on international politics, international law, or U.S. foreign policy; or for the more specific collection on Viet-Nam and the Viet-Nam conflict."

Choice 5:1220 N '68 120w

"All contributors to this volume are agreed upon the legal relevance of a proportionate response to a prior attack; the Legal Adviser to the State Department thinks that this requirement is being met; Professor Falk thinks that it is not. The argument, therefore, is over facts and not the law. Nevertheless, this volume is immensely valuable. . . . The contributions are all of the highest calibre, and on the main substantive issues there are excellent contributions by Eliot Hawkins, Daniel Partan and Wolfgang Friedmann. . . . The work is imaginatively conceived and impressively executed. The debate is vigorous, comprehensive and scholarly."

Economist 229:73 O 26 '68 750w

"While contributors are mainly from the academic world, opinions from persons such as Dean Rusk and U Thant make for variety. Mr. Falk, the editor, and Professor John N. Moore each devote about 100 pages to a discussion of the war's legality. With growing interest here and abroad, these articles and essays . . . are timely. They are written on a scholarly level and their appeal will be limited to the specialist or layman with some training in the subject. For these readers, however, the volume will prove very worthwhile. Extensive documentary appendices add to its reference value." H. H. Bernt

Library J 93:2665 Jl '68 160w

FAULKNER, LEONARD. The president who wouldn't retire. 319p pl $5.95 Coward-McCann 973.6 Adams, John Quincy. U.S.—History—1815-1861 67-15277

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by K. I. Brauer
J Am Hist 55:126 Je '68 420w

Reviewed by Larissa Rulofson
Library J 93:314 Ja 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Larry Gara
New Eng Q 41:314 Je '68 480w

FAULKNER, MURRY C. The Falkners of Mississippi; a memoir. 205p pl $5.95 La. state univ. press

B or 92 Faulkner, William. Falkner family 67-24417

A biography of four brothers, the eldest of whom was William Faulkner, American novelist. Murry, the second of the four in age, describes their childhood. He tells about their life in Oxford, Mississippi and "about their relations with their parents and other adults, [and] their escapades, in which Bill [the eldest] was always the leader. . . . In the remainder of the book he writes mostly about his own [career]." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Maurice Adelman
America 118:618 My 4 '68 100w

Reviewed by E. L. Volpe
Am Lit 40:254 My '68 750w
Choice 5:339 My '68 200w

"[A] recollection—evocative, amusing and absorbing by turns—of the Falkner family and their milieu, and of a golden time in the now distant American past. . . . [The author] presents not only a portrait gallery but a panorama, anecdotal and filled with life. Fine vintage photographs are also supplied. . . . [The] oldest brother of the writer emerges as long-headed, athletic, commanding, witty and artistic. . . . The subject is rendered with love, as love lay at the bottom of the brotherly relationship, together with a most rigid respect for mutual privacy tied to a fierce clan loyalty and pride. . . . Murry Falkner is not writing a source study; he is giving an account of 'the way it was.' The delighted Faulknerian will take it from there." Joseph Blotner
N Y Times Bk R p5 D 17 '67 800w

"[The author's] career—for more than thirty years he was a special investigator for the FBI—was far from the world of letters. Naturally he talks about William as a brother, not as an author. Like John Faulkner in his book, My Brother Bill [BRD 1963], Murry describes the childhood and early years of the Falkner boys with a rush of nostalgia. . . . Although he saw his brothers infrequently in later years, the sense of family solidarity remained strong. From this book, as from John's, one gets the impression that the decline in Falkner family fortunes cast no such shadow as students of William Faulkner's novels have assumed. On the other hand, one can see that the life of the boys wasn't quite so idyllic as they came to believe." Granville Hicks
Sat R 50:23 D 9 '67 700w

TLS p636 Je 20 '68 390w

"The Faulknerian who turns to this book for penetrating—and non-academic—insights into the way the Falkner family informs the Faulkner mythology is bound for disappointment. Murry Falkner speaks with the voice of an outsider, as if he were almost a stranger to his family; and there are times in his book when he seems to be admitting this almost explicitly. What Murry can tell us about the family we have been told before, and in no very strikingly different way. . . . He tells us several times that he never really knew Bill, and this is perhaps the crucial insight he provides for us. The book acts out the essential unknowableness of William Faulkner."

Va Q R 44:1xx spring '68 300w

FALL, BERNARD B. Last reflections on a war; pref. by Dorothy Fall. 288p il $4.95 Doubleday

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- 67-28638

"This is a kind of sequel to Vietnam Witness [BRD 1966], a collection of short pieces by [the] professor and publicist . . . who died after being caught in a Viet Cong booby trap last February." (Library J)

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl
America 118:616 My 4 '68 50w

Reviewed by Michael Novak
Book World p4 D 31 '67 1650w

Reviewed by S. R. Davis
Christian Science Monitor p11 Ja 18 '68 480w

"In compiling a collection of his last essays, Dorothy Fall has done her husband's public a service which Fall himself might never have performed. A various collection rather than a shaped and polished book [this] stands as a fine representative sample of Fall's work as a whole; as such, it is as nearly personal as an autobiography. The book begins with a radio transcript in which Fall gives a brief account of his life and ends with the transcript of the tape [he] was making for his family at the moment of his death. That the collection includes an excellent outline of Vietnamese history, a discussion of the basic issues of the war, and an emotive picture of Vietnam, 1967, speaks for the depth of Fall's knowledge and the scope of his concerns." Frances FitzGerald

Commentary 45:93 Mr '68 2750w

"Unfortunately, [this] is not adequately edited, a fault that probably only Mr. Fall could have remedied. The material is often repetitious, roughly written, poorly organized. Half of the selections appear to have been written before mid-1965, when Mr. Fall began to change his views on the Vietnam War. The book is also divided about equally (but not chronologically) between magazine articles and unpublished pieces. [One] is a rambling piece about Ho Chi Minh which overlaps but somewhat supplements Mr. Fall's chapters on Ho in The Two Vietnams [BRD 1967]. Most interesting is the final selection 'A Way to End Revolutionary Wars.' We are going to miss Mr. Fall's flexibility and toughmindedness. This book will be of use chiefly for further research." Paul Bixler

Library J 92:4008 N 1 '67 210w

Reviewed by Collin Clark

Library J 93:2135 My 15 '68 100w [YA]

Reviewed by Paul Mus

N Y Times Bk R p1 D 10 '67 2800w

"These posthumous 'last reflections' on the war are a fugitive gathering of nineteen articles, talks and transcripts composed between 1964 and [the author's] death. They reflect not only his principal preoccupation but his many-sidedness. Fall was, professionally, a scholar and historian; Vietnam was the subject of his doctoral dissertation in the early '50s, and he later became—and remained to the end of his life—Professor of International Relations at Howard University, and by general consent the leading U.S. authority on Vietnam. . . . Some of the best and most authoritative pages in this book are devoted to the 'theory and practice of insurgency and counterinsurgency,' pages written in the voice of an initiate and scholar, a theorist and practitioner, both out of formidable knowledge and intense though contained feeling. Feeling, which transcends politics and ideology, animates every page, especially, but not only, his war reportage, which is certainly some of the most distinguished to come out of the war." S. M.

Newsweek 70:115 N 20 '67 850w

Reviewed by R. H. Fifield

Sat R 51:34 F 17 '68 260w

"This posthumous collection of his last writings carries forward but adds little to arguments that [Fall] expounded tirelessly in Viet Nam during frequent trips into battle. . . . [His] perceptions of men at war permeate his last articles."

Time 90:112 N 17 '67 180w

FALTERMAYER, EDMUND K. Redoing America; a nationwide report on how to make our cities and suburbs livable. 242p il $6.95 Harper

711 City planning—U.S. Urban renewal

67-28831

An associate editor of Fortune offers suggestions and examples of what must be done, individually and collectively, to make our cities beautiful and attractive and to stop the decay of America's social and physical environment. Partial contents: The origins of our urban mess; Clear skies and clean rivers; A more mobile

FALTERMAYER, E. K.—Continued

America: A war on ugliness; Controlling the suburban explosion; Building great cities. Bibliography. Index.

"[This] book assesses uncommonly well the extent to which we have lost control of our physical condition. In a clear, provocative style (some of this material originally appeared in Fortune) it surveys a list of weak points which starts out with urban decay. . . . It provides a disturbing summary of the trauma we have imposed upon the American part of the earth's surface. Faltermayer does not offer a protest without a prescription. He interweaves his well-documented description of the growing disorder about us with a careful analysis of underlying causes and suggestions for straightening things out. . . . Professionals will find the book a useful gathering of material from related fields. The rest of us—breathers, viewers, drinkers, travelers and occupants of Terra Americana—will receive provocative, readable insights into the issues that confront us as a civilization and a clear statement of the choices we face." D. K. Patton

Book World p20 S 15 '68 550w

"This book proves that a work of nonfiction can be truly refreshing. The big city defender has at least achieved a level of support that is both literate and knowledgeable in the area of discussion. It is hopeful that someone recognizes that cities in the United States can come of age. . . . [Mr. Faltermayer] has prepared a blueprint here that every library should have. Every urban dweller should read it as a litany of hope. This book will be of value in rural areas too because the problems now besetting our cities can happen anywhere. Recommended." H. L. Roth

Library J 93:564 F 1 '68 190w

FANON, FRANTZ. Black skin, white masks; tr. by Charles Lam Markmann. 232p $5 Grove
155.9 Race psychology. Negroes in France. Discrimination 67-30411

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by J. E. Seigel

Am Scholar 38:84 winter '68 1300w

Choice 5:688 J1 '68 170w

Reviewed by Ronald Segal

New Statesman 75:656 My 17 '68 1050w

FANON, FRANTZ. Toward the African revolution (political essays) tr. from the French by Haakon Chevalier. 197p $6.50 Monthly review 960.08 Africa—Politics. Algeria—Politics and government 67-19256

"A collection of essays, articles, and notes written over a period of nine years prior to Fanon's death from cancer in 1961 at the age of 36. . . . A number of themes pervade the writings that are here presented in chronological order: the dehumanization of both the colonized and the colonizers; the concomitance of colonialism, racism, and slavery; the deculturation and alienation of the 'inferior' individual; and the political and cultural costliness of imperialism." (Choice) Originally published in 1964 as Pour la Revolution Africaine.

"Fanon was considered to be one of the most articulate champions of the Algerian Revolution. His writing is as stylistically powerful and intellectually compelling as that of Thomas Paine. Yet, the purpose of these essays is not so much to incite revolt as to explain it. . . . The book should be of great interest to anyone studying colonialism, nationalism, and the current history of the Afro-Asian world. It could be profitably read in conjunction with [Fanon's] most famous work The Wretched of the Earth [BRD 1965]. Well translated."

Choice 4:1139 D '67 200w

"This book will have a limited appeal depending as it does to some extent on the reader's familiarity with people and events in France and North Africa in the 1950's. It is recommended for large and for special collections as a significant analysis of the thoughts and feelings of present-day Africans."

Library J 93:87 Ja 1 '68 140w

"The Negro psychiatrist from Martinique who became an Algerian revolutionary . . . is now, with Malcolm X, a favorite ideologist of the Black Power movement here and abroad. Most of the pieces are from El Moudjahid, the underground newspaper of the Algerian F.L.N., and much of their content is the windy rhetoric of revolution. . . . But Dr. Fanon's three powerful ideas come through: that Negroes must rejoice in black identity, that only violence can wash away humiliation, and that Africa must be freed and unified."

New Yorker 43:240 N 4 '67 120w

FANTINI, MARIO D. The disadvantaged; challenge to education [by] Mario D. Fantini [and] Gerald Weinstein. 455p il $8.95 Harper
371.9 Socially handicapped—Education 68-11131

A "study of the educational process in America which [seeks to demonstrate] 'that the so-called "disadvantaged" segments of our society do not represent a unique and specialized problem in American education, but rather reflect a far more pervasive problem which inheres in the standard educational process itself.' . . . Half of the book is devoted to examining current educational processes, and a pervasive dysfunctionism; and the second half, to a delineation of a massive prescription for educational reform." (Record) Index.

Choice 5:1344 D '68 230w

Reviewed by P. L. Battenwieser

Harvard Ed R 38:781 fall '68 1650w

"[The authors] broaden the meaning of 'disadvantaged' to include all those children who are blocked in any way from fulfilling their human potential—those in slums, or in affluent suburbs where they also may be neglected, over-protected, ruled by iron-handed parents, or guided by no rules at all. . . . They recommend a curriculum based on the essential needs common to every individual in every culture, and remind us that . . . cognitive needs are useful only when they can be used to satisfy the four basic needs: economic sustenance, the procreation and raising of children, participation in citizenship, and self-satisfaction. They propose a school program with three curriculum 'arenas,' [encompassing] academic content . . . individual talents . . . [and] the pupil's intra- and interpersonal relationships. [The] book should be studied carefully by all who are concerned about the future of our country." Marian Wozencraft

Library J 93:1893 My 1 '68 500w

Reviewed by E. Z. Friedenberg

N Y Rev of Books 11:18 N 21 '68 1250w

"More than an important book, this monograph is a great contribution to the understanding of the crisis in popular education written with anti-Pelagian ardour and quiet rage; and it brings to light facts too stubborn to be resisted and too important to be passed by. . . . Not unlike any book whose controversiality is born of the sensitivity of its enquiry, this volume will have ardent defenders and equally ardent detractors. Out of these disputations may well come the reform and change on the critical need for which there is general agreement." Francisco Cordasco

Record 69:705 Ap '68 2300w

"The substance of The Disadvantaged is wise, timely, and practical. That should be enough, but in this instance it is not. . . . As the book has been put together, it is not pleasant to read. It is organized mechanically.

It is marred with jargon. The obvious, for all but the most uninformed reader, is belabored. . . . There are lists and charts of an elementary sort, and the photographs are often posed and hackneyed. Such apparatus may be necessary for freshman education courses, but they turn off the intelligent layman and savvy teacher. The authors' editors misjudged the most important audience for the book and did Fantini and Weinstein a disservice. The book's ideas deserve the elegance, say, of a Galbraith or a Barbara Ward. What is presented is a dusty text." T. R. Sizer

Sat R 51:74 S 21 '68 900w

FARAGO, LADISLAS. The broken seal; the story of "Operation Magic" and the Pearl Harbor disaster. 439p $5.95 Random house

940.54 World War, 1939-1945—U.S. Cryptography. U.S.—Foreign relations—Japan. Japan—Foreign relations—U.S. 65-11270

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by W. F. Rickenbacker

Nat R 20:255 Mr 12 '68 180w

Reviewed by Alfred Vagts
Pol Sci Q 83:133 Mr '68 550w

Reviewed by Theodore Ropp
Social Studies 59:178 Ap '68 300w

FARB, PETER. Man's rise to civilization as shown by the Indians of North America from primeval times to the coming of the industrial state. 332p il maps $8.95 Dutton

970.1 Indians of North America. Anthropology. Social change 68-25772

The author's "two principal themes are native North American cultures and social evolution, with a leitmotif of introductory anthropological theory interwoven throughout the book's chapters. Most of its pages are taken up with . . . descriptions of ten American Indian societies presented in order of social complexity from Shoshonean hunters and collectors of the Great Basin to the highly evolved Aztec state. After thus outlining the . . . range of variation of Indian societies and placing them within evolutionary categories, the author considers their histories, as evidenced by archeology, physical anthropology, and linguistics. A final section covers the cultural and physical destruction of the American Indian by European settlers." (Sat R) Bibliography. Index.

"The reader will enjoy the ease of Peter Farb's writing and the underlying excitement of the ideas and the information on the past, the present, and the future of man. While [this] is a book about the Indians of North America, make no mistake about that, it is a book which explains how cultures have evolved and gives us some insight into neo-Indian cultures. The American Indian has been romanticized, but [the author] strips him of myth and gives us vivid pictures of the cultural complexity and describes how one Indian society may have reached a dead end and another risen to heights of glory. 'Notes and Sources' (interesting reading in itself). . . . maps and drawings by William Sayles, and photographs selected by Peter Farb from leading museums and art collections are a handsome addition to this excellent book." C. P. Collier

Best Sell 28:338 N 15 '68 600w

Reviewed by Laura Bohannon
Book World p14 N 24 '68 900w
Harper 237:130 D '68 80w

Reviewed by Robin Fox
N Y Times Bk R p54 N 17 '68 1800w

"Most cultural evolutionists combine great enthusiasm with a certain insouciance at the intractability of their data, and Mr. Farb's style and approach confirm him as one of the breed. . . . Mr. Farb's asides on theoretical questions also show a gift for providing simple and unitary answers where none are possible. This is to say that, although it is ideally suited to be a Book-of-the-Month Club selection, [this book] will annoy serious students of the subject. This should not, however, deter the reader who wants to learn something about the American Indian and anthropology, for the ethnography is accurate and interestingly presented. The best part of the book is the final section on the subjugation of the American Indian." R. F. Murphy

Sat R 51:52 O 19 '68 550w
Time 92:110 D 13 '68 900w

FARM JOURNAL. Cooking for company, by the food eds. of Farm journal; ed. by Nell B. Nichols. Farm journal field food ed; photography supervised by Al J. Reagan. 431p $6.95 Doubleday

641.5 Cookery 68-10680

The "recipes begin with 'hearty main dishes.' Then chapters follow in meal-planning order: country-style vegetables, . . . salads, homemade breads, . . . desserts, . . . beverages and snacks, cooking over coals, cooking for a crowd. . . . [ending with a] Hostess How-To section. . . . Ideas for table settings and 5-minute centerpieces. Directions for making party favors. Rules for gracious table and buffet service, as well as table manners." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This] is a cookbook whose hearty American dishes are designed to please country people. The book is notable for its quantity recipes and its 'portables'—dishes designed to be carried along to community dinners, church suppers or large family outings." Gloria Levitas
Book World p7 My 12 '68 80w

"This [is an] excellent all-round cook book which every cook can use. . . . The dessert recipes sound luscious. . . . A chapter on seasonings contains information on spices and includes directions for freezing fresh herbs. All recipes are easy to follow and are not time-consuming. An excellent buy for libraries." G. J. Kubal

Library J 93:188 Ja 15 '68 120w

FARMER, ROBERT A. The rights of the mentally ill. (Know your law) 140p $4.95 Arco

340 Insanity. Medical jurisprudence. Law—U.S. 67-10991

"Here are some of the subjects covered in this layman's guide to the legal rights of the mentally ill and their families and associates: Insanity and the legal process—statutory definitions—psychiatrists and the law—the need for legal protection—incompetency proceedings—hospitalization—commitment and release—domestic and family effects—contract and business effects—legal effects on property—political and constitutional rights—civil rights." (Publisher's note) Index.

"A reference book, not a text. As such, in order to be useful, it will require frequent revisions if it is to provide current information regarding the state laws governing the mentally ill. There is value in presenting in one volume the laws on mental illness and mental retardation for the various states. However, there are no references or bibliography in this book and nothing to indicate Farmer's background. It has to be assumed this is responsible reporting, but the reader should not rely solely on the information given here, but should consult the legal and medical authorities in his own state. For the reference shelf of the college library."

Choice 5:463 Je '68 100w

"[The author's] explanations include short case histories, tables of state law, and legal cases. There are much better books on the subject such as Mental Illness and Due Process and Public Health Law manual but it reads well despite its lack of nuances, and the fact that every sentence suggests books, articles, and cases that should have been cited. My one caveat is that readers should be warned that this book does not replace professional advice. For large public libraries." E. J. Bander

Library J 93:1157 Mr 15 '68 100w

FARNSWORTH, BEATRICE. William C. Bullitt and the Soviet Union. 244p $7.50 Ind. univ. press

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations—Russia. Russia—Foreign relations—U.S. Bullitt, William Christian 67-13022

A biography of the man who "from 1918 to 1933 was one of the strongest advocates of United States cooperation with the new Communist regime in Russia. . . . After several years as the first United States ambassador to the Soviets [he turned against the Soviets even favoring appeasement of Germany to check Communism]." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by L. L. Gerson

Am Hist R 73:1257 Ap '68 400w

"Thin, uninspired treatment of a thin, uninspiring subject. . . . This book is not a success. Bullitt's political behavior and his unstable personality were closely intertwined. Yet Farnsworth, though scattering remarks along the way, never systematically investigates Bullitt's motivations or the root causes for his many failures. Her discussion of American and Russian foreign policy in the 1930's offers neither new insights nor new data; her style is limp, her perceptions limited. Only for libraries with strong collections in American foreign policy."

Choice 4:1164 D '67 190w

"Dr. Farnsworth seems to take statements by Bullitt about what Bullitt said to foreign statesmen, and they to him, too seriously. As her bibliographical note shows, her archival access was limited. That is not her fault, but it weakens some of her arguments. And she should not quote Ambassador Dodd's Diary without a caution. . . . This book has some utility and some merits if only as a cautionary tale, and Dr. Farnsworth's honesty is commendable if her acuteness is not impressive." D. W. Brogan

Encounter 31:83 N '68 700w

FARNSWORTH, BEATRICE—Continued

"Here is a well-written, significant study of one of the most prominent New Deal diplomats, who allowed his disillusionment to warp his work. Although the author has used the Bullitt papers and materials from the state department archives, the reviewer would have preferred a more detailed study of Bullitt's service as an ambassador. The surface has only been skimmed. Nevertheless, this book is welcome in view of the need for monographic studies of New Deal diplomacy." Keith Eubank
J Am Hist 54:710 D '67 320w

"After thorough research, Mrs. Farnsworth, a fellow of the Radcliffe Institute for Independent Study, has told Bullitt's story with great skill. The portrait she draws without the aid of psychoanalysis appears much more accurate than the Bullitt-Freud explanation of Wilson that rated headlines a few months ago. For all but the smallest libraries." R. W. Schwarz
Library J 92:2557 J1 '67 130w

FARRAR-HOCKLEY, ANTHONY. Death of an army. 195p il $5 Morrow

940.4 Ypres, 1st Battle of, 1914 [67-109869]
A British army officer tells how, "in the first year of World War I, the small standing army of Great Britain . . . [was decimated at] the First Battle of Ypres. . . . [An introductory chapter] outlines the strategies and events prior to the battle." (Library J) Bibliography. General index. Index to military formations and units.

"The title of this book is exact. . . . [The Germans] called First Ypres, Kindermord, the massacre of the innocents. . . . Brigadier Farrar-Hockley tells the story plainly. He lets the events speak for themselves. This helps to highlight the shortcomings of the senior commanders and enhances the skill and bravery with which the junior officers and men fought. This is the right way to describe a gallant episode." Economist 225:x D 2 '67 200w

"Farrar-Hockley, a British army officer, wrote this book for the lay reader, and therefore omitted copious circumstantial details and documentation necessary for scholarly presentations. . . . [The introductory chapter] is useful to those unfamiliar with World War I. Nevertheless, as with so many campaign narratives, this one is often difficult to follow—with armies, corps, and battalions marching and countermarching, the reader is confused about the alignment of the opposing forces at any given stage of the battle. Better maps would certainly have helped. Libraries possessing general histories, such as the American Heritage History of World War I [BRD 1965] may pass up this book." E. G. Hamann
Library J 93:1136 Mr 15 '68 210w

FARRELL, JAMES T. New Year's eve/1929. 144p $4.50 The Smith; by arrangement with Horizon press

67-30058

"We are told the story of a New Year's Eve party which a young woman, [Beatrice Burns, incurably ill.] tricks some friends in ■■ arty circle of southside Chicago into giving. She looks forward eagerly to her final fling. During its progress, she has moments of hope, elation, sadness, despair and folly. She doesn't, on the whole, enjoy herself, but she feverishly tries to prolong the occasion, leading a shrinking company of guests to coffee and children's games through the dawn-gray streets. In the end, she is left alone." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Like Anderson and Dreiser who exerted great influence on the development of his writing technique, Farrell excels at recording the sights and sounds of everyday American life. Once again, he explores the period (late 1920's), the place (Chicago), and at least one of the characters [Danny O'Neill] from [some earlier books] . . . The New Year's Eve party focuses on several of Farrell's recurring themes—the need to be loved, frustrated petty hopes, the loneliness of the individual, the disparity between dreams and reality, the sexual frustrations and agonies of the young. . . . Once considered a controversial and shocking author, Farrell now seems a little dated. He does not delve too deeply beneath the surface, yet he sees clearly and has created ■ powerful study of the last mad fling of a desperately sad and lonely girl. Of value to students of American literature."

Choice 5:482 Je '68 200w

Reviewed by A. C. Ringer

Library J 93:1161 Mr 15 '68 200w

"Farrell's most recent novel sadly displays all of his limitations and few of his previous strengths. . . . [He] populates the book with a cast of patronizing stereotypes dredged up from the twenties. . . . All the characters are as narrow, alienated, petty and selfish as Beatrice. Hence, the novel is not only circular, ending where it begins; it never goes anywhere. There are no illuminating perspectives; . . . what begins as a biological tragedy gradually becomes an oblique metaphor for the 'human condition.' But the thin fiction cannot bear such heavy philosophical freight, for the closed world of the novel lacks centrifugal energy. Although set in the early depression, [the book] conveys an indirect image of contemporary middle-class life. None of the characters has a history; they merely exhibit a narrow range of intrinsic (and suspiciously similar) qualities and attitudes. Having lost his perspective on the tensions between individuals and their historical context, Farrell cannot portray the social dimensions of psychotic diseases." Peter Clecak
Nation 206:733 Je 3 '68 2100w

"[Beatrice] is a malicious gossip, a vicious voyeur and a masochist. And yet, in spite of her being something of a textbook case, Farrell has succeeded in making her real as he tries to engage the reader's sympathies. . . . The author is saying that any human being can, and must, be loved—but he . . . is too successful as a realist to succeed as an allegorist. . . . The theme of a hateful woman is treated as if the reader were expected to be shocked by it, as if Freudian symbols were to come as revelations instead of clichés. It is unfair to hold a writer's past eminence against him. But this is a book where a superbly professional handling of character, dialogue, setting and narrative is used to elucidate ideas that no longer seem dramatic." Laurence Lafore
N Y Times Bk R p38 Ja 7 '68 600w

FARRELL, JOHN C. Beloved lady: a history of Jane Addams' ideas on reform and peace. 272p $6.95 Johns Hopkins press

361 Addams, Jane

67-16916

The author "attempts to determine the sources and weight of [Miss Addams'] views on settlement work, education, urban recreation, and especially the interrelated topics of war and pacifism." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"There is a basic difficulty in the approach of this book. Addams was primarily an activist, organizer, mediator, and spokesman rather than an original and systematic thinker. She borrowed from many sources, but her own experience was more important. The author is aware of this difficulty, but by stressing the intellectual influences and contributions he distorts the picture. . . . Indeed the most valuable parts of this book are the extensive explanatory footnotes, the bibliographical essay, and the carefully compiled bibliography of Addams' own writings. Farrell has not said the last word on Jane Addams, but all others who follow will have to take account of what he has written." A. F. Davis

Am Hist ■ 73:1659 Je '68 390w

Reviewed by A. E. Fink

Ann Am Acad 337:211 My '68 230w

"A contribution to the growing literature on Jane Addams, this posthumous doctorate, completed in 1965, sought to add dimensions to Linn's Jane Addams [BRD 1935] and other earlier writings, as well as to synthesize the articles and sections of books which have accumulated since her death in 1935."

Choice 5:652 J1 '68 170w

"Farrell's thoroughly researched and well-written study of Jane Addams' intellectual development offers new insights into her many-sided career. [He] emphasizes three themes: (1) Jane Addams' early education and the intellectual grounds for the establishment of Hull House; (2) the shifting bases for her activities at Hull House and the expansion of her reform interests; and (3) her responses to World War I and the definition of her pacifist beliefs. Farrell's excellent bibliography includes all of Miss Addams' published writings as well as descriptions of manuscript and secondary sources. . . . Farrell presents Jane Addams as an intelligent, widely read woman who had ■ gift for molding and reworking the ideas of others. Her genius lay in activity, in translating ideas into action." R. W. Doherty

J Am Hist 55:162 Je '68 500w

FARRELL, ROBERT, jr. ed. Vietnam and the Sino-Soviet dispute. See Rupen, R. A.

FARRELLY, MIDGET. The surfing life [by] Midget Farrelly as told to Craig McGregor. 192p il $4.95 Arco

797.1 Surfing 67-16182

Starting from the "basic techniques of surfing, the author discusses the best boards for beginners, riding the waves, and surf board design (including how to make your own), along with information on the best surfing spots from Australia to South Africa." (Library J) Glossary.

"A series of oral essays told by an expert to a ghost writer. Descriptions of skills incidentally creep into the pages. These skill analyses have appeared in books written by others. The volume also contains a superficial section on accident prevention."

Choice 5:222 Ap '68 130w

"The perils of this sport are not neglected, and, with numerous action photographs . . . this book is a natural for all surfing beginners or 'gremmies.'" Marian Trahan

Library J 92:3212 S 15 '67 80w [YA]

FARRER, AUSTIN. Faith and speculation; an essay in philosophical theology containing the Deems lectures delivered at New York university in 1964. 175p $5 N.Y. univ. press

230.01 God. Faith and reason 67-16975

The author "examines the ways of thinking about God, and presents an evaluation of the empirical approach to the problem of reasoning the existence of the deity. Here the author of God Is Not Dead [analyzes] . . . the relationship between man and God as one of mutually engaged activities, and reaches a concluding definition of God as effective and unconditioned will." (Publisher's note)

"Farrer's latest work in philosophical theology will doubtless be compared to his earlier Finite and Infinite. The present work is free of 'the old Aristotelian leaven' found in that volume and hence will be more readily intelligible to a larger audience. . . . The author is thoroughly conversant with contemporary philosophical objections to theism, and one intent of the present work is clearly apologetical, although for Farrer apologetics is never self-defensive. . . . [His book] assumes considerable sophistication on the part of the reader; yet this is probably the clearest introduction to [the author's] thought. Recommended for undergraduates doing advanced work in philosophy or theology."

Choice 5:358 My '68 200w

"Dr. Farrer has now returned once more to his original theme. What sort of evidence may the believer adduce for his belief? . . . Dr. Farrer now proposes the primacy of will, agency and action, and . . . discusses the pattern of our interaction with the divine which constitutes its reality for us. . . . Occasionally the action is so compressed that intense concentration is needed—as in the discussion of the metaphysics of being at the end of Chapter VII. It may even be true that the formal qualities of Dr. Farrer's thought and style make the most serious inquiries seem a little too like Mozart's music—the intensity of feeling and intellect may go unobserved under the felicities of the façade. For there is no doubt that this book is trying to analyse the very hub of our religious experience."

TLS p767 Ag 24 '67 1050w

FARRINGTON, BENJAMIN. The faith of Epicurus. 160p $4.95 Basic bks.

187 Epicurus 67-13136

A "history of Greek philosophy, religion, and politics, all of which form the setting for the contrasting ideologies of Platonism and Epicureanism." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Farrington, a world-famous historian of early science and a Greek scholar, offers a short, lively, and original history of Greek philosophy. . . . No systematic exposition here of the doctrines of Epicurus. . . . What Farrington emphasizes is, as the title suggests, the 'Faith of Epicurus,' which rests on the Ionian naturalistic and scientific view of the world as further expounded and propagated by Anaxagoras, Democritus, and even to some extent by Aristotle. It is an empirical tradition, relying on close observation of nature, some experimentation, and the use of man's rational powers. . . . Excellent handbook for collateral reading at the undergraduate level. Up-to-date bibliography."

Choice 5:635 Jl '68 160w

"[The author of] Science and Politics in the Ancient World [BRD 1940, here] . . . makes good use of subsequent publications by Big-none, Mondolfo, Merlan, and others, in his endeavor to place Epicurus' movement in its 'cultural context,' and especially in relation to 'the Athenian debate on the Ideal State.' . . . By the word 'Faith' in his title, Farrington apparently means the philosopher's fervent devotion to the 'gospel' of friendship; his 'master thought,' we are told, is that 'a happy society must rest on "friendship," that is to say, a mutual agreement neither to inflict nor suffer wrong, not on "justice," that is to say, a constitution devised by a lawgiver and enforced by sanctions.' . . . [The book is] written with an enthusiastic though evenhanded sympathy."

E. L. Minar

Class World 62:62 O '68 160w

Economist 223:1246 Je 17 '67 230w

"Professor Farrington presents his main thesis with characteristic vigour. Epicureanism, he argues, was more than an intellectual movement. Epicurus was more a prophet than a philosopher, more a saint than a prophet. . . . [The author] has drawn attention to important and neglected aspects of the Epicurean movement, particularly its egalitarian and humanitarian character. . . . If there are criticisms to be made of this stimulating book they concern what is neglected in the discussion rather than what is said in support of the main thesis. . . . Much more besides Epicureanism is discussed in this book. . . . Several chapters deal with aspects of earlier Greek philosophy. . . . [and the] final chapter contains a fascinating sketch of the subsequent influence of Epicureanism in world history. Naturally [the author's] discussion of many points is highly compressed, but it is always lucid, lively and acute."

TLS p20 Ja 4 '68 550w

FARRINGTON, BENJAMIN. What Darwin really said. 124p $3.50 Schocken

575.01 Darwin, Charles Robert 66-24899

The emeritus professor of classics at University College, Swansea, presents 'a guide to the findings and theories of [Darwin, and] an epitome of their significance in today's world.' (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Tremendous—probably the best brief book on the subject. Farrington manages to capture the essence and the excitement of Darwin and his discoveries. In another 60 pages he describes Darwin's major blind spots and shortcomings. Throughout all, the human Darwin is placed in his proper historical and cultural climate. A must for any college library."

Choice 5:366 My '68 150w

"[This book is] an excellent blend of biography, science, history, and philosophy. Darwin's career is traced in succinct, well-written chapters from the days of his expeditions through the long years of his major literary production. The impact that Darwin's work had on his world and still has on ours is carefully yet simply described. Final chapters discuss the effect of evolution theory on racist theorists as well as its more significant effects on religion and philosophy. Highly recommended for general collections." George Adelman

Library J 92:1626 Ap 15 '67 140w

FARRINGTON, FIELDEN. A little game. 150p $3.95 Walker & co.

68-16681

This novel "starts at Hastings Military Academy, and moves to Long Island when 13-year-old Bob Reagan takes classmate Stu Parker home to spend Christmas vacation with Elaine, the mother Bob adores, and Paul Hamilton, the stepfather he detests. Bob is sure his mother won't object to the game or to its effect on Paul, and on Laura, their snoopy maid. But things reach a point when even fun-loving Stu admits the game isn't a game, and violence and tension erupt." (Library J)

FARRINGTON, FIELDEN—Continued

Best Sell 28:104 Je 1 '68 20w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:1923 My 1 '68 80w

"A real chiller, reminiscent of The Bad Seed [by W. Campbell, BRD 1954] in theme and potential popularity." Regina Minudri

Library J 93:[3335] S 15 '68 140w [YA]

"[This book] need take a rear seat to none in brooding, irresistible suspense. . . . Farrington writes with a fine sense of atmosphere, with believable and consistent characterizations." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p35 Jl 21 '68 100w

FARWELL, BYRON. Prisoners of the Mahdi; the story of the Mahdist revolt which frustrated Queen Victoria's designs on the Sudan, humbled Egypt, and led to the fall of Khartoum, the death of Gordon, and Kitchener's victory at Omdurman fourteen years later. 356p il pi $6.95 Harper

962.4 Mahdi. Sudan—History 67-113099

The author of Burton, a biography (BRD 1964) has written this history based on the reports of three "Europeans who were held prisoners of the Mahdi. . . . They were a priest, Father Ohrwalder, an Austrian soldier of fortune, Rudolf Slatin, and a German merchant, Charles Neufeld." (Book World) Glossary of Arabic and Sudanese words. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by J. A. Phillips

Best Sell 27:416 F 1 '68 850w

"[Mr. Farwell] has clearly been drawn to these accounts by the fascination of strong characters tested in fires more terrible than most to be found this side of hell. He has been moved to retell their stories in counterpoint within the frame of a formal history of the Sudan rebellion. And this is literally how the book is put together: a hundred pages of background to the fall of Khartoum in meaty but swiftly moving prose, then three sections recounting the captivity of each of the prisoners, concluded by a narrative of Kitchener's campaign leading to the victory at Omdurman in 1898. The method involves some backtracking, repetition and confusion and it sacrifices the cumulative drive to a climax that one feels belongs to so dramatic a story. Nevertheless the parts are so rich in revelations of barbarism and courage and survival under torment that they amply justify themselves. The book into which they are bound, if not perfectly fitted, is a book to astound, inform and be relished." Gordon Harrison

Book World p5 Ja 28 '68 650w

"Written with a vivid and readable style, the narrative is marred by errors of fact and interpretation. Nevertheless, the story should have wide appeal to the general reader who, like past generations, has always been attracted to the story of Gordon, the Mahdi, and Kitchener in the romantic deserts of the Sudan. General libraries will undoubtedly wish to obtain this book, which, however, remains ill-suited for more serious students and scholars."

Choice 5:848 S '68 110w

Economist 225:vi D 2 '67 440w

Reviewed by H. K. Flad

Library J 93:1136 Mr 15 '68 180w

Reviewed by Paul Showers

N Y Times Bk R p30 Je 23 '68 280w

"Mr. Byron Farwell's popular history . . . is woven largely round accounts left by three European prisoners of the Mahdi and of his successor, the Khalifa. Their sufferings and adventures resounded throughout Christendom at the end of the last century; but Rudolf Slatin's Fire and Sword in the Sudan (1896) is not much read today, while Charles Neufeld's A Prisoner of the Khalifa (1899) and Father Joseph Ohrwalder's Ten Years' Captivity in the Mahdi's Camp (1893) are virtually forgotten. . . . [This book] makes no claim to comprehensiveness; it ignores events in the outlying parts of the Mahdist empire; and it contains little information that is not available elsewhere. But the background is painted admirably; the book is entertaining; and a number of interesting personalities are brought successfully and vividly to life."

TLS p1112 N 23 '67 200w

FAST, JULIUS. The Beatles; the real story. 252p il $5.95 Putnam

920 The Beatles

68-55025

The author charts the English pop group's "rise from the cellars of Liverpool to their current state of splendor." (Newsweek)

Reviewed by John Coleman

Book World p6 S 29 '68 500w

"Neither Mr. Davies [The Beatles: the authorized biography, BRD 1968] nor Mr. Fast has seen fit to consider the Beatles as the phenomenon they certainly are. Instead, each has given us a detailed history: How four surprisingly ordinary young men found fame and fortune with a few electric guitars and a set of drums. . . . Mr. Fast's book is far shorter, but less readable. . . . [He] spent no time with the Beatles while writing his book, and so has had to depend largely on hearsay and already-published information. But there are some unintentional witticisms." David Sterritt

Christian Science Monitor p9 N 19 '68 410w

"Mr. Fast is a practicing journalist, but there is no indication that he had any help or information from the Fab Four themselves, and he, in fact, has nothing new to say. The book is a patchwork of quotations, anecdotes, myriad newspaper and magazine accounts of the Beatles' childhood, career struggles, and world acclaim. Much of the book describes their various tours and concerts. Because it contains well-worn information and various small errors, librarians will probably want to wait and see what [other forthcoming books] have to offer." Collin Clark

Library J 93:[3337] S 15 '68 130w [YA]

Reviewed by D. W. Harrison

Library J 93:4131 N 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by Joan Peyser

N Y Times Bk R p7 S 29 '68 800w

Reviewed by P. D. Zimmerman

Newsweek 72:106 S 30 '68 500w

FATIO, LOUISE. The happy lion's vacation; II. by Roger Duvoisin. 32p $2.95 McGraw Lions—Stories

67-5705

"Francois, the zoo keeper's son, wants to take his friend, the Happy Lion, to the sea shore. but is faced with problems. 'Ride in the train with a lion?' cries the bus ticket man. So they walk, which, of course, gives rise to more problems." (Book World) "Preschool to grade two." (Library J)

"The Happy Lion needs no introduction to his many young admirers. But it's nice to be able to report that his seventh and latest adventure is as delightfully nonsensical, as full of joie de vivre as its predecessors." P. G.

Book World p24 O 1 '67 170w

Reviewed by Peggy Sullivan

Library J 92:4635 D 15 '67 40w

N Y Times Bk R p26 Ja 21 '68 50w

"This is a pleasantly bland and lightly amusing tall tale, nicely complemented by the funny illustrations." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 50:34 Ag 19 '67 150w

TLS p1117 O 3 '68 20w

FAVATA, BENEDICT V. The nature of life and cancer; a new unifying concept, by Benedict V. Favata and Frank J. Pirone. 98p $4.75 Philosophical lib.

616.9 Cancer

67-24572

"This work is divided into three parts. In the first part, the authors present the concept of an infinitely extended and real cosmos, at whose core lies the relativity equation,  $E=MC^2$ . . . . [In the second part they] present two cases of people dying of cancer. The detailed descriptions show the relationship between light energy quanta and living matter. . . . In the third part . . . concepts as to causation, etiology, and the nature of cancer are directly quoted from . . . studies pertinent to the cancer problem." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography.

"This book gives the impression that its authors have vivid imaginations. . . . However, their imagination may be positively dangerous. . . . Bland generalizations which overlook real and major differences, defective understanding of the subject, and the assurance with which the consequent nonsense is presented make this a book best ignored."

Choice 5:1168 N '68 120w

"[The authors] present an unorthodox and arcane theory of the nature of cancer. . . . This book is of interest only to the largest medical libraries." Harold Bloomquist
Library J 92:4014 N 1 '67 80w

FAY, BERNARD. Louis XVI; or, The end of a world; tr. by Patrick O'Brian from the French. 414p pl $6.95 Regnery

B or 92 Louis XVI, King of France 68-18268

The author seeks to present Louis XVI as a "perceptive and courageous monarch and a skilled diplomat. His efforts to hold the nation together during the [Revolution] were thwarted by the Parlement and the envious nobility, who joined forces to abandon their King to defeat, dethronement and beheading." (publisher's note) Genealogy. Index.

"As a revisionist writer, Fay dispels the traditional view of Louis XVI as a simple-minded, lazy, and indecisive king. But in presenting the 'hero image' of Louis XVI Fay is overly possessed with his subject. The result is a superficial, misguided view of history. . . . There is no bibliography or documentation. What is sorely lacking is the author's knowledge of the major historians of the French Revolution, scholars such as Albert Mathiez, George Rudé, and Albert Soboul. Another weakness is faulty translation. . . . Yet Fay's study has potential for it gives a comprehensive biography of Louis XVI, even though the greater portion of the book is devoted to the period prior to the French Revolution. Unfortunately, Fay's presentation of Louis XVI as a perceptive and skilled diplomat is unconvincing." C. A. Gliozzo

Best Sell 28:72 My 15 '68 490w

Choice 5:1028 O '68 160w

"In arriving at [his] conclusion Mr. Fay allegedly uncovered new evidence from previously unpublished materials. Unfortunately, for the reader of this English translation, there are neither footnotes nor a bibliography, and so we are unable to verify the nature of the unpublished materials utilized by Mr. Fay. This reviewer is of the opinion, however, that Mr. Fay has not proven his case for revising previous judgments of Louis XVI. The book will be interesting reading for both the informed layman and specialist in the field." Judah Adelson

Library J 93:2854 Ag '68 150w

"[This is] an excellent translation that sacrifices none of the sparkle of the original. . . . [but] the account is less history than a jeremiad, a cri du coeur against the traducers of a martyr. For the old distortions that he dispels Fay offers us new ones. Louis XVI is still in want of his biographer." Leo Gershoy
N Y Times Bk R p74 N 17 '68 600w

"Fay, veteran French historian of the eighteenth century, published his biography of Louis XVI in 1955. It contrived to rescue that ill-fated king not only from the disparagements heaped upon him by republican historians but even more importantly from the myopic hindsight of studying him only in relation to the coming of the Revolution, instead of as a ruler grappling with the day-to-day problems of ruling an eighteenth-century kingdom. He used, from the national archives in Madrid, the correspondence of the Comte d'Aranda, Spanish Ambassador to France between 1773 and 1785, and with the help of such sources showed Louis XVI as a working king. The original edition . . . included some ten pages of references to Sources et preuves which have, unfortunately, been omitted from the new English translation in favour of a bunch of illustrations that are none too well reproduced. . . . But the translation is very competently done, the narrative flows as continuously in English as it did in French and Mr Fay's interesting, if controversial, reinterpretation of Louis was worth making more widely available."

TLS p308 Mr 28 '68 190w

FEAGLES, ANITA MACRAE. Me, Cassie. 158p $3.95 Dial press

68-15258

The story of a girl growing up in a suburb. "Cassie fixes her love on Jonah, an individualistic, undemonstrative, Harvard-bound Brain. Complicating her homelife are three recently orphaned cousins, . . . a conscienceless younger brother, a 'militantly liberal' mother and two foreign students who turn out to be beer-drinking Moslems." (Book World) "Grades eight to ten." (Library J)

"Teenagers will find this to their taste."

Best Sell 28:154 J1 1 '68 90w

"It isn't every girl who has Cassie's problems but, as Cassie tells them in her brisk, forthright manner, they are a lot more fun to read about than most people's. . . . All the characters make for a wildly non-typical life in a New York suburb. Along her hectic way Cassie has to decide between being a public non-person and herself. This is a good point, but what one remembers most about this sophisticated comedy are the absurd situations, the wittily observed people, the flashes of satire and Jonah." E. L. Buell

Book World p26 (children's issue) My 5 '68 170w

Reviewed by M. A. Dorsey

Library J 93:2546 Je 15 '68 200w

"[This] is a sustained romp of wit that leaves the stomach muscles weak and the eyes bleary, the story of a girl growing up 'in this very nice suburb of New York—Clear Brook. The people are all more or less alike. We have some Jews and Italians, but they are in no way a minority group except in numbers, so there's really nothing good for a liberal to get her teeth into.' . . . Cassie's creatrix, Anita MacRae Feagles, even uses words—like puerile, hostility, cretin, ambience, regression, keening, artifact and emasculation. If there is still a little too much plastic—everyone is healthy, wealthy and good—nevertheless Mrs. Feagles's soufflé of sex and humor should delight anyone on the rite side of puberty."

John Leonard
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p8 My 5 '68 450w [YA]

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:31 J1 20 '68 110w

FEDOTOV, G. P. The Russian religious mind. 2v 431;423p v 1 reissue $10; v2 $12 Harvard univ. press

281.947 Russia—Church history. Orthodox Eastern Church, Russian (47-1236)

First published in 1946, volume one of this study has now been reissued to accompany the publication of volume two. The latter was completed posthumously according to the author's general outline. "Contents:—v.I: Kievan Christianity: the Tenth to the Thirteenth Centuries; v.II: The Middle Ages: the Thirteenth to the Fifteenth Centuries." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is] the best history of Russian Christianity available in English. Written sensitively from a religious point of view . . . Fedotov's scholarly discussions of sources and careful textual analysis are not always suitable for undergraduate study. . . . [The two volumes] are an excellent survey of Russian culture from the 10th until the end of the 15th century. Volume one, on Kievan Russia, contains an excellent bibliography. Volume two, on the Russian Middle Ages . . . contains a bibliography of Fedotov's own works, but not a complete bibliography of the historical literature."

Choice 3:786 N '66 190w

"Written by an outstanding authority, this is a unique work in its field. . . . [It] is well edited, but lack of a glossary is inexcusable. It is regrettable that the designer of book jackets neglected to study the symbolic design of the Eastern Orthodox Church's cross. This book is highly recommended to theologians in general and to theologians of the Eastern Orthodox Church in particular." H. A. Shenitz

Library J 91:3737 Ag '66 210w

Reviewed by Stanley Mitchell

New Statesman 74:558 O 27 '67 250w

"Fedotov deserved an editor of Dr. Meyendorff's stature, and one is grateful to him for completing a difficult and frustrating task. However, greater editorial boldness might have been exercised. . . . The translator performs her task admirably; but she ought to have been checked from adding or subtracting the occasional significant word. Though misprints in this beautifully produced volume are few, the names of Lazarev, Olsuf'ev and Kurdyumov have suffered. . . . However, such faults are no more than minor irritants in a work of outstanding scholarship and sensitivity."

TLS p1240 D 21 '67 550w

FEHRENBACH, LILLIAN. The Pedernales country cookbook; il. by Barbara Shapira. 145p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

641.5 Cookery—Texas

68-23626

Pedernales cooking came "from three sources: Germany, the Old South, and the Mexican regions of Texas. The recipes have . . . been 'modernized.' The contents of this book includes appetizers; biscuits, bread, waffles; a variety of game; meats, fish and sauce; vegetables, rice, and dumplings; desserts and candies; pickles, preserves and jellies." (Library J) Index.

"[This] cuisine has a flavor all its own. For those readers not adventuresome enough to be interested in barbecued javelina (a small wild pig) there's country chicken-fried steak, steamed okra, and fresh peach ice cream." M. L. R.

Christian Science Monitor p17 S 26 '68 60w

"[The author] suggests substitutions for some of the regional specialties. The recipes are for plain, good cooking, but are not ordinary or routine. The book is interesting for the cookbook collector and useful for the cook." Doris Nesbitt

Library J 93:2657 J1 '68 140w

FEIN, LEONARD J. Israel: politics and people; rev. ed. of Politics in Israel. 338p $6.95 Little

956.94 Israel—Politics and government

68-17267

"The political culture of Israel's people is diverse. There are a multitude of parties and ideologies, Easterners and Westerners, religious and those free of religion, old-timers and new immigrants, old and young. Such diversity raises a great number of questions: . . . What are the forces that shape Israel's politics? Where are the centers of power? How do they interact to form Israel's policies? In his . . . analysis, Professor Fein, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, attempts to provide the answers." (Library J) This is a revised edition of Politics in Israel with an added postscript on The Six-Day War of 1967. Index.

"From the excellent four-part map at the beginning through the final chapter, this appears to be one of the finest books on Israel currently available. There are any number of reliable books on specific topics relating to Israel, but those that attempt to cover the subject in more general terms tend to lack Fein's comprehensiveness, balance, and insights. . . . The book is comprehensive only insofar as internal problems are concerned. Foreign affairs are only tangentially considered. . . . An additional chapter, 'Postscript 1967,' and some changes in footnotes [are] the only important revisions [to the original edition]." Choice 5:1366 D '68 200w

"The bulk of [this study] was written before last year's crisis [and] . . . some basic features of the situation have changed so drastically that this book, which was intended to be an analysis-in-depth of the current scene, has become instead a survey of Israel's politics at a particular point in its development. . . . Yet in spite of these time-induced handicaps, Fein's account achieves a rare level of interest and readability; above all, by having something genuinely new to say, it brilliantly clears the hurdle of banality on which so many books on Israel have stumbled." Ernest Stock

Commentary 46:87 J1 '68 1300w

"Notwithstanding such insufficient data, Professor Fein has produced an objective and scholarly work on Israel's political behavior. Although one could wish that he had used academic jargon more sparingly, this book is highly recommended." David Shavit

Library J 92:2788 Ag '67 200w (Review of original edition)

Reviewed by David Shavit

Library J 93:1150 Mr 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by M. J. Bandler

Nation 207:444 O 28 '68 140w

FEIN, RASHI. The doctor shortage; an economic diagnosis. 199p $6 Brookings

331.7 Physicians. Medical care. Medical economics

67-21987

"A member of the senior staff of the Brookings Institution in Washington, D.C. . . . discusses the relationship between the medical services that are needed and the manpower [available]. He . . . assesses the possibilities of some solutions such as group practice and the developments of special technicians to relieve doctors of certain duties." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by Elton Rayack

Am Econ R 58:1043 S '68 1000w

Reviewed by Charlotte Muller

Am J Pub Health 58:1781 S '68 500w

"Utilizing several factors (population growth, age-sex distribution, color, education, income, among others), Fein projects increased health services demand of between 22-26 percent by 1975 and 35-40 percent by 1980. Given predicted supply increases (19 percent in 1975 and 26 percent in 1980), 'predicted' shortage will be from 3-7 percent by 1975, equivalent to 9,000 to 21,000 physicians, and 5-10 percent in 1980. To close the gap, Fein suggests new organizational patterns and increased use of ancillary personnel. Written for nonspecialist readers, the book provides a readable introduction to the major current problem."

Choice 5:88 Mr '68 250w

J Pol Econ 76:1097 O '68 230w

"This is an excellent and authoritative study of a very real and pressing problem. Recommended for public and academic libraries." D. T. Thompson

Library J 92:2397 Je 15 '67 150w

"A competent and conventional projection for the next decade of the demand for medical service and the supply which will be available. . . . Fein has many sensible and suggestive things to say about the market for medical services, but his fundamental goal—the estimation of the prospective shortage—is not especially useful. . . . Although Fein's doctorate is in economics, one might suspect that it is in medicine. . . . The long chapter on the demand for medical service pays scarcely any attention to medical fees, nor are the effects of fees and earnings upon the provision of medical care to rural areas and the extent of specialization of physicians satisfactorily explored. . . . We look forward to a study by Economist Fein." G. J. Stigler

Science 158:1662 D 29 '67 500w

FEIS, HERBERT. The atomic bomb and the end of World War II; originally published in 1961 under the title Japan subdued: the atomic bomb and the end of the War in the Pacific, now revised and made more complete and revealing. 213p $5 Princeton univ. press

940.54 World War, 1939-1945—Japan. Atomic bomb

66-13312

The changes in this revision of Japan Subdued (BRD 1961) deal in part with the scientists' effort to establish international atomic control, but mostly with the . . . fact that when the bomb's use was decided in 1945, its effect on diplomacy toward Russia was an important consideration." (Pol Sci Q) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Gar Alperovitz

N Y Rev of Books 8:6 Je 15 '67 5200w

"Feis [has revised] his 1961 judgment that it is 'only conjecture' that U.S. officials thought of the bomb as a way to impress Russia. He now writes that 'certainly' Secretaries Byrnes and Stimson felt this way, and 'probably' the President did, too. Unfortunately, however, Feis stops short of the overriding issue without clarifying just how important he believes such considerations were, and, as in 1961, he ends up with the blanket judgment that the atomic decision 'ought not to be censured.'" Gar Alperovitz

Pol Sci Q 82:639 D '67 700w

FEIS, HERBERT. Contest over Japan. 187p $5 Norton

327 U.S.—Foreign relations—Russia. Russia—Foreign relations—U.S. Japan—History—Allied occupation, 1945-1952

67-16603
For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by J. C. McKenna

America 118:90 Ja 20 '68 380w

Reviewed by Justin Williams

Am Hist R 73:1222 Ap '68 500w

Choice 5:845 S '68 110w

Reviewed by J. M. McCutcheon
J Am Hist 54:925 Mr '68 330w

Reviewed by J. M. Allison
Sat R 51:27 F 3 '68 850w

Reviewed by Mikiso Hane
Social Studies 59:275 N '68 390w

FEIT, EDWARD. African opposition in South Africa: the failure of passive resistance. (Publication) 223p $7.50 Stanford univ. Hoover inst. on war, revolution & peace 322 Africa. South—Politics and government.

African National Congress. Passive resistance to government 67-24130

The author seeks "to show how, given the odds, the failures of the African National Congress can be explained in terms other than the odds themselves. . . . The campaigns selected for analysis—the 'Western Area' and the 'Bantu Education' Campaigns—were conducted at about the same time (1954-1955) and placed a similar strain on the resources of the African opposition in South Africa. . . . Much of the material used here consists of evidence and documentation arising out of the Treason Trial, a tribunal before which some 156 leaders and members of the Congress Alliance. . . . were brought. The trial began in 1956 and ended in March 1961 with the acquittal of all accused." (Pref) Glossary of organizations. Bibliography. Index.

"This [is a] revised University of Michigan doctoral dissertation by a former South African who teaches government at the University of Massachusetts. . . . For special collections." Louis Barron

Library J 93:2508 Je 15 '68 100w

"Feit's analysis deserves study, and most of it carries conviction. It is not easy to see what he thinks about the wider implications of his analysis; he uses the cumbrous dialect of his trade—a dialect which implies a claim to impartiality. He seems, however, to be of the opinion that, on the whole, the Africans of South Africa have reason to be contented with their lot and—with the exception of intellectuals and agitators—are generally fairly contented. He notes the existence of 'irksome disabilities' from which they suffer but allows for 'the vast improvements of recent years.' What these vast improvements are, he does not say." C. C. O'Brien

N Y Rev of Books 11:18 N 7 '68 220w

FEIWEL, RAPHAEL JOSEPH. See Fyvel, T. R.

FELD, WERNER. The European common market and the world. 184p $4.95; pa $2.45 Prentice-Hall

382 European Economic Community 67-28394

In Part I the author "examines the legal powers and decision-making problems involved in formulating the Common Market's foreign policy. In Part II he summarizes past policy toward developing, Communist, European non-member, and non-European industrialized countries." (Library J)

"Professor Feld has ably considered the place of the EEC in the politics and economics of the world. The work is written with a husbandry of words and a care of expression that is admirable. It is comprehensible to the informed layman without losing its value to the specialist. The treatise avoids the pitfalls . . . of inundating the reader with charts and statistics. Detail and statistical illustrations are abundant and useful, but the book is not burdened by them. The excellence of the work is slightly lessened by the absence of a bibliography." V. C. Warren

Am Pol Sci R 62:1020 S '68 950w

"This book on the foreign policy of the Common Market organization will be a useful purchase for larger libraries interested in international affairs. The book is up to date—the text refers to events in 1967. . . . The book's usefulness, however, is limited because it is too much of a survey and compilation to please the scholar, and yet it is too academic in style and treatment to entice the interested layman. Visual aids such as organization charts, maps, and graphs would have enlivened and clarified Dr. Feld's presentation." W. C. Robinson

Library J 92:4164 N 15 '67 200w

FELDMAN, EDMUND BURKE. Art as image and idea. 511p il col il $14.95; to schools $8.95 Prentice-Hall

701 Art—Philosophy. Composition (Art) 67-10232

The author "investigates the personal, physical, and social functions of art; styles which have been influenced by emotional, fantasy, objective, or formal prerequisites. His art criticism includes the theoretical aspect as well as the pragmatic performance." (Choice) Bibliography. Indexes of names and works and of subjects.

"A valuable addition to any college library as Feldman's approach to art has a uniqueness which stimulates excitement and reexamination. As a reference work the book might well reveal new possibilities of direction as well as assuring completeness of coverage of a given subject. The style is lucid and understandable in the presentation of art as a combination of image and idea, with a depth of meaning. . . . Fine bibliography and index; hundreds of pertinent and superb black-and-white illustrations, some repeated for the convenience of the reader. However, the many color pictures (not plates) are poor."

Choice 5:1122 N '68 210w

"From Berenson to Brillo boxes, here is the whole range of motifs and methods in visual art, high and low, op and pop, new and old. For stay-at-homes or those too remote from galleries and universities to take courses in art criticism or appreciation, this volume constitutes a virtual home study course—planned not on grim curricular lines but for enjoyment. Enjoy!"

Christian Century 84:1382 O 25 '67 60w

FELDMAN, FRANCES LOMAS. Family social welfare; helping troubled families [by] Frances Lomas Feldman and Frances H. Scherz. 386p $8.50 Atherton

362.8 Social case work 67-18276

"Beginning with a picture of the stylistic American family, the authors present the cycle of family life coupled with the psycho-social stages of individual development. In this light, they analyze the causes of, and remedies applicable to, dysfunction in troubled families and carefully project treatment goals. They outline the tasks of social workers." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Essentially a volume on family social work and must be evaluated in that light. It is prescriptive in nature rather than descriptive or analytical. . . . It tends to be uneven—some chapters being quite good, others very thin. All in all, well written."

Choice 5:878 S '68 90w

"Comprehensive is the word that must be used in any review of this admirable book . . . [which] is highly and generally recommended for libraries for it will interest not only social workers but all persons dedicated to the welfare of their fellow man." P. W. Brouse

Library J 92:2796 Ag '67 240w

FELDMAN, JACOB J. The dissemination of health information; a case study in adult learning. 274p $6.95 Aldine pub.

613.07 Health education. Public health—U.S. 66-14570

This monograph reports data collected from interviews conducted by National Opinion Research Center personnel "with a national sample of some 2,400 adults. It examines public knowledge and attitudes regarding health, the utilization of medical facilities, and the dynamics of adult learning. . . . The primary intent of the report is to determine the correlates and sources of health information among the general public." (Am Soc R)

"The National Opinion Research Center conducted one of the most comprehensive national surveys of information, attitudes, and behavior in regard to health [in 1955] . . . [It] held forth the promise of a major contribution to medical sociology. Unfortunately, this promise has not been realized. Ten years after the study was completed, we are now offered only a tantalizing glimpse into one aspect of the survey, the dissemination of health information, with a frank, if disheartening, apologia for 'but a fragment of the monumental treatise we originally envisioned. Fortunately, this fragment is excellent, but it makes the disappointment even more poignant. . . . This analysis of education represents survey analysis at its best. It is theoretically sound and methodologically sophisticated. The author's ability to introduce a wide variety of findings from other surveys offers a model of continuity that other survey researchers might well emulate. His copious footnotes provide methodological asides which are both instructive and delightful." E. A. Suchman

FELDMAN, J. J.—Continued

Am J Soc 73:651 Mr '68 450w

"The two descriptive aims are, of course, seriously hampered by the vintage of the data, but the author is well aware of this limitation and his response has been to compare the findings of the 1955 survey with earlier and later studies. As a result of this additional effort, the trend data presented in this volume make it a valuable source book. . . . On a general sociological level, this study ought to re-emphasize the enormous significance of [the] single variable [of education]." E. R. Babbie

Am Soc R 33:318 Ap '68 700w

"The text is somewhat outdated, but the material could be of value to graduate students or undergraduates majoring in health education. The material is not available in other such texts and could be found only be reading various research papers."

Choice 4:1273 Ja '68 130w

FELIX, ROBERT H. Mental illness; progress and prospects. 110p $4.75 Columbia univ. press 616.8 Mental illness 67-20278

"Presented as the Bampton Lectures in America at Columbia University, these four essays offer a . . . survey of the rise of the mental health movement in twentieth-century America. The first summarizes attitudes toward mental illness from antiquity through the nineteenth century. . . . The rapid growth of the mental health movement in this century is highlighted in the second essay. How [public] concern was translated after World War II into . . . government action is covered in the third essay. Finally, the potentialities of the national Community Health Program and . . . psychoactive drugs . . . [suggests] what the future holds." (Publisher's note)

"These four stimulating essays, while presenting an overview of the growth of the mental health movement in this century, do not constitute a scholarly and well documented history."

Choice 5:125 Mr '68 140w

Christian Century 84:724 My 31 '67 30w

"This is an optimistic book. . . . The material is well documented throughout. Problems are posed clearly and the solutions proposed are feasible. Dr. Felix's language is colorful, and he expresses his convictions without being unduly subjective. Recommended for public and academic libraries since the success of the program depends on the involvement of all communities." Annette Hirsch

Library J 92:2167 Je 1 '67 240w

FELKER, JERE L. Soviet economic controversies; the emerging marketing concept and changes in planning, 1960-1965. 172p $5.95 Mass. inst. of technology

338.947 Russia—Economic policy

66-26017

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Leonard Kirsch

Am Econ R 58:595 Je '68 500w

Reviewed by A. Nove

Ann Am Acad 375:241 Ja '68 390w

J Pol Econ 75:776 O '67 400w

Reviewed by Gregory Grossman

Pol Sci Q 83:315 Je '68 550w

FELLNER, WILLIAM. Maintaining and restoring balance in international payments. See Maintaining and restoring balance in international payments

FELSENFELD, NAOMI, jt. auth. Group counseling and psychotherapy with adolescents. See MacLennan, B. W.

FEMIANO, SAMUEL D. Infallibility of the laity; the legacy of Newman. 142p $4.95 Herder & Herder

262 Newman, John Henry, Cardinal. Laity 67-27737

Father Femiano seeks to relate the content of Newman's essay On Consulting the Faithful in Matters of Doctrine, "which maintained that the laity share with clerics the duty of handing down the church's teaching, to the rest of Newman's writings, particularly his writings on tradition, and to set it in its historical context." (TLS) Glossary. Index of names. Index of subjects. Index of works of Newman.

"A sensitive essay. . . . Since the crux of the theological question concerning the laity is their right to share authority with the magisterium, this book is to the point."

Commonweal 87:390 D 22 '67 50w

"Fr. Femiano [here] joins the mounting number of good Newman scholars. His book is thorough and lucid, and he takes the opportunity to draw on unpublished materials. (Something seems to have gone wrong with his indexes, the numerals of which do not, so far as they have been tested, tally with those of the pages.)"

TLS p672 Je 27 '68 380w

FENICHEL, HANNA. See Pitkin, H. F.

FENNELL, J. L. I. The emergence of Moscow, 1304-1359. 352p il maps $9.50 Univ. of Calif. press

947 Russia—History. Moscow—History 67-28980

This political history of a principality attempts to describe the "conflict for supremacy in north-east Russia during the first half of the 14th century. [The author examines] the political strategy of the Khans of the Golden Horde, and the relationship between the Church, the principalities and republics of north-east Russia, the State of Lithuania and the Tatars. [Based on primary sources, the book ends with] the rise of supremacy of the prince and principality of Moscow." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Fennell not only lends lucidity to the political and military struggles which wracked the region but also clarifies the often decisive role of the Tatar khans in the south who had a vital stake in their outcome. After 1359, Mr. Fennell maintains, the entire context of interstate and Russian-Tatar relations changed. This careful study, which will henceforth be required reading for all students of the period, is augmented by invaluable notes on the relevant chronicles and by a discriminating bibliography." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:2487 Je 15 '68 170w

"[This is] a work that may be accounted a scholarly tour de force. The first monograph on fourteenth-century Russia in any western language, it is characterized by the same meticulous scholarship and careful analysis that distinguished the author's volumes on later phases of Muscovite history. The wealth of evidence adduced, mainly from the chronicles, is seldom allowed to obscure the narrative, which provides a reliable guide through the tortuous maze of inter-princely relationships. Wherever possible Professor Fennell offers a well-reasoned interpretation of these rulers' policies; where the evidence is inadequate, he is not afraid to state various hypotheses and to suspend judgment."

TLS p313 Mr 28 '68 1350w

FENNERTON, WILLIAM. The Lucifer cell. 306p $5.95 Atheneum pubs.

68-12537

"The Chinese Communists, abetted by a quiescent Prime Minister, rule England as a despotic dictatorship. . . . A resistance group led by Adam Brett, alias Lucifer, undertakes the assassination of the traitor on the eve of the American invasion of the continent." (Library J)

"A reader does not need to know the city firsthand to cringe from William Fennerton's picture of a London taken over by Chinese revolutionists. Nelson's column, now empty, stands in the renamed Freedom Square. Everywhere there are Red Guard-types watchful, bored, bullying, checking inevitable passes. . . . Gripping tightest when trepidation springs from Mr. Fennerton's rich inventiveness, [the novel] is far weaker when it falls back on tired routines of sex-and-violence." P. M.

Christian Science Monitor p12 Mr 14 '68 90w

Reviewed by Glenda Todd
Library J 93:1820 Ap 15 '68 70w [YA]

"The novel-of-invasion has quite a history in British letters; and this is one of the best books that the genre has yet produced. Fennerton studies, detailedly and plausibly, this possible future history and the reactions of Britons to defeat, from the quislings to the underground; and he never forgets to tell an exciting story. . . . An admirable book, viewed either as a novel or as a thriller." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p14 Mr 10 '68 90w
New Yorker 44:159 My 25 '68 180w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 51:34 Jl 27 '68 40w

FENTON, EDWARD. The big yellow balloon; il. by Ib Ohlsson. unsp $3.95; lib bdg $4.70
 Doubleday

67-15962

"When Roger was walking home with his new balloon, he was trailed by a cat who thought the balloon was the sun and so wanted to destroy it, a dog which wanted to tree the cat, a dogcatcher who wondered if the dog had a license, a lady who was going to protect the dog, a thief who was greedy for the lady's handbag, and a policeman who was suspicious of the thief. . . . Kindergarten to grade three." (Library J)

Reviewed by Richard Kluger
Book World pt 2, p6 (children's issue)
N 5 '67 140w

Horn Bk 43:741 D '67 70w

"In the end, the balloon was broken, the thief caught, and Roger given a Hero medal. A rather long story with humorous Edwardian pictures which have much background detail. The satirical humor might have more appeal for adults than for young children, and some of the language seems modern for the period portrayed, but the cumulative tale is fun to share." M. C. Young

Library J 93:859 F 15 '68 160w

"Fenton has provided a slapstick story . . . that Danish-born artist Ib Ohlsson has illustrated with all the ridiculousness it deserves. More artful than it may seem at first glance, you will get a chance to notice the subtlety because you will surely have to read it aloud many, many times to the children—or to your adult friends. But don't lend your copy. I predict you won't get it back." Eve Merriam

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p71 N 5 '67 100w

FENWICK, ELIZABETH. Disturbance on Berry Hill. 176p $4.50 Atheneum pubs.

68-12538

A novel "about a tightknit sub-suburban community [of seven houses in Connecticut] in which mysterious acts of malicious mischief, at first merely vexatious, culminate in murder." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Begins on an eerie note . . . [which] reaches fever pitch when murder occurs and it is sustained until the climax. Excellently done."

Best Sell 27:446 F 15 '68 40w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 93:575 F 1 '68 30w

"Great economy and subtlety, fine full-fleshed creation of characters, and the usual Fenwick conviction in delicately portraying an aberrant mind in what seems to be a perfectly ordinary person." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p49 Mr 17 '68 50w

"A fine example of the domestic terror story. . . . Miss Fenwick is to be congratulated four times—for her skill in planning and maneuvering; for her brief, light-handed characterizations; for her Berry Hill atmosphere, so almost dull, so comfortable, so human; and for her ability to touch the normal so that it shakes just that much and no more."

New Yorker 44:180 Ap 6 '68 200w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 51:52 F 24 '68 40w

FENWICK, ELIZABETH. Goodbye, Aunt Elva. 179p $4.95 Atheneum pubs.

68-27669

Seventy-six-year-old Miss Besserman makes a mistake "when she accepts the invitation of Mrs. Kay, who lives in the dark house next to her apartment building in a quiet Boston suburb. Mrs. Kay, and her strange son, Roddy, try to persuade Miss Besserman that only she can prevent poor old Elva Ryan from losing the home she loves, but they seem unable to make her understand what part she is to play in their scheme. Fear and terror begin to envelop her when she realizes she cannot leave the house." (Library J)

"A bit too far-fetched in plot to interest any but the addict, and considerably padded out, too."

Best Sell 28:293 O 15 '68 50w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 93:3024 S 1 '68 110w

"The casual, almost matter-of-fact malevolence of Mrs. Kay contrasts most effectively with the benign and unresisting innocence of Miss Besserman in [this] tidy little thriller." A. J. Hubin

N Y Times Bk R p60 S 29 '68 120w

"A powerful little study in helplessness." Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 51:45 O 26 '68 30w

FERMAN LOUIS A., ed. Negroes and jobs; a book of readings; ed. by Louis A. Ferman, Joyce L. Kornbluh and J. A. Miller; foreword by A. Philip Randolph. 591p $9; pa $5.25 Univ. of Mich. press

331.6 Negroes—Employment 67-25340

This is "a collection of 30-odd articles, most previously published, all written since 1960, covering the economic situation of Negroes in the U.S.; social, psychological and institutional factors that have contributed to the development and continuation of lower-class Negro disadvantage in employment; the Negro labor market that results from these factors; and some programs of action that might help remedy this disadvantage." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

Reviewed by R. L. Crain
Am J Soc 74:318 N '68 270w

"The articles are well selected and are accompanied by introductions to the book and to each chapter that put them in the proper context. Covers the same ground as [A. M.] Ross and [H.] Hill's Employment, Race and Poverty [BRD 1967], although that volume has less examination of the social and institutional background and less by way of currently proposed checklists of remedial action. . . . Extensive index, unusual for a collection of this kind."

Choice 5:834 S '68 120w

"[The editors] have succeeded in producing a compendium that should prove useful to that growing group of Americans who are concerned with minority group problems. This book provides necessary background for the general reader and for the student who seeks an understanding of the economic side of the task. . . . This particularly timely and helpful book is recommended for academic and general libraries." William Gibelman

Library J 93:2252 Je 1 '68 150w

FERMI, LAURA. Illustrious immigrants; the intellectual migration from Europe, 1930-41. 440p pl $7.95 Univ. of Chicago press

325.73 U.S.—Foreign population. U.S.—Intellectual life 67-25612

The author describes the variety of intellectuals who came to this country, their cultural and national background, their escape routes and the organizations and individuals who assisted them. She then discusses the achievements of these immigrants in the fields of psychoanalysis, atomic science, art, literature, natural science, social science and other areas. The newcomers included Einstein, Bruno Walter, Marcel Duchamp, Paul Tillich, Hans Morgenthau, Bruno Bettelheim, John Von Neumann, Enrico Fermi and others. Bibliography. Index of persons.

"[The subject] is examined with unusual care and understanding by Laura Fermi, widow of the Italian atomic scientist and Nobel Prize winner Enrico Fermi. . . . Mrs. Fermi has rendered a unique service. With her ability to convert scientific data into living experience, she has written an adventure story of the human spirit. I know of no other book that describes so well what can be called the mating of two cultures on American soil and their mutual transformation. In the process Europeans became 'Americanized,' but America herself took over from Europe what was needed for the pursuit of world power at ■ turning point in history." Hans Sahl

FERMI, LAURA—Continued

Book World p13 Mr 24 '68 600w

Choice 5:676 J1 '68 150w

Christian Century 85:302 Mr 6 '68 100w

"In general the material is well selected, though this reviewer notes two omissions. . . . An invaluable record for future historians from the tongues and pens of the intellectuals themselves, this book, though encyclopedic, remains readable and is recommended for public and academic libraries." E. P. Stickney

Library J 93:2640 J1 '68 250w

"These immigrants still need their historian, despite Laura Fermi's brave effort. [This] is an honest and informative book; it is well-organized, well-informed, well-balanced. [It] is crammed with information, with illuminating anecdotes, often moving incidents and revealing statistics. . . . But [Mrs. Fermi's] writing is pedestrian; she permits too much of the machinery of her research, too many of her methodological problems, to emerge into the text; she does less than full justice to the trauma of migration and the stresses of adjustment; and she reduces or eliminates often severe intellectual and political conflicts." Peter Gay

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ap 7 '68 1350w

Reviewed by G. W. Johnson

Sat R 51:40 Mr 23 '68 380w

"Although the author's topic is the magnitude of Europe's intellectual contribution, the 'only in America' theme runs throughout the book and is nowhere more emphatically stated than in the case of the nuclear scientists. When the story moves into the fields of the arts and the social sciences, it becomes a somewhat mechanical recital of biographical data and titles of publications that smacks of line-counting in Who's Who, and the judgments have a secondhand flavor that fails to carry conviction. . . . [But this] is in so many ways a splendid and useful book, tackling with imagination, industry, and a rare combination of personal concern and emotional detachment a subject that would frighten—indeed thus far has frightened—professional social historians by its magnitude and complexity." A. K. Smith

Science 160:636 My 10 '68 2600w

FERNALD, JOHN. Sense of direction; the director and his actors. 189p il $6.95 Stein & Day

792 Theater—Production and direction

[68-99490]

The author, "formerly principal of the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, . . . defines and charts the role of the director, stage by stage, from early rehearsals through the opening of a play. . . . [He] examines the various areas of the director's responsibility, including movement, tempo, pace, interpretation, stage grouping and improvisation. . . . In the matter of interpretation he uses specific scenes, primarily from Chekhov. . . . [examining] the relationship between a director and his actors." (Library J)

Reviewed by B. J. McGurl

Best Sell 28:188 Ag 1 '68 500w

"Here is an enormously valuable book by a practical man of the theater. . . . He gives a marvelously perceptive and detailed discussion of the various uses of the theatrical pause and warns against its inherent dangers. Typical of the practical content of the book is his demonstration of how subtle shading of a role can be achieved through nuances in articulation. . . . The entire book is permeated with a sense of the importance of selectivity, which is one of the primary responsibilities of a good director. Fernald shows us how he selects and then gives reasons for not choosing the possibilities he rejected. . . . The book is highly recommended for professional and other interested readers." M. B. Raines

Library J 93:3018 S 1 '68 300w

"No one has really defined the role of the theater director satisfactorily, and . . . [the author] does little in [this book]. . . . Although

Mr. Fernald splits the contents under different headings such as 'The Means,' 'The Intention' and 'Attitudes and Interpretations,' with a last chapter ominously titled 'Personal and Confidential' he lacks any line which carries his argument forward strongly. His is a practical, mediocre approach, and by the end of the book it has become very repetitive. . . . Generalizations and explanations, such as how to get a laugh, or, as [he] prefers to describe it, a 'comedy reaction,' . . . seem terribly heavy-handed. The protective element of the director is also over-emphasized."

TLS p1055 S 19 '68 900w

FERNANDEZ DE FIGUEROA, MARTIN. See Figueroa, M. F. de

FERRACUTI, FRANCO, Jr. auth. The subculture of violence. See Wolfgang, M. E.

FERRÉ, FREDERICK. Basic modern philosophy of religion. 465p $7.50; pa $3.95 Scribner

200.1 Religion—Philosophy 67-15490

"This study is intended to be . . . clearly intelligible to ordinary thoughtful readers without presupposing a quantity of technical prerequisites. . . . Selection of topics here has been deliberately aimed at including what will cover [only] the central issues. . . . [First] I deal with what all religions may be thought to have in common (Chapters Two through Four). . . . [Then, my] attention turns to theistic religion and to the issues involved with the possibility of intellectually responsible belief in God (Chapters Five through Thirteen). And, finally, I make an attempt . . . to take note of certain current developments [within Christianity]." (Prologue) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[This book] well deserves the adjectives 'basic' and 'modern.' [It] grapples with the underlying problems in the field as they present themselves today . . . [and] is outstanding by virtue of the relevance of [Ferre's] choice of topics, the clarity of his exposition, and his ability to meet his prospective readers at the point where they are."

Choice 5:358 My '68 200w

"A worthwhile and contemporary treatise. . . . No attempt is made to treat the wide variety of matters that are often covered in philosophies of religion. Ferré's basic concern is with the question of God. . . . The thought of Hume, Kant, Hegel, Nietzsche, James, Altizer and others is set forth in dramatic and critical fashion. Philosophy of religion, as Ferré does it, is in no sense generalized presentation: it is grounded in concrete historical data. . . . Ferré [is especially helpful in delineating] various contemporary attempts to reform the traditional model of theism; e.g., 'demythologizing,' secular theology and process thought. In each instance [he] reveals his ability for succinct statement and judicious appraisal." J. R. Williams

Christian Century 85:457 Ap 10 '68 260w

"Although he refers to earlier philosophers, [Professor Ferré's] treatment essentially begins with Descartes. . . . Although the suggested readings add value to the book, the reader may question whether [he] has really made the volume basic." Shildes Johnson

Library J 92:1935 My 15 '67 190w

TLS p1344 N 28 '68 280w

FERRER, ALDO. The Argentine economy; tr. by Marjory M. Urquidí. 239p $6 Univ. of Calif. press

330.982 Argentine Republic—Economic conditions 66-25669

The author analyzes the Argentine economy 'in historical terms, tracing the evolution of the country's economy through four separate stages, beginning with the colonial era in the sixteenth century. Most attention is given to the period of 'nonintegrated industrial economy,' from 1930 to the present." (Publisher's note) Index.

"After re-acustoming one's ear to economic jargon (sectors, aggregates, social overhead capital, etc.), one longs to know the names of policy makers. From reading the book, one would be led to believe that only government does (and should) make economic decisions. At times, the impression is given that it is a treatise in economic theory using Argentine illustrations. Nonetheless, Ferrer treats the toughest question in all economies—who gets and should get the economic 'goodies.' . . . Stylistically, the book is often dull and sometimes repetitious. Few will read it save scholars, economists, some historians, and graduate students."

Choice 5:233 Ap '68 200w

"Ferrer, university professor and former minister of economics, had access to primary sources on which to base this well-written, informative monograph. Recommended for college, university and larger public libraries."

F. E. Kidder

Library J 92:1002 Mr 1 '67 120w

FERRERO, GUGLIELMO. The two French revolutions, 1789-1796; ed. by Luc Monnier; tr. from the French by Samuel J. Hurwitz; with a foreword by Crane Brinton. 236p $5.95; pa $2.95 Basic bks.

944.04 France—History—Revolution, 1789-1799 67-21805

This volume is based on the notes of courses given by the late Professor Ferrero at the University of Geneva from 1940 to 1942. He "saw the failure of the Old Regime as making the work of the Constituent Assembly absolutely necessary. This first revolution, or the Constituent Assembly, failed to establish what Professor Ferrero called a legitimate government. Thus the men of the second revolution, or the Reign of Terror, also had no chance of forming a legitimate organization, and so the Terror had to be a dictatorship. This dictatorship could only produce a more effective dictator in the form of Napoleon." (Library J) Index. Originally published in 1951 as Les Deux Révolutions Françaises: 1789-1796.

"Despite the handicap of working from Professor Ferrero's rough draft and his lecture notes, Mr. Monnier has put together a book that is representative of Professor Ferrero's thinking concerning the French Revolution. . . . All students of history will find this book enjoyable and profitable reading." Judah Adelson

Library J 93:185 Ja 15 '68 200w

Reviewed by C. B. A. Behrens

N Y Rev of Books 10:31 Je 20 '68 1450w

"Like [Ferrero's] other major works, . . . the book fairly bounces with ideas: a comment, for instance, on the forced revival of revolutionary vigor which occurs in already established revolutionary regimes does much to explain Mao's burst of Red Guardism; again, in a few sentences on the peculiar nature of the revolutionary (or totalitarian) armies, he puts his finger on the real reasons for Napoleon's (and, by extension, Hitler's) remarkably consistent military successes. His book is not to be missed."

New Yorker 44:190 Ap 20 '68 300w

FEUERBACH, LUDWIG. The essence of faith according to Luther; tr. by Melvin Chernob. 127p $4.50 Harper

234 Faith, Christianity—Philosophy. Luther, Martin 67-21547

"This is a translation of the version of Das Wesen des Glaubens im Sinne Luthers that Feuerbach himself prepared for the first volume of his Complete Works, published in 1846. . . . [There has been a] rearrangement of the quotations from Luther . . . [and] many of the longer sentences have been broken up into two or even three sentences." (Introd) Annotated bibliography.

Choice 5:638 Jl '68 140w

"The growing Feuerbach corpus in English . . . had previously lacked this pivotal work in his atheistic attack upon Hegelianism and theology. . . . Although what Feuerbach says here about Luther says more about Feuerbach than it does about Luther, Luther gains too. . . . Half the book is composed of direct—and pungent—Luther quotations (these Chernob has helpfully retraced to the present Weimar edition of Luther's works). . . . For Feuerbach perceived what Luther's own admirers often miss. The controversial edge of the Reformer's theology was not, in the first instance sola gratia or even solus Christus, but faith. Moreover, in exploring what Luther meant by faith Feuerbach is not preoccupied with faith's subjectivity . . . but with faith's object, God's love in Christ. . . . True, what Feuerbach does with that object is a monstrous trivialization. . . . Chernob's fine translation and useful introduction make us wish his doctoral dissertation, 'Ludwig Feuerbach and the Intellectual Basis of 19th Century Radicalism,' were not only on microfilm but in print." R. W. Bertram

Christian Century 84:1660 D 27 '67 500w

"Feuerbach [shows Luther] to be the best illustration of the main argument of [Feuerbach's book] The Essence of Christianity, which attempts to demonstrate that God is an abstraction of all the perfections which are dear to man, which man desires for himself, but cannot attain because of all sorts of historical contingencies. Luther is characterized as overthrowing the spiritual aspects of the Catholic Church in favor of a more human orientation." R. L. Perkins

Library J 92:2929 S 1 '67 110w

FEUERBACH, LUDWIG. Lectures on the essence of religion; tr. by Ralph Manheim. 359p $9.50 Harper

200 Religion

67-21548

An "interpretation of Feuerbach's central position. In this book he subjects non-Christian religions and animism to the same critique which he previously gave of Christianity. He finds in these the same pattern which he found in Christianity, namely self-preservation and egoism." (Library J) Bibliography.

"In his major work on religion, The Essence of Christianity (1844), Feuerbach traced the roots of religion and God in man himself. Man forms an idealized image of himself, based on his desires and wishes, and then projects them outwardly into a transcendent being that embodies all imaginable perfections. Because this view seemed to suggest that man is an absolutely self-sufficient being who can be conceived exclusively in terms of himself, Feuerbach proceeded to correct this misinterpretation in The Essence of Religion (1846) and in these Lectures. He now fully recognizes man's dependency, not, however, on some supernatural being, but on nature itself, 'without which neither (man's) existence nor his essence is conceivable.' . . . His insights are still illuminating and by no means superseded."

Choice 5:354 My '68 210w

"This work is not a great contribution to the study of primitive religion, but is rather an interesting application of a most peculiar methodology. It is required reading for all students of the history of religious thought and philosophy of the 19th Century." R. L. Perkins

Library J 92:2929 S 1 '67 110w

FEUERLICHT, ROBERTA STRAUSS. The desperate act; the assassination of Franz Ferdinand at Sarajevo. 172p il maps $4.95 McGraw

943.6 Francis Ferdinand, Archduke of Austria, Austria—Politics and government

68-17505

"The assassination of the Austrian Archduke Franz Ferdinand and his wife . . . in late July of 1914 by Gavrilo Princip, one of a gang of conspiring assassins, was the . . . act that ignited the fuse which was to explode into World War I. The story of that assassination and its immediate consequences in the trial and execution of the conspirators is told here with photos, maps, bibliography and index." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 28:154 Jl 1 '68 80w [YA]

"[The author's] version of the improbable meshing of various circumstances seems entirely credible. Based on a good deal of research plus an interview with a surviving member of the assassination group this easily readable, intensely interesting book may well capture the imaginations of high school students."

Library J 93:3980 O 15 '68 190w [YA]

Reviewed by C. H. Simonds

Nat R 20:1281 D 17 '68 20w

"To open a book to an epigraph by John Locke justifying political assassination is, these days, startling. The fact that the desperate act recounted here was tyrannicide . . . does not make the story less provocative. It is a story much legend or myth as history, and as . . . Feuerlicht tells it again, today's accents and analogies dart from her pages. . . . [The story is] well told." Roger Jellinek

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p18 My 5 '68 300w

FEUERWERKER, ALBERT, ed. Approaches to modern Chinese history; ed. by Albert Feuerwerker, Rhoads Murphey [and] Mary C. Wright. 356p $7.50 Univ. of Calif. press

951 China—History 67-15640

Twelve studies which "range chronologically from the early eighteenth century to the early twentieth—the late Ch'ing period and the Republic. . . . [They discuss] the internal political-institutional history of modern China, the texture of intellectual life, the nature of the traditional and semi-modern economy, and the foreign relations of China. . . . The authors and editors, all of whom received their training under Professor John K. Fairbank, have assembled this volume in recognition of his central role in opening the field in which they all now work." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Index.

Reviewed by A. B. Cole
Am Hist R 73:1596 Je '68 390w
Choice 4:1430 F '68 60w

"The better known contributors are Professors Robert Scalapino and Joseph Levenson of California, and Professor Feuerwerker of Michigan. As can be expected, the subject matters discussed in the several papers range widely. . . . There is 'gold' in this book, but only for those who are familiar with the hills and know how to dig for and recognize it. For large or special collections." Wen Chao Chen

Library J 92:2402 Je 15 '67 150w

"Despite the technical competence in the use of Chinese and Japanese materials and the mastery of correct bibliographical procedure the most striking features of nearly all these essays is their irrelevance to the big themes of Chinese history and their painful academic smugness. Of the 12 papers in the book only one, E-tu Zen Sun's 'Mining Labour in the Ch'ing Period', has something fundamental to say about modern China, while Marius B. Jansen's 'Japanese Views of China During the Meiji Period' is useful on the ideological background to Japanese expansionism. . . . The others deal with minor issues that can be ignored by all but the specialist obliged to take in his colleagues' washing. The lessons of this collection are clear. Competence in handling difficult sources is useless unless combined with a feel for the pulse of Chinese history." Bill Jenner

New Statesman 74:778 D 1 '67 390w
TLS p1208 D 14 '67 350w

FICHTER, JOSEPH H. America's forgotten priests—what they are saying. 254p $6.95 Harper

262 Catholic Church in the U.S. Clergy 68-11735

"[In 1966, [the author], the Charles Chauncey Stillman Professor of Roman Catholic Studies at Harvard, mailed an 80-part questionnaire to 6000 rank-and-file diocesan priests. This book contains an analysis of the results. . . . There were questions on freedom and authority, Vietnam, . . . civil rights, seminary training, clerical dress, and the rate of implementation of the Vatican decrees." (Library J)

"There are no correlations, and only minimal attempts to group data or establish 'syndromes.' This comes to be a kind of ecclesiastical Gallup Poll, or a Romanized Roper report. Theoretical considerations and interpretations are . . . spiced with a delightful selection of 'polar type' personal statements from respondents . . . to give the written report that tone of the personal and a touch of the homey expected in a report deserving the widest possible reading public. The implications and interpretations of the data receive special treatment. It would be extremely superficial to attempt even the most basic summary of them in the narrow confines of a review. . . . [The final chapter] is a very cool and calculated overview of the legitimate expectations of the diocesan clergy for change and development." J. F. Scheuer

America 113:416 Mr 30 '68 850w

"[This] is the best portrait to date of the forgotten men of Vatican II. One word characterizes the priests' attitude: restless."

Christian Century 85:268 F 28 '68 40w

"The fact that 62 per cent of the respondents favor the diocesan priest's freedom to marry has already been widely reported in the press. Far more important, however, is the documentation of such facts as the waste of talent in the employment of parish assistants and the need for a complete reformation of the current system of appointments, transfers, and promotions. . . . Father Fichter has thoroughly analyzed the answers in relation to the age and status of the respondents and presents the results in a professional manner without sensationalism. This is the most thorough survey ever made of the Catholic diocesan clergy. It will certainly be frequently quoted, and it is essential for larger libraries and those especially concerned with problems of church renewal." W. C. Heiser

Library J 93:191 Ja 15 '68 180w

FIEDLER, LESLIE A. The return of the vanishing American. 192p $5.95 Stein & Day

818 American fiction—History and criticism.
American literature—History and criticism
68-15433

The author "refers to this volume as the third and final in his 'venture in literary anthropology.' Thus, with Love and Death in the American Novel [BRD 1960, 1961] and Waiting for the End [BRD 1964], this 'constitutes a single work.' . . . Professor Fiedler sees the advent of a 'New Western' based on the American myth of the Indian and his predominance of the subconscious. The Indian has indeed remained as a threat to American ideals, only to be replaced by the 'acid-head or the borderline schizophrenic on the Lower East Side. In Mr. Fiedler's view the Indian has successfully transferred himself and will be the subject of a new revolution and a new literature." (Library J)

Choice 5:951 O '68 150w

"[This work] is sometimes stimulating, even brilliant, but more often its credibility is destroyed by distortions and a compulsion to fit every work into a single pattern. . . . The first and last sections of the book are based on sketchy evidence, with too much excitability in Mr. Fiedler's reasoning; but the middle section has distinction. Here Mr. Fiedler traces four archetypal patterns in colonial and 19th-century American literature—Pocahontas, Rip Van Winkle, and the Indian captivity accounts of Alexander Henry and Hannah Dusto. . . . [This central section,] richly suggestive and worth all the rest of the book, is presented with equanimity and evenness of judgment. Mr. Fiedler's literary anthropology has its bogs of melodrama, but also, as this section shows, its clearings from which one has sudden vistas of American cultural experience." R. E. Long
Christian Science Monitor p13 Ap 25 '68 600w

"Professor Fiedler [is] always brilliant, always erratic, and never to be missed. . . . A very important book essential to any collection on American literature." C. A. Raines
Library J 93:553 F '68 260w

"It is in the tension between dialectical control and Dionysian insight that a structural ambivalence in Fiedler's argument occurs. He will doubtless be criticized as he often is, for being too free with analytic method. But (to make sure he can't win) I think that in this book he hasn't been free enough, that his perceptions are constricted by his dialectic. . . . He has found the trail that anyone wanting to go West—i.e., wanting to connect the American imagination's present with its past and future—must follow. And, as usual, he has written true things imaginatively. As usual, his readers and critics will wrangle with him. As usual, that doesn't matter; because no matter how fast and loose one may think him, he has served once more to illuminate remote dimensions of the human imagination's infinitely deep well." Peter Michelson

New Repub 158:29 My 11 '68 2500w

Reviewed by Kenneth Rexroth
N Y Times Bk R p4 Mr 17 '68 1300w
New Yorker 44:126 Je 1 '68 210w

Reviewed by Robert Maurer
Sat R 51:26 Mr 30 '68 1250w

"In his latest venture into 'literary anthropology,' Fiedler has sought out and identified the spiritual heir of the classic frontiersman, that New World breed who was an Indian at heart. The heir is none other than today's hippie, painting his own sunsets on psychedelic clouds. . . . Fiedler makes an interesting distinction between nostalgic evocations of a West long since tamed in a net of superhighways, and the truer, mythological West of rebirth and renewal that is always in the future. . . . The New West is not a place but a state of altered consciousness, a kind of new frontier of madness. As with much else in [this book], this suggestion demands a skeptical response. For when Fiedler leaves the well-beaten bush of literature and psychology for territory as complex and mystifying as the human nervous system, he is a tourist who does not speak the language. He has an unfortunate way of composing statements full of adman phrases. . . . He has a penchant for overcategorizing and overreaching. . . . But [he] does have a knack of presenting provocative material in such a rich context that it rarely fails to stimulate the reader's imagination."

Time 91:94 Mr 15 '68 950w

FIELD, FRANK. The last days of mankind; Karl Kraus and his Vienna. 280p $10 St Martins

837 Kraus, Karl. Vienna—History 67-25639

"The Viennese satirist Karl Kraus commented on and foretold [the collapse of the Habsburg Empire] and wrote an extended epilogue to it [in the] periodical Die Fackel (The Torch), which he founded in 1899 and edited throughout its 37 years. . . . From 1910 to his death in 1936 Kraus was its sole contributor. . . . The task Dr Field has set himself is to retrace the historical aspect of Kraus's work as a comment on and contribution to public events, in the light of the more or less established history of the era." (Economist) Bibliography. Index.

"This historical study of Kraus' Vienna, which puts the polemicist in its very center, contains several vignettes of Viennese intrigues and scandals to which standard histories of this period make but a passing reference. Well written and well documented, this volume brings to the attention of the American reader the ultimately universal significance of Kraus' ethical concern and should be on the shelves of every college library."

Choice 5:630 J1 '68 220w

"Dr Field does not directly concern himself with the literary problem of Kraus's work. . . . His is an historian's account—he is in a sense obliged to read Kraus's satire against its grain, to give an account of the work without the art. . . . He does this soberly and conscientiously. . . . The last Days of Mankind, the monster drama which Kraus wrote during the first world war and published immediately after it, is the most sustained indictment of war ever written, but it is also prophecy of horrors to come. For all the scholarly restraint of his tone Dr Field conveys a deep sympathy for the agony of soul that speaks from that play [from which his title is taken]."

Economist 227:52 Ap 6 '68 700w

"Since Professor Field of Keele University shows Kraus against the social and political background of his age, his study will be welcome by all those interested in the recent history of Austria as a test case of the Western world in transformation, and in the foundations of Hitler's national Socialism, for many of its roots grew from the very same society which was the object of Kraus's scathing satire." F. M. Wassermann

Library J 93:2002 My 15 '68 220w

New Yorker 44:92 J1 13 '68 110w

Reviewed by W. A. Jenks

Social Studies 59:340 D '68 400w

"[Kraus] believed in the existence of a preordained and indissoluble link between language and the world of action, the purity of the one being an unfailing test of the integrity of the other. The corruption of the times thus found its expression and proof in the deterioration of the German language. It is in this respect that Mr. Field's method of presentation tends, by its emphasis on historical events, to somewhat distort the picture and to leave the reader with an exaggerated impression of the relevance of the particular polemics in which Kraus was engaged to the wider purposes he wished to serve. This is also the result of some inadequacy of treatment of Kraus's poetry. His poems, though they often appear highly contrived, do on occasion reach great heights."

TLS p198 F 29 '68 1200w

FIELD, G. LOWELL. Comparative political development: the precedent of the West. 247p $6.75 Cornell univ. press

320.3 Political science

67-14082

This book attempts to apply "conceptions of theory-construction and of model-building to the problem of classifying and explaining political systems."

(p. 1) The author "begins by distinguishing eight criteria for the classification of political regimes . . . [with] further criteria for distinguishing between 'levels of socio-economic development.' . . . [He proceeds to an examination of the 'political history of European nation states and the nation states of European antecedents' . . . develops a theory of 'stability and change in political regimes' . . . [and] draws out the 'implications for Africa and Asia' . . . [concluding with a discussion of] 'the future of the highly developed countries.'" (TLS) Index.

"By restricting his analysis almost entirely to the effects of bureaucratization upon elite and mass attitudes, [Field] has taken for granted much of what other theorists have regarded as fascinating material for empirical investigation. . . . One of [this book's] most basic difficulties stems from its lack of mutually exclusive criteria for the classification of political regimes. . . . Other problems arising from Field's treatment are the ambiguities created by his frequent use of what might be called quasi-definitions. . . . In spite of the obvious difficulties it raises, Field's . . . analysis does succeed in bringing a freshness of approach to many familiar concepts. He gives a new perspective . . . to the difference between ideological and non-ideological styles of politics, and he imparts a new coloration to the old polarity between the political right and left. One's reading of Western history certainly must be altered by the insights that he provides."

W. L. Mason

Am Pol Sci R 62:280 Mr '68 800w

"[This study] provides yet another example of the scholasticism which mars much American work in political science. . . . It is both easy and dangerous to pour ridicule on a new theory, and one must recognize at least the possibility that Professor Field has found something that his predecessors have missed. To convince us of this, however, he would need to argue far more convincingly in favour of his chosen methodology, and to show himself to be a very much better historian than, on the evidence provided by this book, he appears to be. It would also help if he learnt to present his alleged findings more clearly and attractively. For the mature student of comparative politics the book is an interesting if exasperating curiosity. For the less mature student it could be dangerously misleading. Almost anyone else will find it a bore."

TLS p1226 O 31 '68 480w

FIELD, MICHAEL. Michael Field's Culinary classics and improvisations; il. by Mozelle Thompson. 223p $6.95 Knopf

641.5 Cookery, International

67-18619

The author "has limited himself primarily to meats, fowl and seafood main-dish recipes. . . . He includes well-known recipes in international cuisine and some old American favorites." (Library J)

"As ever, [Field's] recipes are faultless: the most inexperienced cook can achieve perfection with them. . . . [Experienced cooks] will be intrigued by the possibilities of back-to-back dinner parties: the first guests getting the full-dress classics, the second-nighters, all unsuspecting, contentedly dispatching the equally attractive 'improvisations.'" Gloria Levitas

Book World p6 D 17 '67 110w

"[Field's] asides on the preparation and behavior of foods are interesting and useful, directions are excellent and the format promises to be good. Highly recommended." Lelia Saunders

Library J 92:3420 O 1 '67 110w

FIELD, STANLEY. Guide to opportunities for education, training, and research in the sciences. 255p $6 Public affairs press

502 Science as a profession

67-29702

"This book describes opportunities offered by the National Science Foundation and 'other foundations, private industry, professional societies, the Civil Service and the Armed Forces. [It] gives . . . emphasis to nuclear science and engineering and space science and stresses graduate fellowships and postdoctoral research." (Library J)

"Seems to be basically authoritative and well researched, although many of the contents are subject to change. It should find a place in the libraries of counselors at both the secondary school and collegiate level, and should also be provided in the school, college, or university library . . . as a genuine source of leads for opportunities, especially at the graduate level. Not only does it do a good job of cataloging graduate opportunities, but provides the student with an overview of collegiate specializations and possibilities."

FIELD, STANLEY—Continued

Choice 5:326 My '68 90w

"Mr. Field's guidebook represents an attempt to bring together information, heretofore widely scattered, regarding the very rapidly developing opportunities in the sciences. There is no question but that this purpose is fulfilled. . . . Although he briefly defines most of the programs, he does provide addresses to facilitate further inquiry. The book has three significant drawbacks: other guides cover some areas much more comprehensively, for example, UNESCO's 'Study Abroad Series,' and the American Council on Education publications regarding pre- and postdoctoral fellowships; it will be out-of-date in a short time; and indexing is essentially nonexistent." H. O. Marcy

Library J 93:536 F 1 '68 150w

FIELDING, DAPHNE. Those remarkable Cunards; Emerald and Nancy [Eng title: Emerald and Nancy]. 205p pl $6.50 Atheneum pub.

B or 92 Cunard, Maude Alice (Burke), Lady Cunard, Nancy 68-27442

An account of the lives of a mother and daughter who were prominent in social and artistic circles in England from the nineties to the second World War. Nancy, a poet, rebelled against her mother, and espoused many liberal causes, including the Loyalists in Spain and the emancipation of the Negro.

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 29 '68

440w

Economist 227:50 Je 8 '68 210w

"[This book] impresses by its restraint and lack of flair. But the incredible stories, told so matter-of-factly gather force thereby. What a world: such brilliance, such talent, such beauty, such stupidity, such practical jokes, such taste. There may have been dull moments, but never in this reading." K. G. Jackson

Harper 237:102 S '68 360w

"[This is a slighter work than Hugh Ford's Nancy Cunard, BRD 1968. It is] a gossip biography, more concerned with surface than substance. . . . [Its] chief value is the relatively large amount of information Miss Fielding gives about Nancy's mother, Maud or, as she referred to herself in her later years, Emerald.

Mr. Ford's book is for most college and public libraries; large ones may also want the biography by Miss Fielding." Dorothy Curley

Library J 93:2645 J1 '68 140w

Reviewed by Rayner Heppenstall

New Statesman 75:732 My 31 '68 330w

New Yorker 44:182 S 28 '68 80w

"[This volume] contains a grand collection of photos and much fascinating information about two women who not only knew everybody but knew almost everybody well, sometimes overly well. The book opens the door to elegant Mayfair drawing rooms and also the garrets, ateliers and hideaways of vagabond artists in London and Continental Europe. It's a real treat, titillating and picturesque. But the good deeds of mother and daughter matter more than the misdeeds as a caviling mind might describe them, and deserve a little more consideration in this short biography by Daphne Fielding. Acquainted with the Cunards and with Lady Maud than with Nancy. . . . They were lovely, and irresistible, and scandalous, but above all they were catalysts." W. G. Rogers

Sat R 51:29 Ag 31 '68 500w

"[This is] a do-it-yourself biography in which the reader is given some facts, but mostly hearsay, on which to form a judgment. Mrs. Fielding is happiest among the London hostesses whom Lady Cunard outshone. . . . In her straight descriptions [she] might be writing for the cheaper women's magazines. The tandem memoirs of Lady Cunard and Nancy are the result of Mrs. Fielding's common acquaintance. She knew them both, as she knew Rosa Lewis, The Duchess of Jermyn Street [BRD 1964], the subject of a previous period piece. But these two women, each in her own way so vivid, so superficially antagonistic, so radically similar, have posed Mrs. Fielding with two problems, neither of which she has solved. The first failure springs from a lack of human curiosity, the second from a deficiency of narrative talent."

TLS p509 My 16 '68 2250w

FIELDING, HENRY. Joseph Andrews; ed. by Martin C. Battestin. 389p $10 Wesleyan univ. press

66-23927

The first volume in the Wesleyan Edition of the Works of Henry Fielding, under the joint sponsorship of the Wesleyan University Press and the Clarendon Press. "A double textual authority is, recognized, that of the first edition as regards accidentals (this text being nearest to the lost manuscript) and that of the second edition as regards substantives, since it 'represents the only real reworking that Fielding gave to his novel.'" (TLS) Included are "an introduction with . . . information about the circumstances, date, and history of composition; an explanation of textual methodology (by Fredson Bowers); [and six] appendices." (Choice) The novel was first published in 1742 under the title The History of the Adventures of Joseph Andrews and of His Friend, Mr. Abraham Adams.

"This volume contains everything the scholar expects in a first-rate textual edition. . . . An additional attraction of this edition is the extensive annotation (by far the best now available) of the many literary and historical allusions which the modern reader of this very topical novel must generally ignore, often at the expense of missing the point in some interesting and humorous passages. The Fielding scholar will find this edition . . . an indispensable tool, and no research library should be without it. If it sustains in its following volumes the high quality of this excellent textual edition of Joseph Andrews, the Wesleyan Edition of Fielding's complete works will be enthusiastically welcomed by Fielding scholars who have long been handicapped by the lack of a comprehensive and consistently reliable text."

Choice 4:824 O '67 190w

"Since he insists that the 'Wesleyan Fielding' is primarily for the scholar, Mr. Battestin is perhaps not to be taken to task for not providing more in the way of general background information and also of interpretation, such as is contained in his earlier edition [1961]. While Mr. Battestin rises to heartiness. . . he never descends to carelessness, and his research is frequently rewarding. The textual introduction by Professor Bowers is a model of exposition. . . the five appendices devoted to textual matters . . . are exhaustive, and everything is out in the open, so that any reader who wants to weigh the textual evidence for himself may do so. . . . The text itself is handsomely designed and set out, and printed on paper of good quality. All in all the first volume of the 'Wesleyan Fielding' establishes a very high standard indeed."

TLS p324 Ap 20 '67 600w

Va Q R 44:xxvi winter '68 100w

"Professor Battestin has presented a text that differs from all others but that is certainly as close as we can ever get to what the author wished us to read. . . . What we are here given is the result of examining the five editions that appeared in the author's lifetime, as well as what appeared later that might conceivably be based on authorial alterations. . . . No doubt some modern readers will be dismayed because this is an unmodernized text. Adams, for example, is discovered 'smoking his Pipe.' . . . [This book will not] win a prize for good printing." F. W. Hilles

Yale R 57:281 D '67 750w

FIELDING, RAYMOND, ed. A technological history of motion pictures and television. Soc Society of motion picture and television engineers

50 years of Soviet power [by] Leo Huberman [and others]. 94p $4 Monthly review

947.084 Russia—History—1917-. Communism

—Russia 67-31345

The ten essays in this book were first published in the November, 1967 issue of the Monthly Review. Contributors include Leo Hu-berman, P. M. Sweezy, Scott Nearing, Harry Braverman, Staughton Lynd, Maurice Dobb, Joan Robinson, Lisa Foa, I. B. Tabata, Hans Blumenfeld and Rudolf Schlesinger.

"This is a 'pathetic' little booklet based upon a special . . . issue of the socialist periodical . . . 'pathetic' because, commemorating as it does the 50th anniversary of the Russian Revolution, it represents more a wake than a celebration. [The contributors] . . . are all well known for their work dealing with Soviet or socialist problems and programs. They seem unhappy, disillusioned and fretful about the future of Marxian socialism, especially as presently interpreted in the Soviet Union. . . . The dreams of youth and utopia seem to have aged in this analysis and the authors seem saddened and uncertain about where the great experiment goes next. Not a book that will enjoy wide readership." R. F. Delaney

Library J 93:1150 Mr 15 '68 210w

"The negative attitude of the New Left as expressed in [this book] is . . . surprising. It is the chief merit of this collection of essays that its contributors, members of the Old and New Left, are more concerned with Russia's future than its past. In their contributions one looks in vain for a Marxist discussion of the laws and necessities that governed development during the last five decades. . . . It is not so certain whether it would be fair to describe all of the authors in this book as 'Marxists'; some have gone considerably beyond Marxism—or retreated from it, according to one's point of view. . . . The New Left sounds utterly dejected. . . . Some of the essays . . . provide a fascinating study in unreality, the political equivalent of the theater of the absurd." Walter Lacqueur

N Y Times Bk R p3 Ap 21 '68 750w

"[This collection] stands out among the number of similar volumes written to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the October Revolution in that it is the work of writers—most of them more or less committed Marxists—who hailed the revolution with enthusiasm in their earlier years, and now seek to make a maturer estimate of its place in history. Revolutions seldom satisfy their first idealistic supporters; and it is not surprising that the keynote of some of these contributions is disillusionment. . . . Three excellent contributions, which assess both achievements and prospects with a careful balance of pros and cons, come from Mr. Braverman, Mr. Blumenfeld and Signora Foa, a prolific contributor to Italian party journals."

TLS p724 Jl 11 '68 600w

FIGES, EVA. Winter journey. 119p $3.95 Hill & Wang

This novel follows the course of a day in the life of a lonely old Londoner, Janus Stobbs. "Nothing much happens. He wakes up in the small hours, wondering if he dare creak along the passage to the lavatory; he goes to his daughter's for his dinner, and he takes his grandson for a walk in the afternoon. Action is hardly to be expected; the old man's first main concern is to keep going, to avoid just dropping dead. It's the small things that matter: tying up the laundry parcel and remembering not to leave it in the reading room of the library. And all the time there is the humiliation of having to depend on others." (TLS)

"This 'hors d'oeuvre' of a novel may tempt those readers who prefer to feast on stream-of-consciousness or experimental works instead of on more conventional fare. Eva Figes chooses to create moods and thought processes rather than concise pictures; this is a confusing game for the reader and often leaves him stumbling over the pebble of poetic prose scattered along a somewhat arid plot. . . . Gradually, the author conveys the feeling of hopelessness and frustration which is so often a part of being old. The main character is a believable old man lost in a callous, uncaring environment. Unfortunately, the reader wearies of the whole thing by the end. Eva Figes won a literary award in England for this novel in 1967, which cuts no ice with this reviewer. Brief as it is, Winter Journey is tough sledding." C. D. Pipes

Library J 93:1019 Mr 1 '68 170w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p44 Ap 28 '68 80w

"[Miss Figes's novel] is small in size and large in ambition, and it would be good to be able to say that she has worked wonders in a small space, but in fact her work falls short of seeming even genuine. . . . As one reads along one cannot help thinking that for 'old man' one could well substitute 'chair, old chair,' or 'old doorway, or old anything—old woman, old stevedore, old pressed leaf. It is the old and wornout that count here, not the humanity of the man Miss Figes calls Janus Stobbs."

New Yorker 44:145 Je 8 '68 80w

"This is a tight, biting little commentary. . . . Miss Figes's flat style, accumulating detail after detail, combining total recall with recurrent amnesia, is admirable for her subject. Sometimes, especially towards the end, the allusions are too literary for the kind of life in which, say, the wandering albatross could hardly be a familiar figure. But on the whole [the novel] captures with great sensitivity the lonely indignities of old age."

TLS p364 Ap 27 '67 100w

FIGUEROA, MARTIN FERNANDEZ DE. A Spaniard in the Portuguese Indies; the narrative of Martin Fernandez de Figueroa [by] James B. McKenna. (Harvard univ. Dept. of Romance langs. and lit. Harvard studies in Romance langs.) 288p il $9.95 Harvard univ. press

910.4 Voyages and travels. India—Discovery and exploration. Portuguese in India, Spaniards in India 67-27089

"This book seeks to present to the student of Iberian culture a critical edition and detailed study of the [16th century] narrative of Martin Fernandez de Figueroa [Conquista de las Indias de Persia e Arabia]. . . . A facsimile and critical edition of the narrative is accompanied by an English translation . . . [and] commentary." (Pref) Bibliography. Index. The original text is in the Palha Collection of the Harvard University Library.

Choice 5:1020 O '68 180w

"[The book] includes a most useful essay titled 'The Narrative in History and Literature' by the editor and translator. . . . Although addressed primarily to the specialist, this critical edition . . . will also be of use to the layman who is interested in travel narratives and in the Age of Exploration. The observations set down here by the Spanish gentleman who joined a Portuguese fleet bound for the East Indies in 1505 and who remained with the Portuguese for the next six years . . . make an interesting story. Essential for university libraries and for travel collections and suggested for larger public libraries." R. D. Harlan

Library J 92:4497 D 15 '67 160w

"Unfortunately, the narrative of [Figueroa's] experiences in 1505-10 was not published in its original (presumably rather lengthy) form, but after being drastically edited and abridged by his bachiller friend, Juan Agüero. The meagre result is chiefly of interest as a bibliographical rarity, and it adds very little of historical importance to our knowledge of Portuguese activities. . . . The editing of the text . . . was obviously a labour of love. A welcome feature is the concordance between the text of the Conquista and the corresponding passages in the chronicles of Castanheda, Barros, Góis and Correia, but the notes to the commentary are inconveniently placed at the end. There are some lively descriptions of the actual fighting in which Figueroa was involved, but he was no Bernal Díaz—if he was, Juan Agüero emasculated his powers of narrative and description."

TLS p874 Ag 15 '68 370w

FILLE de joie; the book of courtesans, sporting girls, ladies of the evening, madams, a few occasionals & some royal favorites. 448p il col il $25 Grove

301.41 Prostitution 67-27894

"There are chapters on the old red-light districts, the present call-girl system, prostitution as it has been organized in all ages and in all places." (Library J)

"A few of the photographs are incongruous, even pathetic; the subjects resemble groups at a Sunday School picnic. However, most of the illustrations are crudely erotic and the fictional excerpts show the book's real purpose. Chapters lifted from [John Cleland's] Fanny Hill, [Henry Miller's] Tropic of Cancer [BRD 1961], The $100 Misunderstanding [by R. Gover, BRD 1962] and similar classics are monotonously repetitive descriptions of sexual encounters. The book is oversized, overpriced, and overwrought in a literal sense." J. B. Lopez

Library J 92:4517 D 15 '67 150w

FILLE de joie—Continued

"Relax. This is merely a leading candidate for the season's CART (coffee-and-remainder-table) award. Title aside, it proves to be an overblown effort to flog a little extra mileage out of some pretty tired warhorses. . . . Pass the scissors and paste. . . . There [are] snippets from the works of the old reliables—Casanova the Kama Sutra (yes, Virginia there are dull parts) . . . interlarded with 'picture essays' that essay nothing. It's a bit like having to read several years' worth of Playboy at one sitting, only not as much fun. No gatefolds."

N Y Times Bk R p18 Ja 7 '68 160w

FINBERG, H. P. R., ed. The agrarian history of England and Wales, v4. See The agrarian history of England and Wales

FINDLAY, W. P. K. Wayside and woodland fungi; with 59 colour ill. of fungi by Beatrix Potter, 28 by R. B. Davis and 20 by E. C. Large. 202p $12.95 Warne

589 Fungi

[68-10154]

In this guide to the British wayside and woodland fungi, the 'past president of the British Mycological Society covers such subjects in the introductory chapters as 'Fungi and Man'; 'The Nature and Naming of Fungi'; 'The Role of the Amateur in Mycology'; 'Collection and Identification of Fungi'; 'Ecology and Habitats of Fungi'; 'Classification of Fungi.' (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"All mycologists will treasure this book especially for the exquisite color reproductions from the brush of Beatrix Potter. . . . Unfortunately, the use of this book for the identification of American fungi is somewhat limited—about 50 per cent of the British species described here are not to be found in the United States. . . . [However, the introductory] chapters are universal in scope and application and will be an invaluable aid to students and other readers interested in the fascinating world of woodland fungi." E. C. Hall

Library J 93:2890 Ag '68 180w

"While this book is intended mainly for a British audience, it contains enough general information on the fungi—from ecology and habitats to collection and identification—to satisfy the American reader. A good deal of discussion is given to fungi as food, and the author takes note of the large number of fatalities that occur from fungus poisoning each year." C. B.

Natur Hist 77:75 Je '68 110w

FINE, WARREN. The artificial traveler. 255p $4.95 Coward-McCann

67-23142

In this first novel the author describes a collection of "characters, oddly assorted in ages and types. Set in the Middle West, a thread of story revolves around a few carnival personalities at random places or times in their curious lives. When this small group is scattered, their associations are always with wild-eyed zealots, either saintly or depraved." (Library J)

Reviewed by Lester Goran

Book World p14 F11 '68 300w

"In a trilogy of loosely allied sequences [the author] gathers a lunatic collection of strange characters. . . . There is, to be sure, some fine writing at times, some humor, and even occasional gripping interest. The curiosity is more morbid than pleasing, and grows out of the desire to know what [Mr. Fine] could possibly be trying to see, for he surely obscures it with a multitude of apparently unrelated impressions. This book may be sought out in very large urban centers; it is not likely to be popular in smaller libraries." Jerrold Orne

Library J 93:208 Ja 15 '68 150w

"Fine's novel is about the godliness of some beautiful and possessed people in the Midwest. I found its Biblical allusions formidable, perplexing and a little pretentious, but Mr. Fine's prose style, and the intensity of his talent for character and narrative are so far superior to those of most first—or simply, most—novelists who get published today, that to miss reading his book would be a shame." Sara Blackburn

Nation 206:676 My 20 '68 190w

"[This novel consists] of three loosely intersecting fantasies of accelerating confusion. A young fellow who throws knives, his father who threw knives (but is now connected with a novelty factory) and assorted telescoped characters float in and out of hallucinations, many of which involve castration. Sprinkled in is a smattering of Bulfinch, frapped with pop interludes. Such surrealism as this becomes intelligible only if one can see the reality from which it is distorted. In Mr. Fine's novel, the fantasies feed on one another in sterile detachment." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p41 Ja 14 '68 130w

New Yorker 44:154 Mr '68 120w

FINGARETTE, HERBERT. On responsibility. 181p $5 Basic bks.

171 Responsibility

67-28502

The author "is concerned especially with two essential dimensions of responsibility—the acceptance of moral responsibility as the essence of humanity and the form and content of responsibility in particular social contexts. . . . [The chapters are studies] of specific problems emerging in the work of Aeschylus, Confucius, and Buber and in the literature of contemporary moral philosophy, psychoanalysis, and law." (Publisher's note) Most of the chapters were first published as articles in psychological journals.

"This is a brave work, a brilliant analysis, and an exciting experience. Fingarette penetrates to a central paradigm of self-realization. He explores the implications of responsibility for society and for the neurotic personality, bringing to the question the best of contemporary psychotherapeutic insight. This is a great work whose ramifications affect our personal, legal, social, and in some cases professional lives."

Choice 5:760 S '68 110w

"[The author's] questions are clear and challenging; his answers, although fertile, are less clear and less well organized." William Gerber

Library J 92:3644 O 15 '67 130w

FINKEL, DONALD. Answer back. 38p $4.50; pa $1.95 Atheneum pubs.

811

68-17382

This poem "divided into six sections, is essentially a series of meditations about timeless and contemporary concerns: nature, sexual love, American society etc. . . . Finkel has broken up the meditative passages by interspersing quotations from such diverse sources as Fred Hoyle, Walt Whitman, Heraclitus, the Kama Sutra, and Lenny Bruce." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Chad Walsh

Book World p4 J1 28 '68 150w

"[This poem] satisfies the first prerequisite of art: it entertains. It seems to me that Finkel's insight and perspective often have more value for the reader than his verbal skills as poet. There are brilliant and interesting passages here, but, alas, so are there a number of trite ideas, and overused devices. But these flaws, fortunately, are few in proportion to the bulk of the poetry which is rich and full enough to stand several readings—and will be worth it. Libraries which generally collect modern poetry will wish to procure this volume." Duane Schneider

Library J 93:2881 Ag '68 100w

"The poem's initial metaphor is that of exploring caves—suggesting both the past and the human mind. . . . [It] is filled with passages of great lyrical delicacy . . . [and] has many poignant sections that nevertheless manage to escape both self-pity and excessive pathos. . . . The quoted passages are relevant to the meditations and thus take on a lyrical quality themselves. The success of the poem, however, does not rest upon this device, for the work is fully sustained by its own strong rhythms, its discrete images, and, above all, by its courage to make affirmations seem possible and true in a difficult world. . . . This is a book to reward the scrupulous reader." Robert Pack

Sat R 51:40 Ag 24 '68 750w

Va Q R 44:cl autumn '68 160w

FINKEL, GEORGE. Watch fires to the north [Eng title: Twilight province]. 311p maps $3.95; lib bdg $3.77 Viking

Arthur, King—Juvenile literature 67-24857

"This is the tale of Lucius Bedwyr Marcianus and the story opens around the year 520 A.D. It is the story of the closing out of Roman Britain and the dawning of the new British nation. The book is also the story of Arthur. . . . Following the withdrawal of the Roman legions it was necessary for Bedwyr and his father to protect their villa, Turrus Alba, in a far northern community from the Saxons, Celts and other marauders. Arthur appears on the scene and eventually takes charge of the small army while Bedwyr is off to new Rome to learn the ways of cavalry and to bring horses back for the struggle." (Best Sell) Glossary. "Grades eight to ten." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:64 My 1 '68 210w

"Just the meat for adventure-loving boys. They will join 13-year-old Bedwyr during his youth and young adulthood in Roman Britain, and be intrigued by accounts of military tactics in the battles with marauding Saxons and Celts. They should also find interesting Bedwyr's education in weaponry, including the task of mounting a horse while encumbered by 100 pounds of armor! Vignettes of life in a pre-medieval villa occasionally relieve the violence and strife in this fresh approach to the ever-favorite King Arthur theme." M. D. Hamlin

Christian Science Monitor pB8 My 2 '68 100w

"Solid, careful writing recreates the period in Britain when Saxons were invading the former Roman outposts and natural leaders were emerging to form the basis for a later feudal system. Told by a friend and companion-in-arms of Artyr, this very long and plodding version is lacking in drama and effective characterization. While more advanced or honors English students might be interested in the possibility of variant interpretations, they might also be more likely to work with adult fiction and non-fiction." S. M. Worthing

Library J 93:2546 Je 15 '68 190w

"All the legendary persons: Merlin, Morgan le Fey and the rest, are part of the story, but they appear as ordinary people living in a rough and oftentimes terrifying period. They fight to defend a way of life threatened with extinction. Finkel's book bears the signs of considerable research. His description of life in sixth-century Britain, on the Continent and in New Rome (Constantinople) are vivid and detailed. The maps and glossary are of great assistance. The narrative is exciting and fast-moving. Finkel has demythologized with a gentle touch so that the admirer of Arthur will not be offended and, while he may not be convinced, he will find this book rewarding." Kenneth Costin

N Y Times Bk R p20 Ap 14 '68 170w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:31 Jl 20 '68 120w
TLS p446 My 25 '67 550w

FINLER, JOEL W. Stroheim. 143p il $4.95; pa $1.95 Univ. of Calif. press

791.43 Von Stroheim, Erich. Moving pictures—Production and direction 68-17757

This study of the director's films includes "a 70-page examination, with stills, of the genesis and fate of [Stroheim's famous film] Greed." (New Statesman) Filmography. Bibliography.

"An interesting if sometimes superficial study. . . . Finler, a British critic, offers descriptions of plot flavored with bits of historical fact and critical observation. It is a pleasant potpourri but not terribly substantial and not always convincing." J. W. Palmer

Library J 93:2895 Ag '68 90w

Reviewed by John Coleman
New Statesman 75:46 Ja 12 '68 80w

"[Finler] devotes a lot of space to plot summary, but . . . there is some justification in the relative obscurity of many of Stroheim's films and the difficulty the average interested person would find in seeing them."

TLS p15 Ja 4 '68 150w

FINLEY, M. I. Aspects of antiquity; discoveries and controversies. 228p il $5.95 Viking 68-14831

930 Civilization, Ancient

A collection of sixteen essays, most of which have been published previously in somewhat different form in Horizon, The Listener, and other periodicals. Topics include the "Linear B tablets, the Trojan War, the historian Thucydides, the philosophers Socrates and Plato, the Etruscan civilization, the Roman Empire, the slave trade in antiquity, and the origins of Christianity." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl
America 119:568 N 30 '68 50w

"Since Mr. Finley's style is low-pressure and his arguments are put with discreet courtesy, there is danger that the reader may overlook the unusualness of some (not all) of his opinions." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 221:124 Je '68 50w

Choice 5:1194 N '68 140w

"Dr Finley, a notable example of the successful crossbreeding of American scholarship and Oxbridge, is one of the clearest writers on classical subjects. As one would expect from him, the articles on Greece go rather deeper than those on Rome (with Etruria falling in between). . . . Two articles—one of them a conflation of three book reviews—which deal with the early development of Christianity against the background of conditions in the Empire make one wish that Dr Finley would write more systematically on this subject, even if it is off the main line of his interests."

Economist 227:xx Ap 27 '68 390w

"This book [is] by one of the foremost living exponents of the social and economic history of the Classical Period. [Mr. Finley] writes with ease, grace, and wit. . . . These essays, the distillation of varied and well-digested reading, are an admirable introduction for the educated layman to absorbing aspects of the ancient world." T. M. Robinson

Library J 93:993 Mr 1 '68 150w

"A fascinating and serious volume. This author never wastes time on issues or facts which he doesn't regard as important; he writes on topics which need an intellectual effort from himself, and from the reader, to get right. This is not 'popularisation' at all: it is one natural mode of expression of a scholar who sees through the technical barriers to the significant general structure of ideas and events. There will be few readers, including other classical scholars, who will not be able to learn from him—about our own as well as the ancient world—and gain enormous pleasure in the process."

New Statesman 76:55 Jl 12 '68 700w

TLS p802 Jl 25 '68 950w

FINN, JAMES. Protest: pacifism and politics; some passionate views on war and nonviolence. 528p $3.95 Random house 172 Pacifism. Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- .

U.S.—Politics and government—1963-

66-22249

The former editor of Commonweal and current editor of Worldview has interviewed churchmen, members of protest organizations, and "individuals who have made their names to some extent synonymous with protest in this war. . . . These people hold in common their opposition to the U.S. participation in the Vietnam war. Finn's . . . questions draw out their opinions on a spectrum of topics: the meaning of pacifism, the controversial nature and effect of the present anti-war demonstrations, the making of American foreign policy, violence and nonviolence, banning of nuclear weapons, the just-war tradition, relationship of religion to thinking about war, actions and policies of the New Left." (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by J. F. Bresnahan
America 118:421 Mr 30 '68 600w

Reviewed by Joe Flaherty
Book World p4 Mr 31 '68 650w

"A fascinating introduction to the protest movement in the United States. [Finn] moves easily from the area of religion and individual pacifists to a focus on both religious and non-religious pacifist organizations. These free-flowing yet intensely personal interviews offer an intimate inside look at these pacifist personalities and organizations in all their diversity of passionately held beliefs. The origins and development of pacifist organizations and periodicals are so succinctly described that the reader is left with a feeling that he now understands, even if he does not agree. Each interview creates a feeling in the reader that he has come to understand the person speaking; this is the author's real genius." J. E. Allen

Christian Century 85:590 My 1 '68 500w

Reviewed by Henrietta Buckmaster
Christian Science Monitor p13 Ap 11 '68 1000w

Reviewed by Walter Goodman
Commentary 45:79 Ap '68 1800w

Reviewed by Peter Steinfels
Commonweal 89:65 O 11 '68 1300w
Critic 27:76 Ag '68 210w

FINN, JAMES—Continued

"While most of the 'big names' such as Fulbright, Morgenthau, Spock, and others are absent, those who consented to be interviewed do constitute working and theorizing elements of the movement. . . . Most of the recorded interviews deal with the rationale, the ethics, or the theory behind the protest movement. Other than the fact that the presentation is one-sided—with possibly two or three taking the position in favor of United States presence in Vietnam, a fact that may have a bearing on library purchase in some cases—this reviewer would heartily recommend the book, without agreeing with the viewpoints. The book should find its appeal among scholars generally and informed laymen." Wen Chao Chen
Library J 93:559 F 1 '68 210w

Reviewed by Anne Kincaid

Library J 93:3996 O 15 '68 80w [YA]

"It is surprising . . . how this collection of intimate, intelligent interviews taped in 1966 has, like wine, matured. Mr. Finn has arranged these thirty-five interviews under the headings of 'Religion and Pacifism,' 'The Organizations' (religious and political), 'CO's and the Just War,' and 'Commitment Without Label' (Joan Baez, Mitchell Goodman, Denise Levertov, W. H. Ferry and others). Others among the participants are A. J. Muste, Daniel Lewis, Staughton Lynd, Arthur Gilbert, Dorothy Day, and Paul Ramsey. For each, Finn gives us a sense of person and place, and an easygoing biographical sketch. A clear, literate, polished transcript follows, interrupted often for summaries, illuminating asides, and background materials. . . . Finn's questions are expert and probing; those interviewed are kept center-stage. . . . The interviews seem vivid and solid, as satisfying as an unusually good conversation. . . . occasionally a false note is struck; some short sketches invite skimming." Michael Novak
New Repub 158:30 Mr 9 '68 1850w

FINN, REX WELLDON. Domesday studies; the eastern counties. 231p $9 Shoe String

330.942 Essex, England—Economic conditions. Suffolk, England—Economic conditions. Norfolk, England—Economic conditions. Domesday book 67-8518

"The author first discusses Domesday II and what it discloses of the post-Conquest settlement in Norfolk, Suffolk, and Essex. Next he analyzes two contemporary surveys—the Inquisitio Eliensis and the Feudal Book of Abbot Baldwin of Bury St. Edmunds—concluding that since their relationship to Domesday II is indirect, collation is an uncertain task. He concludes with a . . . discussion of the administration, society, and economy of the eastern counties as disclosed in Domesday II and the 'satellites.'" (Am Hist R)

"In searching for coherence in the records of these eastern counties one finds hints and clues, but they invariably dissolve into a fog of ambiguous and system-defying detail. . . . And after Finn's careful labors, the fog remains, largely because the author rightly refuses to see order where none can be proven and partly because of occasional foginess in his own style. . . . This painstaking study is valuable less for its insight into post-Conquest institutions of Essex and East Anglia than for its candid demonstration of how little the sources reveal to us after thorough, critical examination." C. W. Hollister
Am Hist R 73:1498 Je '68 500w

"This, the latest of Mr. Finn's erudite studies of Domesday Book to appear, is concerned with the separate manuscript volume that . . . is often called the 'Little Domesday'. . . . Never before has [it] been subjected to a more meticulous examination, and if few new generalizations here emerge, at least Mr. Finn has extracted and classified the material upon which these will in due course be based. It is impossible not to admire both the integrity of Mr. Finn's scholarship and the labour which had gone to the making of this book. But he writes throughout as a specialist for specialists, and even his fellow experts in Domesday criticism will sometimes wish that he had allowed himself freedom to make more general observations upon the mass of statistics which he has assembled with so much care. None the less his book will remain an authoritative work of reference on the limited subject with which it deals." TLS p1078 N 16 '67 210w

FINNIE, DAVID H. Pioneers east; the early American experience in the Middle East. 333p il $7.50 Harvard univ. press

915.6 Near East—Description and travel. Travelers, American. Americans in the Near East 67-20875

The author "traces the story of American traders, missionaries, adventurers and travelers in the Middle East, from the time of John Ledyard in the late 18th Century, down to the middle of the 19th Century. He uses as his take-off point an outstanding American travel account, written by John Lloyd Stephens, who arrived in the area in 1835. [Mr. Finnie also records the] careers and activities of an . . . array of American inventors, shipbuilders, naval officers, amateur archeologists, explorers, educators and eccentric tourists." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The author has given a fascinating account of the American consulate in Smyrna and the work of David Offley and of the negotiation of the first American-Ottoman treaty of May 7, 1830 . . . [and] calls attention to the inauguration of 1826 of the Department of State's language program in Arabic and Turkish in the consulates in Tunis, Tripoli, Algiers, and Tangier. . . . [Readers] will relish the pages given to Lt. William Francis Lynch's exploration of the Jordan Valley in 1838. . . . This is a book both for the general reader and for the scholar and specialist concerned with American policy in the Middle East, and it should stimulate others to probe into the field. It is interestingly written and well documented and illustrated. The bibliography lists all the old books and memoirs that must now be read again by all those who have an interest in American relations with the Middle East, whether then or now." H. N. Howard
Am Hist R 73:772 F '68 550w

Reviewed by H. N. Howard

Ann Am Acad 337:185 My '68 550w

Choice 5:1348 D '68 180w

"There is little other published material covering the simultaneous activities of American ships and men in the brisk trade involving rum and opium, and other more respectable commodities. . . . Mr. Finnie, who has had nearly 15 years contact with Middle Eastern affairs as a scholar, lawyer and businessman, has written a lively, readable book that deals with a little known period of American foreign relations and trade expansion, closely identified with the earliest American missionary story on the Middle East. His account is based upon an impressive range of contemporary books and documents, and throughout he emphasizes the striking personalities involved." J. C. Shipman
Library J 92:2768 Ag '67 250w

"The book has the merit of breaking new ground. For instance, few or no European historians of Turkey have described the train of events that placed an American, Henry Eckford, at the head of the Sultan's navy yard on the Golden Horn in 1831. . . . Most of the American travellers were missionaries, and the book is a minor monument to the faith that kept them going so far from home, and in spite of the havoc wrought among them by disease and death. Too few of the people mentioned come to life, but some help [the author] by keeping records out of which he can pick a sentence or two that illuminates a whole character. . . . In his last chapter, Mr. Finnie casts about for some unity in the diversity of people that he has described. The one strand that unites them is membership of the land of the free, and their belief that its energy and enterprise cannot fail to do good in Asia and Africa." TLS p336 Ap 4 '68 600w

FIORE, QUENTIN, Jr. auth. War and peace in the global village. See McLuhan, M.

FIRTH, RAYMOND. Tikopia ritual and belief. 374p il $12.50 Beacon press

390.0996 Tikopians. Rites and ceremonies 67-12333

A collection of "essays published between 1930 and 1966, [containing] a new article on individual fantasy and social norms in the context of spirit mediumship, a short introduction on Tikopia society, and a finale entitled 'Commentary' which gives Firth's own view of his work, as represented in the collected articles." (Pacific Affairs) Index.

"As a collection, the papers are a useful representation of the literature on one of our best documented cultures by one of anthropology's most eminent figures."

Choice 5:564 Je '68 60w

"Firth's clear style makes cogent reading. . . [The chapter on] 'Suicide and Risk-Taking,' has had considerable effect on the ideas of modern theoreticians concerned with the subject. The chapter on . . . Seances With Spirit Mediums,' first published here, is certain to expose Mr. Firth to some fine arguments because of his variance with accepted theories. . . [Chapters] on ceremonies, bond friendship, rumor in a primitive society, dream analysis, totemism, and an excellent summary—will further enlighten serious readers and will add to the already great reputation of the author who, deservedly, assumed Malinowski's chair at the London School of Economics. For all academic and large anthropology collections."

Lee Ash

Library J 92:4021 N 1 '67 300w

Reviewed by C. S. Belshaw

Pacific Affairs 41:326 summer '68 100w

"[This work] should be seen as the second volume in a trilogy of which the third volume, soon to be published, is to be entitled Rank and Religion in Tikopia. Together [with The Work of the Gods, BRD 1963] they will complete the series and present the most comprehensive anthropological record in the English language of a religion. The richly detailed observations represent a period in the development of the subject which is now perhaps drawing to a close. . . Though [the author] himself during field work may have had little notion of saying anything relevant to the lives of his contemporaries, Tikopia may well come to have import for modern [theologians]. . . As to religious sociology, the arguments of Weber and Durkheim should be refuted or confirmed by research in this small Pacific island. . . Here is a beginning for a future synthesis of primitive and modern religious studies. By careful comparison of differences in the social dimension we may come to understand the sociological determinants of ritualism and anti-ritualism."

TLS p158 F 15 '68 380w

FIRTH, RAYMOND. The work of the gods in Tikopia; with new introduction and epilogue. 2d ed 492p pl $10 Humanities press

390.0996 Tikopians. Rites and ceremonies 67-10515

"The author carried out his first investigation in 1928-29, and the first edition was based on these early researches. He has since returned to the island on two occasions, in 1952 and in 1966. . . The latest visit found a people who for ten years had abandoned their ancient convictions and ceremonies. These . . . changes have supplied new matter for the present enlarged account. A new introduction presents a number of theoretical observations. . . Various lessons of comparative interest, as between 1929 and 1952, are appended in the form of postscripts to eight of the chapters, and the book concludes with an epilogue . . . on the state of affairs in 1966." (TLS)

"[This study] is probably on its way to becoming a classic in the field of social anthropology. . . Even libraries with the original edition will find it advisable to add the second edition to their collections."

Choice 5:688 J1 '68 90w

Reviewed by C. S. Belshaw

Pacific Affairs 41:326 summer '68 100w

"[The first edition.] now long out of print, has since . . . acquired high renown as an ethnographical source, and its republication, in an exceedingly handsome format, confirms its high value. . . Professor Firth's unique and minutely detailed narrative of continuities and change in Tikopia religion . . . spans thirty-eight years and describes its course from confident paganism to pragmatic conversion. The excision of many vernacular texts, evidences which can now be consulted only in the scarce first edition, may be deplored, but otherwise the new version of this famous work can prompt nothing but fresh admiration."

TLS p158 F 15 '68 380w

FIRTH, RAYMOND WILLIAM. Malay fishermen; their peasant economy. (Archon bk) 2d ed rev 398p il maps $10 Shoe String

338 Fishing—Malaya 66-4305

A study of the local fisherman's life in the state of Kelantan and the economy in which he lives, and "of the changes that 'modernization' has brought to it." (Am Anthropol) For the first edition see BRD 1946.

"Republication of [this] work dealing with the . . . peasant' economies within the social framework of east-coast Malaya is indeed welcome. . . The detailed economic analyses within the domestic group and in terms of the local market and beyond still stand as important contributions to economic anthropology. . . Professor Firth found that 'Malay entrepreneurs had shown initiative and energy in appreciating the advantages of the new technology, and financial acumen in organizing their capital and credit resources to this end.' . . This situation has forced a widening of the economic gap between the 'entrepreneurs' and the common fishermen or crew members. . . Professor Firth foresees the outcome of this economic situation as the forcing of more and more people out of fishing and into occupations ensuring a more stable wage." T. M. Fraser

Am Anthropol 69:767 D '67 370w

"[The 1946 edition] drew attention to local fishing communities as significant parts of the peasant world. . . [The author] revisited the scene of his earlier study briefly in 1947 and then for a longer period in 1963. Consequently, the new edition is in several of its chapters a very different book from the original. Chapters III through X remain as they were and are still impressive in their analysis and detail. Without doubt they represent the core of both editions, but the 1966 work, in Chapters I and II and particularly in a greatly expanded Chapter XI, is revised to accommodate the changes Firth was able to view over a period of almost 25 years. . . Still the only work of its kind on the Malay fishing community."

Choice 4:104 Mr '67 160w

FISCHEL, WALTER J. Ibn Khaldūn in Egypt; his public functions and his historical research (1382-1406) a study in Islamic historiography. 217p $5 Univ. of Calif. press

907 Ibn Khaldūn 67-11200

This book about the fourteenth-century historian and social philosopher from Tunis, author of the Muqaddimah, summarizes his last twenty-four years in Egypt. The first part deals with his life "in Mamlūk Egypt and with his roles as educator, Chief Cadi, and public servant. . . The second part investigates the Egyptian influence on the products of Ibn Khaldūn's historical research. . . [His Autobiography] is the topic of the third part." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"Professor Fischel here admittedly presents a summation of his earlier work on Ibn Khaldūn . . . [and] nothing very new or startling is presented. . . [He is] hard pressed to narrate a coherent and consistently favorable story in the face of a serious shortage of hard facts."

The picture given of intellectual life in Cairo is woefully inadequate. . . The absence of literary style is the price paid for being too close to one's sources, and this book is no exception. More attention might profitably have been paid to the mechanics of scholarship. . . Of a more serious nature, however, is [that] the image of Ibn Khaldūn . . . does not emerge. . . Fischel is much too partial to his subject. He gives Ibn Khaldūn the benefit of every doubt." Norman Itzkowitz

Am Hist R 73:871 F '68 550w

"If Ibn Khaldūn's experience in Egypt changed his outlook as a public official or as a historian, this book fails to prove it. Most of the relevant material, moreover, on Ibn Khaldūn in Egypt is contained in introductory chapters to Muhsin Mahdi's Ibn Khaldūn's Philosophy of History and Franz Rosenthal's translation of the Muqaddimah."

Choice 4:1300 Ja '68 100w

FISCHER, FRITZ. Germany's aims in the first World War; with introd. by Hajo Holborn and James Joll. 652p il maps $15 Norton

940.3 European War, 1914-1918—Causes. European War, 1914-1918—Germany. Germany—Foreign relations 67-106678

This is the English edition of a work first published in Germany in 1961. The author, a

FISCHER, FRITZ—Continued

"German historian, professor at the University of Hamburg, . . . [attempts to show] that the German government was responsible for the outbreak of war in 1914, that Germany deliberately aimed at world domination between 1914 and 1918, and that Hitler did not represent a new phenomenon in German history, but that there was substantial continuity between Germany's war aims in World War I and those of World War II." (N Y Rev of Books)

Reviewed by C. L. Hohl
America 113:615 My 4 '68 100w

Reviewed by F. M. Marx
Ann Am Acad 378:156 J1 '68 500w

"All students of modern European history must welcome the appearance of an English edition of Fischer's highly important and controversial work. In translation the book has lost about a third of its bulk (the author carried out the reductions himself) and many of its footnotes and archival references, without losing any of its essence. The two introductory chapters on the origins of the war have, oddly enough, stirred up most of the controversy: this is very hot indeed in Germany inasmuch as Fischer revives a subtly modified version of old charges about the wickedness of the imperial German government, supporting his thesis with an unprecedented mass of documentation. . . . A necessity for any college library beyond the smallest."

Choice 5:112 Mr '68 160w

"That there was a connection between the two 'German wars'—a particularly close one between the last and most chaotic phase of the first and the beginning and continuation of the Hitler adventure—we have always known. . . . Fischer's merit is to have illuminated it even more sharply; his research and his readiness as a German historian to engage in ruthless national self-criticism deserve every respect. That German imperialism of 1917 was merely the affair of a thin upper crust, that it had no roots in the past, that the nation in its breadth and depth had nothing to do with it, is something which in future no one will be able to claim, if anyone ever did claim it." Golo Mann

Encounter 31:70 N '68 4300w

"Hitler's program of conquest in the East, Fischer makes clear, stemmed directly from World War I. His aims in the West were a revised version of those in World War I. . . . The questions Fischer raises transcend the normal disputes of academic history. What is at issue is not simply the validity of the specific evidence he cites, or of the conclusions he draws from it, but the character of an epoch. . . . Fischer shows beyond all reasonable doubt that the so-called 'war-guilt clause' which attributed 'responsibility' to Germany was essentially correct. That is why his book produced such an uproar in the Federal Republic." Geoffrey Barraclough
N Y Rev of Books 10:34 Mr 14 '68 1950w

Reviewed by Andreas Dorpalen
Social Studies 59:339 D '68 400w

"This book created a resounding scandal in Germany. The scholarly establishment was almost unanimous in attacking it. . . . That Professor Fischer's findings should be considered so shocking by his compatriots shows how great, and how surprising, has been the gap between German historiography of the First World War and that of the rest of the scholarly world, even during the past twenty years. . . . [However,] the balance and perspective of Professor Fischer's judgments do not always equal the thoroughness of his scholarship; he seems at times concerned rather to condemn than to understand and explain the historical phenomena with which he deals. But the violence of the reaction which he has provoked is sufficient evidence that his book was timely, if not long overdue."

TLS p186 F 22 '68 600w

FISCHER, GEORGE. Your career in computers.

194p $4.95 Meredith

651.8 Electronic computers—Juvenile literature. Electronic data processing—Juvenile literature 68-12774

The author describes the "functions, applications, and employment opportunities [in computer programming] . . . with sample aptitude tests for various job levels. [He] has researched the experiences of actual people in the field and describes them here in their own settings—business, space, government, science, the military, and the computer-manufacturing companies themselves. . . . Suggestions are offered . . . [concerning] contacts that will secure a position in the field." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. "Grades ten to twelve." (Library J)

"This is a fascinating book about a field that is expanding at a tremendous rate. It is informative, well-written, and offers the reader an excellent glimpse into the many and diversified job opportunities now available. . . . This book could start one off on the career of the future. Recommended." F. R. Carmody

Best Sell 28:172 J1 15 '68 70w [YA]

"In attempting to simplify a complex subject, Mr. Fischer has written down to his audience and failed to give young readers clearly and concisely the information they need. . . . [He] is knowledgeable about computers, but he has a lot to learn about union pay scales. Besides, it isn't until page 44 that he troubles himself to tell his readers precisely what computers are. Professor J. M. Carroll's Careers and Opportunities in Computer Science [BRD 1967] is a more concise and practical vocational guide." Paul Sarnoff

Library J 93:1810 Ap 15 '68 200w

FISCHER-GALATI, STEPHEN. The new Rumania; from people's democracy to socialist republic. 126p $6 Mass. inst. of technology

949 Rumania—History. Rumania—Politics and government 67-15603

The author "traces the genesis of the new Rumania from the prewar ancien régime through the People's Republic, [still] dominated by Moscow . . . to Gheorghiu-Dej's and Ceausescu's Socialist Republic. . . . He believes that the present leaders have successfully synthesized Marxist-Leninist principles with the country's historic traditions for the sake of further national and economic strength of their fatherland. In this [he suggests] they built on the heritage of Gheorghiu-Dej, the real hero of this study, who transformed his country from a Stalinist satellite to a new kind of national communist state, occupying a position of relative 'neutralism' in regard to the Sino-Soviet rift while at the same time reengaging it economically, culturally, and, to a certain extent, even politically with Western Europe." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Perhaps the first book-length effort to deal with the Rumanian national deviation, this volume is essentially concerned with tactics and strategy. The economic issues are left to a [companion] volume [Economic Development in Communist Rumania] by [J.] Michael Montias in the same MIT series, while the interiorization of the power of the regime is only sketched in, with minimal reference to the change in minority policy and none at all to the rehabilitation of pre-1944 national culture. . . . Fischer-Galati's analysis is based on extensive, careful, and frequently brilliant exegesis of official documents in the original Rumanian, of key speeches, editorials, communiqués, commemorative greetings, and the like. His argument is, in general, strong and convincing, but at times (in my opinion) he presses his materials too far, asking the reader to content himself with a casual 'it is now known' or 'it is now believed.' [The] book represents, nonetheless, a significant addition to our knowledge and understanding of the Rumanian national deviation." R. V. Burks
Am Hist R 73:859 F '68 410w

"[An] admirably concise, well written book. . . . The author is a well-known expert who has added to his profound knowledge of Rumanian history by conducting his research for this volume in Rumania itself. . . . Future historians of the 'new Rumania' may accuse Fischer-Galati of strong sympathies with Rumanian nationalism or even of occasional use of historical hindsight. The book, however, represents the best, most up-to-date picture of Rumania and—like the other studies in this series—has its place in any good college library."

Choice 5:112 Mr '68 220w

J Pol Econ 76:1098 O '68 270w

TLS p208 F 29 '68 360w

FISH, STANLEY EUGENE. Surprised by sin: the reader in Paradise lost. 344p $7.50 St Martins

821 Milton, John—Paradise lost 67-14191

The author "attempts to show that one of Milton's major artistic techniques is consciously and pedagogically to 'trap' us into unwise responses—e.g., admiration of Satan in the early books—and then to catch us up short by pointing out the unwisdom. In this manner, Fish believes Milton uses our own fallen state as a way of helping us to a (poetic) understanding of Adam's." (Choice) Portions of chapters one, two, and four have appeared in The Critical Quarterly and The Southern Review (Australia). Index of authors and titles. Index of names.

"[Although his] approach to the poem inevitably leads the author into a fairly constant flirtation with the affective fallacy, the book is eminently sensible and clearly written; and most readers will be in general agreement with his estimate of their responses to the passages he discusses. Fish is thoroughly familiar with recent scholarship, but his book is not burdened down with footnotes. Hence the early student of Milton should find the book pleasant and helpful reading."

Choice 4:1380 F '68 120w

TLS p745 Ag 17 '67 600w

FISHEL, LESLIE H., ed. The Negro American: a documentary history [ed. by] Leslie H. Fishel, Jr. [and] Benjamin Quarles. 536p ill $6.95 Morrow

301.451 Negroes—History 68-1940

"This book, using contemporary personal accounts, newspaper articles, travel tales, memoirs, speeches, and other documents, traces the history of the American Negro from his African background through Colonial America and the Revolution, slavery and abolition, Reconstruction, urbanization and renaissance, the New Deal to the [1963] March on Washington." (Publisher's note)

"This book looks at the more distant past, rather than the present or the future. Only one of its 12 chapters deals with the past two decades. . . . It is an excellent, interestingly presented collection of materials that throw light on the role of the Negro in American history, as well as on the Negro's own history. . . . The selections were not written for this book, but were collected from a wide range of sources, many of which are not readily available. There is a brief introductory essay for each chapter, and each of the many selections (some of them very short) is preceded by an introductory paragraph or two. Attractive layout, typography, and illustrations. No index or bibliography. Probably of great value to the small library which does not have the original source material on hand."

Choice 5:256 Ap '68 180w

"[The compilers] have not confined themselves exclusively to prose or to selections from Negroes. . . . The authors range over social, economic, and political history. Yet some readers will question the completeness of a work that makes but one mention of Black Muslims. . . . and no reference either to Black Power or recent black nationalist developments. . . . The book, however, in spite of these flaws, deserves a wide audience among informed laymen and advanced high school and college students." J. A. Boromé

Library J 93:991 Mr 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by H. N. Meyer

Nation 206:739 Je 3 '68 250w

FISHER, AILEEN. We Alcotts: the story of Louisa M. Alcott's family as seen through the eyes of "Marmee," mother of Little Women [by] Aileen Fisher & Olive Rabe; decorations by Ellen Raskin. 278p $4.95 Athenaeum pubs.

920 Alcott family—Juvenile literature. Alcott, Louisa May—Juvenile literature 68-18445

This biography of the American author's life, of her childhood and family, ends with the publication of her book, Little Women. This version is told in the first person as if by Louisa May Alcott's mother who was portrayed in her daughter's novel as Marmee. Bibliography. "Grades six to ten." (Library J)

"The authors of We Dickinsons [BRD 1965] have again . . . recreated the atmosphere of the daily life of a nineteenth-century family. . . . In a deceptively simple style, the wife of Bronson Alcott and the mother of Louisa May recounts the joys and vicissitudes of her married life, and the moral and literary developments of her most famous daughter.

"Much of the dialogue incorporates sentences, words, and phrases from the writings of the Alcotts, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry Thoreau, and others." . . . The story-biography captures the aura of the mutual lives of the Alcotts, permits them to speak for themselves, and reveals the humor as well as the rigors of their situation. It also discloses anew the tantalizing closeness between the Alcotts and the Marches, and thus sharpens one's realization of Louisa May's inventiveness." Paul Heins

Horn Bk 44:540 O '68 470w

"Though the authors have worked from 'the journals, letters and other writings of the Alcotts as well as those of friends and relatives; also [from] critical studies of the Alcott family. I can't feel that their version adds much to Miss [C.] Meigs's account [in Invincible Louisa, BRD 1968], and the flatness of tone in which Mrs. Alcott is presumed to speak is daunting." Elizabeth Janeway

N Y Times Bk R p46 S 29 '68 80w

FISHER, AILEEN. We went looking; pictures by Marie Angel. 25p $3.95 Crowell

811 Animals—Poetry—Juvenile literature 68-13578

"Drawings of small woodland creatures: a woodchuck, a lizard, a ladybird, . . . and 'a frog with eyes in turrets,' [accompanied by verses describing the search for a badger in the springtime]. . . . Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

"The delicate detailed beauty of all nature, animal, bird, insect, plant and flower life, is reproduced by pictures so lovely one knows children will turn these pages over and over in delight. The poetry . . . is short but musical, and the book is so designed that the text frames each full-color picture to make each page a perfect whole." Anne Izard

Book World p4 (children's issue) N 3 '68 60w

Reviewed by L. P. Scanlon

Commonweal 89:285 N 22 '68 40w

Horn Bk 44:682 D '68 100w

"The easily read text and the small visual details children appreciate are well suited to each other, and the book will work well as read aloud matter for both kindergarten groups and individual at-home sessions." Jessica McDaniel

Library J 93:3290 S 15 '68 60w

"[The illustrations are] all decoratively composed and ably rendered by an English calligrapher-illuminator. Aileen Fisher provides a simply-rhymed text of less than three hundred words. . . . The text has been transcribed in a capably written calligraphic roman. This is an illustrator's book. . . . I can imagine that Marie Angel's originals rival those of Jean Fouquet in brilliance. . . . [But] modern trade-book methods [fail] to translate faithfully her paint into ink." Warren Chapell

N Y Times Bk R p30 S 15 '68 180w

FISHER, ESTHER OSHIVER. Help for today's troubled marriages. 288p $6.95 Hawthorn bks.

362.8 Marriage. Family life education. Domestic relations 68-19112

"This is a book by a marriage counselor for marriage counselors. According to the preface, Esther Fisher is concerned with 'the development of the marriage counselor's philosophy, theories and techniques as a member of a clinical team or in private practice.' She discusses . . . the many problems that beset troubled marriages, including sex, children, money, in-laws, intermarriage, alcoholism, and gambling . . . [and] illustrates the problems with case histories from her files to show other counselors how the problems can be solved or alleviated. . . . She includes sections on divorce, widowhood, premarital counseling, and a discussion of the establishment of standards for marriage counseling. She also covers the interprofessional relationship of the marriage counselor with the physician, psychiatrist, minister, and social worker." (Library J)

"Top-to-bottom, beginning-to-end advice on patching up (or properly dissolving) marriage, from a simple and commonsensical point of view."

Christian Century 85:844 Je 26 '68 30w

"The book has an extensive bibliography. For pertinent collections." Lola Dudley

Library J 93:1491 Ap 1 '68 140w

FISHER, JAMES. Zoos of the world: the story of animals in captivity; pub. for the Am. mus. of natural history. 253p il col il col maps $5.95 Natural hist. press

590.74 Zoological gardens 67-14047

The assistant curator of the London Zoo, 1936-39, conducts a "tour through the zoos of the world—out front and behind the scenes [discussing] their history and future prospects, their problems and contributions." (Publisher's note) Index.

Economist 223:921 My 27 '67 210w

"The purpose of the zoo, says the author, ■ British scientist, is to instruct and entertain. His book does both, as it offers a fascinating, encyclopedic tour of the animal kingdom in captivity and covers everything from the history of zoology to breeding practices, from the stocking of zoos to the risks of their keepers, with considerable authority and often with wit."

N Y Times Bk R p28 Ja 21 '68 60w [YA]

FISHER, LAURA. Never try Nathaniel. 216p $4.50; lib bdg $4.27 Holt

68-10077

The author describes the life of a young farm boy who "is terrified of cows, inept with horses and crawls through the window of the chicken coop rather than argue with the dog who sits at the door. But there's nothing to do about it, or so he thinks until the day his father says he is fit only for women's work. He then sets himself harder and harder tasks in order to overcome his fear. And when he finally kills the wolf that has been waiting for him throughout the book, he proves something not only to his father but to himself. . . . Ages ten to fourteen." (Book World)

"This novel of early Idaho will provide a new and stimulating setting for young readers. The author is able to give a sympathetic and understanding picture of the gradual growth to maturity and responsibility of young Nathaniel Olin. . . . In addition to character understanding, there is some undercurrent of humor that gives additional credibility to a story that will hold the attention of the young reader."

Best Sell 27:465 Mr 1 '68 100w

Reviewed by Jean Fritz

Book World p22 (children's issue) My 5 '68 160w

"The author has drawn on her own childhood farm experiences in Idaho for the story of a boy who, like herself, was an 'in-betweenner.' His experiences are achingly believable."

V. H.

Horn Book 44:420 Ag '68 100w

"Fifth- and sixth-grade boys are not notable for their sympathetic reactions toward sissies. Nathaniel's story, with its madly galloping horse on the jacket, is likely to attract girls who can't resist pictures of galloping horses, but Nathaniel isn't likely to appeal to them any more than he does to boys. Adult readers will be able to interpret the broad psychiatric clues as to why this hardy, turn-of-the-century Idaho farm family is harboring a mama's boy. . . . The sermonic story of a sissy becoming a cautious ex-sissy is more annoying than edifying."

L. N. Gerhardt

Library J 93:868 F 15 '68 140w

FISHER, LEONARD EVERETT. The peddlers; written & ill. by Leonard Everett Fisher. 45p maps $2.65 Watts, F.

658.85 Peddlers and peddling—Juvenile literature 68-10335

This book traces the peddler's "evolution from his start in the 1660's . . . to his success as the salesman who traveled in all the 13 colonies with a 50-pound tin box on his back. [Index.] Ages nine to twelve." (N Y Times Bk R)

"A clear and vigorous text which . . . leads to an understanding of simple business and economics in terms children can comprehend. Admitting that some 'damnyankee' peddlers were greedy, the author stresses their general honesty, adventurous spirit, and individualism. Even more than the text, the strong scratch-board illustrations convey the struggles and strivings of colonial America and the importance of trade to a frontier society." P. A. McKenzie

Library J 93:290 Ja 15 '68 70w

N Y Times Bk R pt 2. p50 My 5 '68 90w

FISHER, PAUL L., ed. Race and the news media; ed. by Paul L. Fisher and Ralph L. Lowenstein. 158p $4.95 Praeger

323.4 Negroes—Civil rights. Journalism 67-27840

"The Racial Crisis and the News Media" was the theme of the eighth annual conference (1965) of the Freedom of Information Center of the University of Missouri. In this book, twenty-one newsmen "have contributed speeches and summaries of the discussion sessions. The problems of accuracy, objectivity, responsibility, balance, geographical differences, adequacy of coverage and the invention of stories are explored as they relate to the reporting of racial news." (Library J)

Reviewed by D. L. Paletz

Am Pol Sci R 62:639 Je '68 700w

"The book is more prescriptive than descriptive, and does not fill a void that has existed for almost 10 years for a book of scholarly studies on the current relationship of the media to the civil rights movement. Though two or three of the articles do give useful insights into the ways in which the media reach decisions and operate in covering this vital development in American history, the book as a whole will have limited usefulness for undergraduates."

Choice 4:1368 F '68 120w

"Henry Lee Moon, press secretary for the NAACP and one of the conferees, supports sociologist Gunnar Myrdal's theory that 'no feasible widening of the reporting of Negro activities in the white press will substitute for the Negro press.' Although this report indicates a desire on the part of journalists to improve the integrity of reporting in this sensitive area, little information is presented to refute the pessimism implicit in Mr. Myrdal's 1944 statement. . . . This cogent little book is highly recommended for all libraries, particularly those supporting curriculums in the field of communication."

Library J 92:2594 J1 '67 190w

"Fair-mindedness, a note of concern, and goodwill run through this collection of positions and confessions."

S. W. Little

Sat R 50:68 D 9 '67 700w

FISHER, SIDNEY GEORGE. A Philadelphia perspective; the diary of Sidney George Fisher covering the years, 1834-1871; ed. by Nicholas B. Wainwright. 626p il $12.50 Hist. soc. of Pa.

B or 92 Philadelphia—History 67-15303

This book describes life during the period between the Age of Jackson and Reconstruction.

"[The] excellent index, genealogies, fine illustrations, and end maps make [this book] invaluable for anyone doing research on the Quaker City for the period indicated. The social historian will find many insights into the life and thought of the nineteenth century: the large number of fires, railroad accidents, severe illnesses, and early deaths recorded. . . . Clay, Calhoun, Webster, Cooper, Trollope, Fanny Kemble, Bancroft, and Longfellow were among the famous who crossed [the author's] path. His comments are stimulating, often barbed. . . . Business, the practice of law, politics, and the people of the lower classes bored him. . . . He gave his full loyalty to the Union cause, though it helped ruin him financially. Oddly enough, he had an almost instantaneous liking for Lincoln, a liking that deepened as the war went on and, was confirmed by an 1864 meeting with the President." D. D. Gondos

Am Hist R 73:602 D '67 360w

"Admirably edited, . . . handsomely produced and generously illustrated, the volume deserves a cordial welcome. Both from a historical and a human point of view, the diaries are of exceptional interest. [Fisher] was an idle, unambitious, unsuccessful man in the expanding and competitive society of nineteenth-century America. . . . His diaries give a really fascinating picture of life in Philadelphia during the better part of four decades. There are plenty of humdrum pages . . . [but] he wrote down full and vivid descriptions of the eminent persons whom he met or saw when they visited Philadelphia. . . . There were English visitors too, including the Prince of Wales and Anthony Trollope. The latter, whom Fisher met at dinner, was in an expansive mood, and provides one of the most entertaining pages of the whole diary."

TLS p150 F 15 '68 850w

FISHER, STANLEY W. English ceramics; earthenware, Delft, stoneware, creamware, porcelain; including a section on Welsh factories. 256p il $4.95 Hawthorn bks.

733.2 Pottery, British 66-17842

"Mr. Fisher's intention is to provide the collector who has not yet reached the point of specialization with basic information on old English pottery and china." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[A] good book for beginning collectors, or those simply desiring background information on the subject. . . . The interesting text has been kept to a minimum. Fisher is completely familiar with his material and imparts his interest and enthusiasm to the reader. The 178 plates contain excellent black-and-white photographs, and there is a description of each item illustrated. Also, Fisher has included the names of museums and private collections in Great Britain and America which contain important collections of English ceramics. Good source for a rather broad coverage, but not a reference work for the scholar."

Choice 5:40 Mr '68 110w

"Mr. Fisher, who is a dealer and collector, writes in a manner that will arouse interest in his subject. His book is not satisfactory for reference and, though attractive, will not be useful in most libraries." Paul von Khrum

Library J 92:1612 Ap 15 '67 90w

FISHER, VARDIS. Gold rushes and mining camps of the early American West, by Vardis Fisher [and] Opal Laurel Holmes. 466p il $15 Caxton

917.8 Frontier and pioneer life—The West. Gold mines and mining 68-15028

The authors "have divided the book into sections dealing with life in mining camps, crime and justice, and special characters and situations." (Library J)

"Quarto-sized, printed in double columns and profusely illustrated with fresh, but old photographs and drawings, this gathering of facts on the West exhibits a new collective viewpoint of Western gold rushes. . . . Many appropriate quotations, some a bit forced, from original and other sources, garnish the text. . . . Gold rushes other than California's get a deserved share of attention. Public library and college collections with an interest in Western history will find this large handsome work a refreshing, accurate, readable, and entertaining addition to their shelves." Marco Thorne

Library J 93:2867 Ag '68 160w

"We don't know whether or not this or that story is true, the collaborators say in effect at intervals, but here it is anyway. So what do we have? We have a fat compilation of fact and legend, with some 450 finely chosen illustrations and a selected bibliography of about 175 titles—in sum, a big, good book about the Old West. If I may say so at the risk of disturbing the combative Fisher's shade, it debunks little that has not already been debunked. What he and his wife did was collect, synthesize, and finally pass along the whole gaudy pageant, and we can all be properly grateful." J. K. Hutchens

Sat R 51:31 Ag 6 '68 1300w

FISHLOCK, DAVID, ed. A guide to the laser. 163p il $8.50 Elsevier pub. co.

621.32 Lasers [67-92283]

A collection of eleven essays by ten British scientists and an American journalist. "Topics range through: Early Laser Development (Sanders); Nature of Laser Light (Baglesfield); Laser Types (Goodwin, Hilsun); Holography (Gabor); Applications to Military, Heat Sources, Medicine, Telecommunications, Measurement and Control (Miller, Firth, Smart, Harris, Rowley); Trends in Laser Development (Heavens)." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Uniformly good scientific exposition for the reader with background in physics or engineering. A good supplement to [B.A.] Lengyel's Lasers: more concise and authoritative than [K.R.] Stehling's Lasers and Their Applications [BRD 1967]. . . . Text well supplemented with diagrams, tables, and photographs. Highly recommended."

Choice 5:37 My '68 100w

"[This] is an accurate, clear account of the present state of laser research. . . . This book can be faulted only in its editing and organization: holography is discussed in both chapters 2 and 5, optical radar in chapters 6, 9 and 10, and some of the photographs of equipment might have been omitted. Public, university, and technical libraries should buy." T. J. Pedley

Library J 92:4012 N 1 '67 160w

FITCH, EDWIN M. The Alaska railroad; foreword by E. L. Bartlett. 326p il maps $5.95 Praeger

385 Alaska Railroad 67-20477

The history of this railroad "and the problems of construction are dealt with in the first two chapters. From 1923 to 1966 each successive Secretary of the Interior was surprised to find the railroad under his jurisdiction, and the remainder of the book treats in detail the railroad's relations with the government, as well as railway management, economics of operation, and labor problems, ending with the disastrous effects of the Good Friday earthquake of 1964." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The history of a little known government corporation. The Alaska Railroad runs from Seward and Whittier, on the south coast of the Kenai Peninsula, through Anchorage to Fairbanks, about 175 miles below the Arctic Circle. . . . Finch describes the problems of a government owned road with regard to labor and competition, as well as the development of internal policies and practices. The emphasis is on the post-World War II period. The book is unique in subject matter, but is only an average contribution to the field of railroad literature."

Choice 5:256 Ap '68 130w

"This book is an up-to-date, well-written, authoritative and interesting history. . . . The ups and downs of the Alaska Railroad are candidly discussed. Appendixes of pertinent government documents are given. . . . Recommended for railroad and economics shelves." N. T. Corley

Library J 92:2922 S 1 '67 200w

FITTS, DUDLEY. Sixty poems of Martial. See Martial

FITZGERALD, JOHN D. The great brain: il. by Mercer Mayer. 175p $3.95 Dial press

67-22252

"The Great Brain was Tom Dennis ('T.D.') Fitzgerald, age ten, of Adenville, Utah; the time, 1896. . . . This autobiographical yarn is spun by his brother John Dennis ('J.D.'), age seven. . . . who can tell stories about himself and his family with enough tall-tale exaggeration to catch the imagination of any mischievous boy." (Horn Bk) "Ages nine to thirteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

Book World p16 Je 9 '68 200w

Horn Bk 43:753 D '67 160w

"[This] novel starts humorously, ends tenderly, and never drowns in nostalgia. A description of Adenville's first water closet is the sure-fire opener; the closing episode concerns the boy who lost his leg and whom Tom taught not to be 'useless.' The book sees The Great Brain change into what might be The Great Heart but always manages to offer sentiment rather than sentimentality. Funny, believable, and completely enjoyable." E. S. Cullen

Library J 92:4250 N 15 '67 90w

"[A] warm and witty book. . . . Tom can turn out the most unlikely schemes for making money. When Basil Kokovinis comes to town it is Tom who teaches him English and helps the Greek youth win acceptance among his Mormon peers. . . . And, when the adults are out of ideas, Tom's plan saves the Jensen boys and their sheep dog from death in a cave. Tom would be enough to send most younger brothers stuttering off to the psychiatrist. But not J.D. The plucky youth is a willing Watson to his brother's Holmes, a Tonto to his Lone Ranger, and, as this charming memoir testifies, a Boswell to his Johnson. The subtlety of the author's characterizations as well as the tone of the background are captured by [the] pen and ink drawings." Sidney Offit

N Y Times Bk R p60 N 19 '67 140w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:51 F 24 '68 100w

FITZMAURICE, GEORGE. The plays of George Fitzmaurice; v 1, Dramatic fantasies; with an introd. by Austin Clarke. 159p il $6 Dufour 822 64-25483
 "This is the first of three volumes of the work of [the] dramatist from the Irish literary renaissance." (Library J)

"Contents: The Magic Glasses; The Dandy Dolls; The Linnaun Shree; The Green Stone; The Enchanted Land; The Waves of the Sea. . . . This collection of six short plays by a hitherto neglected dramatist is enhanced by Austin Clarke's introduction because he not only is an authority on Irish literature but also was the playwright's long time friend. The work is a bit too specialized and esoteric for a general collection."

Choice 5:516 Je '68 110w

"The publishers hope to prompt an interest in having the plays performed. Unfortunately, the dialogue is in so heavy a brogue that performance is almost inconceivable. . . . Only the special collection on Irish lit need consider purchase." A. G. Simms

Library J 93:770 F 15 '68 140w

"This edition marks a long overdue tribute to one of the finest writers who came out of the Irish Literary Renaissance. . . . His work is a direct product of Kerry legend, speech, and ordinary life, translated into a fantastic world of his own where cottagers, mountebank doctors, priests and creatures of folklore can meet on the same plane. At the lowest estimate, he was the best writer of Kerry dialect Ireland ever had."

TLS p15 Ja 4 '68 600w

FLAHERTY, ROBERT. The story of Comock the Eskimo. See Comock

FLAHERTY, THOMAS. House of bondage. See Cole, E.

FLANNERY, HARRY W. Which way Germany? by Harry W. Flannery and Gerhart H. Seger. 246p il maps $6.95 Hawthorn bks.

320.943 Germany—Politics and government —1945- 66-15354

"Mr. Flannery, CBS correspondent in Berlin just before World War II, and Mr. Seger, a Social Democrat member of the Reichstag between the wars . . . present facts, details, specific incidents, and personalities in an effort to show what Germany (the Federal Republic) is today and why." (Library J)

"The two authors point to troubling trends in Germany that threaten to influence the country's political aspirations and its future role in Europe. On the plus side, they note the rise of a virtual two-party system with the death of Adenauer, and an impressive economic growth. As a counterbalance, however, they note the revival of Nazi influence and the fact that Germany has become the focal point of intra-European disputes involving Great Britain, France and the Soviet Union. Hailed as a book in which 'facts override conjecture.'" V. S. Kearney

America 118:608 My 4 '68 90w

"The reader who seeks direct answers to the question posed by this title will be disappointed. But the reader who accepts the authors' premise that knowledge brings understanding, will find in this readable book an accurate survey of recent German history and the situation in Germany today. . . . [The authors] reveal little which is new to a constant observer of the German scene, but they bring together and discuss in one context a number of issues not generally found between the covers of one book. Their information is up to date, extending into 1967, with only minor oversights." J. K. Fugate

Library J 92:4422 D 1 '67 150w

"Seger was one of the first Germans to be thrown into a concentration camp when Hitler took power. . . . But Seger was a man with a self-imposed mission: he was desperately anxious to remind all the world of the existence of 'good Germans'. . . . This was the kind of apologia that placed total blame on Hitler. But even if it distorts history, his point of view deserves a hearing. . . . [Nevertheless,] it is plainly unhistorical to expand this opposition into an important or influential factor in the destruction of Nazism. Eisenhower's tanks and Stalin's legions were more effective. The writing is uneven—in spots fascinating, at other places surprisingly colorless. Readers may be annoyed by repeated references to 'one of the authors of this book' without indication of which one is meant." L. L. Snyder

Sat R 51:33 J1 13 '68 700w

FLEISCHMANN, WOLFGANG BERNARD, ed. Encyclopedia of world literature in the 20th century, v 1. See Encyclopedia of world literature in the 20th century

FLEISHMAN, AVROM. Conrad's politics: community and anarchy in the fiction of Joseph Conrad. 267p il $7.50 Johns Hopkins press

823 Conrad, Joseph

67-19479

The author "traces the evolution of Conrad's response to contemporary events from his youthful ultramontanism to his later belief in specific social and international goals. . . . [He seeks to show] how the organic view of history that underlay Conrad's curiosity about the past found expression in a tragic vision which did not exclude hope for the future. Having established Conrad's intellectual concerns, the author goes on to analyze his tales of imperialism and European history and concludes with a close reading of the three great political novels—Nostromo [BRD 1905], The Secret Agent [BRD 1907], and Under Western Eyes [BRD 1911]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Fleishman sets out to prove that Conrad is not a conservative aristocrat, and he succeeds in tracing out a sophisticated development in the artist's political and social attitudes. . . . [concluding] that Conrad, in his view of the centrality of the community in the definition of individual self-realization, falls into the organicist tradition. Opinions found in Conrad's letters, essays, prefaces, and other autobiographical writings substantiate this classification. However, when Fleishman asserts that Conrad's 'novels must be read as dramatic expressions of a complex political imagination,' he transforms his critical approach to these fictions into a hobbyhorse, losing sight of patterns of thought that transcend the actualities of historical existence. . . . The study will excite controversy."

Choice 5:951 O '68 250w

"Fleishman first earns our gratitude by believing that, whatever else we find in them, 'Heart of Darkness' is about colonial exploitation and Nostromo about political relationships in an underdeveloped country. . . . [and] he shows convincingly that [Conrad's] attitudes are nevertheless more complex and more considered than is usually thought. . . . There are weaknesses in [Fleishman's] argument; in particular, he underrates Conrad's scepticism. . . . [but] he certainly produces a well-documented case which destroys the stereotype of [Conrad] as 'an unironic ironist denouncing radical causes'."

TLS p734 J1 11 '68 480w

FLEISHMAN, AVROM. A reading of Mansfield Park; an essay in critical synthesis. (Minn. Univ. Minn. monographs in the humanities, v2) 109p $4 Univ. of Minn. press

823 Austen, Jane. Mansfield Park 67-12671

"After an introductory discussion of his method in relation to current trends in literary criticism, the author reviews past criticism of [Jane Austen's novel]. In the chapters which follow he discusses the novel's historical background and its response to social, political, and economic issues of the day; the psychological structure of the characters and its bearing on an ethical evaluation of them; and the mythological parallels which, he finds, impart a universal significance to the plot. In the final chapter he places the work within the tradition of English fiction, in an effort to estimate its enduring value." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] has, by his multiple approaches to the novel. . . . produced a piece of imaginative scholarship, a critical synthesis, that is valuable, genuinely new and exciting. It is also bound to raise the hackles of many Austen readers with some of its conclusions; indeed, it is doubtful that any will agree with all of Fleishman's ideas, but they are so well argued and the factual material on which they are based so well documented that they cannot be shrugged off. . . . Highly recommended for college libraries. . . .

Choice 5:482 Je '68 150w

"[Fleishman's reading] turns out to be as argumentative as most people's and is the more interesting for that. His most absorbing chapter is on the relation of Mansfield Park to its social background. . . . But [he] is sometimes too hasty in assuming that because the situations in Mansfield Park reflect the state of a certain class at a certain period it is also its author's intention to offer a critique of that class at that time. . . . This tendency to deduce positive conclusions from negative indications leaves several of Mr. Fleishman's points open to objection. . . . [and his] 'multi-perspectival' approach has led him to use terms which are at criss-cross-purposes with Jane Austen's thought."

TLS p927 Ag 29 '68 1050w

FLEMING, THOMAS J. First in their hearts; a biography of George Washington. 136p il $3.95; lib bdg $3.69 Norton

B or 92 Washington, George—Juvenile literature 68-11385

A "study of Washington's life and character, with emphasis on the latter. [A portion of this book appeared in the February, 1967, edition of the Reader's Digest. Annotated bibliography. Index.] Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"Fleming's theme is that Washington was a man of exultant energy, impetuous will, fiery passions and wicked temper. When still young, however, he determined quite deliberately to master his emotions in order to lead and serve his fellow men better. Confronted with examples of greatness through self-discipline, youngsters like to kid themselves that yesterday's heroes were neither as lively nor as tempted as they themselves. This fine little tale could convince even some hard juvenile heads otherwise." B. A. Weisberger

Book World p12 My 26 '68 290w

"A well-documented, gracefully written study. . . . The persons and events that molded Washington's character and shaped his destiny are clearly described in the unfictionized account of his early career, the Revolution, and his Presidency. Washington's youthful romance with Sally Fairfax, his marriage to Martha Custis and his relationship with her children, and his lifelong affection for Mount Vernon are very well drawn. The author's admiration for Washington is evident, but his interpretation is objective. . . . This is appealing pleasure reading as well as excellent history." M. B. Long

Library J 93:2120 My 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by Monroe Stearns

N Y Times Bk R p30 F 18 '68 200w

FLETCHER, COLIN. The man who walked through time; with phot. taken en route by the author. 239p $5.95 Knopf

917.91 Grand Canyon

67-18601

The author describes his two-month solitary hike from one end to the other of the Grand Canyon.

"The story and the hiker's lore is well done, swiftly readable, moving on occasion, even if it never seems very important. It is when Fletcher tries to place his trip in meaningful human context that a reader is apt to squirm.

Neither a geologist nor a naturalist, Fletcher is obsessed with plucking understanding from ignorance. In preparation for his walk he conscientiously read as little as possible about the geology or the living creatures of the canyon. Thus scientifically blind, unable to recognize strata or species, and proud of it, he must nevertheless as a writer describe and illuminate. He can do little but try to convey impressions. . . . His trip, frankly an escape from the world of people, was for him a mystical effort to know life and time by direct empathy with such unlikely companions as snakes, and rocks and sand flies. The literary difficulty is that such a personal quest, however honest, is essentially incommunicable." Gordon Harrison

Book World p9 Ap 7 '68 700w

"Fletcher fills us with the awe that grew stronger and stronger within him as he walked from end to end of the Grand Canyon National Park. . . . He could never be sure that the way was physically possible. He had tested his walking ability over the length of California, covering a thousand miles in six months, and he had prepared caches along the way and parachute drops, so that all he had to carry was a week's supplies (about 65 pounds) at a time. Even so it is an extremely tough enterprise, an exciting adventure, that he shares with his readers. But the highlights of his journey come from the way solitude and hard living heightened his perceptions, made him feel 'knife-edge alive.' . . . Most important of all he glimpsed a new sense of time and of the rhythm of the universe." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ja 8 '68 250w

Reviewed by Jane Manthorne

Horn Bk 44:206 Ap '68 200w [YA]

"Mr. Fletcher, an experienced hiker . . . tells here of his trek . . . a feat never before recorded. . . . His descriptions of the grandeur, wildlife, anthropological findings, and especially the geology of the canyon are sure to afford pleasure to just about anybody. . . . While Mr. Fletcher's detail is a little too much, particularly in the latter chapters which are philosophically heavy, a look between the lines shows he's saving the potential outdoorsman a lot of grief. We learn two major things from the book: camping and hiking techniques, and how to appreciate the real message of the wilderness. . . . The rhythm of the rocks tells a time-tale that threatens to close on a discordant note. Short-sighted, dollar-grasping politicians and merchants are about to destroy the canyon; Mr. Fletcher's comments about this in the epilogue ought to be read by every literate person. The list of pack items in the appendix might be one anybody from Scouts to Sierra Club members should memorize." D. M. Simms

Library J 93:763 F 15 '68 270w

Reviewed by Marian Trahan

Library J 93:1823 Ap 15 '68 100w [YA]

Reviewed by Brooks Atkinson

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ja 28 '68 1950w

New Yorker 44:135 F 24 '68 220w

FLETCHER, IAN, ed. Romantic mythologies. 297p pl $9.50 Barnes & Noble

820.9 English literature—History and criticism. American literature—History and criticism 67-5254

The contributors "discuss how Romantic images of reconciliation among men and their worlds developed in the arts and letters of the late 19th century. A. J. L. Busst covers the whole century in his monograph on the image of the androgyne. Next [are] three studies of pastoral myths in Hawthorne's The Marble Faun, William Barnes' poetry, and the architecture of Bedford Park, a suburb of London . . . by David Howard, R. A. Forsyth, and Ian Fletcher. A. G. Lehmann writes on Pierrot, symbol of the artist as society's dupe; Michael Hamburger shows Hofmannsthal using the figures of the actor and dancer to reintegrate man and his world. Annette Lavers discusses Aubrey Beardsley's literary work as an attempted union of the arts; John Lucas does the same for E. M. Forster and his use of Wagner's music dramas." (Choice)

"[All the contributors] are fluent while consistently requiring of the reader much knowledge of the humanities. . . . These perceptive studies in comparative literature and history of the arts are good complements to whole-making views such as Barzun's enthusiasm for the first half of the century and Praz' critique of its dénouement."

Choice 5:332 My '68 210w

Economist 223:vi Ap 15 '67 400w

"Busst's essay might well have been a monograph on its own. Extensively documented . . . clearly argued and written, it serves as a significant contribution to nineteenth-century intellectual, literary, and art history, despite Dr. Fletcher's disclaimer that because the approach of the essays in his volume is through imagery, they are thus less historical than literary. Seeing patterns in the past, recovering inter-connected images . . . is itself a mode of knowing which, I would think, we have recognized by now as something more than a weak sister to an historical approach that searches for cause-effect coherences. One reviewer of this collection has already found fault with it for being too historical and insufficiently critical. Yet the very richness of the book comes from its refusal to strive for any historical monism of the sort." J. J. Duffy

Mod Lang J 52:243 Ap '68 1300w

FLETCHER, IAN—Continued

"The star turn is A. J. L. Busst's [essay]. . . . As far as the rest of this collection is concerned, sober enough essays on Hawthorne, Barnes' poetry, Beardsley and Forster exhibit only tenuous connection with the larger perspective promised by the title. Ian Fletcher half acknowledges as much in his foreword: 'so specialised and so rich is the field that perhaps we may properly hope to recover interconnections only, never coherences.' Patient angling does indeed land the odd mangled coherence. Separate essays establish the importance of the Wagner cult for Beardsley and Forster. We murmur congratulations, uneasily missing the central essay on the Wagner cult that would relate these facts and incidentally rescue Michael Hamburger's essay on Hofmannsthal and the Dance from being no more than a scrupulous footnote to Ker-mode's Romantic Image [BRD 1958]." Gabriel Pearson

New Statesman 73:800 Je 9 '67 700w
 TLS p1011 O 26 '67 230w

FLETCHER, JOSEPH. Moral responsibility; situation ethics at work. 256p $3.95; pa $1.95 Westminster press 241 Christian ethics [67-14515]

The professor of social ethics at the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Massachusetts, presents his basic theories of situation ethics "and shows how they apply in such areas as sex, fertility control, sickness, business, and government." (Choice) Some of these chapters have previously appeared in such publications as Harvard Divinity Bulletin, Harper's Magazine and Commonweal.

"One of the main spokesmen for 'situation ethics,' Fletcher [writes] here in a nontechnical, frank, and persuasive manner. . . . Included are two of his best known papers, 'The New Look in Christian Ethics' and 'Love Is the Only Measure.' Rather similar to his Situation Ethics [BRD 1966] even to the use of many of the same examples. The basic difference is that the earlier book emphasized theory more than its application, while this work is more concerned with the applications. The unconventional views it defends will undoubtedly make it widely read."

Choice 4:1255 Ja '68 120w

"This book is a serious effort (with occasional light touches) to develop and apply a structure of morals pertinent to our time. . . . [It] is recommended for subject collections." William Gerber

Library J 92:779 F 15 '67 140w

FLETCHER, WILLIAM C. Nikolai: portrait of a dilemma. 230p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)
 231.9 Nikolai, Metropolitan of Krutitsy and Kolomna 68-13209

The author "is director of the Center of Research and Study of Religious Institutions in Geneva, Switzerland, an organization conducting studies on religion in Eastern European countries. In this [biography he] . . . treats the tensions under which the Russian Orthodox Church must operate in the USSR. Nikolai, who died in 1961, was often involved in key events of church-state relations from 1939 to 1960. As head of the Department of External Relations, he appears to have aided Soviet governmental policies to help his church." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This careful analysis of Nikolai's public utterances and published sermons fails to unravel the enigma that was Nikolai. His real motives remain a mystery, and perhaps will forever. . . . [The author] buttresses his judgment with careful, abundant notes and a lengthy bibliography. [He] does not resolve the dilemma of Nikolai, but he sheds a ray of light on the problems of the clergy who are accused of serving God and Mammon." W. C. Jaskiewicz

America 118:796 Je 22 '68 410w

"By telling [Nikolai's] story Fletcher hopes to provide understanding of the nature of Christianity in a totalitarian time and place. Nikolai blasted the West, collaborated with Soviet authorities and remained a devout personal Christian and a pastor to his people. Much of Nikolai's story remains mysterious, but Fletcher's presentation of what is known holds the attention."

Christian Century 85:487 Ap 17 '68 70w

"[This] well-documented biography . . . ought to find a good reception among students of Soviet affairs. . . . Mr. Fletcher has definitely made a contribution to the study of the multifaceted Soviet society. His book is recommended for college, university, and large public libraries." A. S. Birkos
 Library J 93:1623 Ap 15 '68 190w

FLEXNER, JAMES THOMAS. George Washington: in the American Revolution (1775-1783). 599p il maps $10 Little

973.2 Washington, George. U.S.—History—Revolution 68-11529

"This book is the second in a projected three-volume life of George Washington. The first volume was published . . . under the title George Washington: The Force of Experience (1732-1775 [BRD 1965, 1966]), and dealt with his life from his birth to the event with which this book begins: Washington's acceptance of the command of the Continental Army." Portions of this book have appeared in slightly different form in American Heritage. Bibliography.

"Flexner remarks in his introduction: 'This is not a history of the period arranged for convenience around George Washington. It is an account of the adventures and emotions of an individual man.' Yet we do have a fine running narrative of the Revolution insofar as it involved the commanding general—and that was much of the time. The chapters are short, the style is easy, and the descriptions are colorful. Again there are tart pen portraits of leading persons. . . . The final chapter provides an excellent essay on Washington as a soldier." W. D. Hoyt
 America 118:515 Ap 13 '68 550w

Reviewed by Oscar Handlin
 Atlantic 221:133 Ap '68 350w
 Choice 5:676 Jl '68 120w

"So thoroughly has James Flexner gone into his task that he will have to increase the work beyond three volumes to complete the account in the lively style in which he retells familiar facts and little-known episodes to make refreshing reading for both the scholar and the layman in the field. Passages dealing with the Conway Cabal, with Benedict Arnold's traitorous act, are free of controversial latter-day debates and present more human factors than historical footnotes. But the references are available in notes for those who wish them, and Mr. Flexner has not slighted or overlooked any source. This is a worthy sequel to [the first volume] and makes another valuable and useful addition to Washington literature for public and academic libraries." F. N. Jones
 Library J 93:747 F 15 '68 200w

"Washington's evolving political position is perhaps the most fascinating aspect of his story, and Mr. Flexner does it full justice. . . . [He] handles the complexities of Washington's character with a surer touch than in the previous volume, and brings out the contrasting sides of the man. . . . [However, he] handles Washington's generalship less deftly than his character. The book is based on sources far more than on secondary material. Although all the major secondary works are listed, with a few exceptions, Flexner has derived little from them in the way of military analysis. As a result some of the crises in Washington's command receive inadequate treatment." W. B. Wilcox

N Y Times Bk R p8 Mr 31 '68 950w
 New Yorker 44:194 Ap 20 '68 120w

Reviewed by Wilson Sullivan
 Sat R 51:30 My 25 '68 900w

FLIEHR, KAY, jt. auth. In search of an audience. See Morison, B. G.

FLOETHE, LOUISE LEE. A thousand and one Buddhas: il. by Richard Floethe. unp col il $3.75 Farrar, Straus

294.3 Kyoto—Juvenile literature 67-19886

"Based on legend and history, and supplemented by the author's and artist's visits to the famous shrine in Kyoto, this is a . . . picturebook story of the building of the Temple of a Thousand and One Buddhas by the Emperor Gosirakawa in an effort to 'build a shrine so holy that the golden rays of peace reach out to men both far and near.' . . . Grades two to four." (Library J)

"Delicate detailed drawing in the style of Japanese scroll painting and the story written in folklore style combine to make a handsome book, although the picturebook format does tend to break up the story. Parents and teachers can use this with 6-8-year-olds, but the vocabulary is suited to readers in grades 3-5." M. H. Scott

Library J 92:4602 D 15 '67 100w

Reviewed by Jerome Beatty
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p63 N 5 '67 60w

FLOWER, DESMOND, ed. The letters of Ernest Dowson. See Dowson, E.

FLYNT, HENRY N. The Heritage foundation collection of silver; with biographical sketches of New England silversmiths, 1625-1825 [by] Henry N. Flynt and Martha Gandy Fales. 391p il $30 Heritage foundation; for sale by Barre

739.2 Silversmithing. Hall-marks 67-26102

"Henry Flynt, president of Heritage Foundation, Old Deerfield, Massachusetts, and Mrs. Flynt have restored the ten museum houses in that village and collected their 17th- and 18th-Century furnishings and decorations. In the first section of this book the authors describe and illustrate examples of the 118 New England silversmiths who are represented in this collection. The second and larger part of the volume is an alphabetical list of more than 1400 biographies with some 800 touchmarks of New England silversmiths who worked before 1825." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:764 S '68 120w

"[This work] shows original research combined with careful editing and fine printing. The difficult photography of makers' marks is satisfyingly reproduced. The book is recommended for collections in the field of American antiques." Paul von Krum

Library J 93:2852 Ag '68 140w

TLS p816 Ag 1 '68 70w

FOGEL, EPHIM G., jr. ed. Evidence for authorship. See Erdman, D. V.

FOGELSON, ROBERT M. The fragmented metropolis: Los Angeles, 1850-1930. 362p il maps $11.95 Harvard univ. press

917.94 Los Angeles—History 67-20876

"Based upon a Harvard Ph. D. dissertation, Fogelson (Columbia) describes how Los Angeles grew from a village to a metropolis, shows how it diverged in major respects from the great cities of late 19th- and early 20th-century America, and traces how the twin disintegrative forces of suburbanization and progressivism made it the forerunner and model of the modern-day fragmented metropolis." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Based upon thorough research and skillfully written, this book is a highly significant addition to the all too-limited body of scholarship on American urban history and is a must for all college libraries."

Choice 5:379 My '68 130w

"[This] is the best general treatment of Los Angeles to date, but one that could have been much better. Because the book tries to cover so much in such a short space, it often seems shallow and guilty of saying little that is new. Even the more informative sections . . . frequently lack depth and conviction, as some of the book's major arguments do. . . . Nevertheless, this is an important and useful book, not only for its approach, but also for . . . its attempt to get at the essence of the urbanization process. Not everyone will accept Fogelson's arguments, but they will be impressed by the questions he asks and stimulated by his answers." Norris Hundley

J Am Hist 55:146 Je '68 650w

"Unlike other books on the subject, often written by 'instant' authorities—this one is . . . complete with the usual historical apparatus, bibliography, and citations. . . . Part I, 'Los Angeles, 1850-1930,' is a historical résumé in which [Fogelson] adds nothing new to existing literature. . . . Part II, 'The Fragmented Metropolis,' is a topical approach to the city's history, in which Mr. Fogelson emphasizes those elements dear to the urban historian: urban landscape, transportation, planning, neighborhood patterns, municipal politics, and administration. In these six chapters he makes an original contribution, particularly in 'The Quest for Community.' This is a solid study which can be read profitably by the uninitiated—the general and the informed reader—but it will add little to the sophisticate's knowledge of the making of the city." D. B. Nunis

Library J 92:4017 N 1 '67 210w

Va Q R 44:cxv summer '68 130w

FOGG ART MUSEUM. See Harvard University, William Hayes Fogg Art Museum

FOLEJEWSKI, ZBIGNIEW. Maria Dąbrowska. 123p $4.50 Twayne

891.8 Dąbrowska, Maria (Szumska) 67-12267

The author "discusses the main literary works of [the Polish novelist] and presents the reader with an . . . analysis of her intellectual and artistic development. His volume is accompanied by a chronology pertaining to Dąbrowska's life and literary activities." (Choice)

"Folejewski . . . authoritatively discusses the main literary works of Dąbrowska. . . . Included in the volume are notes and source references to each individual chapter, as well as an index and a selected bibliography to both primary and secondary sources, which are very helpful for further research on the subject and Polish literature in general."

Choice 5:783 S '68 210w

"The author has skillfully related Dąbrowska's literary career to the salient historical and political events of her time. His approach combines elements of biographical, historical, and formalistic criticism so as to present a well-rounded study of the development and character of Dąbrowska's art. . . . It is the author's great merit that he approaches his subject first and foremost as an artist. While he gives due attention to social and ideological implications, his view of the interplay of ideology and art is far more sophisticated than we may find in recent appraisals of the novelist in her native land. This wide-ranging, sensitive, and sympathetic study is an excellent introduction to the Polish novelist." H. M. Block

Mod Lang J 52:163 Mr '68 460w

FOLEY, CHARLES, ed. Christ in the communist prisons. See Wurmbrand, R.

FOLEY, MARTHA, ed. The best American short stories, 1967. See The best American short stories, 1967

FOLLETT world-wide Latin dictionary; Latin-English/English-Latin (Am. English) comp. by Edwin B. Levine [and others] with a Guide to practical Latin, by David John Plesic [eds: Vytautas Babušis and Margaret Isham Stearns]. 767p $4.95; pa $2.45; thumb indexed $5.95 Follett 473 Latin language—Dictionaries—English.

English language—Dictionaries—Latin 67-15559

A bilingual dictionary which also includes the Latin equivalent of modern terms. "The Guide to practical Latin on page 734 . . . provides the Latin renderings of numerous conversational items dealing with school, the home, and extracurricular activities. Also included is a précis on Roman life and customs . . . [and a] résumé of Latin pronunciation and grammar, including paradigms of both regular and irregular verbs." (p.3)

"A responsible piece of work. The Latin-English section suffers from the faults common to all smaller dictionaries. It rarely gives the Latin context and only occasionally indicates the semantic sphere . . . to which the various meanings are to be assigned; generally the reader is forced to scan a list of glosses and choose the meaning best suited to the passage he is reading. . . . The English-Latin section is the most interesting, and . . . will justify the book's having been published. Its flaws include: occasional lack of coordination with the Latin-English section and occasional minor omissions. . . . But these faults are minor, and in general, where I have checked them, the definitions are reliable. The work is thus at least satisfactory and usable." W. F. Wyatt

Class World 61:257 F '68 340w

FOLLETT—Continued

"Apart from its value on the score of neologisms, [this] is a first-rate general utility reference, with rich and well organized definitions in both its parts, valuable to the scholar, teacher, and student." B. H. Smeaton
Library J 92:4140 N 15 '67 240w

FOLSOM, KENNETH E. Friends, guests, and colleagues; the Mu-fu system in the late Ch'ing period. 234p il $5.50 Univ. of Calif. press

320.951 China—Politics and government.
Li, Hung-chang 67-26479

"After describing the key role of personal relations in the history of Chinese government, Folsom explains the mu-fu system whereby privately hired experts advised provincial officials on technical and administrative matters well beyond the capacity of the officials' classical educations. He shows how the system worked in the careers of the two most important officials in 19th-century China. Tseng Kuofan and Li Hung-chang." (Choice) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"A brilliantly successful attempt to reveal the personal side of Chinese governmental mechanisms in the late 19th century, resting upon a careful analysis of the best Chinese sources. . . . The greater part of the book is an intensive study of Li's efforts to use the mu-fu system, hiring foreign experts, for his various 'self-strengthening' programs. The book should please the general reader as well as the China scholar; it is indispensable to an understanding of the collapse of traditional Chinese government."

Choice 5:850 S '68 150w

"Adopting something like a biographical approach to institutional history, the author has avoided shrouding 'the intense warmth and humanity of the Chinese world' with a fog of 'cold impersonality.' In so doing, he succeeds in throwing much light on intimate facets of late-Ch'ing Chinese political life. . . . The Confucian-versus-Legalist formulation, which Mr. Folsom adopts as a theoretical frame of reference, does not seem to fit well the late-Ch'ing situation. He is at his best when he deals with personalities and events; his touch becomes somewhat less sure when he ventures beyond them. Several minor errors . . . invite suspicion that the manuscript has not been prepared with sufficient care, thus doing less than justice to a well conceived and well researched book." K. C. Hsiao

Public Affairs 41:279 summer '68 400w

FOLSOM, MICHAEL, jt. auth. The mysterious grain. See Elting, M.

FONDIN, JEAN, jt. auth. The golden age of toys. See Remise, J.

FONER, PHILIP S. The Bolshevik revolution; its impact on American radicals, liberals, and labor; a documentary study. 304p il $6.95; pa $2.85 Int. pubs.

947.084 Russia—History—Revolution, 1917-1921. Socialism—U.S. 67-24548

The author "has compiled 143 selections covering the period between 1917 and early 1921—excerpts from editorials, speeches, reports of meetings, articles, and resolutions, all supporting the Bolsheviks and condemning American policies toward the Bolsheviks and Russia. He has included selections from union organs, . . . the radical and socialist press . . . and general liberally-oriented periodicals." (Library J) Index.

"Foner, an established, sympathetic scholar of American radical and labor history, . . . argues: 'It is a complete revelation for the present generation to learn of the practical unanimity with which the entire radical movement, including many trade unions, hailed the Bolshevik Revolution during its first three years.' This approach and interpretation varies greatly from the traditional diplomatic or establishment oriented studies. The appeal and potential use of the book is enhanced by the presence of a detailed index and a series of thumbnail biographies of principal radical, liberal, and labor leaders who shaped the American response to the Russian Revolution. Recommended for any library attempting to build an in-depth collection in 20th-century American history."

Choice 5:228 Ap '68 150w

"While the selections are brief, they do give the reader a good idea of the prevailing mood in American socialist and liberal circles. In his introduction Mr. Foner discusses the actual impact of Bolshevism beyond the mere outpouring of sentiment and elocution. His extensive reference notes help the reader identify situations and events. . . . This book should be useful in both college and large public libraries, particularly because it gives the reader some access to a literature which is both scarce and scattered." T. J. Michalak

Library J 92:4501 D 15 '67 200w

FONTAINE, ANDRÉ. History of the cold war; from the October revolution to the Korean War, 1917-1950; tr. from the French by D. D. Paige. 432p maps $10 Pantheon bks.

327 World politics. Russia—Foreign relations—U.S. U.S.—Foreign relations—Russia 67-19180

A "French historian here presents the first of his two-volume study of contemporary history as seen from the point of view of conflict between Russia and America. . . . His thesis [is] that the Cold War dates from 1917." (Library J)

"Fontaine has undertaken a formidable task. . . . It is a tribute to his objectivity and sense of purpose that he has given us a book which is both informative and stimulating. . . . Perhaps the most valuable part of this book is its account of Soviet encroachment, the grim record of how the Kremlin imposed its will in the last stages of the war and subsequently, until checked by Western agreement. . . . Closely comparable in interest to the Soviet record is M. Fontaine's account of Far Eastern events during the whole period, and more particularly, that of the confrontation of Chiang Kai-shek with Mao and its outcome. . . . [He] points out what he judges to be the errors of the past; they could help to guide us in the present." Anthony Eden

Book World p1 Mr 10 '68 1250w

Reviewed by Arnold Buchman

Christian Science Monitor p5 Jl 11 '68 750w

"This is a French review [of the period] which covers familiar ground. . . . [It] strikes this reviewer as dramatic and a bit overdrawn. True it is, that the past 50 years have produced the confrontation we now face, but this cannot be judged as either predestined or 'cold war' in the historic sense of the word. On the other hand, [Fontaine] presents fairly enough the main streams of American and Soviet events, although earlier books on the same subject . . . by J. Lukacs [History of the Cold War, BRD 1961] and M. Herz [Beginnings of the Cold War, BRD 1966] give closer and more analytic attention to the post-World War II period." R. F. Delaney

Library J 93:759 F 15 '68 160w

Reviewed by W. S. Schlamm

Nat R 20:401 Ap 23 '68 1950w

Reviewed by Michael Harrington

New Repub 158:25 Mr 30 '68 1350w

Reviewed by Kingsley Martin

New Statesman 76:500 O 18 '68 1600w

"Fontaine's study is flawed by factual errors, distortion and some mistranslation. The author aspires 'to contribute to the work of clarification and revision that is now going on, particularly in the United States,' but his study revises little and confuses much. . . . Few of [his] interpretations would disturb the hardest of American cold warriors, although his historical inaccuracies left this historian spluttering." Gaddis Smith

N Y Times Bk R p6 Mr 24 '68 550w

"[Fontaine] considers the postwar confrontation of the two superpowers as the result of an inevitable historical buildup. . . . [He] concentrates almost exclusively on the political aspects of the struggle. He obviously believes the manipulations of the world leaders are what determined the era; and his principal actors are a naïve, vain and short-sighted Roosevelt, a cold-blooded Churchill, and Stalin, 'the greatest criminal in this story,' except for Hitler and his lieutenants. . . . [The author] rehearses the cynical manner in which the fate of central Europe was disposed of in October 1944 and brilliantly reconstructs the cynicism of the geopolitical bargaining. . . . He believes historians will gradually come to recognize that the cold war was, in fact, the third world war." F. Y. Blumenfeld

Newsweek 71:102 Mr 18 '68 1100w

TLS p1360 D 5 '68 170w

FORD, CLELLAN S., ed. Cross-cultural approaches; readings in comparative research. 365p il $6.50; pa $4.50 HRAF press

390 Sociology—Research. Ethnology 66-27876

"This book, issued as a companion volume to Cross-Cultural Approaches: Readings in Cross-Cultural Methodology, brings together 13 previously published, one revised, and two new papers by 19 . . . contributors. The published papers appeared during the period 1937 to 1966, and they provided a sample of anthropological thinking on problems and issues in comparative research. The collection is organized into five parts, starting with an introductory section of three essays intended to provide orientation by calling attention to three areas in which anthropologists take issue with each other." (Am Soc R) Many of these articles appeared previously in various professional periodicals such as The American Anthropologist, Ethnology and The Quarterly Journal of Studies on Alcohol. Bibliographies.

"This book is recommended reading for sociologists because its example serves to remind us that ongoing comparative work on a large number of societies is an accomplished fact in [this] . . . discipline. Since the volume samples from opposing as well as convergent views, a fair representation is provided. . . . In addition to providing orientation, the volume contains a number of quite valuable bodies of data." Milton Bloombaum

Am Soc R 33:152 F '68 700w

"[The book's] principal virtue lies in presenting a number of approaches and the ways in which they can be manipulated in seeking answers to fundamental questions in a variety of areas. The selections are presented in contrast to each other, rendering the basic problems involving cross-cultural studies in sharp relief.

It is unfortunate that the method of reproduction used by the HRAF Press yields such an uneven product. Type size and face variations do not add to the readability of this book. Recommended as source material for sophisticated upper division and graduate students in anthropology and the social sciences."

Choice 5:413 My '68 180w

FORD, DANIEL. Incident at Muc Wa. 231p $4.95 Doubleday

67-12876

For reasons uncertain, four American soldiers are assigned "to garrison Muc Wa, a long deserted French outpost [in a country identifiable as Vietnam]. For reasons even more uncertain it is decided to abandon Muc Wa. Meanwhile, [Oleonski] forms an attachment of the flesh to a local girl and a corporal [Stephen Courcy] forms an attachment of the spirit to the pestilence-ridden hamlet and its people." (N Y Times Bk R)

"This fine novel is recommended for all public and college libraries." S. S. Swanson

Library J 92:1177 Mr 15 '67 120w

"[Ford] has managed to make Stephen and the other members of the American 'raiders' sympathetic and appealing. And he has even managed some Twainesque situations about a subject which seems most unlikely to yield any humor. . . . Despite his obvious disgust, he assumes that American action in Vietnam has a logic, however perverse, and an ethic, however misdirected. . . . But Ford fails to convince me that his war is the war I know it to be." Leonard Kriegel

Nation 205:407 O 23 '67 150w

"Mr Ford knows that farce, parody and grotesquely comic descriptions of violence are useful weapons in a fictional war on the irrationality of militarism and organisations, but he is nervous about their use and lacks the sheer inventive energy and gusto to bring them off. . . . His book is finally a literary exercise, not because it is overwritten or crude but because it is underwritten, in too good taste. We need a real shock by now, to be moved as readers by the discovery that enemies are human beings like ourselves." A. S. Byatt

New Statesman 75:15 Ja 5 '68 180w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p40 Ap 30 '67 110w

FORD, EILEEN. Eileen Ford's Book of model beauty; il. by Erica Merklings. 279p $8.95 Trident

646.7 Grooming, Personal

67-28140

The author, operator of a New York model agency, "covers phases and stages of beauty care from the inside out, beginning with the case history of a model. She concludes with a pictorial study of 45 agency graduates. In between she gives all kinds of beauty advice and aids. . . . The mature beauty is not overlooked." (Library J)

"Although written primarily for aspiring fashion models, any woman concerned with her appearance will find this book useful. In an easy, conversational style, Mrs. Ford discusses grooming, makeup, skin, techniques for dealing with problem hair, rules for a better posture, diet and exercise. Her advice is sound and down-to-earth. . . . Although the book holds the attention of the reader from the beginning, it comes alive through the drawings." Rhysa Davis

Christian Science Monitor p14 S 3 '68 500w

Reviewed by Audrey Cahill

Library J 93:3785 O 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by Sumika Yamashita

Library J 93:4429 N 15 '68 70w [YA]

FORD, HUGH, ed. Nancy Cunard: brave poet, indomitable rebel, 1896-1965. 383p il $12.50 Chilton co.

B or 92 Cunard, Nancy

68-23514

This volume contains contributions by more than fifty friends and admirers, among them "Langston Hughes, Arthur Waley, Iris Tree, David Garnett, Sir Rupert Hart-Davis, William Carlos Williams, Leonard Woolf, Michael Arlen, Janet Flanner (Genet), Louis Aragon, Sylvia Townsend Warner, Kay Boyle, Harold Acton and Henry Moore. . . . [It also includes] selections from her own prose and poetry." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The book catches . . . the volatile essence of this beautiful, generous, damned creature whom Aldous Huxley has put into Point Counter Point [BRD 1928], Michael Arlen into the Green Hat [BRD 1924], and Robert Nichols into Sonnets to Aurelia [in Aurelia and Other Poems, BRD 1920, It] is an inspired collection of personal material about her by her friends, and autobiographical material from her own works about George Moore and Norman Douglas (lifelong friends both), and some other bits about her childhood. . . . There are excerpts from her reports from Spain and France and Harlem and from her other travels. Every page of this book is vitally alive with her presence." K. G. Jackson

Harper 237:102 S '68 420w

"A collection of articles, principally in English but with some contributions in French or Spanish. The eminence and diversity of the contributors bear witness to the impact Nancy Cunard's personality made on those she met and to the variety of milieus her life touched. Much of her poetry now seems dated, rather minor Millay, but her pioneering in the appreciation of African art, her determined fight against Fascism in Spain and elsewhere, and her gallant, distinguished spirit merit a revival of interest. Mr. Ford's book is for most college and public libraries." Dorothy Curley

Library J 93:2645 J1 '68 140w

FORD, PATRICK. Cardinal Moran and the A.L.P.; a study in the encounter between Moran and socialism, 1890-1907: its effects upon the Australian labor party: the foundation of Catholic social thought and action in modern Australia. 319p pl $14.50 Cambridge

329.994 Labor party (Australia). Moran, Patrick Francis, Cardinal

66-17534

In developing his central study of the attitudes of Cardinal Moran of Australia "to left-wing factions in New South Wales before Federation, Father Ford has also produced a . . . history of the antecedents of the Australian Labor Party. . . . [He gives an] analysis of Moran's character, motives, and experience of radical movements before coming to Australia; . . . details of the early battles for power in the Labor Party and of the emergence and maturing of A.L.P. leaders such as Holman and Hughes; and a survey of the sectarianism brought into full eruption by Moran's candidature for the 1897 Federal Convention." (Publisher's note) Index.

FORD, PATRICK—Continued

"[Father Ford] is an admirer of Cardinal Moran . . . and of the social theories Moran injected into the ideological debates out of which the Australian Labor party emerged. Moran's sympathy for the working classes was balanced by a profound distaste for socialism. In making this case the author overplays Moran's encounters with the violence of Mazzini's Roman Republic of 1848, and with Irish Land League disorders, prior to going to Australia as archbishop of Sydney in 1885. . . . Included is a rare collection of period photographs of Australian Catholic and Leftist leaders." C. S. Blackton

Am Hist R 73:578 D '67 250w

"[This is] a compendious survey of labor in Australian politics (1890-1907) and its European beginnings rather than an analysis of the public life of . . . the Cardinal, [who] is too often lost in a relentless deluge of names and organizations. This unselective treatment results in confusion for the reader; hence, interest in a dynamic, uncompromising political priest who was a founder of Catholic social action in Australia is lost in a chaos of material. . . . There is too little of Moran; too much sedulous detail weakens this book."

Choice 4:890 O '67 150w

"Although [the book] deals with a subject that has been acrimoniously debated in Australia over the last dozen years—the proprieties and improprieties of the relationship of the Roman Catholic Church to a secularly-oriented political party—it is rigidly historical in treatment, not even hinting that a problem exists. The account of Moran's relationship to the [Australian Labor Party] is detailed but while every effort is made to assess his influence on events, all too often resort has to be had to 'probably' and other qualifiers. However, the book does contain a good deal of very useful detail about party history, accumulated in providing a context for Moran's interventions. . . . [The book seems] slightly out of focus as a history of the time, though on Moran and the Catholic Church's position it is excellent." C. H. Grattan

Pacific Affairs 40:426 fall-winter '67- '68 180w

FORDE, CYRIL DARYLL. See Forde, D.

FORDE, DARYLL, ed. West African kingdoms in the nineteenth century; ed. with an introd. by Daryll Forde and P. M. Kaberry [pub] for the Int. African institute. 289p maps $8 Oxford

966 Africa, West—History [67-82613]

These studies "analyze the political, social, and economic institutions of ten precolonial West African societies: Benin and Oyo in Nigeria; Dahomey; Maradi in Niger; Kom in Cameroun; Mossi in Upper Volta; Gonja and Ashanti in Ghana; the Mende country in Sierra Leone; and Kayor in Senegal." (Am Hist R) Bibliographies.

"A most interesting volume, which brings together in one place a wealth of new information derived from written sources, oral tradition, and observation in the field. The majority of the studies have been written by professional anthropologists. The result, to a historian, is enlightening, but also in some degree and in some places confusing and even a little dubious. . . . This is not history; it is, however, indispensable source material for the historian." Graham Irwin

Am Hist R 73:872 F '68 490w

"Every study is unique, valuable, and sound. . . . The studies are not really narrative histories, but descriptions of African states at one point in time. This book should be in libraries that are acquiring something more than a very general collection of Africana. . . . Notes and sources grouped by chapter; general index; helpful introductory essay by the editors."

Choice 5:393 My '68 80w

FOREMAN, MICHAEL. The two giants. unp col il lib bdg $3.95 Pantheon bks.

67-20225

"Residents of a beautiful country, the giants [Boris and Sam] are loving friends until they quarrel over a seashell. Suddenly a flood covers the land, the shell is swept away, and the goliaths retreat to separate strongholds to wage war. At the height of their battle they discover that each is wearing a sock belonging to the other—and the quarrel evaporates in laughter. The waters recede, the flowers and birds return, and the giants (who cannot remember why they fought) are reunited." (N Y Times Bk R) "Kindergarten to grade three." (Library J)

"[The] lumpy collage and paint-pot creations are both appropriate and surprisingly subtle. A perfect story for the youngest listener or page-turner." S. G. Lanes

Book World p26 N 12 '67 120w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 87:178 N 10 '67 20w

"Foreman's illustrations for his original fable are bright and imaginative, but his story offers little to warrant that careful treatment. Moral suasion for peace, but the children won't be impressed." B. S. Miller
Library J 92:4602 D 15 '67 110w

"This is a large book in many ways." Barbara Wersba
N Y Times Bk R p34 O 1 '67 180w

FOREST, JAMES H., Jr. ed. A penny a copy. See Cornell, T. C.

FORESTER, C. S. Long before forty. 254p $5.95 Little

B or 92 68-24234

This book by the author of Hornblower and the Hotspur (BRD 1962) "includes both an autobiographical fragment published posthumously covering C. S. Forester's first 31 years of life and a reprint of his account of his creation of Horatio Hornblower that was published as 'Some Personal Notes' in the Hornblower Companion. . . . Mr. Forester dwells largely on the experiences of a precocious youngster growing up in an English Council school. . . . He goes on to tell about his failure as a medical student . . . and of his finally turning to literature as a vocation and deep love." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:188 Ag 1 '68 280w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p5 Ag 15 '68 310w

"The account of his boyhood is vivid and at times amusing. The latter part of the autobiography illuminates the psychology of a writer in the throes of literary creation, but is disappointingly discreet as far as personal revelations are concerned. 'Some Personal Notes' would be mostly of interest to a Hornblower buff, of which there are many. This is a beautifully written book of essentially limited general appeal and even of limited need except in the most inclusive literature collections." J. M. Carroll

Library J 93:2855 Ag '68 240w

Reviewed by W. G. Rogers
N Y Times Bk R p34 N 3 '68 600w
New Yorker 44:181 S 28 '68 150w

"For all its clarity and apparent candour [Forester's account] has a baffling bouquet. Were those childhood years before the First World War on the whole happy or miserable? It is hard to tell, and as we read on we see why. Forester has a curiously ambiguous attitude to the brutal canings and bullying that went on at the various schools he attended. Mainly he seems to approve. . . . Forester's education certainly had no deleterious effect on his energy and zeal. When he . . . set up as a novelist he began at the fantastic speed of 6,000 words a day, but he soon modified this headlong pace. Few writers have described their working methods more fully or more interestingly."

TLS p815 S 14 '67 300w

FORMAN, CHARLES W., ed. Christianity in the non-Western world. 146p $4.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

209.18 Africa—Church history. Asia—Church history. Christianity 67-14851

A "source book of writings depicting Christianity in Africa and Asia over the past five centuries." (Choice) Annotated bibliography.

"The editor's selection of readings establishes both the immense complexity of approaches within the missionary enterprise and some interesting themes discernible over the centuries. The volume ends by referring not only to the indigenous forms of Christianity in the non-Western world but to the birth of a new phenomenon, i.e. the impact of Eastern forms of Christianity upon the church. Suitable for college and seminary use."

Choice 5:70 Mr '68 90w

Christian Century 84:379 Mr 22 '67 30w

"Although weak as a montage, this book is interesting and informative as a reader in the primary (and some secondary) source material of non-western Christianity. The brief introductions to each of the excerpts and to each of the sections are transitional modulations rather than a unified tying-together of the historic threads. Nevertheless, the book remains an interesting potpourri of chronologically arranged excerpts from historic sources." Dennis Ribbens

Library J 92:583 F 1 '67 110w

Reviewed by John Davidson

Pacific Affairs 41:263 summer '68 120w

FORMAN, H. CHANDLEE. Old buildings, gardens, and furniture in Tidewater Maryland; drawings and phot. by author except where noted. (Tidewater pubs. bk) 326p $12.50 Cornell maritime 720.9 Architecture, American. Gardens. Furniture, American. Maryland—Historic houses, etc. 67-17538

The second volume of a projected three-volume study. The first was entitled Tidewater Maryland Architecture and Gardens. "A regional design prevails: upper and lower eastern shore, southern Maryland, and upper-bay counties. . . . The first part [is entitled] 'A Glimpse of Early Maryland.'" (J Am Hist)

"Those who want to relive an era crave for things, which communicate the feeling, mood, style, and values of a society. . . . Forman has attained eminence by a lifetime of scholarship in providing for this need. The present study draws upon his extensive notes which were developed in his most recent work (1961-1963) for the Historic American Buildings Survey. Historians can best appreciate the book as being similar to a museum display. . . . [The first part] chronologically confuses the general picture; and readers will have to look to other authors for the synthesis lacking here. There is no substitute, however, for the massive detail presented in this volume. . . . Forman's record is primary material for future historians to use in discovering the things of American culture." T. O. Hanley

J Am Hist 54:874 Mr '68 260w

"Copiously illustrated with drawings by the author, and by old photographs. These last are particularly valuable, as in many cases they record buildings which have since disappeared. . . . The author also records simple houses with as much gusto as elaborate mansions. . . . While the writing is as colorful as ever, the author's attempts to rename historic and established styles—for example, he calls Federal architecture 'Hangover Georgian'—have met with no success. This is a useful volume."

Va Q R 44:xxxix winter '68 200w

FORSYTH, GORDON. Doctors and state medicine; a study of the British health service. 169p il $6 Lippincott

362.1 Great Britain. Ministry of Health 67-2591

The author "discusses the theory of medical care underlying the British National Health Service (NHS); relates the theory to contemporary medical practice; traces the regional organization of hospitals back to Emergency Medical Services during World War II; reviews the periodic difficulties over remuneration; and . . . stresses the importance of the long-standing division between general practitioners and consultant specialists." (Am Soc R)

"[The author] proceeds to find fault in actual practice with 'every aspect of the theoretical spectrum' [of Britain's medical care program], but concludes that one should not infer from his criticism that the administrative structure of the NHS or financing through general taxation are at fault. Both are the result of 'historical necessity' and probably have little direct influence on the quality of care in general practice. . . . The book presents more of the 'in-fighting' than any other one source known to me and brings the contest up to date, including a view of the recent so-called general practitioners' revolt, which is rather different from the picture presented to the American public. . . . Highly recommended." J. B. Montague

Am Soc R 32:852 O '67 600w

"Mr. Forsyth's short book . . . was written with the intention, in part at least, of explaining to medical students how the service started, what lay behind its inception and how it has been shaped over the first eighteen years of its existence. . . . [He] guides his readers skillfully through the details of the long and slightly undignified pay dispute between the B.M.A. and the Ministry of Health, and concludes that 'the State has in fact been a generous employer to both specialists and general practitioners.'"

TLS p315 Mr 28 '68 500w

FORTUNE (periodical). The Negro and the city; adapted from a special issue of Fortune on: "Business and the urban crisis." (Time-Life bks) 159p $3.95; pa $1.50 Time

301.451 Negroes—Economic conditions. Cities and towns 68-23082

Contents: The deeper shame of the cities, by Max Ways; The new Negro mood, by Roger Beardwood; Business reclaims human resources, by Gilbert Burek; More dollars and more diplomas, by E. K. Faltermayer; The St. Louis economic blues, by W. S. Rukeyser; The case against the unions, by Thomas O'Hanlon; "Our war was with the police department," by Eleanor Carruth; Systems engineering invades the city, by Lawrence Lessing; Mortgages for the slums, by Walter McQuade; What business can do for the cities, by the editors of Fortune.

"Aside from 12 pages of graphs and tables there is no marked improvement over the original magazine issue. Not only does the adaptation omit two colorful portfolios on urban living and the Upward Bound Program, but omits the success story of John Johnson and an introduction by Eleanor Carruth. This last omission is regrettable. Nevertheless, easy, penetrating, and exciting reading. . . . Less sophisticated and scholarly than Scientific American's 'Cities' [BRD 1965]. Will appeal to a wide readership from advanced high school students to undergraduates, businessmen, professionals, and Government officials. Useful for supplementary reading in courses on urban and ethnic problems. While not profound, its treatment is fair, sensitive, stimulating, and progressive. No index or footnotes."

Choice 5:1176 N '68 230w

"[This collection] pretends to analyze the urban and racial crises. The plea is for more participation by business which has a 'responsibility' (white man's burden?). Truisms are sprinkled over a creamy bulk of . . . nonsense. . . . It is suggested here that by taking up the Negro's cause the reputation of business will be improved! The editors believe the crisis is manageable and the profit motive will induce a rebuilding of cities. The introduction by Robert Weaver adds to the fantasy perpetrated here. This book is only needed where discussion material for groups is required; information is minimal." Herman Elstein

Library J 93:2841 Ag '68 120w

FOSS, MARTIN. Death, sacrifice, and tragedy. 125p $4.95 Univ. of Neb. press.

128 Death 66-16513

A professor of philosophy emeritus, Haverford College, protests "against the view that biological death can be experienced. Foss argues that the only 'death' we can possibly experience is that of emptiness and meaninglessness in life itself. He believes that the meaning of life is found not by a conception of destruction and nothingness as ultimate but by a recognition that these are part of a creative process embodying freedom and destiny in which sacrifice leads to a higher level of transcendent fulfillment." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"In developing this theme an antidote is provided to mythology (Mircea Eliade), predestination (Calvin), absurdity (Camus, Sartre and Kafka), the solitude of death and life's finiteness (Heidegger), and the alleged incompatibility of tragedy and Christianity. Foss has made a notable and unique contribution which is expressed concisely and beautifully. It reveals the mature thought of one who has meditated upon this area for many years. Recommended for advanced students especially those in philosophy, religion, literature, drama, and art."

FOSS, MARTIN—Continued

Choice 4:412 Je '67 170w

"Mr. Foss's real concern is not with the philosophical problems attendant upon death, but with life. . . . [His] major point is . . . through service to entities other than himself, man can find and assert meaning in an otherwise meaningless universe. The idea is to effect in some way history and thus deny death. Curiously, there is no mention anywhere of Marx, whose notions of the relationship of man to history are certainly relevant. . . . This omission is a result, I think, of a curious ambivalence of the book. Mr. Foss's concern is unmistakably social, finite and worldly. His discussion, however, is metaphysical, abstract and theoretical. . . . Because of the general philosophical terms of which most of the book consists, the writing is . . . vague and generalized . . . [and] the reading is tough-going. . . . [However] Professor Foss is obviously a man of wide learning and . . . [his spirit] shines through . . . a spirit which insists that man can achieve meaning in life in the face of the obliterating fact of death." R. A. Lee
Mod Lang J 51:513 D '67 800w

FOSTER, G. ALLEN. Advertising: ancient market place to television. 224p il $4.95 Criterion bks.

659.1 Advertising—History—Juvenile literature 67-11913

A history of advertising "from the pictographs of ancient Sumner to the complicated techniques of the present time. . . . The last chapter offers career information . . . [for] high school students. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades seven to twelve." (Library J)

"An interesting account of the history of advertising from the earliest days. . . . However, Foster offers more to young readers than a simple history; the book is also a career book, and as such will hold the attention of most young readers through its anecdotal accounts. Further interest in advertising as a career can be satisfied through the bibliography."

Best Sell 27:392 Ja 1 '68 80w

"Especially entertaining are the chapters on the drummer, the Yankee peddler, the traveling medicine men, and P. T. Barnum, the greatest advertiser of them all. Humorous, little-known anecdotes and the reproduction of old prints and photographs add to the general interest of the book which is packed with information about the social phenomena of by-gone days as well as details on the present status of this gigantic business." Agnes Gregory

Library J 92:4622 D 15 '67 90w

FOSTER, JOHN. Napoleon's marshal; the life of Michel Ney; front. by Leonard Everett Fisher; maps by Cynthia Basil. 224p $3.95 Morrow

B or 92 Ney, Michel Duc d'Elchingen. Prince de la Moskowa—Juvenile literature 68-9179

This biography is set against the background of the Napoleonic Wars. "Hailed by Napoleon as 'the bravest of the brave' and raised to the peerage by Louis XVIII, Ney was ultimately shot as a traitor. . . . [This] account of Ney's career explains why these changes of fortune took place." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Grades seven to ten." (Best Sell)

"The account is well-researched, although dialogue is inserted to help the story move along and to keep the attention of young readers. The book is recommended for library collections."

Best Sell 28:276 O 1 '68 130w

"Foster tells one of the most exciting stories in military annals with great effect. All the salient facts concerning the rise of a barrel-cooper's son to the rank of Prince are here. So is a good deal of Ney's equivocal temperament. He comes through clearly as a man whose example could rally any lost cause." R. F. Delderfield

N Y Times Bk ■ pt 2, p30 N 3 '68 110w

FOSTER, K., ed. & tr. Dante's lyric poetry. 2v. See Dante Alighieri

FOSTER, MALCOLM. Joyce Cary; a biography. 555p pl $10 Houghton

B or 92 Cary, Joyce

68-12779

This biography "traces Cary's life from early childhood through his . . . education, extensive travels, government career, wars, [writing career] and, finally, to his . . . death." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 222:135 N '68 320w

"Gradually we perceive a personality taking shape, although on the whole it does not strike one (at least this reviewer) as a really engaging one. . . . Somehow, the man's warmth fails to come through. . . . All in all, though, this is a biography deserving respect. Written with apparent care, it includes twenty-four pages of family photographs. . . . The bibliography shows the publication dates of the editions most likely to be available to readers today . . . but the author's list of permissions to quote shows the original publication dates of Joyce's sixteen published books. A considerable number of them are summarized in detail and critical judgments passed upon them. . . . [Foster] appears to have written what should remain, for many years, the standard biography of Cary." J. S. Phillipson

Best Sell 28:355 D 1 '68 900w

"Foster's biographical and critical study is the fullest portrait of Cary so far published, but it leaves some areas to be explored. . . . The author has a pleasant, easy style; his approach would have pleased Cary. Cary was a man of many parts, and Foster has studied and portrayed these parts with admirable depth and sympathy. But the total man remains an enigma wrapped in a smile." Martin Tucker
Book World p13 O 20 '68 360w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson

Harper 237:111 O '68 180w

"This superbly written biography . . . is a tender story, very much like a diary written in the third person. . . . Had Mr. Foster presented only a biographical explanation of Cary's development . . . he would have produced a useful, but routine, book. What makes his book good and rather surprising is his revelation that Cary was not in every respect, nor consistently throughout his life, humane and liberal in all his views, nor was he a fearless pioneering force for reform that some have interpreted him to be. . . . Foster's loving biography is long and greatly detailed, yet it is not heavy going." R. K. Burns

Library J 93:3125 S 15 '68 260w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:40 N 30 '68 1200w

Time 93:75 Ja 10 '69 800w

FOULLOIS, BENJAMIN D. From the Wright brothers to the astronauts; the memoirs of Benjamin D. Foulois, with C. V. Glines. 306p il $8.95 McGraw

B or 92 Aeronautics, Military—History

68-14755

In 1910 "Foulois was sent to Texas with a Wright pusher to establish the embryo of what is now the U.S. Air Force. . . . He had to teach himself to fly with the assistance of correspondence from the [Wright] brothers. From this inauspicious beginning the air arm grew. General Foulois relates. . . the history that he lived: World War I, the trying days following the conflict and the Billy Mitchell affair; his appointment as Chief of Staff of the Air Corps in 1931 (a position he held until his retirement in 1935); the formation of the GHQ Air Force under his command." (Library J) Index.

"It is most fortunate that General Foulois recorded his story before his death in April of 1967 for it reveals many fascinating incidents in the life of a pioneer aviator. Recommended for large collections generally." W. N. Hess

Library J 93:2478 Je 15 '68 220w

"[These memoirs] are partly technical in nature, partly a parade of public controversies and private crusades—of Congressional committees and battles fought with memoranda. They carry, at times, the Wellsian overtones of an airborne race struggling to communicate with flatlanders. Some might prefer more open-cockpit atmosphere and less Washingtonia, but for those with a general knowledge of aviation history Foulois adds a fascinating perspective." A. R. Dodd

Sat R 51:21 Ag ■ '68 310w

FOWLER, ALASTAIR, ed. Spenser's images of life. See Lewis, C. S.

FOWLER, KENNETH. The age of Plantagenet and Valois; the struggle for supremacy, 1328-1498; phot. by Wim Swaan, Edwin Smith and others. 208p maps $15 Putnam
944 Hundred Years' War, 1339-1453
[68-71631]

"A lecturer at the University of Edinburgh begins with a historiographical explanation of the concept of the Hundred Years' War and then proceeds in five chapters to survey the kingdoms of France and England. In these chapters he discusses the dominions, rulers, armies, society, and culture of both realms during the period of their solidification into national monarchies." (Library J) Bibliography.

Economist 227:iv Ap 27 '68 210w

"Throughout the book the narrative is well complemented by numerous excellent illustrations depicting all levels of late medieval society. However, this book is marred by two faults, one minor and one major. First, it suffers from an imbalance of emphasis. The 14th Century for the most part is adequately covered, while the 15th Century is in comparison greatly slighted. . . . Unfortunately the book's second defect concerns scholarship. Throughout . . . appear passages which have been borrowed from at least two historical monographs without proper bibliographical citations. . . . The blame for this negligence lies not only on the author but on his editors as well. . . . Written for the informed public, but because of the book's defects should be purchased with caution." K. G. Madison

Library J 93:1136 Mr 15 '68 430w

"[One of the best books] that I have found on historical themes, both for text and exceptionally fine illustrations. . . . The text by K. Fowler is learned and lively, the illustrations by W. Swaan, E. Smith, and others unusually beautiful. This is wholly appropriate for, after all, what we are witnessing is a return to the late medieval book, which was designed for the eye as well as the mind." H. H. Plumb

Sat R 50:36 N 25 '67 50w

"The choice of the illustrations has in general been very judiciously made and they will provide instruction ■ well ■ pleasure. Anachronisms have been avoided, and the whole range of the pictures adequately reflects the social and artistic life of England, France and Burgundy during the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. Dr. Fowler's long essay is admirably contrived to answer some of the inquiries which will properly be stimulated by the plates. . . . [The author] is particularly interested in—and interesting on—the concept of chivalry and on the court patronage of the arts. It must be confessed, however that on these and other subjects he has little new to add to what is already known. . . . [His] work is based upon wide reading, and if the absence of footnotes indicating his authorities may be adjudged a weakness, his bibliographies provide an admirable guide to the secondary literature."

■ TLS p313 Mr 28 '68 320w

FOWLER, WILLIAM A. Nuclear astrophysics. (Jayne lectures, 1965) 109p il $3 Am. philosophical soc.

523.01 Astrophysics 67-18204

This volume "is concerned with the generation of energy and the synthesis of the chemical elements through nuclear processes in stars, supernovae, and the recently discovered quasars. . . . [The professor of physics] of the California Institute of Technology provides a . . . non-mathematical account of the principles of nuclear physics involved in the synthesis of the elements." (Publisher's note)

"Based on a series of popular lectures given in 1965, but much of the material has been updated to early 1967. . . . Fowler is without question the world authority on much of the material. His expertise and wit make the book very enjoyable and informative reading. Unfortunately very few references are given, so while the book will whet an appetite, it offers nothing further to satisfy it. The first three chapters are not unique, in that much of that material is available in other popular astronomy books. Chapter IV, however, does offer a readable summary of many of the exciting ideas engendered by the discovery of the quasars."

Choice 5:76 Mr '68 220w

"In this slender masterpiece . . . Fowler ranges over a wide variety of fascinating topics that include element synthesis in the proto-universe and in the stars, age dating of the universe by nuclear clocks, supermassive stars, and the enigmatic nature of quasars. The presentation is extremely lucid, following in the grand tradition of Eddington, Jeans, and Hoyle. Characterized by vivid and non-mathematical description, this volume will appeal thoroughly to the layman. By the perspective that it affords and by the statement of a personal philosophy that it represents, it will appeal to the specialist in astrophysics as well." Icko Iben

Science 158:249 O 13 '67 360w

FOWLIE, WALLACE. Climate of violence; the French literary tradition from Baudelaire to the present. 274p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

840.9 French literature—History and criticism 67-22399

This "consideration of one hundred years of French literary expression . . . [is limited] to the origins and expression of violence in specific authors." (Introd) The author, a professor of French literature at Duke University, analyzes this theme in the work of Baudelaire, Lautréamont, Rimbaud, Mallarmé, Valéry, Saint-John Perse, Proust, Gide, Claudel, Apollinaire, Jacob, Mauriac, Sartre, Ionesco, Genet and Le Clézio. index.

"If the reader sometimes questions the usefulness of 'violence' as the proper term for something like 'tension,' he nevertheless must acknowledge the precision and illumination with which Professor Fowlie presents writers, their literary milieu, and major works. Of interest to both informed laymen and students of French literature, this distinguished book belongs in academic and large public libraries." J. R. Willingham

Library J 92:3643 O 15 '67 110w

N Y Times Bk R p26 Mr 17 '68 270w

"The creative work is seen [by the author] as an attempt to comprehend and explain violence in order to achieve a measure of victory over the varieties of harassment and anguish that induce it. Mr. Fowlie's thesis works logically up to the most current manifestations of violence such as we so readily find in the Theater of the Absurd and in the 'new novel.' [This] is a refreshingly original approach to modern literature that is valuable and enriching."

Va Q R 44:xxvii winter '68 120w

FOX, ANNETTE B., jt. auth. NATO and the range of American choice. See Fox, W. T. R.

FOX, DANIEL M. The discovery of abundance; Simon N. Patten and the transformation of social theory; pub. for the Am. hist. association. 259p $9 Cornell univ. press

330.1 Patten, Simon Nelson. Wealth. Social problems 67-22192

A study of the life, theories and influence of "a pioneer American economist [who died in 1922]. . . . Patten recognized that an economy based on abundance would require new social, aesthetic, moral, and religious values and control of destructive desires. Fox traces the changes in his thinking in each of these areas. . . . [Patten also] attempted to explore not only the economic, but the psychological, biological, sociological and moral problems [of the era of abundance] as well. Fox examines each of these areas of Patten's thought." (Ann Am Acad) Bibliography. Index.

"This eminently readable book won the 1965 Beveridge Award of the American Historical Association. It is a carefully documented account of the development of 'a new concept or frame of reference for perceiving the social and economic activities of Western man: there is, or soon will be, enough material wealth to provide every individual with the requisites for survival.' . . . The bulk of this book is a lucid exposition of the torturous path which Patten's mind took as he explored first one implication and then another of the transition to abundance. . . . A final chapter touches on the work of many thinkers who, since Patten and often without his influence, have discovered the paradox of continuing want in an era of potential abundance. . . . This is an important contribution to the history of social thought." K. E. Burnham

FOX, D. M.—Continued

Ann Am Acad 378:199 J1 '68 750w

"The bulk of the book is a study of Patten's thought and the social context out of which his work grew. As such, it is an important contribution to American intellectual history. The treatment of the development of the concept of abundance is more sketchy than definitive. The problem is that Patten, as Fox admits, 'was a forebear, not a source, of present-day thought about the problems of economic abundance.' This caveat notwithstanding, the book . . . is a must for all college libraries."

Choice 5:862 S '68 200w

"In two respects, Fox's study leaves something to be desired. First, it summarizes perhaps too fully, the content of Patten's books, which, as Fox himself says, used 'tortured and illogical arguments' and were 'fraught with contradictions and ambiguities.' Second it fails to examine the personality of an extremely curious and erratic man. . . . But the book is concerned primarily with Patten's impact on American social theory, and the author handles this theme with judgment and insight. . . . The introduction and the epilogue, which place Patten's thought in a broad intellectual context, are perhaps the best passages in the book." D. M. Potter

J Am Hist 55:160 Je '68 650w

FOX, LARRY. Little men in sports. 244p il $4.75; lib bdg $4.36 Norton

920 Athletes—Juvenile literature 68-16567

Biographies of twenty-one twentieth century athletes "who succeeded in different sports despite the disadvantages of stature. . . . Grades six to nine." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 28:375 D 1 '68 70w

"The sports figures range from Yale's footballer Albie Booth through tennis' Bobby Riggs and skiing's Bud Werner to track's Gerry Lindgren and diving's Sammy Lee. The athletes are deserving of attention, and the information on [many of the] biographies is not readily available in other sources."

Library J 93:2130 My 15 '68 70w

FOX, LILLA M. Instruments of popular music; a history of musical instruments; with drawings by the author. 112p $3.95 Roy pubs.

781.9 Musical instruments—Juvenile literature 68-13294

"This history of musical instruments concerns those played by the people, and not in orchestras, bands, or the churches. . . . In tracing the contributions of these instruments to their times, Mrs. Fox shows how each was heard and played in everyday life. The sections of the book are devoted to individual groups: the viol and violin families; the piano; the harp; whistle pipes and recorders; flutes; reed pipes; bagpipes; the banjo; the free reed instruments; drums and percussion, and folk instruments." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grades five to nine." (Library J)

"This book will be a useful addition to music collections because it brings together a wealth of historical information about many less well-known and seldom featured instruments . . . along with the usual ones covered in other books. While much of the text will be of interest to musically inclined children, many of the English oriented literary and historical allusions will probably be unfamiliar. A generous number of line drawings aid in visualizing both the appearance of the instruments and the manner of performing upon them." M. A. Wentroth

Library J 93:2737 J1 '68 80w

"The name Lilla M. Fox does not immediately ring a bell in the sphere of musical instruments, yet [this book] at once inspires confidence in her grasp of the subject. After the innumerable guides to the orchestra that appear each year, it is refreshing, in the first place, to find the subject tackled from the viewpoint of amateur rather than professional music-making. . . . In each case Mrs. Fox describes the basic character and mechanism of the instrument, yet instead of boring her (teenage) readers with minute technical details about compass and timbre, she enlivens the text with apt sociological comment on the kinds of people who blew, scraped or banged out their music, and why. Her own black-and-white drawings are both factually and imaginatively enlightening, and the index is a model of clarity."

TLS p1095 N 24 '66 220w

FOX, WILLIAM T. R. NATO and the range of American choice [by] William T. R. Fox [and] Annette B. Fox. 352p $7.95 Columbia univ. press

355.03 North Atlantic Treaty Organization. U.S.—Military policy. U.S.—Foreign relations 67-11560

"This is a book about the United States government in NATO and not about NATO itself. . . . [It is] more a study of the policy process than an evaluation of past policies or a prescription for future United States action." (Pref) Indexes of authors and of subjects.

"This book is the latest in [this] outstanding series. . . . It can be distinguished from the plethora of recent volumes on the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) in both its orientation and its scholarly objectivity. . . . While clearly identifying with their subject, the authors are nonetheless clinical in their analysis and dispassionate in their diagnosis. . . . The Foxes have succumbed, less than other NATO scholars, to an implicit optimism concerning the organization's future role. . . . History will record whether this incisive study by two outstanding scholars is to be valued as a prescriptive landmark for a revitalized NATO or as a comprehensive and definitive obituary of United States relations with the Atlantic organization." M. B. Travis

Ann Am Acad 376:177 Mr '68 500w

"Both distinguished professors of international relations, the Foxes have written a scholarly volume. . . . It documents NATO's confrontation of the problems of coalition defense planning through an intensive examination of the primary materials and academic literature. Especially useful for graduate students and upperclassmen specializing in American defense policy and international politics, the book analyzes effectively the organizational problem of achieving a balance in consultation and participation in an alliance containing a dominant member. It distinguishes the various U.S. roles—military, economic, political—assigned to NATO, and discusses the key political and strategic issues—nuclear control, flexible response, MLF French policy—of NATO's second decade. Well written, well documented."

Choice 4:750 S '67 190w

FRADY, MARSHALL. Wallace. 246p $5.95 World pub.

B or 92 Wallace, George Corley 68-31468

A former Newsweek correspondent from Atlanta has written a personal close-up of the man and politician George Wallace describing the psychological and moral climate of the South that shaped him, his rise to power as Governor of Alabama, his entrance into the national scene as a presidential candidate and his future plans.

"As he barnstorms throughout the country, Presidential candidate George Wallace, former pugilist, circuit court judge, and ex-governor of Alabama, has little to lose and much to gain; therefore, many of his statements and acts are recklessly controversial. . . . [Frady] has taken advantage of this situation and seemingly repeated everything derogatory in Wallace's inflammatory campaign. In reality this book is a warning message to Americans to beware of demagogues. . . . Unfortunately, Mr. Frady is guilty of the same lack of objectivity in his study of Wallace that he attributes to his subject. His undocumented political biography is therefore not recommended as a sound library purchase." W. C. Kiessel

Library J 93:3114 S 15 '68 130w

"Frady, a young Southern journalist, has established new standards in political biography by ignoring stylistic traditions and instead seeking the essence and the spirit of this unique and terrifying political figure through novelistic techniques. . . . [He] omits aspects of Wallace that would figure prominently in the conventional, definitive biography. . . . It is a happy decision. Frady's focus is always on Wallace, viewed by him, as explained in his foreword, as part Willie Stark and part Flem Snopes. If Frady's style, then, is often derivative of both Warren and Faulkner, it is intentional. . . . Frady's Wallace is a hollow man without intellectual underpinnings, without material possessions, without genuine interest in the substance of the issues that have propelled him to power. . . . Yet, Frady at no point underestimates this strange and terrifying man and his bond with the people of America." R. D. Novak

New Repub 159:33 O 12 '68 1750w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Hardwick

N Y Rev of Books 11:3 N 7 '68 2350w

"[The author] has a fine ear for dialogue—monologue mostly, in Mr. Wallace's case—and he lets his man tell it in his own words. . . . Mr. Frady has painstakingly documented his harsh judgments and—amazingly enough—obtained scores of wonderfully quotable interviews, attributed to Wallace intimates or to Mr. Wallace himself, to buttress what he calls 'this generally grim story.' His lurid conclusions about 'the methodical, relentless, and inexorable progression of a political Snopes, with dauntless, limitless, and almost innocent rapacity' are supported in most instances by lurid fact. . . . Mr. Frady's incarnation of the candidate as an insecure, anxious, almost wholly fixated human being who has given over his life, his family and his whole being to his own peculiarly personal politics, is the most revealing look we have had at this man who symbolizes, or catalyzes, an important and dismaying political, social and cultural phenomenon of our times." B. A. Franklin

N Y Times Bk R p3 O 6 '68 1250w

Reviewed by Howard Junker

Newsweek 72:84 Ag 12 '68 1000w

"At the outset Frady commits the grave offense of romanticizing racism and hate. In a novel this might pass; in a biography of the nation's most effective racist it does not. . . . Most gravely, Frady—blinded or dazzled or both by his subject—presents Wallace as a democratic hero. . . . How, after churning out all this bunk, Frady can have produced a book worth reading I don't know, but he has. . . . Frady points out that Wallace built new schools, roads, nursing homes, and clinics, and initiated a free-textbook policy. But he accords only a single sentence to Wallace's reactionary tax laws. . . . Frady's work should convince his readers that Wallace has discovered and is hollowing out a great darkness within the American possibility. Democratic, optimistic, Christian, we have always assumed we could not do anything like what the Germans did to the Jews—it's just not in us. Wallace shows us that it is." Ronnie Dugger

Sat R 51:26 O 5 '68 2900w

FRAME, JANET. The pocket mirror; poems. 121p $4.95 Braziller

821

67-18210

In her first book of poetry, the New Zealand author of Scented Gardens for the Blind (BRD 1964) is concerned with "an insistence on the strangeness of the familiar, the influence of the primordial past, [and] the ephemerality of the world." (Choice)

"Mostly written as a change of pace during composition of the [author's] novels, the . . . poems constitute a fascinating personalization of character, situation and mood found in Frame's fiction. At the same time, it is unfortunate that this important source of interest occasionally produces, in neo-gothic poems about family doom for example, a kind of melodrama of the self which the fiction is usually able to transcend. Recommended for British Commonwealth and college poetry collections."

Choice 5:48 Mr '68 150w

"Ingenious if occasionally strained metaphors, masterfully varied verse forms, and an extravagant richness of language (sometimes reminiscent of Hopkins) coalesce in an impressively finished body of distinguished verse. Probably of wide appeal among readers of poetry, the volume is highly recommended for public and academic collections." J. R. Willingham

Library J 92:1938 My 15 '67 140w

"[These poems] abound in neat, topographical observations, rendered sensitively and often given a sophisticated twist. [Frame] writes easily about the flora and fauna of her New Zealand landscape, with an occasional more interesting note of reservation and disquiet. . . . But the ease quickly turns into facility and garrulousness, leaving a finished, but hollow, quality in her diction."

TLS p155 F 15 '68 90w

FRANCE, Germany and the Western alliance; a study of elite attitudes on European integration and world politics [by] Karl W. Deutsch [and others]. 324p $6.95; college ed pa $2.95 Scribner

320.9 World politics—1945- . Europe—Politics—1945- 67-10454

This "is a compilation of interviews made in 1964 with 147 French and 173 West German respondents from such elite categories as politics, the military, intellectuals, and leaders of the mass media, the civil service, business, labor, and religion. They were asked their thoughts on domestic and foreign policy, arms control and disarmament, and European integration." (Library J) Index.

"By and large, the entire project brings powerful social science research instruments to bear on data collection concerning particular policy trends. . . . As the authors repeatedly emphasize, attitude is only one component in elite behavior, which, in turn, may play a quite variegated role in policy outcomes. . . . Nonetheless, the study does provide valuable information about the current state of elite opinion in France and the Federal Republic, and about crucial trends in European structural integration. More significantly perhaps, it develops valuable tools for elite and integration analysis, while whetting the appetite for more extensive theoretically oriented work of this nature."

Am Pol Sci R 62:240 Mr '68 1000w

"The authors' thesis, that the study and analysis of the thinking of élites will reveal clues to future policies, is not fully proven. Nevertheless, this is a significant contribution to the growing number of studies of élite opinions."

Choice 4:1176 D '67 160w

"Reminiscent of the well-financed but essentially pointless 'count 'em' studies that C. Wright Mills used to rant against, this work is long on title but modest in its results. . . . Somewhat outdated by the intervening years, the findings reveal that the Germans are indifferent to nuclear weapons and are softening their opposition to the German Democratic Republic and the Oder-Neisse boundary." L. R. Birns

Library J 92:1630 Ap 15 '67 90w

FRANCHÈRE, GABRIEL. Adventure at Astoria, 1810-1814; tr. and ed. by Hoyt C. Franchère. (Okla. Univ. The Am. exploration and travel ser.) 190p pl $5.95 Univ. of Okla. press

917.95 Astoria, Oregon. Fur trade, Oregon—History. Oregon—Description and travel

67-15583

A native of Montreal gives an account of his experiences and travels in helping to establish a fur-trading post along the lower Columbia River in what is today Oregon. "I have made a new translation of the French edition published at Montreal in 1820. I have, moreover, attempted a close collation of all three texts: the original manuscript [of 1819], . . . the Bibaud edition [of 1820], and the Huntington translation [of 1854]. My annotations will . . . [attempt to show] how vast a difference exists between Franchère's original composition and the 1854 translation." (Editor's introd) Index.

"Besides being a historically significant account of the Oregon Country, the book has value for its descriptions of Hawaii, various Indian tribes, northwestern forts, and several aspects of the War of 1812 occurring in the Pacific and Canada." B. F. Gilbert

Am Hist R 73:1635 Je '68 400w

"An indispensable account of the Astoria enterprise. . . . This latest edition of Franchère's narrative is, however, the fifth to be published and sheds scant new light on major matters. . . . [The editor, a great-grandson of the author] has, nonetheless, made a contribution by laying the French publication side by side with the several English editions; and thus he indicates, in a highly readable translation, the extent to which his ancestor's rendition has been altered." G. T. Morgan

J Am Hist 54:884 Mr '68 260w

"[This] translation is excellent. Gabriel Franchère was aware from the first of John Jacob Astor's plans to monopolize the fur trade of the Pacific Coast. He relates his experiences on the ship 'Tonquin' as she sailed from New York around South America to the mouth of the Columbia River by way of Hawaii. His descriptions of the North West Company's beginning years and that of the Columbia River region, and his overland journey back to Montreal make pleasant reading. This is useful source material for students of that period and area. For both public and college libraries." W. S. Wallace

FRANCHÈRE, GABRIEL—Continued

Library J 92:3416 O 1 '67 130w

FRANCIS, DICK. Blood sport. 241p $4.95 Harper

68-11821

Gene Hawkins, of British Intelligence, "became involved in a hunt for one of the world's great thoroughbred stallions, a horse named Chrysalis, which had evidently been hi-jacked somewhere between Kennedy Airport and Lexington, Kentucky, stud farm. Gene's involvement began in the waters of a lock in the Thames and continued across the ocean to America, as far as the dude ranches of the West and Las Vegas and Jackson Hole. And as he hunted the great stallion and two other celebrated stallions which had vanished as well, he discovered a good deal about himself, and something about a lovely seventeen-year-old girl who kept crossing his path." (Publisher's note)

Best Sell 27:457 Mr 1 '68 90w

"[The author's latest] blend of good horses and bad people isn't quite up to the tension level of Nerve [BRD 1964] or For Kicks [BRD 1965], but it is certainly worth your time and money. . . . The trail is dotted with those little details of breeding, racing and horsemanship that make this author's books such an educational pleasure." Dick Adler

Book World p14 F 25 '68 100w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 93:575 F 1 '68 80w

"Francis, one of the strongest suspense novelists to emerge in the 1960's, was once a jockey; and it is fascinating to see how many completely fresh and unexpected plots he can concoct about horses. . . . This is, like all of Francis's work, the thriller in excelsis, beautifully plotted and substantially characterized. There's a splendid quality of absolute professionalism here: in the portrait of an agent at work; and in Mr. Francis's skills as a novelist." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p14 Mr 16 '68 220w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:43 Mr 30 '68 30w

"[The author] is good, in fact among the best, and this new book rivals his last and excellent Flying Finish [BRD 1967]." TLS p1092 N 16 '67 100w

FRANCIS, ROBERT. The satirical rogue on poetry. 123p $5 Univ. of Mass. press

814 Poetry 68-13940

Thoughts on poets, poetry and publishing by the author of Come Out into the Sun; Poems New and Selected (BRD 1966). Some of these articles have previously appeared in The Massachusetts Review and The Virginia Quarterly Review.

"The best 'poet on poets' bit to appear. . . . Readers will not look at poetry and publishing again with the same eyes. Academically, the Rogue is required Francis."

Choice 5:951 O '68 40w

"Academic libraries will want this book, which is tailor made for poetry lovers and neophyte versifiers." B. W. Fuson

Library J 93:4560 D 1 '68 110w

"This collection of brief essays, which are more like entries from a Thoreauvian or Emersonian journal than formal essays, will probably not gain the attention it deserves. . . . But it is a fine and delightful book, as independent as its author, as wise, as eccentric. It approaches its topic from dozens of angles. It punctures balloons and inflated reputations with gusto and truly satirical wit. It is nineteenth century in the best possible sense, for it has an Emersonian sweep coupled with the acid sharpness of the best of Poe's critical pieces. And it is thoroughly modern as well, for Francis is never out of touch even as he is his own man. The book is a pleasure and a thoroughly appropriate pendant to the body of Francis's poems."

Va Q R 44:cliii autumn '68 120w

FRANCIS, W. NELSON, jr. auth. Computational analysis of present-day American English. See Kučera, H.

FRANCK, FREDERICK. Exploding church: from Catholicism to catholicism. 309p $6.50 Delacorte press

282 Catholic Church

68-14965

"The central portion of Mr. Franck's book is his report on answers of 37 avant garde Dutch Catholics (his own term for them) to questions on sensitive or controversial issues in contemporary religious thought. Included too are reactions of 19 non-Dutch respondents to the same questions and to the Dutch replies, as well as considerable autobiographical matter and personal reflection. Interpolated here and there for contrast are portions of papal and curial pronouncements on the same topics. The questions . . . [cover] among many other subjects: the papacy, sex and marriage, dogma and creed, the sacraments, ecumenism and Charles Davis. Last of all, Mr. Franck asks his respondents: 'Why do you stay in?' (America) Index."

"It is not clear what the author intends to achieve. He disavows any claim to a sociologically valid study yet on the next page argues as if his work enjoyed some such significance. He insists that neither he nor his respondents wish to shock, yet he deals chiefly with views that fail to shock only because frequent repetition has dulled their impact. . . . He seems to offer the book primarily as a spiritual voyage, yet remains at the end of it not quite at a recognizable destination. . . . He is naively enthusiastic for the 'good guys' and indignant at the 'bad guys,' freely employing loaded words to describe them. . . . The basic flaw, however, is one of methodology. By his criteria for selecting his respondents, the author ruled out all possibility of a significant survey of opinion: only those who belonged without possibility of challenge to the avant-garde were interviewed; thus it is neither strange nor interesting if they express avant-garde views." R. W. Crooker

America 119:82 Ag 3 '68 380w

Christian Century 85:821 Je 19 '68 60w

"[The respondent's] unanimous rejection of anonymity, in the author's opinion, may well be the most significant result of the survey. . . . There is a relativizing, myth-breaking process evidenced, rather than black and white rejection or acceptance. This is revealed in answers concerning the Creed, for example. Most still saw value in it, but there is a clear rejection of verbal fundamentalism. . . . The book does not pretend to reveal how widespread the opinions and attitudes expressed actually are, in terms of numbers and percentages. This is not its function. It does describe the shape of an emerging mentality and cannot easily be dismissed." Mary Daly

Commonweal 89:222 N 8 '68 700w

"The author points out in his preface that theology is 'no longer the preserve of a small number of specialists who erect abstruse systems,' but has become the 'daily concern of all those men and women who grope for firm ground under their feet.' As one of this number, Franck, an artist and writer, was amazed by the avant-garde spirit he encountered at the Second Vatican Council. . . . The material gathered on what he calls 'his own spiritual quest' is presented in such a way as to convey to the reader Mr. Franck's sense of hope, excitement and adventure with the new concept of the Church which he finds emerging."

Critic 27:76 Ag '68 170w

"In a profound sense [this] is a useful book. More than any other single existing book it documents the range of beliefs and attitudes that now coexist within Roman Catholicism. . . . For a basis of comparison Franck has included statements from popes and councils. By the standards enunciated in these statements many of the views in this book must be judged heretical and heterodox. But the pressure of this book is to show that for many Catholics—though still a minority—such judgments are themselves meaningless, relics of the past, that for these Catholics 'there are no longer insiders and outsiders. The community opens up.'" James Finn

N Y Times Bk R p26 S 1 '68 550w

Reviewed by P. K. Cuneo

Sat R 51:44 O 26 '68 400w

FRANCO, JEAN. The modern culture of Latin America: society and the artist. 339p pl $7.50 Praeger

918 Latin America—Civilization. Latin American literature 67-24680

This is a survey of social and cultural movements in Latin America since 1888. "While focusing primarily upon the writer, Dr. Franco, lecturer in Spanish and Latin American literature at the University of London [attempts to indicate] the substance and direction of modernism, Arielism and criollismo, and the period of introspection following World War I. . . . It is her thesis that the history of the arts in Latin America has not been a continuous development, as in Europe, but a series of 'fresh starts.' At the same time, the Latin American artist has, during the period under consideration, shown a continuous and abiding preoccupation with love for his fellow man [which] . . . has made his contribution to modern culture unique." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:469 Je '68 190w

"Well-documented and meticulously written, this interesting and scholarly work is enthusiastically recommended for college, university and larger public libraries, although the price does seem unnecessarily high." R. D. Harlan
Library J 92:3627 O 15 '67 160w

"There is no book in English which provides so expertly comprehensive a review of Latin American literature over the past 150 years as this one. [Mrs. Franco] covers so much ground that she has little time left for profound analysis. . . . And yet [she] does come up with many useful insights, and her classification of themes is always sound. . . . She is excellent particularly on the Latin American writer's difficult quest for some sort of identity distinct from his European heritage. . . . On politics Mrs. Franco is less assured. . . . [She] could have said more about the theatre. . . . [The book] tells us very little indeed about painting . . . nothing at all about music . . . [or] sculpture . . . and virtually nothing about architecture. . . . Yet despite these shortcomings . . . [it] is certainly essential reading for anyone interested in or studying the subject."

TLS p1192 D 7 '67 600w

FRANK, HARRY THOMAS. The Bible through the ages [by] Harry Thomas Frank, Charles William Swain [and] Courtlandt Canby, assisted by Michael Harwood. 246p il col il col maps $15 World pub.

220 Bible—History 67-29087

An historical consideration of the Bible—"its making, its meaning, its creative influence in western civilization." (Publisher's note) Index of names.

"The chief attraction of this sumptuously produced book is the illustrations—some 175 in all, many of them in handsome color—and the maps. The text is something else again. It is largely conventional, calculated to inspire and not to offend anyone, Catholic, Jew, or Protestant. The volume seems to have been worked up for gift giving. . . . In general, while the attitude toward the Jewish aspects of the main themes of the book is sympathetic, the text betrays a lamentable lack of real knowledge of the Bible according to the Jews from the time that the Second Temple and Judean sovereignty were destroyed to the present day."

Choice 5:208 Ap '68 130w

"The distinguished authors have collaborated in producing . . . a comprehensive work—well organized, well written, and beautifully illustrated. It is strongest in its account of the medieval and reformation periods, but very sketchy for the modern period. Since it is written for the layman rather than for the specialist, it seems to this reviewer that the interest of such an audience would have been more fairly served if it could have been made clear that the particular critical views of origins presented could, and at many points do, actually have room for considerable disagreement. Instead, the uninformed reader will have no way of distinguishing between what is still being argued by the specialists and what has attained a wider acceptance. Despite this weakness, which would apply more particularly to the first half of the book, it is a worthwhile addition to any general collection." R. V. Ritter
Library J 92:4160 N 15 '67 230w

FRANK, JEFFREY. The creep. 201p $4.50 Farrar, Straus

68-10645

Bartholomew, age 25, comes from the mid-west to a city that seems to be New York. More than anything he wants "to meet a girl he will love and who may love him. He is constantly going places, trying to stop from being alone. A store-front 'get-together'; treks through museums; an eager visit to Margo, prostitute ordinaire; a pay-as-you-come party—every tortuous attempt fails. Bartholomew simply becomes lonelier. Although he lives in a city of millions, he eventually feels he is recognized everywhere, and recognized as The Creep." (Publisher's note)

"Frank's novel is an accomplished fable of the eternal loser, American style. If Bartholomew's 100 per cent pie-in-the-eye record of rejection is sometimes a bit heavy and unbelievable . . . the story is agreeably lightened by first-rate and funny descriptions of Bartholomew and his semi-surrealistic city." Elisabeth Stevens

Book World p16 F 11 '68 300w

Choice 5:951 O '68 120w

Reviewed by Irving Howe

Harper 236:83 My '68 1000w

"In this first novel Jeffrey Frank shows a nice attention to mood and background. The impression the reader gets of the horror of people's eating habits in a cafeteria and the false geniality of the pimp are typical of what this author can do with words. A clever psychological exploration of an odd type, done in muted tones which may limit the appeal of the novel." John Carroll

Library J 92:4434 D 1 '67 160w

Reviewed by Carol Tefft

Library J 93:894 F 15 '68 80w [YA]

Reviewed by Janice Elliott

New Statesman 76:206 Ag 16 '68 270w

"[This] novel is, in the worst sense of the term, Kafkaesque: claustrophobic, vertical, paranoid, oppressive. For every ounce of compassion there is a pound of self-pity. Passages of able description involving metropolitan atmosphere and mood infrequently redeem the flat, dull prose, which is additionally burdened with shaky grammar. And the filaments of sick humor, which say nothing new about New York, do not go beyond or even add to the stuff of Nathanael West or Bruce Jay Friedman." E. M. Potoker

Sat R 51:31 Ja 6 '68 550w

TLS p1058 S 19 '68 260w

Va Q R 44:lvi spring '68 100w

FRANK, JEROME D. Sanity and survival; psychological aspects of war and peace. 330p $5.95; pa $1.95 Random house

172 War, Peace, Aggressiveness (Psychology) 67-22657

The author of Persuasion and Healing (BRD 1962) explores the "sources of human aggression. He analyzes what factors turn an international crisis into war and what psychological forces promote deadly escalation. Looking to the future, Dr. Frank examines the psychology of deterrence, disarmament, and the new possibilities for world community through mass transportation, electronic global communications and international scientific projects." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The trouble is not people's motivation, but that international order—or, better, anarchy—makes war possible. Because of this, deterrence is an indispensable instrument of peace. Frank quite correctly points out that deterrence, always a precarious device, is not becoming more reliable although wars are becoming more destructive. But to discard deterrence because of its limitations—as he proposes—is as reasonable as it would be to discard one's physician because he safeguards one's life but precariously, and temporarily."

For the most part Frank ignores the political circumstances he acknowledges in passing. His book is a curious compound of rational summaries of experiments, of clichés and of nonsense; he urges that the U.S. 'devote resources now squandered on arms to hasten industrial and political developments,' thus to defeat Russia by psychological pressure. I find it hard to take this belief in the omnipotence of psychology as anything but a delusion."

Ernest van den Haag

Book World p4 F 18 '68 800w

FRANK, J. D.—Continued

"I came to this book with more than the usual skepticism, partly because of its subtitle . . . which led me to believe that a condescending yahoo review of it I had seen (by some smug psychoanalyst) might not be far off the mark. I expected to find an elaborately developed, academically naive, psychological-analogy interpretation of the causes of war, followed by some unworldly prescription for living happily ever after. It is nothing of the sort. It is a constructive contribution to the literature of peace. Dr. Frank, a distinguished Johns Hopkins psychiatrist . . . does indeed sound wishfully naive in his urging of large-scale international experimentation in aggressive non-violence, but it is clear in context that he has a realistic sense of proportion about such proposals." L. C. Lewin

Commonweal 88:148 Ap 19 '68 1100w

"Dr. Frank, widely published practising psychiatrist . . . has written a readable book which forces the reader to correlate and re-think a whole range of life-death issues in this post-atomic world. . . . 'The Image of the Enemy' [is] a chapter in which Dr. Frank is at his professional best. . . . In the 12th chapter he explores conflict without violence—making an impressive, if not finally convincing case for the efficacy of nonviolent survival if only man's 'moral sense' can control his drive to power. . . . Definitely recommended for public and academic libraries." B. W. Fuson

Library J 92:4513 D 15 '67 230w

Reviewed by Edmund Leach

N Y Rev of Books 11:24 O 10 '68 800w

"The major merit of this book resides in its impressive presentation of a great variety of research studies on human aggression and destructiveness. . . . I tend to doubt whether many of the psychological data which are discussed here have as much relevance to the conduct of international affairs as Frank evidently believes. . . . One may think that many of the Utopian solutions advanced here are impracticable and irrelevant to present international conditions. And he may yet feel strongly that without such Utopian proposals to shock us out of our quotidian complacencies and to alert us to the fact that the human race has for the first time acquired the means of its own destruction, we are surely doomed. [His is] a most necessary and welcome voice." Lewis Coser

N Y Times Bk R p6 Mr 3 '68 800w

FRANKE, HERBERT W., jt. auth. Luminous darkness. See Bögli, A.

FRANKE, WOLFGANG. China and the West; tr. by R. A. Wilson. 165p $5.95 Univ. of S.C. press

327.51 China—Foreign relations 67-27177
The author "traces the meeting of the East and the West, the intellectual contacts made in the 17th Century and 18th Century, the colonial invasion of China and the Chinese response to it, and the status of Chinese studies in the West." (Library J) Bibliography. Originally published in German under the title China und das Abendland.

Choice 5:537 Je '68 160w

Reviewed by D. J. Enright

Encounter 30:66 J1 '68 750w

"Professor Franke of the University of Hamburg, who lived and taught in China for a number of years before 1950, has written this book to help the ordinary Western man understand the Chinese view of the West. Therefore, he does not pretend to be profound although he is obviously capable of a study of that kind. . . . The book is a good one in that it is well written, and it will be helpful in giving readers a much needed perspective on 'why the Chinese behave the way they do.' Recommended to public and school libraries with enthusiasm." Wen Chao Chen

Library J 93:1896 My 1 '68 140w

Reviewed by N. J. Gallo

Nation 206:613 My 6 '68 60w

Reviewed by Raymond Dawson

Pacific Affairs 41:267 summer '68 300w

"It comes almost as a shock to find the phrase 'Chinese cultural revolution' in a book written more than eight years ago. Professor Franke uses it of the period of acute intellectual revulsion against the Confucian tradition in China in the years after the First World War. . . . [He] is totally fair and culturally impartial, especially on the controversies surrounding the policy and personality of Matteo Ricci, the Jesuit priest who gained the confidence of the Chinese Court in the early seventeenth century, and on the nineteenth-century imperialism of the western powers. His strictures fall equally on the crude and cruel figures of history, whether they be German, British, French, American or Chinese, and yet he is also careful to show them as creatures of their time. If anyone remains puzzled by China's hostility, this book provides the best brief remedy."

TLS p136 F 8 '68 450w

FRANKFURTER, FELIX, jt. auth. Roosevelt and Frankfurter. See Roosevelt, F. D.

FRANKLIN, BENJAMIN. The papers of Benjamin Franklin; v 11, January 1, through December 31, 1764; Leonard W. Labaree, ed [and others]. 593p il $15 Yale univ. press

081 U.S.—History

(59-12697)

This volume "deals primarily with Franklin's political maneuvers in Pennsylvania to replace the proprietary government of the province with a royal charter." (Choice) For volumes one through ten see BRD 1960-1967.

"Like its predecessors, [this volume] provides the reader with unique insights into the age through the eyes of one of its leading actors and greatest geniuses."

Choice 5:256 Ap '68 50w

Reviewed by Brooke Hindle

J Am Hist 55:616 D '68 350w

"The first and most serious [controversy] covered by this volume came in consequence of Pontiac's Rebellion. . . . Franklin's own Narrative of the Late Massacres is here reprinted, together with numerous documents on both sides, and abundant footnotes. . . . As with every other volume of this series, we find numerous amusing bits which testify to Ben's universal genius. . . . [There is] vast detail on local politics, well elucidated in footnotes. And there is an interesting discussion of the Sugar Act of 1764 and the approaching Stamp Act. [The] volume concludes with an interesting letter from Ben to his brother Peter on music. The editors are very judicious annotators. They mention many recent monographs where the subjects of Franklin's writings may be pursued further." S. E. Morison

New Eng Q 41:443 S '68 850w

TLS p1261 N 7 '68 600w

FRANKLIN, R. W. The editing of Emily Dickinson; a reconsideration. 187p $7 Univ. of Wis. press

811 Dickinson, Emily

67-13558

In this bibliographical study illustrated by reproductions of manuscripts and transcripts, the author "has retraced the work of the nineteenth- and twentieth-century editors of the poems, discussing in [particular] Mabel Loomis Todd's and Thomas W. Higginson's preparation of the nineteenth-century volumes (1890, 1891, 1896). [From his] study of the first-line index to the poems prepared in 1891 by Mrs. Todd and his investigation of the Dickinson manuscripts and transcripts, especially those for the 1896 edition, he reevaluates the [Johnson] variorum edition [Emily Dickinson, Poems, BRD 1955]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Franklin's aim has been to 'add to the circumference' enclosing the 'center' established by Thomas Johnson in the variorum edition. His inspection . . . provides in his view 'fresh contributions . . . to our understanding of Emily Dickinson's poetry and how we should edit it.' The development of the study is neither more systematic nor exhaustive than his term 'circumference' suggests, and the conclusions are narrower than claimed. Nevertheless, the study is selectively valuable. Franklin's clarification of the various editorial intrusions . . . moves us a step closer to valuable discoveries: the exact packet arrangements at the time of the poet's death in 1886, behind which may lie a rationale in her selection and placing of individual poems; a truer understanding of her own copying procedures, from which will emerge further dates of composition; and, finally, the contours of her poetic development which those elusive dates will imply." David Porter

Am Lit 40:91 Mr '68 500w

"Franklin's book, acknowledging a debt and yet concluding by stating that Johnson's study stands in need of revision, undoubtedly will in turn add fuel to the growing flame of Dickinsonian ardor. It is well, therefore, that this book has been done with such thoroughness, and that it achieves a balance of the many relevant issues—the more technical problems of ink, handwriting, sewing holes, for example, as they relate to dating or the establishing of variant versions balanced against the less technical considerations such as the preparation of readers' editions. Nor has Franklin neglected to discuss in some depth editorial principles as they relate to this type of bibliographic research. Altogether an excellent study. Of greatest interest to larger college or university libraries, this book may also be welcomed by smaller ones specializing in the humanities and, of course, by dedicated Dickinsonian specialists everywhere."

Choice 4:1240 Ja '68 180w

"When Mr. Franklin is persuasive, his corrections stand as important adjustments in the variorum; when he is simply querulous—and often with an unfortunate supercilious tone—we are usually asked to consider a different set of conjectures no more certain than Mrs. Todd's or Mr. Johnson's. . . . A 'story' line of some fascination emerges in the history of the editing and the editors. But substantively as a contribution to its subject, the book might as appropriately have been two essays." C. R. Blake

New Eng Q 41:475 S '68 310w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Jennings

New Statesman 76:205 Ag 16 '68 200w

TLS p840 S 21 '67 190w

FRANKLYN, JULIAN. Heraldry; drawings by Alan Keith-Hill. 103p $8.50 Barnes, A.S.

929.6 Heraldry

68-14964

After "a brief history of heraldry—from the days of William the Conqueror to the present—[the author discusses] . . . the types and names of the various patterns . . . [and] describes the varied uses of heraldry both now and in past centuries." (Publisher's note) Index.

"This book, originally published in England in 1965 in smaller format and with less detailed drawings has been reproduced in large quarto for American study. There are shields in black and white and in color, and the color depictions are of considerable importance. The blazon of illustrations is complete and useful for students, genealogists, and artists. . . . This book, although it is a reference work, should be allowed out on loan, and is needed in public libraries." P. W. Filby

Library J 93:2847 Ag '68 70w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 51:69 N 16 '68 80w

FRANQUI, CARLOS. The twelve; tr. into English by Albert B. Teichner; introd. by Tana de Gámez. 190p $4.50 Stuart, L.

972.91 Cuba—History

68-10011

"On December 2, 1956, eighty-two men led by Fidel Castro landed in Oriente Province, Cuba, to launch a revolution against the . . . dictatorship of Fulgencio Batista. All but twelve were killed. This is the story of the twelve who survived—first-person narratives . . . recorded at war's end." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Ronald Steel

Book World p7 Ag 18 '68 100w

Reviewed by David Gallagher

N Y Rev of Books 10:41 My 23 '68 1100w

"This curious little book is made up of recorded conversations in which the speakers, all prominent veterans of the Cuban Revolution, talk about the early days of the 26th of July Movement. . . . The accounts (they are not interviews but free reminiscences) were taped shortly after Castro's victory, and they still have the glow of pure revolutionary ardor, along with humor and down-to-earth frankness about the actualities of underground and guerrilla warfare. . . . The book is quite free of propaganda because the speakers took it for granted that their cause and their actions needed no justification."

New Yorker 44:127 Je 1 '68 210w

FRASCA, JOHN. The mulberry tree. 184p $4.95 Prentice-Hall

364.15 Watson, Robert Lamar. Justice, Administration of 68-11943

"Notorious for its post-Civil War brutal law and vigilante justice, [Mulberry, named after its hanging tree] became in time a pleasant little place. However, in 1965 the town experienced a series of crimes with which the four-man police force apparently could not cope. On March 11, an armed robbery (for $900) occurred . . . and four days later young Robert Lamar Watson was arrested, subsequently tried, and sentenced to prison. Frasca, a reporter for the Tampa Tribune, . . . investigated the burglaries, and ultimately discovered that the police chief and his deputy were responsible for the thefts." (Library J)

"[The author] won the Pulitzer Prize for Reporting when he uncovered [this] miscarriage of justice. . . . He burrowed into all the details, became convinced that the imprisoned man was innocent, and then started his own investigation to find the real culprit. His newspaper articles roused the whole country. . . . This book is the completed story of the whole affair, and it is more than a mere whodunit (though it certainly is that, too), because it shows how judicial shortsightedness and abruptness can practically pre-determine a jury's verdict and how even good reliable people may be duped into swearing that an innocent man is guilty. . . . Frasca deserved the Pulitzer prize for his dogged research and probing." E. A. Dooley

Best Sell 28:50 My 1 '68 600w

"Though the writing is somewhat repetitious, this is an interesting portrait of injustice in a small town. . . . A real-life whodunit which has the additional appeal of injustice corrected." Valeria Gregory

Library J 93:1336 Mr 15 '68 130w [YA]

Reviewed by Elizabeth Thalman

Library J 93:1495 Ap 1 '68 140w

FRASER, BLAIR. The search for identity: Canada, 1945-1967. 325p $5.95 Doubleday

971.06 Canada—History. Canada—Politics and government 67-23823

This is the sixth volume in The Canadian History series, edited by Thomas Costain. The author who has been the Ottawa correspondent for Maclean's Magazine analyzes the men and events in "a political history of Canada from the end of World War II to the beginning of 1967. . . . In dealing with such things as the pipeline debate, baby-bonuses, the United Nations and NATO, separatism, the new flag, and the Musinger affair he suggests that Canadians possess a unique Canadian-ness." (Library J) Index.

Choice 5:862 S '68 110w

"If the reader expects to find in this book ■ simple straightforward statement concerning Canadian identity, he will be disappointed. . . . To be sure, there is understatement in what [the author] says about Canadians as Canadians, but this very understatement carries conviction. Mr. Fraser, in fact, succeeds in establishing what many have long thought—that while Canadians have close ties with Britain and the United States, they are neither Britishers nor Americans, but indisputably and distinctively themselves. Beyond this, he tells with admirable skill and clarity, but without footnotes, what has been happening in Canada during the last 20 years. Highly recommended for academic and public libraries." Peter Gellatly

Library J 92:3637 O 15 '67 180w

"The title of Blair Fraser's book is well chosen: the search for identity has ceased to be the Canadian parlor game and become the Canadian pre-occupation. [The author] is scrupulous, usually, about filling in the background, yet at times he lapses and assumes that the reader is familiar with his material. But the reader who honestly wants to know something about Canada could not do better than read this frankly journalistic account. It is never dull." Walter O'Hearn

N Y Times Bk R p34 F 4 '68 460w

FRASER, DOUGLAS, ed. Essays presented to Rudolf Wittkower on his sixty-fifth birthday; ed. by Douglas Fraser, Howard Hibbard & Milton J. Lewine. 2v 381;421p pl ea $15 N Y graphic; Phaidon

709 Wittkower, Rudolf. Art—History. Architecture—History 167-94223;67-942271

"These essays are designed to deal with subjects in each of the overlapping categories into which most of [Professor Wittkower's] published work falls: the migration and interpretation of symbols, problems of proportion and perspective, the iconographic interpretation of art, Italian Renaissance sculpture and architecture, Baroque art in all its manifestations, Palladio and Palladianism, and English architecture." (Pref to v 1) Volume one contains twenty-six essays discussing topics in architecture ranging from the palace of the kings of Assur to the Staclet House designed by Josef Hoffmann, completed in Brussels in 1911. In volume two, thirty-nine essays in the history of art cover topics from the Parthenon to the work of the French Baroque sculptor Pierre Puget. Bibliography of the writings of Rudolf Wittkower.

"The two volumes may be considered to form perhaps the most sumptuous Festschrift ever published. . . . [They are] proof of the great affection and devotion Wittkower enjoys among his colleagues, friends, and students as head of the Art History and Archaeology Department of Columbia University. . . . The Festschrift, indispensable for any specialized library in the field of archaeology and art history, may be, as a purely scholarly publication, of lesser importance for undergraduate libraries. Yet its acquisition is also warmly recommended for smaller libraries which can afford the publication—its price being relatively low in view of its rich content and its splendid presentation." Choice 5:40 Mr '68 90w

"Devotion to the ideas underlying works of art rather than their surface qualities gives these volumes a greater unity than the inevitably mixed choice of subjects, although in subject matter there are some useful groupings, especially in the volume on architecture: a batch of essays on St Peter's, Rome, one of which—by Ruth Rubinstein—has the rare merit of being amusingly written; another centered on the architecture of Palladio; a third on Piranesi, Chambers and the origins of Neo-classicism. . . . Allegorical portraits are discussed in a corresponding run of essays in the volume on 'art', although they are not grouped together. Here there is much variation in quality." Michael Kitson

New Statesman 74:403 S 29 '67 1800w

"Professor Wittkower is famous in this country chiefly for his Architectural Principles in the Age of Humanism. . . . Of the [contributors to these volumes] twenty-five are American (by birth or immigration), sixteen British, twelve Italian. . . . Among Renaissance contributions Professor E. H. Gombrich's deserves the palm. He has a wonderful knack of combining the specific with the general. . . . [However] Damie Stillman does not honour a teacher of such calibre by his paper on Piranesi and Robert Adam. . . . The paper by Mr. John Harris on the other hand is worthy of its recipient. It is both important and original." TLS p154 F 15 '68 950w

FRASER, G. S. Lawrence Durrell: a critical study; with a bibl. by Alan G. Thomas. 256p $5.95 Dutton

828 Durrell, Lawrence 67-20556

The author offers an "assessment of Durrell's work, from the early novels and The Black Book [BRD 1960] to The Alexandria Quartet [Justine, BRD 1957; Balthazar, BRD 1958; Mountolive, BRD 1959; and Clea, BRD 1960] and Tunc, [BRD 1963]; . . . of his correspondence with Henry Miller; and . . . of his poetry and plays." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The] articulate critic of the modern writer and his world, and a personal friend of Durrell, in this seminal study . . . intelligently calls Durrell 'a great writer of subjective romances, not a great novelist in the classical sense.' The reader finds, too, that Fraser's explanation of Durrell's poetry, including pertinent references to D. H. Lawrence, is illuminating. But while this is a most helpful guide to Durrell the artist, it contains several dubious points: the poetic scansion of the prose in The Black Book and the admittedly hastily written chapter on 'Tunc.' The bibliography will be a delight for collectors and students. Recommended for academic libraries and those public libraries where Durrell is 'well circulated.'" R. F. Cayton

Library J 93:4143 N 1 '68 150w

"Fraser's devotion to his subject is not without its comic side. The book begins with some innocuous but unilluminating personal reminiscences, including an embarrassing account of how Durrell once abused him for passing on conversations. . . . It concludes with a monumentally trivial bibliography. . . . Between these wobbling poles there is some solemn matter on the letters to Henry Miller, the Antrobus stories, and all the eking-out of an honourably dedicated literary career. . . . What is worse is the discussion of the novels, and the dismissal of the superior 'island' books, Prospero's Cell [BRD 1961], Bitter Lemons [BRD 1958] and Reflections on a Marine Venus [BRD 1961]. These volumes are not only much better than Tunc and The Alexandria Quartet; they illustrate exactly what is wrong with Durrell's fiction." Francis Hope

New Statesman 76:143 Ag 2 '68 1900w

FRASER, KATHLEEN. Stilts, somersaults, and headstands; game poems based on a painting by Peter Breughel. 37p col il $3.75 Atheneum pubs.

811

68-12236

These are the author's first children's poems to be published. She "has identified 37 games in the 16th-Century painting 'Children's Games' and has written a short poem about each. On one double-page spread following the title page is reproduced the whole of the vigorous, colorful canvas, while sections of it appear subsequently as panels with groups of poems. . . . Grades three to five." (Library J)

"[The author's] verses are uneven, with poems like 'Who Am I Going to Choose?' 'King of the Mountain' and 'Flying a Ribbon' leagues ahead of 'Balloon' and 'Dolls.' Names from the author's childhood are themselves marvelous evocations. . . . [Her] maiden entry into children's books is a success. Seldom have eye and ear been so happily and provocatively engaged." S. G. Lanes

Book World p12 My 26 '68 280w

Christian Science Monitor pB6 My 2 '68 70w

"Most of the verses are unrhymed and, while not distinctive, have an engaging and childlike candor reflecting the ebullience of the painting in their homely and literal details of such activities as playing piggyback, broom-balancing, and mud-pie making. The book provides a meaningful introduction to a charming early painting with which children can identify through games still popular after 400 years." Della Thomas

Library J 93:1798 Ap 15 '68 130w

"Alas, [these] poems aren't worth much, but children can ignore them and enjoy the pictures." C. H. Simonds

Nat R 20:1281 D 17 '68 30w

"The loosely formed, simple verses are accompanied by details from the painting, so that the young reader can see clearly just what is going on." Walter Gibson

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p44 My 5 '68 110w

Reviewed by Philip Morrison

Sci Am 219:138 D '68 70w

FRAYN, MICHAEL. A very private life. 132p $4.50 Viking

68-26503

The British journalist, author of The Tin Men, The Russian Interpreter (both in BRD 1966) and Against Entropy (BRD 1967) here presents "a fable of a girl named Uncumber, who is dissatisfied with her life in the far distant future among the privileged 'Insiders' who reside in sealed, controlled environments, their every want piped in from the outside. When Uncumber escapes and mingles with the 'Outsiders' who cater to these privileged, all her experiences are not joyous. During the time this story takes place, the 'Insiders' have elected to live forever instead of having children." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. A. Phillips

Best Sell 28:234 S 15 '68 750w

"[This novel] fits in between sci-fic and Further Adventures of Alice. Written in a bald, flat prose that offers a minimum of textural persuasion, it is . . . a tonic, clever story that would have been richer through being taller (e.g., by making Uncumber less of a disencumbered diagram). [But] it comes out of mental high spirits and will appeal to the same. . . . [Frayn's] paraphernalia—spume-blowers of sea-holidays at home; nude insiders in compulsory dark glasses; smog victorious masking the sun with a 'detritosphere'; the sweet-talk of courtship gone all mathematical—is exuberant and pointed fun. The trouble is that today's freak is tomorrow's cliché. . . . This wouldn't matter if Frayn's imagination were sufficiently and privately his own; but it's not, and here comes Aldous Huxley once again." Paul West

Book World p20 S 22 '68 440w

Reviewed by H. L. Leet

Library J 93:2689 J1 '68 160w

Reviewed by Benedict Nightingale

New Statesman 76:434 O 4 '68 1000w

"A parody of the middle class's obsessive concern with privacy, Frayn's new novel begins auspiciously as a bourgeois children's story turned on its head: 'Once upon a time there will be . . . a land of utter privacy. . . . His futuristic world is based on McLuhan's aphorism that electronic technology extends our central nervous systems in a global embrace. . . . Each man's privacy depends on gadgets that are logical extensions of ours. . . . The author is telling us that Uncumber—a representative of our future selves—must choose between utter privacy and communal bestiality. But those are not real options, and Frayn manipulates his characters and technology in his attempt to prove they are. . . . Still more seriously, [he] ignores the political implications of his world. . . . Frayn has ignored the fact that modern men must solve their problems communally, or there will be no futher men, private or communal.'" Christopher Koch

N Y Times Bk R p44 S 15 '68 750w

New Yorker 44:138 S 7 '68 230w

"[The author's previous novels] dealt humorously enough with contemporary life. His fourth is bolder and by no means funny. . . . Uncumber's return to the painless world from which she started has a curious effect on the reader. It is not simply that this luxurious futuristic paradise seems less real than the squalor and desolation on the earth's surface. It is rather that the reader has seen the squalor with fresh eyes. To Uncumber, a heap of maggots or an oily wave was new, astonishing, even romantic. In Frayn's crisp prose, these things seem strangely romantic to the reader, too. This enigmatic little fable confirms Frayn's position as one of the few worthwhile novelists writing in Britain today."

Time 92:104 S 27 '68 600w

TLS p1097 O 3 '68 1550w

FREE, LLOYD A. The political beliefs of Americans; a study of public opinion, by Lloyd A. Free and Hadley Cantril. 239p $10 Rutgers univ. press

329 U.S.—Politics and government—1963—Public opinion 67-28415

The authors describe "current political thought in the United States on the most important national and international issues. The book is based primarily on data derived from interviews . . . conducted through the facilities of the Gallup Poll during the Presidential campaign of 1964, when Lyndon Johnson, under the banner of 'liberalism,' confronted Barry Goldwater, under the banner of 'conservatism.' Also included are other public opinion surveys, from the New Deal to the present. [The authors attempt to show] . . . why Americans voted the way they did in the 1964 Presidential election [and to suggest] . . . the psychological background and basic outlooks which underlie public opinion on specific issues and influence people's behavior in election situations in general." (Publisher's note)

"This is a popular book, but paradoxically one that has more to offer than is worthwhile to the professional academic student of public opinion than to the layman. . . . A variety of kinds of questionnaire findings that are not commonly reported in academic surveys are presented and discussed—the discussion being basically at the level of a daily newspaper journalism. Some of the survey findings are interesting. Others and their interpretations—are highly misleading, especially the authors' reliance on liberalism-conservatism as explanations of American political attitudes and behavior. The authors cite, in their 20-odd footnotes, the standard work on these matters, Angus Campbell, et al, The American Voter [BRD 1961]. They do not appear to have read it."

Choice 5:120 Mr '68 230w

"The differences between liberal and conservative, and between Republican and Democrat are discussed. The core of such differences is stated as resting on an underlying disagreement about the use of Federal power. The results of this survey reveal that 'the majority of Americans remain conservative at the ideological level in the sense that they continue to accept the traditional American ideology which advocates the curbing of Federal power. . . . [However, there is] 'a conflict between their attitudes toward practical Government operations and programs, on the one hand, and their ideological ideas and abstract concepts about government and society on the other.' This is a useful study, carefully constructed with detailed tables that will be of interest to all students of political science." H. M. Burns

Library J 92:4512 D 15 '67 230w

FREEDMAN, MAX. Perspectives on the Court [by] Max Freedman, William M. Beaney [and] Eugene V. Rostow. 120p $3.50 Northwestern univ. press

347.9 U.S. Supreme Court

66-25370

"The unifying theme of these three lectures, delivered at Northwestern University School of Law in 1965, is the recent history of the Supreme Court. The authors and subjects are as follows: Max Freedman, journalist and biographer, 'Justice Frankfurter and Judicial Review'; William M. Beaney, professor of politics at Princeton University, 'The Supreme Court: The Perspective of Political Science'; and Eugene V. Rostow, former Dean of Yale University Law School, 'The Supreme Court as a Legal Institution.'" (Choice)

"There should be greater warrant for publication than the mere participation in an endowed lecture series. We can reasonably ask for an innovative or thoughtful perspective on things judicial or, at least, a well developed and articulated central point. Only Dean Rostow's lecture approaches these qualities; the Freedman and Beaney lectures resemble more a professor's hasty compilation of scattered notes in preparation for an undergraduate class. And even Rostow's presentation makes only a marginal contribution to his selected topic: the well-worn area of the Negro and the Fourteenth Amendment." B. C. Canon

Am Pol Sci R 62:265 Mr '68 950w

"The presentations are uniformly readable and give a reader insight into the work of the Supreme Court which supplements the standard texts in the field. Recommended for the undergraduate library."

Choice 4:1316 Ja '68 110w

FREEDMAN, MAX, ed. Roosevelt and Frankfurter. See Roosevelt, F. D.

FREEDMAN, RUSSELL. Scouting with Baden-Powell. 223p il $4.50 Holiday

369.43 Baden-Powell of Gilwell, Robert Stephenson Smyth Baden-Powell, 1st Baron—Juvenile literature. Boy Scouts—Juvenile literature 67-8836

The first part of this biography covers Baden-Powell's life as a professional soldier, from being "a neophyte officer in India to a national hero of the Boer War. His second career began at the age of 50 when his idea of helping boys to help themselves aroused such interest that, from a group of 21 boys in 1907, the Boy Scouts has developed into a worldwide organization of over 10 million boys. The growth and development of the movement is traced along with the activities of its founder. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades six to nine." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:313 N 1 '67 90w

"This is the well-written story of one man who led two exciting lives. . . . [It is] a generously illustrated work that most boys will have difficulty putting down. The author worked extensively from Baden-Powell's own writings.

FREEDMAN, RUSSELL—Continued

and librarians should be aware that Brian Gardner's recent adult history, Mafeking: A Victorian Legend [BRD 1967] presents strong evidence that Baden-Powell's accounts of the siege at Mafeking were highly distorted and embellished to glorify his own role in the proceedings. But Mr. Freedman's long account of the siege follows the traditional story that lauds Baden-Powell." R. J. Folcarelli
Library J 93:303 Ja 15 '68 170w

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION CONFERENCE, 8th, UNIVERSITY OF MISSOURI. Race and the news media. See Fisher, P. L., ed.*FREELING, NICOLAS. Strike out where not applicable. 230p $4.95 Harper

68-15981

The title "is a notation found on all forms provided for the Dutch police force. Van der Valk has become a Commissaire and has been transferred to Lisse, a quiet village in the bulb country, where he can rest and recover from the climax of The King of the Rainy Country [BRD 1966]. But the strange death of Bernhard Fischer, the jovial host of a local restaurant, and Dr. Maartens's insistence that it is not an accident, make it imperative for the Commissaire to discover the strange interlocking relationships at the riding academy where death struck." (Library J)

"Freeling has returned to Holland and to his detective Van der Valk . . . and the return is welcome. Freeling has a happy way with dialogue and with description of Holland in its various moods. . . . This is top-flight writing and plotting."

Best Sell 28:104 Je 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by A. L. Rosenzweig
Book World p14 Jl 21 '68 230w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 93:1506 Ap 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by A. J. Hubin
N Y Times Bk R p35 Je 16 '68 100w

"Freeling's writing has an impact that derives mainly from the contrast between the sophistication of his manner and the surface simplicity of the Dutch scene he contemplates.

[Van der Valk] finds his new life very pleasant and very monotonous. However, where there is sudden death there is hope, and when Bernhard Fischer, owner of the one fine restaurant in the neighborhood, is found murdered . . . the old Van der Valk comes to life, as implacable, efficient, and personally unpleasant as ever."

New Yorker 44:146 Je 1 '68 220w

"As a crime story this is loose-ended and poor. What the doctor knew remains unrevealed and presumably irrelevant. The commission of the murder is uninteresting, its reason almost accidental. This leaves psychological insight and story-telling to bear the bell away, and the latter brings it off, the former does not. But after so many successes Mr. Freeling may be allowed one sagging story, and this, so far, but we hope no farther, is it."

TLS p491 Je 1 '67 170w

FREEMAN, DON. Corduroy; story and pictures. 32p $3.50; lib bdg $3.37 Viking

68-16068

The artist-author of A Rainbow of My Own (BRD 1966) tells how "Corduroy, the little bear in the toy shop, had a button missing from his green overalls, but for this reason he seemed especially lovable to Lisa . . . [who] bought him, sewed on his button, and made a bed for him right next to hers. At last, Corduroy had the home he had always wanted. . . . Kindergarten to grade one." (Library J)

"The art and story are direct and just right for the very young who like bears and escalators." Anne Izard
Book World p7 (children's issue) My 5 '68 90w

"Any bear self-respecting enough to embark on a store-wide hunt for a button off his overalls deserves a good home. And Corduroy gets one. The very best kind of home—with a little girl who wants him so much she empties her piggy bank to buy him. And—evidence of another kind of home-coming—the little girl is Negro." P. M. Daltrey

Christian Science Monitor pB2 My 1 '68 80w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 88:301 My 24 '68 40w
Horn BK 44:315 Je '68 140w

"Little girls will appreciate the simple warmth of the story which is reflected in the colorful illustrations." Agnes Gregory
Library J 93:1788 Ap 15 '68 100w

Reviewed by S. G. Lanes
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p54 My 5 '68 60w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat 51:32 Je 15 '68 120w

FREEMAN, GRAYDON LA VERNE. See Freeman, L.*FREEMAN, HARROP A. Counseling in the United States; prepared from a survey, 1962-65, financed by the Walter E. Meyer res. inst. of law, inc. 322p $10 Oceana

158 Counseling 67-24526

This is the report of a survey during 1962-65 conducted by a professor of law at Cornell University "regarding the programs and facilities for training doctors, lawyers, and the clergy in counseling. . . . The subjects for study were drawn primarily from San Francisco, Los Angeles, Chicago, Queens, and selected upstate 'New York-Illinois' communities." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Freeman has purposively not considered psychologists, social workers, school counselors, vocational counselors, or marriage counselors whom he does not consider to be 'professionals.' There is an overabundance of statistical tables and sample questionnaires which could more appropriately have been placed in an appendix. Because of the specific nature of the subject matter which is of limited general interest, this book is of limited value in either the graduate or undergraduate library."

Choice 5:38 Mr '68 170w

"[This is] a very detailed study on the most elementary aspects of counseling as a distinct profession. For the general reader there is some lack of clarity of expression in comprehending the issues being studied. Errors in grammar contribute to this. Undoubtedly there is deserved, professional and important reading here. The work is of limited general intellectual interest, however, because of its somewhat unrefined statistical development." H. M. Kapenstein

Library J 92:2796 Ag '67 160w

FREEMAN, HOWARD E., jt. auth. The clinic habit. See Lambert, C.*FREEMAN, LARRY. Victorian silver; plated & sterling, hollow & flatware. 400p il $25 Century house

739.2 Silverware 66-12052

"The Victorian silver described and illustrated by Mr. Freeman consists of hollow ware, chiefly of the plated variety, of the last quarter of the 19th Century, and flatware, some plated, including patterns in sterling which are still current and popular. He [includes] alphabetical checklists of the names of flatware patterns of more prominent manufacturers." (Library J) Bibliography.

"The greatest value of this book lies in its great wealth of illustrations, most of which are taken from old catalogues. . . . The text is a bit too descriptive. . . . However, the material is all there and will prove invaluable for future historians and collectors. Glossary; index."

Choice 5:764 S '68 110w

"[The checklists of flatware patterns] are of limited use since they are not related to the patterns illustrated. Mr. Freeman, who has written several books on antiques, collected a vast amount of material on his subject. His organization of material, however, appears to have been hurried and lacks the necessary careful editing. The reproduction of the illustrations is extremely poor, and identification of sources and dates is rarely provided. . . . [However] this book may be of use in larger libraries in spite of its obvious faults." Paul von Khrum
Library J 93:1470 Ap 1 '68 150w

FREEMAN, MAE. Finding out about the past. 79p il lib bdg $1.95 Random house 913.03 Archeology—Juvenile literature 67-14439

The photographs and "text explain the how, when, where and what of a dig. Examples of discoveries include the Dead Sea Scrolls, Swiss lake houses, Lascaux Cave, Machu Picchu, Pompeii, Tutankhamen's tomb, and the Rosetta Stone. [Index.] Grades three to five." (Library J)

"[The author] describes some of the methods used by diggers on the job, including some of the more spectacular discoveries. . . . There is a brief account of a typical trip to a remote dig, but it is also noted that there are many possibilities for exciting archeological work close to home." M. W. Stoer

Christian Science Monitor pB6 My 2 '68 60w

"A welcome addition to the social studies curriculum. . . . A topical index and encompassing table of contents augment the excellent text. A good beginning book that will prepare young children for the many books on archaeology which start at slightly higher grade levels." R. P. Hennings

Library J 93:290 Ja 15 '68 100w

FREEMAN, MAE. When air moves. 44p il $3.95 McGraw

533.6 Aerodynamics 68-16486

This book "describes the qualities of air, still or moving, and discusses the ways in which the power of moving air is used by men in air, sea, and land vehicles." (Sat R) "Grades three to five." (Library J)

"An example of Mae Freeman's continuing excellence in successfully relating science concepts to children's daily life and environment [with] . . . explanations built on everyday experiences. [It contains] excellent analogies and references to science precepts . . . clear and simple experiments, explanations of unfamiliar words as they appear, and excellent photographs and drawings." Rose Hennings

Library J 93:3301 S 15 '68 80w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:31 Jl 20 '68 80w

Reviewed by Philip Morrison
Sci Am 219:126 D '68 60w

TLS p1383 D 5 '68 50w

FREEMAN, ORVILLE L. World without hunger. 190p $5.95 Praeger

338.1 Food supply. Agriculture. Technical assistance 68-19222

"In this book the Secretary of Agriculture . . . describes the role played by the United States in feeding the . . . people of the world, and he relates what he considers to be necessary steps in the future." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney
America 119:559 N 30 '68 100w

Best Sell 28:123 Je 15 '68 150w

Christian Century 85:789 Je 12 '68 20w

"In a way, [Freeman] is trying to draw a blueprint of cooperative agricultural development for mankind. The 'look what we have done' theme is heavy at times; still, the fact remains that the United States is one of the countries that can produce more foodstuff than her people can consume—and therefore is in a position to feed many others. Secretary Freeman's world-wide vision is worth much. Recommended for informed and general readers." Wen Chao Chen

Library J 93:2482 Je 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by Margaret Yesso
Library J 93:[3338] S 15 '68 130w [YA]

"A lucid account of the current domestic and world agricultural situation. The job of conquering hunger is immense; here again, the techniques are known and research increases our potential. Secretary Freeman offers numerous examples of failure and success and the reasons for them. He gives special attention to India." C. A. Hogan

Sat R 51:23 Jl 20 '68 170w

FREEMAN, THOMAS WALTER. The geographer's craft. 204p pl maps $4.50 Barnes & Noble

920 Geographers. Geography [67-76639]

An account of the professional life and professional contributions of seven prominent geographers, Francis Galton, Vidal de la Blache, Jovan Cvijic, Ellsworth Huntington, Sten de Geer, P. M. Roxby and A. G. Ogilvie. Index.

"The book could be easily comprehended by any college student, but would be of relatively little value to any college except those with a serious program in geography. No other work is directly comparable, but A Hundred Years of Geography, also by Freeman [BRD 1963], gives a better account of the development of the subject. Adequate index and illustrations."

Choice 4:1150 D '67 80w

"This book parallels Marc Bloch's study of The Historian's Craft [BRD 1963, but] . . . it cannot claim to be an adequate complement to Bloch's work. . . . Freeman's introductory and concluding chapters, which touch upon the practice of geography, are not equal in strength to most of those which deal with his chosen group of practitioners. For, strictly speaking, this is not a book about the geographer's craft, but about seven geographical craftsmen of varying endowments. . . . The seven are selected for the character of their approach to the subject rather than for their stature in it. . . . [The author's] gallery of geographical pen portraits represents a highly individual choice, but it stimulates because it is so personal; the reader immediately asks himself which seven he would choose."

TLS p942 O 5 '67 300w

FREIDEL, FRANK, ed. Union pamphlets of the Civil War, 1861-1865. 2v 564:566-1233p il $20 Belknap press of Harvard univ. press

973.7 U.S.—History—Civil War 67-17309

The "Harvard history professor has compiled significant Civil War pamphlets which reflect the contemporary issues of that period in the North. These pamphlets played a role similar to the political advertisements and letters to the editor that appear in today's newspapers. Dr. Freidel based his selections on such criteria as contemporary fame, representativeness, originality and literary distinction." (Library J) Index.

"Freidel's introduction and headnotes for the reprinted pamphlets are models of historical explication—concise, informative, and well written. His selection of pamphlets for reprinting is excellent. Some of them cover subject matter of continuing interest in American political history, and each is interesting for its own sake. An excellent index provides an added dimension of usefulness. This set should be in all academic libraries—in new ones for its coverage of an area in which individual titles are unobtainable, in old ones that have collections of Civil War pamphlets, for the introductory material and the index as well as for the convenience of having these 52 items in an attractive and readable format."

Choice 5:463 Je '68 170w

"The compilation is representative, except for the omission of some important writings by Negroes and their organizations. Dr. Freidel's introduction each pamphlet with a few relevant words to place it in historical context. Recommended for large libraries." R. F. Kugler

Library J 92:3637 O 15 '67 100w

"To a reader familiar with Civil War pamphlets for three decades there is an abiding impression of monotony in them. Mr. Freidel's careful selection . . . gives unexpected vigor and variety to these volumes. Without needless repetition he presents a group of publications which reflect well the animosities and ambitions of the American public during the Civil War. And his brief head notes for the reprinted pamphlets add considerably to a proper understanding of them. Some of these pamphlets created whole literatures in the various answers to them. It is almost enough to say that here . . . are the words of America's past and, to a surprising extent, the words of its present. The pamphlet, The Draft, or, Conscription Reviewed by the People, might serve all too well current objectors to the draft." Richard Harwell

New Eng Q 41:287 Je '68 900w

"The pamphlet literature of the war years is controversial but lacks intellectual sustenance. The content of these volumes inevitably lacks the distinction of the Pamphlets [of] the American Revolution [BRD 1965] presented by Professor [B.] Bailyn in this 'John Harvard Library' series, but it must also be said that Professor Freidel's introduction and annotations suffer equally in comparison. . . . Sheer quantity can justify the historical importance of this pamphlet literature so sadly lacking in polemical and literary merit. The greater part is as usable today as a Civil War cannonball." TLS p1261 N 7 '68 500w

FREIDEL, FRANK—Continued

FREIDIN, SEYMOUR. The experts, by Seymour Freidin and George Bailey. 398p $7.95 Macmillan (N Y)

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations. Journalism—Political aspects 68-20265

A study of the influence of journalism on American foreign policy. Two journalists indict the superficiality and errors of judgment shown by reporters of foreign affairs. They analyze reports made by members of the diplomatic service, by newspaper reporters, and by television commentators, and seek to show that this reportage is based on misinformation and vanity. Index.

"[The authors] accuse their 'experts' of 'deliberate programmatic deceptions' which is hard to believe. . . . In essence what the book underlines is the weaknesses of American foreign policy during and after World War II vis-à-vis the Soviet Union. That, by and large, is the most interesting section of their book as well as the most informative. Both men were reporters during those stormy years—so much of what they describe they know firsthand. Their problem ensues when they say things which cast some doubt as to their credentials as anti-experts. . . . Some of the information is trivial . . . but most of the material has a lively ring and an authentic quality because the authors were there when it happened and understood the implications of events." Arnold Beichman

Christian Science Monitor p9 Je 20 '68 600w

"In the opinion of the authors, many analysts who command the admiration and esteem of a large populace are false prophets who violate scholarly objectivity and loyalty to professional impartiality. Many respected reporters receive their darts. This makes, of course, for fascinated reading as all controversial topics do. It is interesting to speculate on the rebuttal of their victims in the event of such a happening. . . . This book will find wide acclaim by those who share the authors' philosophy but the liberal audience will bristle at much of it." K. J. Frohlich

Library J 93:2510 Je 15 '68 170w

Reviewed by John Hohenberg
N Y Times Bk R p22 O 6 '68 650w

"Freidin (formerly an executive editor of the now defunct New York Herald Tribune) and Bailey (correspondent and executive editor for the about-to-die Reporter magazine) have slashed into the experts with a rusty hacksaw. And the result is a sensational but indiscriminate massacre. 'There are few heroes in this book,' admit the authors, 'there are a few more villains, and a great many fops, dupes and dolts.' Walter Lippmann, Harrison Salisbury, Drew Middleton, Sydney Gruson, Joseph Kraft, Anthony Lewis, to name half a dozen outstanding journalists, are defamed. . . . On the face of it, this book is an analysis of the opinion makers who determine foreign policy. But the authors are so preoccupied with ridiculing members of Congress, the Foreign Service, the State Department and the CIA that they show little inclination to examine what is dynamic or valuable in American expertise." F. Y. Blumenfeld

Newsweek 71:98 My 27 '68 650w

FREIN, GEORGE H., ed. Celibacy: the necessary option. 176p $4.95 Herder & Herder

253 Celibacy 68-20404

This book contains papers presented at the Symposium on Clerical Celibacy held September 6-8, 1967, at the University of Notre Dame's Center for Continuing Education, sponsored by the National Association for Pastoral Renewal (NAPR), at which priests and laymen discussed the possibility of optional celibacy for diocesan priests of the Latin rite.

"Though NAPR is quite candidly a lobby for 'optional celibacy,' and though a majority of the contributors to this volume share the organization's point of view, several of the papers achieve scholarly quality. . . . The only chapter not presented at Notre Dame is the concluding one, in which Robert T. Francoeur discusses the difficulties (with Church procedures and officials) met by priests who seek permission to marry. This essay, in a somewhat modified form, was published under a pseudonym in Commonweal (12/8/67). . . . If the characteristic tone of the symposium is strong commitment to early change, Schillebeeckx's study is a model of informed detachment. . . . One must rank this book among the very best treatments of celibacy. I hope it will be read carefully by many priests." T. E. Clarke

America 118:584 Ap 27 '68 460w

"An especially good collection of articles. . . . The scope of the book, with historical, theological and practical articles, gives it special strength. Among the contributors are John T. Noonan, J. V. L. Casserley and Ignatius Hunt."

Commonweal 88:274 My 17 '68 60w

"[The contributors] concentrate their attention on the reasons for again making celibacy optional. Discussions include such topics as the theology of celibacy, celibacy in Scripture and in the early church, the psychology of enforced celibacy, and a look at the Eastern Catholic tradition where priests are married. . . . Highly recommended for pertinent collections." Richard Walz

Library J 93:2662 Jl '68 150w

FREMANTLE, ANNE. Pilgrimage to people. 231p $5.50 McKay

920

68-10539

In twelve chapters the author "recounts experiences from a recent trip around the world seeking 'hyphen people' and visiting 'bridge places.' 'Hyphen people' are those who tie together different cultures, creeds, races, social or political doctrine. 'Bridge places' are those which span 'national, class or religious differences.' Among the 'hyphen people' are Jean Charlot, art teacher in Hawaii; Daisetz Suzuki, Japanese monk; Swami Gauribala, Ceylon; Dom Bede Griffiths, monk in India; Louis Massignon, French Islamic scholar; Jacques Maritain, French philosopher and statesman; Michael Scott, cleric of South Africa and India; John Howard Griffin, American writer, musician, social reformer; Alexander Kerensky, Russian political leader; and Dorothy Day, American Catholic social worker and writer." (Library J)

Reviewed by M. S. McNiff

America 118:353 Mr 16 '68 500w

Reviewed by Karl Stern

Critic 27:74 Ag '68 1300w

"Mrs. Fremantle's deep sense of the spiritual and frequent philosophical passages give depth and significant meaning to a book filled with skilful and enlightening descriptions of people and places. She is a thoughtful observer who writes in a style that will satisfy readers of travel or of biography. Highly recommended for any but the most frivolous readers." F. N. Jones

Library J 93:77 Ja 1 '68 170w

Reviewed by Janet Strothman

Library J 93:1823 Ap 15 '68 200w [YA]

"This book is filled with the spirit of Pope John and of Vatican II. . . . To her intensely ecumenical attitude . . . [the author] adds her own liberal spirit and traditions, 'liberal' in the old-fashioned, English sense rather than in the modern, often Communist-fellow-traveling, American one. . . . One can only admire Mrs. Fremantle's attitude and determination and those of the subjects whom she portrays. However, this reviewer at least must regret that a little more of the grace with which she has had the good fortune to be endowed did not affect her prose style. This alternates between 'fine' writing, something not unlike journalism and occasional wads of pathetic statistics. Such a reservation, however, does not detract from a profound admiration of her views and her endeavors." Constantine Fitzgibbon

N Y Times Bk R p14 Ja 28 '68 700w

"The three places [Mrs. Fremantle] has chosen to describe here are the Chinese Trappist Monastery on Lantau Island near Hong Kong, the Benedictine Monastery at Toumiline in Morocco, and the Center of Intercultural Formation at Cuernavaca. . . . The author's freedom from proselytizing—overt or covert—becomes clearer the further one advances into the book. . . .

Mrs. Fremantle, who can with a few sure strokes evoke subtle moods of time and place in America, Europe, Mexico, and North Africa, is in general less successful with Asia. She seems, for instance, curiously unable to summon a vocabulary adequate for dealing with the Japanese esthetic. . . . But one hesitates to dwell on negative criticisms . . . for this is, on the whole, an admirable book, full of original, suggestive, and rewarding material." N. W. Ross
Sat R 51:41 F 24 '68 1100w

FREMONT, SUZANNE STRAIT. Children and their parents; toward maturity. 205p $5.95 Harper

301.42 Parent and child. Adolescence 68-15990

This "book seeks to help parents of adolescents discover how to convert the war between the generations into a two-way teach-in. . . . It discusses money as a . . . tool for fostering self-reliance and establishing values. It . . . stresses that a young person must learn how to fail as well as to succeed. . . . One chapter points out the temptations and dangers of transferring dreams—or desires or choice of vocation—from one generation to another. . . . There is a chapter on sex." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Timeworn advice surrounded by excess verbiage. . . . [The author fails] to come to terms with a major gripe of young people—that their parents' generation is more concerned with fiscal responsibility than with human responsibility. The book includes excellent suggestions for teaching manners and behavior as general principles rather than as specific regulations, and the encouragement of self-confidence by seeking the child's point of view. Such wisdom is presented, however, more as a threat than as counsel. In the concluding chapter, 'The Young Always Win,' she urges parents to resign themselves to the fact that they need their children more than the children need them. This pessimistic fatalism has little to offer to libraries." Janet Freedman
Library J 93:3114 S 15 '68 190w

"[This] represents some of the better writings in a sparse of books about parent and child. . . . [Mrs. Fremont is] at home dealing with the informal education of 'teen-agers,' a label she considers detrimental to understanding the subtlety and variety of adolescents' problems. Her chapter on how parents might help their growing sons and daughters identify and comprehend human qualities like reliability, courage, and integrity confirms her ability to combine sympathy and experience with ease of expression. Here is recommended reading not just for parents but for older children, too." John Calam
Sat R 51:56 J1 20 '68 160w

FREUND, W. H. C. Martyrdom and persecution in the early church; a study of a conflict from the Maccabees to Donatus. 577p $8 N.Y. univ. press; pa $1.95 Anchor bk; Doubleday

272 Persecution. Church history—Primitive and early church. Church and state 68-16773;66-24325

The author "sets the story of the persecutions within the general history of the Church, and . . . of the Roman Empire, religious, social and political. Christianity is studied as a social movement which had to determine its attitude to the values of the Greco-Roman world, and an attempt is made to trace 'the successive phases of the triangular struggle which developed between that world on the one hand, the Jews and Christians who were prepared at a price to work with it, and the irreconcilables on the other.'" (TLS) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[This] is a reprint, with modifications, of the original edition published with the same title by Blackwell at Oxford in 1965. There is no statement that the author supervised or edited [this] edition, but in at least one instance an additional reference has been added to a footnote. The text . . . appears to be unaltered, but many footnotes have been truncated and compressed, and in a number of instances quotations from Greek and Latin writers and from modern scholars have been omitted, leaving only the references to the sources, so that the reader no longer has this evidence conveniently before him. There are numerous typographical errors, especially in Greek and Latin. . . . Scholars will prefer to use the original edition." Glanville Downey

Am Hist R 73:784 F '68 550w

Christian Century 84:785 Je 14 '67 100w

"This is not a popular book, but a huge fully-documented synthesis of historical knowledge and modern research that will probably be indispensable to historians and theologians for many years. Strongly recommended." T. M. Avery

Library J 92:2414 Je 15 '67 120w

"[This] is a highly personal book, with characteristics which may call for criticism but make it all the more interesting. . . . The actual narrative of the persecutions is at times swallowed up by the wider examination of the relations between the Church and society; but it is so rich and stimulating that one is not often disposed to grumble at its amplitude. . . . Apart from details, criticism is more likely to fasten upon Dr. Freund's bold generalizations. . . . Dr. Freund's industry and erudition are manifest. Unfortunately it must be said that he can be amazingly inaccurate or impulsive. It is not only that Greek accents and breathings wander where they will or that misspellings abound and names and titles are perverted . . . but again and again, on looking up a reference, one is left wondering what it can have to do with the point the author thinks it supports. But let it be clear that this is an original and powerful book, a substantial contribution to early church history." TLS p175 Mr 3 '66 950w

FRESCHET, BERNIECE. The little woodcock; ill. by Leonard Weisgard. unpub lib bdg $3.31 Scribner

Woodcocks—Stories 67-15479

The "story of a female woodcock's difficulties in finding safety first for her eggs and then for her young in territory beset by hunters, both animal and human. . . . Preschool to grade two." (Library J)

"It is painful to find fault with such a beautiful example of bookmaking. . . . The layout is handsome, and the gorgeous pictures by Leonard Weisgard remind us that he is a Caldecott medal winner. A poetic and lucid text tells about a woodcock and her young in the March woods. But this is supposed to be a science book and should not have such sentences as 'Her heart beats wildly,' which infuse human emotions into the life of an animal." M. E. Selsam

Book World p10 Ja 7 '68 100w

Horn Bk 43:606 O '67 160w

"The writing is stiff and the information minimal on the woodcock and other creatures of the wood, marsh, and field." E. T. Dobbins
Library J 92:2444 Je 15 '67 60w

Reviewed by Alice Fleming

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p49 My 7 '67 70w

FREUND, JULIEN. The sociology of Max Weber; tr. from the French by Mary Ilford. $3.10 $6.95 Pantheon bks.

301.0924 Weber, Max 67-19174

"A sociologist discusses the ideas and vision of Max Weber, who placed sociology on a scientific basis. He proceeds to explain Weber's methodology, his interpretative sociology, and a number of his special sociologies, such as the sociology of economics, religion, politics, law, art, and music. . . . Freund relies primarily on Weber's works, but occasionally he refers also to the ideas of other scholars in the field, for example, E. Durkheim and G. Simmel, and provides his own examples to clarify further Weber's theories." (Library J) Bibliography. Index. Originally published in French as Sociologie de Max Weber.

Economist 229:70 O 26 '68 280w

"[This] is a good translation. . . . If the reader will sail through beginning pages of the book, he will enjoy the remainder of the survey. Recommended for academic and larger public libraries." Victor Novak

Library J 93:766 F 15 '68 180w

Reviewed by Alasdair Macintyre

New Statesman 76:400 S 27 '68 650w

"Freund (professor of sociology at the University of Strasbourg) has given us an admirable synthesis of, and introduction to, the full range of Weber's work. His book seems to me to have everything such a study should have: understanding of Weber's intellectual roots, philosophical contexts, significant likenesses and contrasts with others such as Marx, Durkheim and Simmel, and the explicit relation of Weber's ideas to contemporary social science. It is lucidly organized (no small feat, given Weber's almost labyrinthine corpus of scholarship) and leanly written." R. A. Nisbet

FREUND, JULIEN—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p6 My 19 '68 850w

FREWIN, LESLIE. Dietrich: the story of a star. 191p pl $5.95 Stein & Day

B or 92 Dietrich, Marlene 67-24485

A revision of Blond Venus: a Life of Marlene Dietrich (BRD 1956), this volume is a biography of the German-born film actress.

"This informal, chatty, far from comprehensive biography of one of the most fascinating and elusive film personalities is valuable for its appendices, which list casts, directors, and other statistics for all the Dietrich films [and] for occasional insights into aspects of Dietrich's career . . . but it fails signally to come to serious grips with the Dietrich phenomenon as an example of Hollywood mythmaking. . . . The British biographer is sometimes ludicrously uninformed about the American scene. . . . [His] errors about familiar matters lead one to question Frewin's reliability about less known, more intimate matters concerning Dietrich. But for bringing together data on Dietrich not all easily accessible, his book deserves a place on a well stocked film shelf."

Choice 5:213 Ap '68 200w

"[Frewin has] brought the book up-to-date . . . and added a few recent pictures to the portraits, stills and news photos of the original. As a group, the illustrations are interesting, but curiously unattractive. A few small errors in film history have been carried over into this revision. The book is not an intimate biography and I am happy to report it is not an expose. It is a competent stage biography of the old school, a laudatory but somewhat remote portrait of a famous personality and an account of a career which has received so much deserved attention that a book about it can offer few surprises." G. D. McDonald

Library J 92:3033 S 15 '67 120w

Reviewed by Robert Sklar

Reporter 37:52 D 14 '67 120w

FRIBOURG, MARJORIE G. The Bill of rights; its impact on the American people. 254p $4.95 Macrae Smith co.

342.73 U.S. Constitution—Amendments. U.S. Supreme Court 67-15809

The author covers "recent cases ruled on by the Supreme Court that have dealt with our freedoms of free speech and of the press, for free assembly and action, of worship, of the ownership of property, of the rights of soldiers and civilians, and of adults and youths accused of a crime." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"An example of popularization in its weakest form. M. Fribourg is not quite clear, in her introduction and in her text, whether she is writing of 'sagas' and 'struggles' or of 'how and why these decisions were reached' when she addresses herself to the developing interpretation of our national Bill of Rights. . . . Shaky in control of Constitutional doctrines, inexplicably disproportionate in the emphases placed on the constituent parts of the Bill of Rights, this work has no merit as a college text on any level."

Choice 4:1438 F '68 180w

"[This book] is ably written with a dramatic flair. The bibliographies . . . include books, cases, source material and magazine and periodical literature, thus assisting the high school student seeking reference material. . . . A competent book for high school students." E. J. Bander

Library J 92:3863 O 15 '67 110w [YA]

FRIED, ALBERT, ed. Charles Booth. London. See Booth, C.

FRIED, MORTON, ed. War: the anthropology of armed conflict and aggression; ed. by Morton Fried, Marvin Harris, and Robert Murphy; pub. for the Am. mus. of natural history [papers delivered at a symposium held on Nov. 30, 1967 at the 66th annual general meeting of the Am. anthropological association]. 262p $6.95 Natural hist. press

355.02 War. Anthropology 68-21867

This volume contains the expanded text and comments made at the symposium. Contents: The effects of warfare on the biology of the human species, by F. B. Livingstone; Human aggression, by R. L. Holloway, Jr.; War and disease, by A. Allard, Jr.; Hypotheses about the functions of war, by A. P. Vayda. Yanomamö social organization and warfare, by N. A. Chagnon; Psychological preparations for war, by A. F. C. Wallace; War and the draft, by S. Tax; Alternatives to war, by M. Mead. Bibliography. Index.

"The outstanding contribution is Chagnon's account of . . . the Yanomamö, a tribal people living on the borders of Venezuela and Brazil. Also very valuable are the highly professional comments on ethology (con and pro) by Ralph Holloway and C. R. Carpenter. . . . The rest of the volume is very patchy and the authors display a disappointing tendency to edge away from the crucial issue: In what sense is 'primitive warfare,' which in Chagnon's case refers to hostilities between intermarrying communities with a total population of about fifty individuals, comparable at all with 'modern war' in which populations may run to several hundred millions on either side?" Edmund Leach

N Y Rev of Books 11:24 O 10 '68 800w

"A distinguished group of anthropologists has attempted to analyze the biological and social background of war. . . . The chapter 'War and the Draft,' by Sol Tax . . . will arouse the most vivid interest among general readers. . . . In a final chapter, 'Alternatives to War,' Margaret Mead . . . concludes her paper with a visionary program for new models of world organization, intended to remove the threat of nationalism and the inequality of resources; but, however attractive her proposals may be, it would be difficult to claim that they are derived wholly or even mainly from anthropological findings. Nevertheless, Dr. Mead's . . . expectations [are high] but the passionate belief in the practicability of a peaceful world order is certainly [her] credit. . . . and [that of] all the other contributors to this most topical symposium." C. Von Furer-Haimendorf

Sat R 51:27 Je 1 '68 1850w

FRIEDEN, BERNARD J., ed. Urban planning and social policy; ed. by Bernard J. Frieden and Robert Morris. 459p $10 Basic bks.

309.2 Cities and towns—U.S. U.S.—Social policy 68-16874

The editors are Frieden, author of The Future of Old Neighborhoods (BRD 1965) and Morris, author of Feasible Planning for Social Change (BRD 1966). They have produced "a book of readings about the physical and social influences shaping the urban condition. They . . . limit consideration to four topical areas: housing, urban poverty, racial discrimination, and citizen participation." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[The editors] have selected authors who provide facts as well as those who write critical reviews of current urban programs. Chapter introductions . . . do much to further the coherence of the book. The weakest chapter is the final one, 'Guidelines for Social Policy.'" Choice 5:1174 N '68 80w

"[This is] a book which will concern the specialist more than the generalist. . . . [It] tends to be textbookish and repetitive of other research such as the Woodlawn Project. However, the editors do attempt to adopt a developmental approach. More than 30 specialists, including Charles Silberman and Bayard Rustin, have contributed to the book. It is a valuable reference book for the social worker (its bibliographies are excellent and current). . . . It is not a book on physical planning, but rather one about the political and social handling of poverty and segregation." H. L. Roth

Library J 93:565 F 1 '68 130w

FRIEDLANDER, ALBERT H. Leo Baeck; teacher of Theresienstadt. 294p $8.95 Holt
B or 92 Baeck, Leo 68-11829
The author "studies Baeck's intellectual development in terms of the background of his life and events in [Nazi] Germany." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Christian Century 85:1437 N 13 '68 60w

"It is to Mr. Friedlander's credit that he discusses [Baeck's relationship with the Nazis] seriously and without apologetics. He calls his book an 'intellectual biography' but it is for the most part a detailed analysis of Baeck's main works, The Essence of Judaism [BRD 1949] and This People Israel [BRD 1965]. Mr. Friedlander's purpose is to prove Baeck a religious philosopher against those who would deny him such stature. Unfortunately, Rabbi Friedlander . . . has written a dissertation on Leo Baeck. The book suffers from the typical inadequacies of that genre. For any academic collection." A. A. Greenbaum
Library J 93:4132 N 1 '68 160w

"It is to Albert Friedlander's credit that, despite his profound love for his late teacher, he does not permit emotion to interfere with objective scholarly appraisal. . . . He is not beyond reproaching Baeck for impoliteness, for an occasional superficial judgment, for an improperly rigid dichotomy of romantic and classical, for giving more room in The Essence of Judaism . . . to the liberal than to the traditionalist. . . . But his attempt to portray Baeck as a great thinker as well as a great man merely throws the man into yet sharper relief. . . . Friedlander's book is a welcome and refreshing antidote to Death-of-God theology. The point he makes, pellucidly and with consummate skill, that a single believing Baeck inside a concentration camp outweighs many theoretical theologians outside, gives food for thought." A. W. Miller
Sat R 52:82 Ja 11 '69 1100w

FRIEDLÄNDER, MAX J. Early Netherlandish painting; 14v; v 1, The Van Eycks-Petrus Christus; pref. by Erwin Panofsky; comments and notes by Nicole Veronee-Verhaegen and Henri Pauwels; tr. by Heinz Norden. il $18.50 Praeger
759.92 Painting, Dutch. Painters, Dutch 67-13538

This is the first of fourteen volumes that comprise the new edition of Friedländer's Die Altniederländische Malerei, originally published between 1924-37. . . . [The editors have] included the results of more recent research in notes and an appendix. Problems of an art historical and critical nature, together with such information as provided by the recent laboratory tests on the Ghent Altarpiece, for example . . . [attempt to bring] these sections of the work up to date." (Choice)

"The integrity of Friedländer's text . . . has been preserved throughout in a lively and readable translation that sacrifices none of the trenchant precision of the original German. The number of illustrations has been considerably increased and there is a corresponding improvement in their quality. Strongly recommended for all graduate and undergraduate art libraries." Choice 4:1234 Ja '68 150w

"Friedländer represents the connoisseur rather than the traditional professor of art history, reaching his conclusions by intuition, not by study of historical and technical evidence. [His] work has been established among the great art writings and reference sources. . . . [This edition] is well edited and the format, printing, and reproductions are good. It belongs in any larger art library, and will serve even where the older German edition is available." J. L. Dewton
Library J 92:3405 O 1 '67 180w

FRIEDLÄNDER, SAUL. Prelude to downfall: Hitler and the United States, 1939-1941; tr. from the French by Aline B. and Alexander Werth. 328p $6.95 Knopf 327.43 Germany—Foreign relations—U.S. U.S.—Foreign relations—Germany. Hitler, Adolf. World War, 1939-1945—Germany 66-10739

"In the present work, based on. . . research in our National Archives, the British Admiralty archives, and the German archives in Bonn and Koblenz. Mr. Friedländer's purpose is to show the American impact on Hitler's fateful decisions from September 1939 to December 1941. He reasons that the calculations of the dictator were not illogical at first. Hitler's blunders started when he believed he could destroy Russia by 'Blitzkrieg' and when he encouraged a Japanese attack on the United States." (Library J) Translation and updating of Hitler et les États-Unis (1939-1941), which was also published as the author's thesis (Geneva) under title: Le rôle du facteur américain dans la politique étrangère et militaire de l'Allemagne. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by H. L. Trefousse

Am Hist R 73:1107 Ap '68 700w

Reviewed by H. P. Secher

Am Pol Sci R 62:590 Je '68 800w

"Professor Friedlander even offers the view that the America First Committee and other isolationists might have succeeded in keeping the United States from intervening in the conflict had it not been for the bombing of Pearl Harbor. This is one of the few personal views hazarded by the author in his most effective work, and it is a dubious one. For the most part he practices the self-effacing zeal of the scholar in letting the facts and the documents speak mightily for themselves, and as a result we are treated to a brightly lit picture of Hitler's dealings not only with Roosevelt and the United States but with a slippery Franco, a touchy and difficult Vichy, and a double-dealing Japan. All is related carefully and dispassionately." Edwin Tetlow
Christian Science Monitor p13 D 15 '67 850w

"[The author, who] occupies the chair in contemporary history of the Institute of International Studies in Geneva, first impressed a wide European and American audience by his study, Pius XII and the Third Reich [BRD 1966]. . . . [He] has written with restraint; his book is a carefully documented piece of research (there are, however, errors in some details) which will be useful in college and university libraries." F. E. Hirsch
Library J 93:72 Ja 1 '68 160w

Reviewed by James Joll

N Y Rev of Books 10:17 F 15 '68 240w

"[Friedländer asserts] 'that no systematic treatment has yet appeared of . . . the relation of the Third Reich to the United States—an astonishing claim that not only ignores the interesting books of James V. Compton, The Swastika and the Eagle—Hitler, the United States, and the Origins of World War II' [BRD 1967] and Alton Frye's Nazi Germany and the Western Hemisphere, 1933-1941' [BRD 1968]. . . . but also H. L. Trefousse's still valuable pioneer study 'Germany and American Neutrality, 1939-1941' [BRD 1952]. . . in fact listed in his bibliography!). . . . Since Messrs. Compton and Frye (and Trefousse too) had gone over somewhat the same materials [as Friedländer,] the result, not surprisingly, is a certain amount of duplication as well as . . . considerable agreement on many of the key issues. . . . Friedländer has turned up no concrete evidence to the effect that Hitler planned to attack the United States or the Western Hemisphere." Francis Loewenheim
N Y Times Bk R p10 F 4 '68 1000w

"In his latest study, elegantly translated . . . Friedländer comes into his own as a diplomatic historian whose future books should be worth watching and waiting for. To explain how Nazi intelligence was kept informed of American and Japanese policies in the two crucial years before these nations went to war, Friedländer has drawn heavily, and for the first time, on the cables to Berlin from the German attachés in Washington . . . and from the Nazi Ambassador in Tokyo. . . . His perspective would have been enlarged, even if his general thesis remained unaltered, if he had paid more attention to the published American and Japanese records. The New York Times, which he consulted but never sees fit to quote, offers a better picture of American politics than Thomsen's cables." R. W. Shugg
Sat R 51:89 Ja 13 '68 380w
TLS p550 My 30 '68 800w

FRIEDMAN, NEIL. The social nature of psychological research; the psychological experiment as a social interaction. 204p $6.95 Basic bks.

150 Psychology—Experiments 67-16460

"The validity of the orthodox psychological experiment must now be questioned, says Dr. Friedman. Our views of human motivation, personality, and learning derive from these experiments, and doubts about them impel a critical reappraisal. One reappraisal was undertaken at the University of North Dakota, with concealed cameras filming a person-perception test in which 20 experimenters and 86 subjects were involved. An analysis of the results revealed, among other findings, that individual experimenters behaved differently in the course of the experiment and that these differences in turn affected the subjects." (Library J) This volume is based on a doctoral dissertation submitted to Harvard University. Bibliography.

FRIEDMAN, NEIL—Continued

"There is a nice article (already published by Friedman, et al.) on the experiment itself. The analysis goes beyond simply proving that experimenter effect exists. Careful scoring of experimenter behavior from films, in terms of glances, smiles, etc., allows demonstration of the kinds of subtle interaction which produce marked differences in subject response. The reviews of the literature on 'tester' (Rorschach, TAT, etc.) as well as experimenter effect are also welcome. More important, however, is the reminder. That experimenters must be careful and work unceasingly to remove themselves and other unwanted variables from their research is a message that should periodically emerge in visible places. Unfortunately, however, Mr. Friedman's reviews and conclusions are colored by an approach that is anything but temperate. [He] lets loose a shotgun polemic with what seems to be only scarcely hidden glee." Gerald Marwell

Am Soc R 33:460 Je '68 600w

"This may well be a revolutionary finding, for up to now the accepted view has been that experimenters do not vary in their attitudes and are rather 'blank screens' in the manner of psychoanalysts. Dr. Friedman also includes a concise history of psychological experimentation, discusses the implication of the North Dakota tests, and offers suggestions for future research. . . . Unfortunately, [the volume] still contains great quantities of Ph.D. prose, which will discourage all but the bravest readers. . . . [It] is recommended for academic libraries and only the very largest public libraries." Allan Angoff

Library J 92:1020 Mr 1 '67 210w

FRIEDMAN, ROSE. Freedom builders; great teachers from Socrates to John Dewey. 271p $4.95 Little

920 Teachers—Juvenile literature 68-15555

Biographies of Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, Quintilian, Alcuin, Vittorino da Feltre, Martin Luther, Ignatius of Loyola, John Comenius, Heinrich Pestalozzi, Friedrich Froebel, Horace Mann, Emma Willard, Catherine Beecher, and Mary Lyon. Bibliography. Index. "Grades eight to twelve." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:277 O 1 '68 80w

"Although the 15 subjects of this collection will have limited appeal for many young people, the purpose of the book is worthy and the writing is good. . . . [The contributions of the] teachers are examined for their lasting value and the basic theme of education and enlightenment is explored. While some of those discussed . . . are familiar to young people at least by name and period, many . . . are more often discovered during adult studies in education. Nevertheless, the presentation is geared to youthful interests and will be useful as auxiliary data on historical periods and social movements or as inspirational reading for those thinking of a teaching career. This latter purpose will be served particularly well, as the human qualities of these teachers are well drawn." R. S. Bender

Library J 93:4413 N 15 '68 150w

FRIEDMAN, SANFORD. A haunted woman. 349p $6.95 Dutton

68-25765

Pauline Carter, "whose playwright husband, Austin, had drowned five years earlier during a period when they were separated, is faced with two decisions on the anniversary of his death. She must choose the right director for his last play, and she must decide whether or not to resume her own acting career." (Library J)

"Most of this book is so overburdened with unnecessary description, conversation, extraneous characters and episodes that it drags and dulls narrative appeal and interest.

No one can doubt that the author knows his scene and characters thoroughly, yet to be so unselective in presenting his material is a fatal defect for any novelist. Even the house party scenes . . . which are occasionally effectively dramatic and well-written, suffer the incubus of too much data and chatter. It is a shame that so much unnecessary material pervades the book, because in the relatively few sections when Friedman does write pointedly and succinctly, he demonstrates talent and considerable potential." P. A. Doyle

Best Sell 28:206 Ag 15 '68 500w

Reviewed by J. M. Hoagland

Library J 93:2689 J1 '68 210w

"Friedman throws so much into [this book]—the generation gap, modern technology, the woman problem, dream interpretations and mythological symbolism—that his novel shares the TV serial's characteristic sprawl. . . . This is a pity, because at times he almost achieves a tough-minded portrait of that rare fictional character, the sensitive, intelligent woman. . . . [He] skillfully handles the gothic undertow the primitive imaginings underlying our civilized facade, and here (as elsewhere) we share Pauline's skepticism and fear. . . . [But] the failure is fatal, because his banalities hold our attention only so long as we believe they will be welded together. Unfortunately, they never are." Christopher Koch

N Y Times Bk R p52 N 3 '68 250w

"We are on the wrong track, I believe, if we take Mr. Friedman's concern to be the journey toward self-knowledge by an egotistical, anxiety-ridden woman. Presented without any saving grace of compassion or irony, Pauline, by the book's end, has swelled to the dimension of a monstrous cartoon. The author is thoroughly familiar with her habits, but he is unable to inhabit her consciousness believably. . . . He does not create a rounded character, but advances a thesis. It is the dead playwright for whom sympathy is shown. . . . [The] firm control and psychological truth [of his first novel, Totempole, BkD 1955] are unfortunately lacking in the present book." Muriel Haynes

Sat R 51:45 S 7 '68 700w

FRIEDRICH, CARL J. An introduction to political theory; twelve lectures at Harvard. 182p $5.50 Harper

320.01 Political science

67-11648

A professor at Harvard University presents lectures he delivered in 1964 in an introductory course "for the beginning student of government. . . . [He] sketches, in one lecture, the nature of an issue, and in the succeeding lecture, he shows how it was treated by one or two of the classical theorists. The issues discussed are the dimensions of freedom, revolution and social justice, justice and the function of the political elite, community and order, power and authority, and political equality and the common man." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The principal theorists [discussed] . . . include Locke, Mill, Plato, Aristotle, Machiavelli, Hobbes, Rousseau, and Kant. To cope with these lectures requires intimate familiarity with [their] writings and [those] of many other major figures, as well as a wide-ranging knowledge of Western civilization. Thus, even while acknowledging the obvious desirability of preserving and publishing any discourses by a savant such as Friedrich, one must also ask why their merits were not enhanced and made more useful . . . especially if they were directed to the beginning student. The documentation, bibliography (reading assignments), and index are all inadequate and below any justifiable standards. . . . But here is undoubtedly a collection of lectures that should be turned to by any advanced student of Western government and examined for their challenging, their illuminating, and their inspirational effects." Raymond Polin

Ann Am Acad 374:191 N '67 400w

"The lectures are consistently lucid, stimulating, and even quite exciting at times. . . . Fresh insights are produced, for example, into Fascism as a reaction to Communism, the destruction of the state in Marxian theory and the popular notion of socialism, the difference between authority and power, and Rousseau's concept of the equality of men. Should be in every junior college library as well as required reading for beginning students in political science."

Choice 4:1176 D '67 160w

"In his preface, [the author] expresses the hope of being able to convey some of the excitement aroused in him whenever he has to deal with one of the great issues of politics. This aim he certainly achieves. . . . [These are] the ruminations of a distinguished and original mind. . . . Professor Friedrich spells out everything very carefully, using a pleasantly colloquial style and taking nothing for granted; yet he succeeds in illuminating almost every subject he touches—and some subjects, of necessity in so short a book, he touches very lightly indeed. For the university teacher, these lectures are a model of how to be simultaneously 'introductory' and stimulating."

TLS p661 J1 27 '67 180w

FRIEL, BRIAN. Lovers; pt. 1. Winners; pt. 2. Losers. 2 pts in 1. 144p $4.50; pa $1.95 Farrar, Straus

822

68-25335

Two plays by the author of Philadelphia, Here I Come (BRD 1967). In Winners, "two young lovers who want different sorts of lives come to their sad end by drowning. The second play, Losers, [concerns a] . . . middle-aged couple, Andy and Hanna . . . [and] Hanna's mother, who forces them to pray each evening near her bed to the statue of St. Philomena. After their marriage, Andy is unwise enough to disclose that Philomena has never been beatified. . . . This alienates his wife, who sides with her mother against Andy, and thus dooms the happiness of the marriage." (Library J)

"Losers, about mature love, is without hope and [is] almost pure comedy. In the more subtle Winners, two commentators sporadically interrupt the unfolding drama of the lovers' last meeting before the catastrophe, with news of their drowning. The counterpoint as matter-of-fact with exuberant love talk is uncanny and chilling. . . . Friel combines unsentimental exposure of genuine feeling with ridicule of sentimental Irish religiosity. He has thereby transformed the Irish play by keeping its sentimental comix at a satirical distance and giving real humanity stage center. In Losers, however, his satire hovers, on the edge of creating a new stereotype of Irish humor."

Choice 5:1152 N '68 140w

"[These plays] have the same qualities as [Friel's] Philadelphia Here I Come!; freedom from conventional staging—use of flashbacks, changes of scene accomplished by removing one screen, narrators, and so on—interesting characters with real conflicts, and best of all the language of the Irish—sometimes vulgar, sometimes lyrical, but always vivid. The first play, Winners, is strangely touching. . . . The second play, Losers, is funny and bitter at the same time. . . . [Both] plays should prove challenging to theater groups." Marguerite McAneney

Library J 93:1650 Ap 15 '68 180w

FRIENDLY, ALFRED. Crime and publicity: the impact of news on the administration of justice, by Alfred Friendly and Ronald L. Goldfarb. 335p $5; pa $2.45 Vintage

071 Journalism. Justice, Administration of 67-15891

"The conflict between the constitutional guarantees of fair trial and free press are examined in this study . . . [which] calls for self-restraint by lawyers, policemen and other public officials in giving out prejudicial material as the chief defence against trial by publicity. At the same time the press should examine its own house: improved relations between the press and the bar might lead to ad hoc methods of responsible news handling in individual cases." (Economist)

Reviewed by W. L. Lucey

America 118:612 My 4 '68 70w

"[This book is] of considerable value since it contains a brief record of cases dealing with press regulation; critical evaluations of the Reardon Report; the Medina Report (Radio, Television and the Administration of Justice: A Documented Survey.) and the important New Jersey Supreme Court dictum in the Van Duyn case. For all serious students of the judicial process, constitutional law, journalism, and public administration."

Choice 4:1139 D '67 210w

Economist 224:735 Ag 26 '67 300w

"Although they offer no panacea, Mr. Friendly, managing editor of the Washington Post, and Mr. Goldfarb, a lawyer, have competently surveyed the field through empirical findings and understandable legal explanations. . . .

Their criticisms and conclusions are sound; the myth of England's press superiority is revealing; and their recommendation of TV in the courtroom, a bombshell. This book belongs with others of the genre in public and university libraries." E. J. Bander

Library J 92:2410 Je 15 '67 170w

"While it contains little that hasn't been said before [this book] has the virtue of assembling between two covers most, though not all of the basic issues involved. As a result, it is replete with 'on the one hand' and 'on the other hand' discussions of the nature of the problem and the various suggestions which have been proposed to deal with it. . . . Despite their apparent effort to be objective, the authors display an overall pro-press bias which leads to some inaccurate and unfortunate generalizations and, on occasion, to some invalid analysis and conclusions. . . . This, however, does not derogate its value to any reader interested in the subject." H. L. Will

New Repub 157:34 S ■ '67 3950w

FRIENDLY, HENRY J. Benchmarks. 324p $7.95 Univ. of Chicago press

340 Law—U.S.

67-12149

This collection of papers by a judge of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit "falls into four major divisions: (1) reflections on judging, especially the relative merits of legislative as against court initiative; (2) . . . 1962 lectures on administrative agencies; . . . (3) consideration of federal-state problems raised by the Erie and Miranda decisions; (4) tributes to [the author's] legal and judicial mentors—[U.S. Supreme Court Judges] Holmes, Cardozo, Frankfurter, and Hand." (Am Pol Sci R) Some of these papers have previously appeared in various legal periodicals such as the Brooklyn Law Review, Columbia Law Review, etc.

"Judge Friendly demonstrates exquisite style, mastery of legal niceties, catholic interests and sympathy for the behavioral sciences and other fields, all yoked to an impressive statesmanship or sense of the practical. . . . The first two groups of papers are the most relevant to the political scientist, as well as the most successful essays. Evaluation of the process of judging by an appellate judge rooted in the jurisprudential literature of the time is rare. . . . The two essays on criminal law seem to me to miss the mark. . . . In discussing Miranda he seems more wedded to narrow legalism and rather more willing to use clichéd emotionalisms than one might have expected. . . . [Nevertheless, while] indispensable reading for any student of administrative law, it is also useful for less specialized political scientists as well." Samuel Krislov

Am Pol Sci R 61:1134 D '67 600w

"This collection of essays . . . is intended for lawyers. . . . Friendly's most vivid piece is a brief against the present activism, particularly the Escobedo and Miranda decision, of the Supreme Court. . . . For those political scientists and constitutional historians who are not lawyers but who believe that by reading the Supreme Court reports they are able to keep current with 'law,' his book should be revealing. Whatever one may say of Friendly as a 'constitutionalist,' he is a better 'lawyer' than the members of the Court; and he has something to teach their admirers." J. P. Reid

J Am Hist 54:724 D '67 340w

FRIENDS, SOCIETY OF. See American Friends Service Committee

FRIERMOOD, ELISABETH HAMILTON. Focus on the bright land. 240p $3.95; lib bdg $4.70 Doubleday

67-19065

"Duped by her photographer brothers into cooking and washing for them on a camping and picture-taking trip through Ohio, Indiana and Illinois in the summer of 1881, 17-year-old unmistakably un-Victorian Victoria Bodkin keeps her part of the agreement. The boys take conventional photographs of the simple folk en route, while Vicky, intent on the land and hearts of the people, uses her imagination to get more natural, imposed but artistic pictures which earn her her family's respect and a bid from Atlantic Stereoscopic. A handsome young stranger provides the romance. . . . Grades six to eight." (Library J)

Best Sell 27:263 O 1 '67 70w

FRIERMOOD, E. H.—Continued

"Despite some sentimental writing ('she shivered with artistic delight') this is a lively, colorful period piece, sparked with romance. It's rather marvelous, though, that apparently every one of her shots came out so well." E. L. Buell

Book World p14 O 22 '67 170w

"The story is framed between the time of President Garfield's inauguration and his death, but the background of photography a hundred years ago and the characterizations of pretty, forthright Vicky and her impatient but affectionate brothers make the story anything but somber. Vicky's romance is predictable, but girls will not criticize that." R. H. V.

Horn Bk 43:757 D '67 240w

Reviewed by J. K. Meyers

Library J 92:4259 N 15 '67 80w

FRIS, HERMAN R., ed. The Pacific basin: a history of its geographical exploration. 457p pl maps $12 Am. geographical soc.

910.9 Pacific area—Discovery and exploration 67-12957

"Essentially a collection of closely related essays, this book has two stated purposes: 'to describe and discuss the highlights of the history of significant geographical exploration of the Pacific Basin, and to document the presentation as fully as possible.' . . . After a series of chapters . . . [giving] 'background' information, the major portion of the book is devoted to the diverse contributions to the exploration of the Pacific of many peoples down through the centuries." (Library J)

"This good and useful book, like all works that are a compilation of the writings of many authors, has its weakness. With [two exceptions] the book is written by geographers and exhibits their approach. This is good, for Pacific exploration has recently been covered mostly by historians and anthropologists. . . . The most thorough chapter is that devoted to the United States, and the weakest, that devoted to the French. The chapter on the Russians has political overtones, but is one of the most interesting for it provides details of Russian exploration not previously found in English. The approach in nearly all chapters is pedantic, and they are heavily overfootnoted. A notable exception is that by Skelton. . . . The preceding comments are not to detract from the very great merits of this book. It will be one of the most useful reference works on the Pacific for many years, for no other book so fully covers the entire story . . . from Magellan to the present." E. S. Dodge

Am Hist 73:437 D '67 280w

"Scholarly in nature, this book is recommended for large public libraries and academic libraries." H. R. Downey

Library J 92:2168 Je 1 '67 100w

FRILLMANN, PAUL. China: the remembered life, by Paul Frillmann and Graham Peck; with an intro. by John K. Fairbank. 291p il maps $5.95 Houghton

951.04 Sino-Japanese Conflict, 1937-1945. China—Description and travel 67-15527

"China's war with Japan and the ensuing Nationalist-Communist struggle . . . is recalled through the experiences of an American who lived in China during these years. Paul Frillmann was successively a missionary, chaplain of Chennault's 'Flying Tigers,' an officer in the China-based 14th Air Force, and a USIS official." (Library J)

Christian Century 85:761 Je 5 '68 70w

"[Many] characters of interest in China during those years stalk, swagger, or shuffle across the pages of this fascinating book. . . . To those of us denied firsthand experience in China, and who must watch it from afar masked by the drab face of communism, this is all tantalizingly exciting stuff. Not because this is a book of gossip about days long gone. But because it helps provide the warp and the woof in a picture of a country indistinct, confused, and blurred—today always seen at second-hand." John Hughes

Christian Science Monitor pC1 Je 11 '68 700w

"Though not oblivious to political issues, [Frillmann] prefers to focus upon his personal life. His accounts of everyday relations with the Chinese people, vignettes or the 'Flying Tigers' and their commander, sketches of Nationalist generals both able and incompetent, and his impressions of Chiang's China in its death throes on the mainland add zest to a richly informative book. Mr. Frillmann, who speaks Chinese, was closer to the people than most Americans ever could be. Human warmth, good humor, and occasional flashes of anger pervade these memoirs." Hyman Kublin

Library J 93:1133 Mr 15 '68 180w

FRISBIE, RICHARD. Who put the bomb in Father Murphy's chowder? Irreverent essays. 206p $4.50 Doubleday

282 Catholic Church—Anecdotes, facetiae, satire, etc. Wit and humor 68-12772

This collection of writings concerns "the incongruities which can result when Catholics—choir directors, pastors, nuns, bishops—are caught in the hurricane of change unleashed by the 20th Century and Vatican Council II. Mr. Frisbie [is the] author of How to Peel a Sour Grape [BRD 1965]." (Library J) Some of these pieces appeared in slightly different form in Extension, United States Catholic, The Sign, and Marriage.

Reviewed by W. F. Gavin

America 118:678 My 18 '68 320w

"[These articles] are witty and sensible. . . . Not only Catholics, but Christians generally will find here a voice that needs to be heard, neither extremely Left nor extremely Right. Here is a dedicated and earnest layman who views the Church situation with a clear unjaundiced eye and has the skill to put his ideas into amusing but ponderable prose. I liked particularly his concept of un-habited nuns (they are wearing ordinary dress) infiltrating the chancery offices in a kind of guerilla action. . . . Irreverent the essays are not, in spite of the allegation by the publishers. A propos they are. Have some fun and start some thinking by reading them."

Best Sell 28:37 Ap 15 '68 190w

"[Most of these pieces] are new; all are timely, but just irreverent enough to force a smile from progressive and traditionalist alike. Good public library fare." J. K. Amrhein

Library J 93:1146 Mr 15 '68 90w

FRISCH, KARL VON. A biologist remembers; tr. by Lisbeth Gombrich. 200p il maps $6 Pergamon

B or 92

67-16653

The autobiography of the Austrian born zoologist, author of The Dancing Bees: An Account of the Life and Senses of the Honey Bee (BRD 1955), who was a professor at the Zoological Institute in Munich until his retirement. Bibliography. Index. Originally published in 1956 entitled Erinnerungen eines Biologen.

"A thoughtful and introspective autobiography. . . . The long chain of events which led to [Frisch's] working out the 'language' of bees is inextricably woven throughout this charming little book. Skipping over the dry chronology of events one finds bits of advice on lecturing, writing, teaching, and frequent emphasis upon the importance and validity of the scientific method. An encouragement to any young student about to pursue a career in biology."

Choice 4:1133 D '67 130w

"Karl von Frisch was born in 1886 into a family that had been thoroughly medical and academic on both sides for two generations. One is struck by the totality of that family commitment and the security and sense of mission it imparted to young Karl throughout his childhood. . . . Possibly this serene history and the unquestioning, priestly reverence for science are responsible for the sparseness of personal detail given by von Frisch in his autobiography. . . . Images of people and events tend to be flat and stroboscopic, too often reduced to frozen little anecdotes each allotted a measure of puckish wit. Great personages become stereotypes. . . . [But] more importantly, we know from this autobiography the gentle, shy man that von Frisch in fact is." E. O. Wilson

Science 159:864 F 23 '68 900w

FRISCH, KARL VON. The dance language and orientation of bees; tr. by Leigh E. Chadwick. 566p il $15 Belknap press of Harvard univ. press

595.7 Bees. Insects—Habits and behavior

67-17321

This book describes "the experiments which led to the author's conclusions concerning the ability of bees to communicate with one another . . . [and] their ability to use celestial cues to navigate in flight. Summaries are found at the end of each major section." (Library J) Bibliography. Index. Originally published in 1965 under the title Tanzsprache und Orientierung der Bienen.

Choice 5:368 My '68 200w

"It will be most unfortunate if the non-scientist is deterred from reading this book because of its size or its specialized subject matter, for it is a delightfully well-written, commendably translated, and competently illustrated description of some of the more remarkable phenomena to be found in living organisms. The scientists will view this book as a welcome summary of a half century's labors of a most esteemed colleague." J. B. Buffington

Library J 93:1010 Mr 1 '68 150w

"Many of [von Frisch's] early papers are obscure, and most of his work on odors and their role in honeybee communication is little known in the English-speaking world. This book will serve to improve many lectures and to clarify certain misunderstandings and voids in the minds of those not thoroughly familiar with the literature. . . . The most valuable portions of the book are the interspersed summaries, where the facts are refined and carefully stated so that the reader has no trouble understanding what is meant. Regrettably, the English is not quite as good as it might have been. However, I have not found any words . . . that were not fully understandable upon a second reading; it might be fairer to the translator to admit that German is not an easy language to translate. The work of Professor von Frisch has long been a model in the biological sciences. That he has condensed his knowledge and findings, together with those of others, into one well-planned volume sets an even higher standard. It is a guideline for others." R. A. Morse

Natur Hist 77:72 My '68 700w

"This is a technical work, but it is beautifully produced, and anyone who wants a sound and simple account of von Frisch's extraordinary findings will get it best from von Frisch himself. There is no discussion of the parallelism with man, either in the formation of societies or in the use of language. But a brief section shows how the symbolic representations of bees may have arisen, long ago, from movements such as those made by flies when searching for a supply of sugar of which they have been deprived." J. Z. Young

N Y Rev of Books 11:37 N 21 '68 290w

"[This volume] will surely take its place in the tiny group of genuine classics of scientific literature. It is the definitive account of the waggle dance and other forms of honeybee communication as they have been so consummately elucidated by von Frisch and his students, and it contains in addition a clear summary of the vast lore of experiments on the sensory physiology and orientation of the honeybee. . . . [It] is a well-written encyclopedia of the subject." E. O. Wilson

Science 159:864 F 23 '68 900w

FRISCH, MAX. Three plays; tr. by James L. Rosenberg. 145p $4.95 Hill & Wang 832 67-23515

"This volume contains three of [the German-Swiss playwright's] plays. When the War Was Over concerns the conflicts and guilt of Germans confronted with the realities of their recent past. The Great Rage of Philip Hotz dramatizes an intellectual's inability to take action for himself, to break from the prison of an impossible world. . . . Don Juan, or The Love of Geometry presents Don Juan as a scientist, the women in his life being but episodes of life secondary to his pursuit of mathematics. The world catches up to him, and he meets a final hell in marriage and children." (Library J)

"This collection of Frisch plays makes six that are [now] available in Dramabooks. With these three plays, Frisch's major dramatic works have appeared in English in this series. The translations are workmanlike and quite idiomatic. . . . There are no general introductory remarks, no comments to the plays. For the student who wants more than just the texts of these plays, this edition will not be adequate."

Choice 5:200 Ap '68 120w

"[The Great Rage of Philip Hotz] is the most effective play in the volume. . . . That the world shapes men rather than the other way around, is the shared theme of these three plays. This is a volume for readers interested in Mr. Frisch's work, and/or post-war European theater. Esquire magazine published The Great Rage of Philip Hotz, in a different translation in October, 1962." Irving Wortis

Library J 92:2801 Ag '67 170w

FRISCHAUER, WILLI. Onassis. 277p il $6.95
Meredith

B or 92 Onassis, Aristotle Socrates

68-19027

A "delineation of the major facts in the life of the Greek shipping millionaire." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Mario Puzo

Book World p12 J1 28 '68 500w

"Unfortunately, at no time in the whole book does this unique man come alive for us. While we constantly marvel at Onassis's business acumen, we never see more than the facade of this man. A pity! Mr. Frischauer has such an abundance of absolutely unique information at his disposal. While certainly not the definitive biography by any means, this is nevertheless, suggested for moderate purchase." Sylvia Mechanic

Library J 93:1996 My 15 '68 200w

"The book is an able public relations operation, a sympathetic plea for the young Smyrnan-Greek son of a wealthy tobacco merchant, who by his skill saved his family from obliteration in the razing of Smyrna in 1922, and who made his first million dollars as an immigrant to Buenos Aires by the time he was 23. . . . [The] Onassis presented by Mr. Frischauer bears no more resemblance to a human being than James Bond or any other character fantasized by Ian Fleming. What makes him more interesting is that there is a real person hiding behind this image. I wonder what he's really like." Arthur Calder-Marshall

New Statesman 76:55 J1 12 '68 750w

"Frischauer appears to have combined the two essentials of biography—involvement and distance—in the worst possible way. He is just close enough to Onassis to forfeit his objectivity as a reporter. On the other hand, he is remote enough from the details of the Greek magnate's personal life to miss all the flavor of his subject's charismatic character. What he writes is not the full, fleshed-out, definitive portrait of this wealthiest of men. It is, rather, a heavily prejudiced brief for the shipbuilder which takes arms against his enemies, outlines in cool, unflagging detail the arithmetic of his financial triumphs and leaves to the reader's speculation the salient aspects of his private life." P. D. Zimmerman

Newsweek 72:72 J1 8 '68 750w

TLS p755 J1 18 '68 410w

FRISTRUP, BØRGE. The Greenland ice cap. 312p il col il maps $20 Univ. of Wash. press

551.3 Glaciers. Greenland—Discovery and exploration 67-31985

This volume discusses some fifty "expeditions to the ice cap during the last two centuries . . . [and the] upsurge in activity since the opening of Thule Air Base in 1951 is documented. . . . [Included are] the story of 'Camp Century,' the United States research base buried within the ice and served by an atomic reactor; the account of observations carried on during the International Geophysical Year of 1957-58; and of the early fifties when young French explorers cruised all over the middle of Greenland under the . . . direction of Paul Emile Victor." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography. Originally published entitled Indlandsisen.

"Dr. Fristrup has brought together and summarized the work of hundreds of scientists and numerous expeditions and presented it in an understandable style for the general public. . . . His personal touch makes this more than just a simple summary. [The handsome book] will appeal to a wide audience. . . . Recommended for academic, large public libraries, and particularly all arctic, geographical, and glaciological collections." N. T. Corley

Library J 93:993 Mr 1 '68 150w

Reviewed by W. R. Farrand

Natur Hist 77:69 Ap '68 800w

"[This book] is large and handsome, illustrated with clear maps and magnificent photographs in color and monochrome. But it is no mere coffee-table exhibit. . . . Mr. Fristrup has contrived to pack into the record all kinds of fascinating details. . . . [The book] is a very good value indeed, it provides a historical record not available before, and is the first full account of the scientific and technological revolution that has brought understanding of the origins, persistence and possible future of the world's major ice caps. The book is also a fine example of Danish printing craftsmanship." Trevor Lloyd

FRISTRUP, BØRGE,—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p6 F 11 '68 1000w

"The English book is a slightly expanded version of that which appeared in Danish in 1963, and it incorporates some more recent material. . . . There is a comprehensive index. . . and a useful chronological list of expeditions and major scientific discoveries on the ice sheet. The text is always interesting and easy to follow. . . . there are, however, several irritating pieces of repetition. . . . Throughout the book there is an almost complete lack of coordination between text and illustrative material. This is most marked in the case of maps and diagrams. . . . But these are small criticisms. . . . There is a great deal to absorb the attention of both the scientist and the layman. . . . There will be many who will appreciate [Frstrup's] succinct summaries of past and present glaciological thought." B. S. John

Science 160:177 Ap 12 '68 700w

Sci Am 218:136 F '68 550w

FRODSHAM, J. D., comp. An anthology of Chinese verse; Han Wei Chin and the Northern and Southern dynasties; tr. and annot. by J. D. Frodsham; with the collaboration of Ch'eng Hsi. 198p $7 Oxford

895.1 Chinese poetry—Collections

"Some 200 poems . . . selected from Ting Fu-pao's anthology [Complete Poems of The Han, Three Kingdoms, Chin, and the Northern and Southern Dynasties] are here rendered with biographical information about the authors and . . . annotation for the individual selections." (Va Q R)

"Here is a systematic presentation of the representative poets of the medieval period in China . . . almost all [translated] with accuracy and skill. The book is designed as pleasant reading for the general reader. It should be cautioned, however, that while there were a few great poets in these politically turbulent times, the best period in Chinese poetry came later. To the scholar, the lack of reference features such as bibliography and index—not the fault of the translators—makes the book less valuable."

Choice 5:784 S '68 160w

"[This] collection covers . . . a century B.C. through five centuries A.D. The chief advantage here is that the selection is . . . based on what is felt to be the best—not the most translatable. As a result there are dozens of names of poets never before translated, some of them well worth reading. Among the over fifty poets represented, probably T'ao Ch'ien is the best known, and there are a dozen of his poems. . . . A half dozen poets are represented by fifteen to twenty poems, so become distinct literary figures. . . . There is indeed great richness both in personalities and styles, so that this anthology fills in what to date has been little more than a blank in the Western concept of the development of Chinese poetry. It is good to realize then, that this is the first in a projected series of four volumes." R. E. Teele

Poetry 112:347 Ag '68 500w

"[This volume] contains some of the finest poetry from the Han to the Sui dynasties [and] is also indispensable as an introduction to the poetry of the T'ang dynasty, the Golden Age of the Chinese lyric. . . . Lively ballad-style poetry, often anonymous, flourished beside more sophisticated lyrics . . . and many stylistic innovations took place, particularly the introduction of tone patterns as a part of poetic form. . . . But this historical value is only an additional merit in these fresh and well-translated poems . . . the scholarly notes accompanying them answer any questions which might be raised and even some that might not. . . . A useful biographical note introduces each new poet, and there is an admirable general introduction which outlines the historical and literary background of the poems and deals in a balanced manner with the dependence of many of the poets on drugs or alcohol for escape from a real world of war, disorder and sudden death."

TLS p916 S 28 '67 290w

Va Q R 44:xxii winter '68 60w

FRODSHAM, JOHN DAVID. The murmuring stream; the life and works of the Chinese nature poet Hsieh Ling-yün (385-433), Duke of K'ang-Lo. 2v 231;220p pl maps ea $6.10 Oxford

895.1 Hsieh Ling-yün

This study traces "the background of the powerful Hsieh family and describes . . . the poet's relations first with the Chin dynasty, which honoured him and his forebears with office and titles, and then with its successor, which . . . put him to death. . . . The author explores the role of the poet in the political intrigues of the day, outlines his contribution to early Chinese Buddhism, and . . . traces the development of landscape poetry in the years immediately before Hsieh's time. . . . [This work includes] translations, close to seventy in number [which] represent nearly all the extant poems that Hsieh wrote in the shih form." (TLS)

"As translations from the Chinese go, [the poems] are reasonably accurate and readable. But without some exposition or critical comment to accompany them, it is doubtful whether the reader will fully appreciate the significance of the poems or the special place they occupy in Chinese literary history, and this Dr. Frodsham fails to provide. . . . Faced with a careful, scholarly work such as this, . . . it seems ungrateful to ask for more. Yet no matter how one tries to understand Dr. Frodsham's intentions, such a reaction is almost inevitable."

TLS p818 Ag 1 '68 490w

"[This work separates] the scholarly footnotes from the rest of the textual material by dividing the . . . study . . . into two volumes. Dr. Frodsham's important and highly competent translation and interpretation of the writings of this poet-philosopher of fifth-century China suffers only from the difficulty of referring from one volume to the other because of the unnecessarily clumsy indexing scheme."

Va Q R 44:clxvi autumn '68 70w

FROHOCK, FRED M. The nature of political inquiry. 218p il $6.65 Dorsey press

320.01 Political science

67-21010

Among the topics included in this study are "the epistemological premises of logical positivism and metaphysics; the nature of functional and causal explanations; the characteristics of scientific social analysis; the role of values in political behavior and political analysis." (Am Pol Sci R)

"Although one may quarrel with some of Frohock's specific interpretations, his basic conclusions are widely accepted by the community of practicing political scientists. Yet these conclusions do not comprise a distinctive solution to basic epistemological problems. . . . Nor am I entirely convinced—and this is more serious—of the implications Frohock draws concerning the additional kinds of empirical research that should be included on our agenda. . . . Frohock is familiar with recent efforts to apply economic analysis to the study of politics. But aside from some interesting comments on the concept of rationality he does not examine the claims of this important school of analysis. . . . It is thus difficult to accept as decisive the recommendations said to derive from his philosophic inquiry." Edwin Fogelman

Am Pol Sci R 62:973 S '68 1200w

"A genuinely philosophic concern is manifest in each chapter of this meaty, candid, and courageous effort to say what the theoretical state of the discipline is. . . . [The author] is insistently aware of the 'costs,' as he calls them, of both rationalism and empiricism. He persists in bringing 'the noncognitive beginnings of all inquiry' to the forefront of discussion at appropriate points. . . . The volume serves especially well as an advanced introduction to the philosophic issues underlying political science research."

Choice 5:870 S '68 180w

FROISSART, JEAN. Froissart's chronicles; tr. and ed. by John Jolliffe. 448p maps $2.45 Modern lib.

940.1 Hundred Years' War, 1339-1453. Europe
—History—476-1492 66-21508

A description of the age of chivalry by "a Frenchman who spent many years in England at the Court of Edward III [and] devoted the whole of his adult life to writing a chronicle of those events to which he was an eyewitness or of which he was able to get first-hand accounts. . . . The Chronicles cover the period 1326 to 1400 and include descriptions of all the important events that took place in England, France, Scotland, Ireland and Flanders during these years." (Publisher's note) Genealogical tables. Bibliography. Index.

"This latest English translation . . . is a privilege to own and a joy to read. True, this is not the whole text, as Jolliffe has cut the narrative here and there to avoid excessive length and duplication (though adequate summaries are given of the material omitted). It is true also that the modern English used in the translation does lack the flavor and the charm of Berners' older speech. But these things are as nothing compared with the favor which Jolliffe has done us all by providing us with a fluent, clear, and eminently readable English text of one of the great narrative artists of all time. Enthusiastically and unreservedly recommended for every college library."

Choice 5:631 J1 '68 90w

"The need for a good translation of Froissart's Chronicles into modern English is unfortunately not met by Mr. Jolliffe's edition. . . . As a result of omissions and abridgments, many of which are not indicated by the editor, [this edition] bears little relationship to Froissart's garrulous original. To reduce his work to one volume successfully is neither practicable nor, perhaps, is it desirable. Events in Brittany, Gascony, Spain and Portugal are savagely cut or summarized. . . . while Froissart's less accurate accounts of events in England and Scotland (many of which were derived from his predecessor Jean le Bel) are reproduced in full. To translate Froissart's French in the cavalier way of Mr. Jolliffe scarcely does justice to the original. . . . The general reader, for whom the translation is intended, may also be misled by certain editorial shortcomings. The index is particularly poor. . . . The maps which illustrate the volume are generally well produced, and there is a useful bibliography for the general reader."

TLS p508 My 16 '68 550w

FROLOV, VADIM. What it's all about; tr. by Joseph Barnes. 254p $3.95 Doubleday

68-27818

Fourteen-year-old "Sasha's mother, a well-known [Russian] actress, has left her husband and two children to live with her co-star. . . . The news [is kept] from Sasha until it is broken to him in the crudest terms by a schoolmate. The effect of the betrayal is to make his own first sexual stirrings totally unacceptable. . . . Age twelve and up." (Book World)

Best Sell 28:375 D 1 '68 80w

Reviewed by D. B. Whitman

Book World p30 (children's issue)
N 3 '68 150w

"A novel too long, too choppy, too crammed with ferociously anguished people and tumbling episodes. . . . [A stilted translation] contributes to the failure of this effort at emotional realism. Readers do get some sense of the Russian setting, but a book such as Klára Jarunkova's Don't Cry for Me combines the authentic flavor of contemporary life in a Slavic country with a far superior treatment of a similar growing-up theme." D. G. Stavn
Library J 93:4731 D 15 '68 260w [YA]

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p60 N 3 '68 30w

"[This novel] belongs to the best tradition of Russian adolescent literature. . . . Frolov's skilled juxtaposition of episodes . . . is a plea for more truthfulness in every aspect of daily life. . . . This is the novel's merit—it treats of adult hypocrisy vividly, concretely. . . . We are shown a whole gallery of Soviet types. The adolescents are endearing; some of the adults are frightening. . . . The basic harshness of contemporary Russian life comes through . . . along with a certain traditional warmth. . . . Most adolescents everywhere would find it easy to identify with spontaneous, warmhearted Sasha. The background of this novel, and some of the attitudes depicted, may be disconcerting to American readers. However, for those interested in finding out about Russians (rather than about sex) [this] should make splendid reading." Olga Carlisle

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p2 N 3 '68 1000w [YA]

"Thoroughly contemporary, the novel has the elemental force of Greek tragedy, poignant and inevitable. Sasha has a universal quality, and his conflict between loyalty and resentment is as convincing as his first tender love affair." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:71 N 9 '68 140w [YA]

FROMAN, LEWIS A. The Congressional process; strategies, rules, and procedures, by Lewis A. Froman, Jr. 221p $5; pa $2.95 Little 328.73 U.S. Congress 67-18261

An examination of "the rules and procedures, both formal and informal, which channel the course of Congress. Both Houses come under this scrutiny, and the analysis includes an examination of organization, process, and formulation of legislation, and the resultant effect on national policy. Differences and similarities between the two Houses are examined and the differing impact and activity assessed." (Choice) Index.

"The first publication under the Study of Congress project financed by the Carnegie Corporation and administered by the American Political Science Association, Froman's contribution is welcome because it addresses itself to a number of variables internal to the operations of Congress that have not been explored before. . . . The principal strength of the book is that for the first time we have a study that treats the discharge petition, legislative calendars, suspension of the rules, and questions of germaneness as variables that relate in a significant way to a continuum of decisions and bargains that are made at each stage of the process. . . . Ironically, the book's major failing is a derivative of its strength. Froman inundates the reader with the number and range of procedural conditions that impinge on legislative decisions without providing, in this reader's judgment, an adequate conceptual framework for it all to make sense to the undergraduate." Eugene Eidenberg
Am Pol Sci R 62:263 Mr '68 750w

"Froman writes with a clarity that renders meaningful a technical and precise subject."

[This book] will be welcomed by the specialist and the advanced reader."

Choice 5:262 Ap '68 160w

FROMAN, ROBERT. Baseball-istics: the basic physics of baseball; il. by Sam Salant. 127p $3.49 Putnam

796.357 Baseball—Juvenile literature. Physics—Juvenile literature 67-14804

"In an attempt to present the laws of physics in a style pleasing to young readers, the author formulates a mythical World Series of the year 2000 wherein he . . . presents the events of the climactic seventh game. He relates the laws of Newton and Galileo to the speed of pitched balls, batted balls, and base runners, differentiates between speed and velocity, and explains the relationships among force, mass, and acceleration. [Index.] Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"This work contains several flaws which are decided handicaps. In the opening pages the author states that a right-handed throwing pitcher must keep his left foot on the pitching 'rubber' and stride forward with his right. This is incorrect; he does the opposite. Froman then interprets the curve ball. His explanation, if not erroneous, is confusing. A successful work despite these defects." J. A. Bolas
Library J 92:2042 My 15 '67 90w

"The slightly creaky framework of an Imaginary World Series game . . . carries a well-balanced load of physics. . . . The wobble of a spineless knuckle ball and the fall of a base runner who has lost a little of the needed friction are about as deep as the treatment goes. It touches quantitative dynamics at some points, using poundals for force units. Altogether it is an attractive work, if indeed readers beyond the fifth grade are found who will enjoy this horsehide-coated and good-humored lesson." Philip and Phyllis Morrison
Sci Am 217:140 D '67 110w

FROMM, ERICH. The revolution of hope; toward a humanized technology. 162p $5.95 Harper

301.2 Technology and civilization 68-31745

The psychoanalyst interweaves "discussions about economic problems and human character structure with analysis of contemporary social and political problems. . . . He notes that there seems to be a growing hopelessness throughout the world. Why? Dr. Fromm believes that along with the process of mechanizing society, 'man himself is being transformed into a part of the total machine . . . passive, unalive, and with little feeling.' According to him, we are entering the second Industrial Revolution, which 'is characterized by the fact that not only . . . living energy has been replaced by mechanical energy, but . . . human thought is being replaced by the thinking of machines.'" (Library J)

"Violence, psychic and physical, is the only mode known to cultures that have lost their traditional image. In this knowledge there is hope. There is no hope in Fromm's 19th-century approach that is puzzled when confronting 'the fact that our economy rests upon arms production . . . must we produce sick people in order to have a healthy economy. . . . The old phrase 'man makes himself' now has the added relevance that man must make his own identity. This is total. The old problem of adjusting ends to means is a fragmentary 19th-century problem beyond which Fromm is unable to go." Marshall McLuhan

Book World p4 N 10 '68 750w

"[This] will undoubtedly become another 'classic.' . . . [Fromm] concludes that there is still hope for the 'crisis of modern man,' and he offers a number of proposals so that the reader ends with feelings of hopefulness instead of hopelessness. This book is highly recommended for public and university libraries." H. I. Schotz

Library J 93:4125 N 1 '68 250w

"According to Fromm, our technological society, by unwittingly permitting the pervasive development of mechanistic categories of thought, risks a similar loss of human essence. [His] answer is a plea for participatory institutions, plus a tentative proposal on how this might be structured. . . . A movement of this sort on a huge scale would indeed have a profound impact. But there are loose ends in Fromm's proposal as it stands now, which he would be the first to admit. . . . These remarks are not meant to deny the importance and interest of [his] proposal." N. S. Core

New Repub 159:30 D 7 '68 1000w
Reviewed by Ashley Montagu
Sat R 51:38 D 14 '68 600w

FROMM, HAROLD. Bernard Shaw and the theater in the nineties; a study of Shaw's dramatic criticism. 234p $5 Univ. of Kan; for sale by Univ. of Kan. press

809.2 Shaw, George Bernard. Drama—History and criticism 67-14430

An "account of the 1895-98 Saturday Review essays and other Shavian drama criticisms." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Fromm's handling is shallow and immature. His synthesis of Shaw's views on Ibsen, current theaters, the censorship, etc., is little more than a patchwork of quotations hitched together with transitional statements which are rarely attempts at analysis and never segments of a concerted argument."

Choice 5:213 Ap '68 170w

"The first general attempt to deal exclusively with the polemical playwright's role as critic of 19th-Century drama. . . . Extensive chapter notes and an up-to-date bibliography attest to Mr. Fromm's zealous research. Shavians seeking new and original material will be disappointed, but his book is intended for the neophyte." L. A. Rachow

Library J 92:3643 O 15 '67 90w

TLS p800 J1 25 '68 230w

FROST, DAVID. The English [by] David Frost and Antony Jay [Eng title: To England with love]. 255p $5.95 Stein & Day

914.2 Great Britain—Civilization. National characteristics 67-25622

This revision of the authors' To England with Love is a criticism of contemporary English attitudes and behavior by two British writers, one of whom was the star of the British television show entitled That Was The Week That Was.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 221:126 Mr '68 600w

Best Sell 27:435 F 15 '68 180w

"Rather a funny book. For one thing, it is crammed with those bizarre anecdotes and quotations dear to the hearts of all connoisseurs of English life. . . . The chapter in which delinquency is analyzed as a reaction to the sheer boredom of contemporary urban life is one of the best in the book. [The authors] are also good on the remnants of English Puritanism, which they see, quite correctly, as a dominating feature of most Englishmen's psychology. The whole book, in fact, is basically a Puritan reaction against Puritanism. . . . But [it] will be read, not for its solutions, but as an enjoyable bash at 'figures of authority': the judiciary, the church, Parliament—all those institutions and individuals who, naturally, make us hoot with laughter these days." Anthony Hartley

Book World p3 F 18 '68 800w

"Large chunks of [the book] sound as if the authors had burrowed among 'This England' files and built their case around the most patently unconventional—especially those coming from power-mad officials. . . . Neither author has been able to impose a pattern on 'The English,' to prevent it becoming a mishmash of exaggeration, wit, foolishness, and wisdom—often irritating but always entertaining. At its best it takes over from the satirical cartoon and does an excellent job of pomposity pricking." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p11 F '68 500w

Critic 26:78 Je '68 90w

Reviewed by Norman Horrocks

Library J 93:1491 Ap 1 '68 200w

Reviewed by J. C. Lobdell

Nat R 20:563 Je 4 '68 200w

"[Contains] some nice lines, but not enough. . . . The best humor in the book is compiled rather than contrived, residing in comic or startling revelations of eccentricity of the kind which New Statesman collects for its 'This England' feature and which is best exemplified here by . . . the sign on the Yorkshire moors which says: 'It is forbidden to throw stones at this notice.' [The authors] aimed at a quickfire iconoclastic survey of post-imperial England, but most of these icons have been thoroughly clusted already by better marksmen."

N Y Times Bk R p16 F 25 '68 360w

Reviewed by Howard Junker

Newsweek 71:100 Mr 11 '68 550w

Reviewed by J. H. Plumb

Sat R 51:23 Mr 30 '68 750w

"The bite of its social criticism is made tolerably painless by the book's often irritating way of flirting behind a half-serious, half-comic mask. . . . The casual assumptions about the absurdity of the parliamentary system . . . would be offensive in their superficial arrogance if the reader were expected to stop and think about them for twenty seconds on end. But he is rushed on to the next topic, soothed and flattered by this junior-tycoonish identification with the interests of the common viewer. Snags and embarrassments are lost in the slipstream."

TLS p33 Ja 11 '68 370w

FROST, DAVID. The presidential debate, 1968; David Frost talks with Hubert H. Humphrey [and others]. 126p $4.95 Stein & Day

973.923 U.S.—Politics and government—1961- 68-31362

The author of The English (BRD 1968) presents television interviews with the nine presidential candidates in which they discuss their ideas and policies.

"David Frost, first known for his penetrating satire on British TV's 'That Was The Week That Was,' has obviously done his homework on the candidates, their speeches, writings, and political records. His interviews elicit the basic personal and political philosophy of each Presidential aspirant. . . . This book offers the reader a rare opportunity to compare candidates under similar circumstances, unimpeded by political press-agency and hullabaloo. This book is a necessary purchase for public and college libraries." Suzanne Lennon

Library J 93:2839 Ag '68 150w

"Richard Nixon's responses to Mr. Frost are sound, lucid, even scholarly. John Lindsay is equally clear in his answers, as is Ronald Reagan, who also comes across one-dimensional. Vice President Hubert Humphrey exudes sunlight and joy. But Nelson Rockefeller's ponderous comments sometimes give one the feeling of wading through cement. Equally complex is Eugene McCarthy, though his remarks are worth a second or third reading; he emerges as the most unusual and original of the candidates. George Wallace is the most vehement. . . . From these self-portraits a kind of composite picture takes shape. Most of those interviewed are obviously high-minded, dedicated, idealistic men. . . . Fascinating segments of the book deal with John Lindsay's evolution into a Republican rather than a Democrat, and Rockefeller's story of the racial explosion in a 'model city.' . . . For its insights into the minds and hearts of these politicians, [this book] provides hours of thought-provoking reading."

M. L. Coit

Sat R 51:28 J1 13 '68 600w

FROST, DAVID. L. The school of Shakespeare; the influence of Shakespeare on English drama, 1600-42. 304p $9.50 Cambridge

822.3 Shakespeare, William. English drama—History and criticism [68-11283]

The author's premise is that "The Jacobean dramatists make better sense if seen as working in Shakespeare's light." . . . [Dr Frost attempts to show that] certain writers—Middleton especially—have been radically transformed, while Webster and Ford reacted against the dominated tragic mode, and yet exploited the master for their own purposes. Almost all Shakespeare's successors were happy to lift an idea, a phrase, a character or a scene. More important, Shakespeare's influence revolutionized two dramatic forms, the Revenge Play and the Romance; Dr Frost produces fresh evidence that the supposed initiators—Marston and Beaumont and Fletcher—merely followed Shakespeare's lead." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"There are long chapters on Middleton, Massinger, Webster and Ford, Beaumont and Fletcher. . . . The chapter on Middleton is one of the best. . . . Dr Frost's account of Middleton's development is fresh and imaginative, yet for all its plausibility it suffers from over-compression and a too drastic selection of the relevant material. . . . The chapter on Massinger . . . is the most unrelentingly thesis-like, thorough, worthy, but wearisome. . . . Dr Frost has certainly succeeded in freshening and reinvigorating his subject. His many hypotheses amount to almost a new map of Jacobean drama. . . . [however] his style could be improved."

Economist 228:49 J1 13 '68 550w

TLS p852 Ag 8 '68 600w

"The book is intelligent and discriminating, it unearths much new information (particularly about the influence of 'Hamlet' on subsequent revenge plays) and it succeeds in establishing a considerable Shakespearean influence in the period. But Frost's argument is also perverse, for he first sees Shakespeare's influence almost everywhere, and then concludes that no dramatist, except Middleton in 'The Changeling,' was capable of following it with any profit. . . . [But] by looking at all early seventeenth-century dramatists exclusively with Shakespearean criteria (and rather old-fashioned ones at that—'Shakespearean moral order and the developing tragic character') [Frost] falsifies these dramatists and prevents us from appreciating them on their own terms."

Va Q R 44:clvi autumn '68 170w

FROUD, NINA, ed. Chaliapin. See Chaliapin, F. I.

FROUD, NINA. The world book of egg and cheese dishes. 176p $2.95 Horizon press

641.6 Cookery—Eggs. Cookery—Cheese 68-14713

This is a volume in a series by the editor of Larousse Gastronomique. "Recipes are given with English and American measures, and include European specialties. . . . [There are recipes] for omelettes, souffles, and hot and cold egg dishes . . . egg beverages and desserts, and chapters on butters and sauces." (Library J) Glossary. Index.

Best Sell 27:481 Mr 15 '68 40w

"[These recipes] would aid Lenten meal planning. . . . This is a handy book, modestly priced." Alice Alexander

Library J 93:2241 Je 1 '68 80w

FROUD, NINA. The world book of hors-d'oeuvre and salads. 152p $2.95 Horizon press

641.8 Cookery. Salads 68-14714

The "hors-d'oeuvre recipes range from . . . classics of gastronomy to ways of dressing up cooked or raw vegetables— . . . [and are] gathered from many countries—some . . . to quicken the palate . . . [others] to blunt the edge of appetite. . . . There are recipes from all over the world for green salads, salads of raw and cooked vegetables, fish, seafood, meat and poultry salads, salads based on rice and pasta products, fruit salads . . . salad dressings and sauces. . . . English, Continental, and American weights and measures are given in the recipes." (Intro) Glossary. Index.

"This is fine for the cook who wants to make something different."

Best Sell 27:481 Mr 15 '68 40w

"Nina Froud [is the] editor of Larousse Gastronomique. . . . [Recipes include European specialties] made with aubergines, plover's eggs, bucklings, hake, Dover prawns, snails, turbot, and whitebait [which] limit the use of this cookbook for American housewives. [The] book, which is not illustrated, is recommended for special collections and limited purchase." Alice Alexander

Library J 93:2241 Je 1 '68 80w

FRYE, ALTON. Nazi Germany and the American hemisphere, 1933-1941. 229p $6.75 Yale univ. press

327.43 Propaganda, German. Germany—Foreign relations—America. America—Foreign relations—Germany. World War, 1939-1945—Propaganda 67-13433

The author, a member of the research staff of The Rand corporation, concludes from an examination of Nazi activities in the Americas and an analysis of Hitler's opinions of the United States that the New World as a consequence of a German victory in Europe "would have faced an unending succession of political assaults." (Am Hist R)

"The description of Nazi activities in this hemisphere is fascinating, but the most interesting fact to emerge from this study is how generally and completely they failed, especially in the United States and Canada. . . . The chapters devoted to [Hitler's] views of the Americas are in my opinion the most valuable in the book. These views were distinguished primarily by his ignorance about America and his underestimation of the power of the United States. . . . [Nevertheless] I do not agree with Frye's conclusion that the Western Hemisphere formed an important part of Hitler's global ambitions. He had no specific plans for America." Norman Rich

Am Hist R 73:444 D '67 650w

"Included in his analysis is an excellent presentation of the complications and contradictions of the Nazi organization—how the party apparatus came into conflict with the regular operations of the foreign service, and, in fact, with the numerous parts of its own organizations. . . . The discussion of Hitler's latent hostility to the United States . . . does not contribute essentially to the author's revealing recitation of the meat of all the important archives. He also develops strong justification for America's entry and participation in the war. Some may think these arguments overshadow in emphasis the scholarly delineation of Nazi intrigues and activities in the Western hemisphere. But this reviewer finds the concluding observations a natural ending for such a study. This is, indeed, a valuable contribution to our understanding of the Nazi system and of Hitler." J. K. Pollock

Ann Am Acad 374:233 N '67 650w

"How can Hitler have come to commit so great a blunder as to be unready for the American entry? The short answer is partly that he did not think far ahead . . . that when he began the war in 1939 he hoped it would be a quick one. Mr. Frye does not omit to give this answer. In the course of reaching it, however, he examines a lot of peripheral material that obscures the issue. His justification for this is that he is chiefly interested in a different question: was the United States wise or unwise in its policy up to 1941 and in its participation in the war between 1941 and 1945? But this explanation uncovers the main weakness of his book. For the material which only obscures the answer to the first question can do nothing to construct an answer to the second."

FRYE, ALTON—Continued

Economist 224:222 J1 15 '67 480w

"In these days of increasing American commitments overseas, revisionist assertions that the United States should never have become involved in World War II have assumed new dimensions. Nazi Germany did not in fact constitute a menace to the United States, it is argued. . . . Frye has effectively refuted this thesis. . . . Making excellent use of the records of sundry Nazi organizations, [he] has assembled strong evidence illustrating the scope, extent, and intent of German activities in the Americas. . . . The main difference between this book and its predecessors is its hemispheric emphasis. By including the Latin American states in his survey, Frye has strengthened his case against Hitler's intrigues. . . . The author's skillful assembly of his evidence is an uncomfortable reminder to the revisionists that their charges against Franklin D. Roosevelt are unfounded." H. L. Trefousse

J Am Hist 54:711 D '67 700w

"In none of the German documents that were captured at the end of the war is there anything resembling a plan for a military attack upon the Americas, and Hitler's writings give no clear indication that he had any territorial ambitions outside of Europe. . . . [However] the methods employed by the Nazis and the agencies through which they worked in Brazil, Chile, Argentina and other states are described by Mr. Frye with authority and a wealth of circumstantial detail. He has also provided us with an excellent description of German efforts to defeat Franklin Roosevelt in 1940." G. A. Craig

N Y Times Bk R p3 J1 2 '67 950w

FRYE, NORTHROP. The modern century. (McMaster univ. The Whidden lectures, 1967) 123p $3 Oxford

901.9 Civilization, Modern

The author discusses "the mythology of our day and its central elements, alienation and progress; the effects of technology; . . . anti-social attitudes in modern culture; [and] the role of the arts in forming the contemporary imagination." (Publisher's note)

"These lectures . . . will not add appreciably to [Frye's] fame, for they con over rather familiar material. . . . However, his central purpose, the search for the identity of Canada on its centenary, leads to some provocative thoughts on education, mythology, and modern life. . . . No notes or bibliography. Recommended for large libraries."

Choice 5:760 S '68 150w

"The first chapter, . . . 'City of the End of Things,' describes 'the alienation of progress.' . . . For all its concision and clarity, this description . . . ignores those political or historical facts which are the causes and consequences of alienation and anxiety. . . . 'Improved Binoculars,' the second chapter . . . is concerned to define what is 'modern' in modern art and literature. . . . This description is accurate and clear. But it fails, strangely enough . . . to fit into [Frye's] theory of the autonomy of art. . . . Finally, Frye's vocabulary ends by imitating what it describes: it becomes autonomous, and loses the power to relate itself to our non-literary concerns in any but the most general way." David Schiller

Commentary 46:97 S '68 2250w

FRYE, NORTHROP. The morality of scholarship. See Black, M.

FRYE, ROLAND MUSHAT. Shakespeare's life and times; a pictorial record. unp $10 Princeton univ. press

R or 92 Shakespeare, William—Biography. Shakespeare, William—Contemporary England 67-11031

This biography provides a view of Shakespeare "as he lived his life, faced his problems, reared his family, made his friends (and some enemies), invested his money, acted, and wrote. Narrative and pictures follow Shakespeare from his birth and boyhood in Stratford, through his career in the London theatre, and back to Stratford during the last years of his life, in retirement." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"A book for illustrating Shakespeare's life, not for studying it. There is only an approximate chronology to the illustrations, and the majority of them deal more or less with Shakespeare's environment and his contemporaries, not with his life. Nevertheless, the book is unique in the quality and variety of the predominately Elizabethan illustrations which it brings together under one cover. It does greatly aid the reader in picturing Shakespeare's life and times, and it should by all means be included in the undergraduate Shakespeare collection."

Choice 5:1306 D '68 70w

"With 114 annotated illustrations, this book presents a fresh view of the playwright and his day."

Christian Century 84:1225 S 27 '67 40w

"This expensive little volume [is] singularly inexcusable as a scattered set of paragraphs explaining plates, done carefully and with devotion but recapitulating, in hiccups, what can be discovered elsewhere with more authority. . . . No library should bother to afford it."

James Sandoe

Library J 92:4504 D 15 '67 90w

FU, LO-SHU, ed. & tr. A documentary chronicle of Sino-Western relations (1644-1820); comp, tr, and annot, by Lo-shu Fu; pub. for the Assn. for Asian studies. 2v 417;421-792p ea $14.50 Univ. of Ariz. press

951.03 China—History. China—Relations (general) with foreign countries 66-18529

"This first volume consists of translations of selected extracts from Chinese source materials covering the period from the inception of the Ch'ing (Manchu) dynasty until the death of the Chia Ch'ing Emperor. These extracts are mostly taken from the official [documents] . . . but also include excerpts from non-official Chinese sources and from non-Chinese ones, written in Chinese, including Korean materials." (Pacific Affairs) The second volume includes a glossary, Chinese and Western bibliography, and index.

"Fu combed patiently for many years through numerous official documentary collections, miscellaneous works by contemporaries, and provincial gazetteers in search of relevant materials. These have not only been carefully translated but also meticulously edited. . . . [This] study is a major work of scholarship and is assured of a permanent place in any list of basic works on the history of Sino-Western relations. . . . No scholar of early modern Chinese history will be able to carry on his studies and research without it."

Choice 4:464 Je '67 160w

"The second volume consists of explanatory notes on the documentary extracts, which are intended to familiarize the reader with the circumstances under which they were issued and to provide a brief biographical note upon the Chinese and foreign personalities mentioned in them. These notes are based upon a large variety of Chinese and foreign sources. The texts are arranged in chronological order and it might be preferable had they been grouped according to subject matter. . . . However this is not a serious defect. Some of the selections are a little outside strictly Sino-Western relations, although not without relevance to them. The compiler and translator has avoided the inclusion of translations of texts already available in published selected readings in Chinese history. He has performed his arduous task well." R. C. Jones

Pacific Affairs 40:372 fall-winter '67-'68 320w

FUCHS, WALTER R. Mathematics for the modern mind; with a foreword by Hermann Bondi, tr. from the German by H. A. Holstein. 286p il col il $6.95 Macmillan (N Y) 510 Mathematics 67-24342

The author's purpose is to allow "the educated layman to . . . gain some understanding of what the modern mathematician is attempting to do. . . . Mr. Fuchs covers some of the axiomatics, set theory and group theory, automatic computers, non-Euclidean geometry, and decision theory. He . . . delineates the modern axiomatic approach to number theory, including the study of infinity, geometry, calculus, probability, and various algebras." (Library J) Index. First published in 1966 ■ Exakte Geheimnisse; Knaurs Buch der Modernen Mathematik.

"Fuchs, who is in charge of the science study programs over the Bavarian television network . . . tries to ease the way with many simple examples and excellent illustrations from everyday life, [but] the concepts in themselves are not simple and require a great deal of mental effort to grasp. However, it is well worth the effort. . . . This book should be prominently placed in every college library to be read by students of both science and the humanities. [It] goes far beyond most books on the subject and every teacher of the new mathematics should become familiar with it." A. J. Berman
Library J 93:1151 Mr 15 '68 210w

"[This] is a sophisticated attempt to explain to grown-ups raised on the old algebra-to-calculus regimen what the mathematicians have been doing since Isaac Newton. They've been doing a great deal, so this book is a fascinating mélange of many different topics. . . . Aided by many ingenious illustrations, this is probably as painless an introduction to modern mathematical ideas as is available. Even so, the book will not be everybody's cup of tea . . . [but] those who utilize [this] book will feel themselves well rewarded." Harry Schwartz
N Y Times Bk R p60 D 10 '67 320w

FUCHS, WALTER R. Physics for the modern mind; with a foreword by Max Born; tr. from the German by M. Wilson and M. Wheaton [Eng title: Modern physics]. 359p il col il $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

539 Physics 67-12301

This book begins with "a description of electric and magnetic fields, wave and particle physics, and the elements of the structure of matter. . . . Basic concepts of quantum physics, relativity, particle and nuclear physics, astrophysics and cosmology follow." (Choice) Index. Originally published 1965 entitled Exakte Geheimnisse; Knaurs Buch der Modernen Physik.

"The exposition is verbal and relies upon the discussion of models and laboratory experiments. An understanding of the concepts of force, energy, momentum, etc., is assumed. Mathematics is not employed but its role and importance is stressed. The logic and philosophy of modern physics is discussed frequently and compared with that of the classical period. . . . Recommended for the lay reader and as collateral reading for students of beginning physics at both the secondary and college levels."

Choice 4:1283 Ja '68 150w

"One of the most successful attempts in recent years to provide the general reader with an understanding of modern physics, this translation . . . is characterized by a lively, highly readable style. There are more than 300 drawings in the volume, most of them in color. Dr. Fuchs, who directs the science study program of the Bavarian Television Network, makes excellent use of analogy and includes some interesting anecdotes as well. Much of the volume is devoted to the development of modern physics and thus contains a great deal of historical and biographical information. . . . Highly recommended for all public libraries." J. K. Lucker
Library J 92:2591 Jl '67 140w

FUENTES, CARLOS. A change of skin; tr. by Sam Hileman. 462p $6.95 Farrar, Straus

67-15015

Franz, a former Nazi, Isabel, his Mexican mistress, Javier, a talented but unsuccessful poet, and his embittered wife Elizabeth, drive from Mexico City to Vera Cruz for Holy Week. "A fifth person is present when this diverse group reaches the pyramids of Cholula: the Narrator, who tells the story. . . . Through his eyes we see that the four others have one thing in common; they are in search of some real value: love in the case of Elizabeth, creation for Javier, experience for Isabel, redemption for Franz." (Publisher's note) Published originally 1967 entitled Cambio de piel.

"Fuentes brilliantly recreates the New York of the 1930's, the Germany of the 1940's, the Mexico of the 1960's. But he probes beyond reality. His first work, Where the Air is Clear [BRD 1961], evoked the sights and sounds of a changing Mexico; The Death of Artemio Cruz [BRD 1964] examined the internal tensions of the Revolution—each in its own way exploring the theme of renewal. But now Fuentes leaps into a Joycean complex of metaphor and meaning. Scenes take on not dramatic significance but symbolic significance. . . . But however unique the style, however provocative the symbols, the audience finally does not care. It is the author who has failed to communicate. . . . With the help of a masterly translation . . . that catches style and nuance, the sum of the parts is greater than the whole. Brilliance, originality and imagination have failed to substitute for lack of drama." R. A. Parker

America 118:200 F 10 '68 650w

Reviewed by Saul Sosnowski
Best Sell 27:440 F 15 '68 650w

Reviewed by Frank Conroy
Book World p16 Mr 3 '68 600w

Reviewed by J. N. Goodsell
Christian Science Monitor p11 F 21 '68 700w

Reviewed by Kathy McHale
Commonweal 88:272 My 17 '68 850w

Reviewed by James Doyle
Critic 26:90 Ap '68 650w

"According to the book jacket this powerful novel by one of Latin America's leading novelists was banned in Spain as 'pornographic, communistic, anti-Christian, anti-German and pro-Jewish.' Those adjectives indicate a simple-minded approach to a novel which pulls few punches in style and content. There is no conventional plot. . . . The Narrator, at times, plays with reality so that the reader does not know what to believe. Enhancing the lifelike effect of a confused reality are the changing moods of the Narrator: factual, ironical, tender, or fanciful. Highly recommended for serious fiction readers who won't be put off by improprieties." F. L. Cinquemani
Library J 93:96 Ja 1 '68 120w

Reviewed by Elmer Bendiner
Nation 206:483 Ap 8 '68 750w

Reviewed by Christopher Ricks
N Y Rev of Books 10:32 Ap 11 '68 850w

Reviewed by David Gallagher
N Y Times Bk R p5 F 4 '68 1200w

"[A Change of Skin] is something quite different from Cambio de Piel . . . the fascinating novel by Carlos Fuentes that was published in Mexico last year. It is not only that the book has lost its curiously haunting illustrations—they were, with one exception, bleached stills from movies of the thirties. Something else has gone, too. In its original form, the book presents a very complicated argument about the conception of vengeance. . . . The book's worry is not so much over the rights or wrongs of [the ex-Nazi] Jellinek's death as over mankind's astonishing capacity for rationalizing blood sacrifices at every level of cultural development and under every form of social organization. . . . The feeling is that the earth itself is a blood-soaked pyramid, and the book as a whole reads—at least in the Spanish version—like a nightmare warning. . . . [The translation] has been approved by Fuentes . . . but throughout the book one finds passages that are only to be described as improvisations in the approximate neighborhood of the Fuentes text." Anthony West

New Yorker 44:143 Je 8 '68 1400w

"My initial reactions were hostile. . . . Yet squirm as I might, the pull of this sophisticated Mexican novel was relentless and I was swept into its vortex. At the end of its 462 pages I was psychologically exhausted, and aware that I had experienced a great book—a busy one incorporating every technique of the contemporary novel. . . . Spain's censors have banned the book as immoral. It is, rather, amoral, accepting promiscuity, pornography, pot, and protest, even anti-gringo protests over Vietnam. . . . Ethical intent seems conspicuously absent. The concentration camp scenes are a threepenny purchase of some moral tone. And yet—and yet; there is something honest in this book, and we can only hope that it is emblematic in the title—that we are not deceived by the apparent attainment of love by two characters we have come to like quand même. Morality aside, Fuentes's is a novel bursting in energy, capacious in content, gripping in evocation, and humanitarian in its universal tolerance." R. J. Clements

Sat R 51:27 Ja 27 '68 1150w

Time 91:80 Ja 26 '68 550w

TLS p1270 N 14 '68 200w

FUJIWARA, TEIKA. Fujiwara Teika's Superior poems of our time; a thirteenth-century poetic treatise and sequence; tr. with an introd. and notes, by Robert H. Brower and Earl Miner. (UNESCO coll. of representative works: Japanese lit. ser) 148p il $5 Stanford univ. press

895 Japanese poetry—Collections 67-17300

A translation of the Kindai Shūka of Fujiwara Teika (1162-1241). The work consists of a critical essay by Teika and a sequence of tanka (short poems of thirty-one syllables in five lines). The "essay discusses the state of poetry in the early thirteenth century and offers advice and standards for aspiring poets; the sequence of poems teaches the same standards by example." (Publisher's note) Glossary of literary terms. Bibliography. Index of first lines. Index of poets.

Choice 5:350 My '68 150w

"The translator's introductory essay gives valuable background on Teika, the genesis of the collection and the state of poetry at the time. Each poem is given in romanization and translation, with notes on where originally published, poetic form, motifs, place in the sequence and location in other compilations. This book is highly recommended for Oriental literature collections." D. J. Pearce

Library J 92:2780 Ag '67 120w

"The 'Poems' of which [Teika] speaks include the whole range of recorded poetry in Japan from the earliest times. From this spectrum, Teika chose, with keen critical eye, 83 items which, in curious contrast to anything we are apt to find in the West, form a connected whole, a poem of 83 verses by many authors. The team of Brower and Miner have done a superb job."

Va Q R 44:xxiii winter '68 90w

FUKS, LADISLAV. Mr Theodore Mundstock; tr. from the Czech by Iris Urwin. 214p $4.95 Orion

68-11056

"Prague, 1942: the Germans occupy the country and the Jews await the dreaded summons to concentration camps. Among them is Mr. Theodore Mundstock. . . . Each day his panic mounts, goading him to the brink of insanity. But one day, as he repeats in his mind the awful ritual of his friends being herded into cattle trucks, he suddenly realizes what is wrong: they are not prepared for the camps. He resolves to prepare; in his little apartment he will simulate the camp; he will learn to sleep on a wooden board, to harden his mind against insults and his muscles against hard labor." (Publisher's note) First published in Czechoslovakia under the title Pan Theodor Mundstock.

"A brilliant short novel sensitively translated. . . . Its subject is by now distressingly familiar. . . . But the treatment in this story is far from hackneyed. Here a simple tale, told without sentimentality, illuminates the situation of human beings under stress. At the start Mundstock . . . is totally disorganized. Brief staccato passages convey his utter sense of bewilderment and also evoke the memories of his former life. . . . A subtle change in the author's style reflects the growing coherence of the protagonist's activities. The people and places around Mundstock come into focus." Oscar Handlin

Atlantic 221:118 Ja '68 280w

Reviewed by Charles Dollen

Best Sell 27:401 Ja 15 '68 430w

"[The] author tells his narrative with all kinds of contemporary sophistication, showing that he has absorbed, without being afraid of them, both Virginia Woolf and Samuel Beckett. He also uses techniques probably derived from films, and, indeed, his minor characters are the very ones we have been seeing in postwar Czech, Polish, Yugoslav and Hungarian movies. Perhaps that is part of the trouble with this highly competent, often moving, but ultimately gray novel: the banality of evil, so eloquently proclaimed of late by everyone from Arendt to Zilch, has become commonplace—as has, regrettably, the banality of the victims of this banal evil. . . . Consequently, novels like [this] become, by the déjà vu of their incidents, soporifics; and by the helplessness of their characters, depressants." John Simon

Book World p16 Mr 3 '68 600w

Reviewed by Donald Heiney

Christian Science Monitor pB1 Ap 13 '68 750w

Reviewed by William Newman

Library J 93:1019 Mr 1 '68 230w

Reviewed by E. A. Morse

Library J 93:2132 My 15 '68 90w [YA]

"Fuks's novel is not just another pious holocaust book; it is acute, unsentimental, and unsparing, a work of intricate but compassionate narrative art, as if Kafka's K had literally confronted the crematoria. Indeed, Mr. Mundstock's imaginative block is somewhat reminiscent of Kafkaesque subjectivity, but lacks his sometimes formulaic psychotic sneering and condescension, being a wholly original creation of love which enlists us through a kind of licit sympathy. . . . [Mundstock can] be labeled a passive daydreamer and a pretender (and to gentile and Jewish specialists in non-resistance he may even seem a figure of contempt), except that Fuks makes it so vivid that he has never surrendered to despair. To see Mundstock as any of the above categories is, therefore, to transgress against his mortality and entirely miss his pathos. . . . [The novel] succeeds, as few European novels of late, in affirming human possibilities even as it describes the most inhuman of events." R. M. Elman

NY Times Bk R p5 Ja 28 '68 700w

FULFORD, ROGER. The trial of Queen Caroline. 255p il $6.95 Stein & Day

942.07 Caroline Amelia Elizabeth, consort of George IV, King of Great Britain 68-13246

An account of the trial which was concerned "with whether or not the Princess of Wales (as she then was) had committed adultery with one of her Italian servants, Bartolomeo Pergami, during her long self-exile abroad between 1814 and 1820. . . . Mr Fulford describes the evidence for and against, the various legal complications and the whole course of the trial until the government, alarmed by the state of public feeling and the prospect of a serious clash between the two houses of parliament, decided to drop the proceedings." (Economist)

"[Despite] a notable feat of condensation . . . it is difficult not to become rather bored with the seemingly interminable discussions about the Princess's various sleeping arrangements and the sordid details of her alleged intimacy with Pergami. . . . But the trial is interesting as an account of legal and constitutional oddity—the hearing by the House of Lords of a bill of pains and penalties. . . . Mr Fulford gives too little attention to the effect of the trial and its outcome on the political fortunes of the Tory government and the Whig opposition. He does, however, give an interesting and illuminating account of the state of public opinion before, during and after the trial."

Economist 225:xx D 2 '67 550w

"Fulford, author of George IV [BRD 1935], Prince Consort, Queen Victoria and other books on historical subjects, narrates the case much as it transpired. . . . His account includes more detail than is necessary and less sense of the violent personal and political passions involved than the reader might wish. For larger collections." R. R. Rea

Library J 93:1140 Mr 15 '68 160w

TLS p1169 N 30 '67 360w

FULLER, CATHERINE LEUTHOLD, ed. Beasts; an alphabet of fine prints. 59p il $4.95 Little 769 Engravings—Juvenile literature. Animals in art—Juvenile literature. Alphabet books 68-15557

"This book contains twenty-six prints in which animals [appear]. . . . Opposite each print is an enlargement of the featured animal, with the letter of the alphabet represented by the animal's name. . . . The Introduction is a capsule history of printmaking from the fifteenth century to the present day." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of sources. "Grade six and up." (Library J)

Reviewed by Martha Bacon

Atlantic 222:153 D '68 50w

"[This book] largely succeeds in accomplishing its author's aims 'to please young people, to develop keen observation and to enable them to make friends with some fine examples of graphic art.' . . . Though not all of Miss Fuller's selections are on a par with Delacroix's regal tigress or Bracquemard's delectable duck, her scheme of juxtaposing a full-page reproduction of a print with a facing blow-up of an animal detail is subtly instructive. It both encourages attention to the whole and an appreciation of its parts—the beginning of connoisseurship in adult or child." S. G. Lanes

Book World p6 (children's issue) N 3 '68 230w

Reviewed by Marjorie Lewis
Library J 93:3980 O 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by C. H. Simonds
Nat R 20:1281 D 17 '68 50w

"An interesting endeavor to formulate an animal alphabet for children and at the same time, illuminate the history of printmaking. . . . The book, however, taken for itself, without pretensions to full historical coverage, has the advantage of introducing children to the higher levels of graphic illustration. The selection of examples by little known masters of the 16th century adds an intriguing exoticism."

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p53 N 3 '68 90w

FULLER, JOHN G. The day of St Anthony's fire. 310p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

615.9 Ergotism 68-23632

An account of an outbreak of madness and hallucinations which affected some three hundred people in the village of Pont-Saint-Esprit in Southern France in August, 1951.

"[The author] traveled to Pont-Saint-Esprit in 1967 to investigate and to interview villagers. He carried on extensive research there and in Paris. He based the present book on facts he uncovered and on his observations. It is a journalistic account and Mr. Fuller has not spared the melodrama, but it is also an exciting and timely narrative that will appeal to a wide variety of readers; it will hold sophisticated readers as well as whodunit fans." Allan Angoff

Library J 93:2678 J1 '68 230w

"The doctors reached the conclusion that the cause of the trouble was ergot, a fungus parasitic on rye. . . . The evidence suggests that a miller in northern France had accepted bad grain from farmers in his neighborhood and made it into grayish, poisonous flour that was sent to Pont-Saint-Esprit by the French flour monopoly. This case was never proved legally, and the author of this book believes that the political influence of the government-sponsored monopoly forced the authorities to blame the disaster on a mercurial fungicide. The case for ergot remains strong. . . . Mr. Fuller is . . . a devoted believer in flying saucers, and his book, 'Incident at Exeter' [BRD 1966], contributed to a recent flurry of interest in unidentified flying objects. Perhaps he also accepted a few exaggerated accounts of the incident at Pont-Saint-Esprit, but most of his book has the ring of truth." J. N. Leonard

N Y Times Bk R p62 S 8 '68 750w

FUNK, ROBERT W. Language, hermeneutic, and Word of God; the problem of language in the New Testament and contemporary theology. 317p $7.50 Harper

230 Theology, Communication (Theology). Religion and language. Jesus Christ—Parables. Bible. N.T.—Criticism, Interpretation, etc. 66-20776

An attempt to "place the exegesis of New Testament texts . . . in the light of contemporary theology, and also in the light of phenomenology of language, non-biblical literary criticism, and linguistic (functional) analysis. . . . [It is the author's contention that] paying attention to biblical language . . . may offer some help in solving contemporary linguistic problems. . . . Discussions of the nature of language [are followed by] scholars' views about language and by the discussion of parable." (J Religion) Index of biblical references. Index of names. Index of subjects.

"Part One tells us that Funk is to be placed within the Fuchs-Ebeling syndrome, but it is not sufficiently critical to interest the serious theologian (the only person I can imagine reading the book). Part Two is exciting when Funk treats the parables of the Great Supper and the Good Samaritan as metaphors or 'reflective' language. This kind of New Testament scholarship may yet turn the preacher into a hermeneut! . . . But why no discussion of the language of 'secondary reflectivity' or reason?"

Here is the Achilles heel of much current phenomenology—a strange refusal to see reason itself as anything more than simple abstraction." M. F. Allshouse

Christian Century 84:142 F 1 '67 650w

"A provocative and insightful book. . . . Funk is deeply concerned obviously about the problems of language and especially about the relationship of language to thought and reality. . . . [His] book is one that says a number of important things and sheds considerable new light. It is therefore unfortunate that the style and manner of putting things are often more difficult and obscure than would seem to be necessary. Phrases such as 'ontological horizons of the referential totality' and 'trans-eschatological comportment' make the going rather slow. . . . Perhaps the most significant thing about the book is that it cuts across the critically traditional divisions of the theological enterprise and carries on the exegesis of the New Testament within an expansive theological and philosophical context." D. O. Via

J Religion 48:69 Ja '68 4300w

FUNK & WAGNALLS modern guide to synonyms and related words; lists of antonyms, copious cross-references, a complete and legible index [ed. by] S. I. Hayakawa and the Funk & Wagnalls dictionary staff. 726p $8.95 Funk

424 English language—Synonyms and antonyms 67-26446

"Designed to teach the exact current meaning of about 6,000 commonly used words in a series of essays which describe finer shades of meaning and include illustrations of word use. . . . The 1,020 essays are alphabetically arranged under head words considered by the editors to be commonly used terms intended to suggest a particular area of meaning, e.g., heart attack, not coronary, the latter appearing as one of the related words discussed in the essay. Word clusters treated in individual essays range from three to ten but usually number four or five. These are augmented with see references to other head words, and in most cases by lists of antonyms." (Booklist and S R B) Index.

"Though some currently popular, informal, or slang terms are treated, much more emphasis is given to standard terms as used by educated people. . . . Little attention is given to etymology and history, none to syllabication, hyphenation, or pronunciation. . . . Definitions are clear and precise. . . . The real strength of the guide lies in the delicate discrimination in use of related words. Word relationships are carefully selected and clearly defined to reflect mid-twentieth-century usage. . . . The guide may also be commended for its clear, readable style, enlivened by contemporary illustrations, e.g., for butter up, 'dropouts who claim to detest their middle-class parents but know how to butter them up when the need arises.' . . . The format is good; clear type, broad outside margins, opaque paper. It is sturdily bound, and pages lie flat when opened. . . . [Recommended] for use as a supplement to the dictionary in homes and all types of libraries."

Booklist and S B ■ 64:1149 Je 15 '68 1600w

Reviewed by B. H. Smeaton
Library J 93:1610 Ap 15 '68 290w

"There have been more thorough compilations—and a good standard dictionary will contain much of this material—but few are as conveniently arranged or as pleasant to consult. To the careful writer and speaker, the book can be invaluable." D. M. Glixon

Sat ■ 51:44 My 18 '68 100w

FÜRER-HAIMENDORF, CHRISTOPH VON, ed. Caste and kin in Nepal, India and Ceylon: anthropological studies in Hindu-Buddhist contact zones. 364p pl maps $13.50 Asia pub. 301.44 Caste 65-16020

This book contains six essays centering "around the theme of identity and social mobility within or by the means of real or pseudo kin groups such as families, castes, and ethnic groups. . . . Geographic, economic, political, and religious factors are discussed." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

Reviewed by J. T. Hitchcock
Am Anthropol 69:763 D '67 700w

FÜRER-HAIMENDORF, CHRISTOPH VON
—Continued

"Not only are all essays the result of field work but they are well written. . . . Recommended for graduate students in government, anthropology, and sociology."

Choice 4:919 O '67 100w

"A first-rate comparison of societies subjected historically and currently to the interaction of Hindu and Buddhist socio-religious systems. . . . Four of the six papers are concerned with populations living in the Himalayan area. . . . Each [paper] is an original and extensive presentation of materials on groups either poorly or not at all described in readily available literature. Perhaps the greatest theoretical contribution made by these papers is the emphasis upon the involvement in much wider socio-religious and political systems of each group and each society discussed. . . . All [the papers] are unique, but that by Chie Nakane adds most strikingly to the literature. No other source provides in one place the data on Sikh-mese groups which is gathered here." R. J. Miller

Pacific Affairs 40:184 spring-summer '67 410w

FURST, SIDNEY S., ed. Psychic trauma. 252p $6.95 Basic bks.

157 Psychoanalysis 67-19468

"This first volume in a monograph series sponsored by the Psychoanalytic Research and Development Fund contains eight papers by prominent contributors to psychoanalysis, who in a joint effort attempt to summarize and organize . . . knowledge about trauma and its influence on development, offer hypotheses in the area, and indicate topics needing further investigation." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Most of the papers are repetitious and an uninspired rehash of previous writings on trauma. A few contain illustrative case history material. The emphasis on the positive spur to normal development resulting from trauma is the only provocative theme. The most readable and cogent papers are those by A. Freud, Waelder, and Greenacre. Those by Furst, Rangell, Neubauer, Sandler, Solnit and M. Kris are banal. The material in this book could have been the basis for one good journal article. Not recommended except for chapters by A. Freud and R. Waelder."

Choice 5:561 Je '68 130w

"Each writer deals with the problem of defining trauma and its sequelae. Greenacre's important exposition 'On Infantile Trauma' and Freud's 'Comments on Trauma,' characterized by stringent reasoning and clear prose, are particularly outstanding. . . . Recommended for a special, limited audience of professionals."

Sally Poundstone

Library J 92:1942 My 15 '67 120w

FUTABATEI, SHIMEI. Ukigumo. See Ryan, M. G. Japan's first modern novel

FYVEL, T. R. Intellectuals today: problems in a changing society. 240p $6.95 Schocken

914.2 Great Britain—Intellectual life 68-16655

"An attempt to illustrate how the younger generation of British intellectuals fit into the fast-changing society of today and how they see this situation. . . . The book is based on some seventy to eighty conversations and informal interviews during 1965 and 1966 with young intellectuals. . . . About a third of the interviews were conducted in France and Germany—the purpose was not to delve deeply into French and German culture but to provide a few parallel impressions against which British cultural trends could be more clearly viewed. The comparison that is central to this book, however, is between the intellectual past and present." (Pref)

"Fyvel's description of the intellectuals since World War I sets the historical background against which he measures the roles of intellectuals today. Though his account is condensed and quite subjective, it vividly reconstructs the variety of ideological and political phases through which intellectuals have passed. . . . One of the drawbacks of this otherwise excellent book is that Mr. Fyvel assumes that the reader is acquainted with such educational and political terms as the Ecole Nationale Supérieure and the Tory coalition government. But this fault is more than offset by the book's other qualities, including an excellent description of the French educational system and of the pertinacity of middle-class values in Germany and the cynicism worse there than anywhere else." Gabriel Gersh

Christian Science Monitor p11 My 29 '68 650w

Reviewed by Joseph Bram

Library J 93:2841 Ag '68 170w

"The book is composed of two elements: Mr Fyvel's own text and a number of interviews with particular intellectuals, the two parts alternating in a montage which recalls a BBC script (heavily re-edited and polished), tiring to read, but rich in interesting material. In his own part of the book, Mr Fyvel makes a number of generalisations about the increased democratic features of his 'affluent' as opposed to the old 'bourgeois' society in England. . . . However, when we turn from Mr Fyvel's text to his interviews with sample members of his chosen 'generation', the features he speaks of are conspicuously absent. . . . The only product of a provincial university who figures in Mr Fyvel's 'Conversation Pieces' is Malcolm Bradbury. Mr Bradbury indeed contributes some of the liveliest thoughts to these pages, though what he says seems not to confirm what Mr Fyvel says." Maurice Cranston

New Statesman 75:336 Mr 15 '68 1000w

"Amid the political dismay which has enveloped Britain in recent years it has been occasionally comforting but more occasionally frightening to look at what was going on in British 'cultural' circles. There appears to have been a reawakening of the theatre, a growth of interest in music, and a vast output of self-consciously 'new' (in tone and in format) books and paintings. What relation is there, if any, between the universal political dismay, the alleged social changes and this outpouring of culture, if such it be? Alas, Mr. Fyvel does not seem to be equipped to find this out. . . . [His] weapon is the tape-recorder and his views of what has happened to us and to our country recall, in relentless self-parody, the lesser works of Lord Snow."

TLS p294 Mr 21 '68 900w

G

GABEL, CREIGHTON, ed. Reconstructing African culture history; ed. by Creighton Gabel and Norman R. Bennett. (Boston univ. African studies program. African res. study) 246p maps $7 Boston univ. press

960.072 Africa—History. Historiography 67-25932

"With one exception, the following essays on African culture history represent the results of a symposium held at Northwestern University in November 1962, for the purpose of surveying some of the basic techniques that can be used for exploring Africa's past. . . . The question posed to each of [the participants] was essentially this: What techniques in your field can be applied to the reconstruction of African culture history? Each participant was asked not only to outline the historical possibilities provided by his discipline but also to at least briefly describe its inherent (or practical) shortcomings." (Pref)

"The second paper, by H. Lewis, on ethnology, is especially important, for this study has been badly neglected in Africa for several decades, and as a result inadequately supported theories of diffusion loom far too large in current historical interpretations. This chapter should be required reading for all historians of Africa." Frank Willett

Am Hist R 73:1590 Je '68 450w

"The fields from which contributions were drawn include archeology, ethnology, linguistics, the study of oral tradition, musicology, art, history, physical anthropology, botany and economics. The authors are all authorities in the various fields. . . . The book is not a source book on cultural development in Africa; it is a valuable discussion of the potential for various fields of specialization to contribute to historical reconstruction in the absence of written documents. . . . No index or bibliography, although the interested reader is directed to source material through numerous footnotes. Of interest to advanced college students and scholars in a variety of fields contributing to the reconstruction of culture history in general and to Africanists specifically."

Choice 4:1154 D '67 190w

GADDIS, VINCENT H. The wide world of magic. 224p il $4.95 Criterion bks.

793.8 Magic—Juvenile literature. Magicians—Juvenile literature 67-23448

The lives of six magicians "are presented in separate chapters: Robert-Houdin, Kellar, Howard Thurston, Herrmann, Houdini, and Blackstone. Present-day performers are treated briefly: Dunninger, Cardini, Mulholland, Christopher, Vernon, and others. 'Why You Are Fooled' tells about the ways the magician misdirects attention. Information on how to become a magician, societies magicians may join, and sources of materials are included. . . . Grades seven to twelve." (Library J)

"Young people are understandably fascinated by the magical tricks of the professional magicians and this book will be fascinating to them."

Best Sell 27:392 Ja 1 '68 80w

"The author concludes with directions for 20 tricks not found in the usual magic manuals. Walter Gibson's The Master Magicians covers much of the same material though the list of people included differs slightly. Also, Gibson writes more in detail about the individual performances, explaining carefully how the illusions were created, while Gaddis (like L. Kendall in the slightly easier Masters of Magic [BRD 1966]) tells more about the artists' lives. Gaddis is the only one of these books which includes information on presenting magic shows and tells about specific tricks to perform." E. P. Hawley

Library J 93:880 F 15 '68 210w

GAINES, ERNEST J. Bloodline. 249p $4.95 Dial press

68-14992

This volume contains five stories dealing with Negro life in the rural South. The stories were previously published in Negro Digest, Sewanee Review, Texas Quarterly and short story anthologies.

"[Gaines] writes in the dialect that reflects . . . the apathy and the misery of a three-century bondage. His words are both appalling and appealing because they describe something living and capable of loving, but able to do them only mutely. . . . The title story is one of the finest short stories that I've ever reviewed. . . . In all five of these stories, the characters have depth and life. Each story is a finely painted picture with strong central colors set against the annoying contrasts that are modern America. . . . This book takes us behind the scenes and depicts graphically the almost incredible conditions of so much of the Black community. [It] should enjoy great circulation in public libraries and among serious college students." Charles Dollen

Best Sell 28:207 Ag 15 '68 400w

"[The author] has a marvelous ear for speech rhythms, content, and dialect; a deep knowledge of the people, black and white, of the region; and a rich fund of humor, compassion, and understanding. This is a good book—one which cannot be skimmed." L. W. Griffin

Library J 93:2689 JI '68 180w

Reviewed by Sara Blackburn
Nation 207:221 S 9 '68 150w

Reviewed by Laurence La Fore
N Y Times Bk R p57 S 29 '68 180w

"Gaines has trouble in winding up [some] stories. . . . In spite of my reservations about the endings, they are strong stories. . . . Gaines knows how to create living characters and to set them against a rich and vivid background." Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:19 Ag 17 '68 950w

GAINES, ERNEST J. Of love and dust. 281p $4.95 Dial press

67-25308

When young Marcus is bonded out of jail, where he has been awaiting trial after killing another Negro in a roadhouse fight, he is sent to the Hebert plantation to work in the fields. . . . He treats Sidney Bonbon, the Cajun overseer, with supreme contempt, and Bonbon retaliates by working him nearly to death. Marcus decides to take his revenge by seducing Bonbon's Negro mistress, Pauline, and when he is frustrated in this he turns his . . . attentions upon Louise, Bonbon's childlike blond wife, Jim Kelly, [the narrator] watches this contest knowing that Marcus is doomed, hating him for disturbing the status quo, but grudgingly beginning to admire his spirit." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by E. C. Howley

Best Sell 27:334 N 15 '67 450w

Reviewed by R. K. Burns

Library J 93:208 Ja 15 '68 170w

"A serious, powerful novel. . . . Kelly's transition from cynical don't-rock-the-boatism to something else takes place over a series of exciting and beautifully realized scenes, some of them funny. . . . [Mr. Gaines] is a writer of terrific energy; his characters have a dimension and authenticity that makes us know and care about them. It takes a lot of nerve to write a novel like this today, and a lot of skill to bring it off. Mr. Gaines has plenty of both." Sara Blackburn

Nation 206:185 F 5 '68 260w

Reviewed by Janice Elliott

New Statesman 75:769 Je 7 '68 350w

"Aside from occasional technical awkwardness, the writing is clean, and Mr. Gaines paints some vivid scenes and fine portraits. [The plantation] is convincing—the author was born on one himself and spent his childhood working in the fields. His 'presence' in the book remains modest, earnest and affirmative. Yet, despite these qualities, Mr. Gaines's second novel is still an 'undergraduate' work, in which the author trusts craft formula too much, himself too little." Robert Granat

N Y Times Bk R p83 N 19 '67 600w

"The plot is mustily reminiscent of innumerable novels of the down-on-the-old-plantation variety, and the narrative style consists chiefly of stepping out, stumbling, halting, and retracing. Except for occasional flashes, the characters are either stereotypes . . . or are unconvincing. . . . Despite these weaknesses of technique Gaines. . . has succeeded where many others of his race and generation have failed: he has written a book about Negroes and whites as just plain people, sharing equally the blame for maintaining a worn-out tradition." James Lea

Sat R 51:29 Ja 20 '68 330w
TLS p817 Ag 1 '68 350w

GALARDI, ALBERTO. New Italian architecture [tr. by E. Rockwell]. 203p il $17.50 Praeger

720.945 Architecture, Modern—20th century. Architecture, Italian 67-29397

The author sketches "the development of Italian architecture from 1850 to the present. Against this background, he concentrates on outstanding buildings of the last ten years. There are discussions of works of the older generation—Albini, Ponti, Rogers, Figini, Polini, Gardella, Zavanella, Nizzoli, and . . . the younger generation . . . Mangiarotti, Castiglioni, Fiocchi, Vigano, Bernasconi, and Zanuso. . . . The examples selected range from [sports centers and office buildings to] schools, churches, private homes, apartment houses, and public buildings." (Publisher's note) Text in English and German. Bibliography. Index of names.

"American students are likely to get some inspiration out of materials in this survey . . . and it will prove a useful acquisition for most college libraries."

Choice 5:764 S '68 60w

"This survey has excellent photographs and exceptionally legible plans of the presumably most worthy recent structures in Italy. . . . Mr. Galardi, a Milanese architect, in his pedantic introduction, attempts to elucidate the evolution of modern Italian architecture. But all his 'who-struck-John' within various factional movements tells us disappointingly little. For architecture collections." Wolf Von Eckardt

Library J 93:982 Mr 1 '68 80w

TLS p332 Ap 4 '68 240w

GALATI, STEPHEN FISCHER. See Fischer-Galati, S.

GALBRAITH, JOHN KENNETH. The triumph: a novel of modern diplomacy. 239p $4.95 Houghton

68-16480

This first novel, by the Harvard economist who was formerly U.S. Ambassador to India and is now National Chairman of Americans for Democratic Action, is centered around a revolution in a small Latin American republic,

GALBRAITH, J. K.—Continued

Puerto Santos. "In the eyes of the U.S. State Department [the dictator] Martínez is a bulwark against Communism. When he is overthrown by a moderate liberal named Miró who threatens to [introduce] . . . democracy and modest land reforms, . . . [Worth Campbell], Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American affairs, sees the danger at once. . . . Pressure is kept on Miró. He succumbs, and Juan Martínez, favorite son of the dictator, is brought back from the University of Michigan to carry on in his father's footsteps. . . . What happened then not even Worth Campbell could have foreseen." (Publisher's note) Portions of this book have appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

Reviewed by W. F. Gavin
America 118:646 My 11 '68 370w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 221:108 My '68 650w

Reviewed by Charles Dollen
Best Sell 28:26 Ap 15 '68 450w

Reviewed by B. C. Bradlee
Book World p4 Ap 14 '68 850w

"Although clearly written, the book's literary merit is slight. But its substance is critical, entertaining, and sometimes insightful. Mr. Galbraith is witty, urbane, and anecdotal as he shows how our diplomacy is conducted and how foreign policy is made. . . . Liberals will praise his book as a provocative indictment of what is wrong with American diplomacy. Conservatives will argue that his characters are really caricatures, that the State Department's assets are totally ignored, and that he fails to understand the nature of Communism. Dean Rusk won't like The Triumph; library patrons will. For larger public and college libraries." W. C. Robinson

Library J 93:1019 Mr 1 '68 220w

Reviewed by P. L. Buckley
Natur Hist 20:512 My 21 '68 200w

"What Galbraith is concerned to demonstrate is the system of interlocking stupidity in which, he believes, the makers of foreign policy are hopelessly imprisoned. The elements of the system . . . are described with aloof and donnish scorn. . . . It is all quite devastating but, in spite of the author's detailed knowledge of the scene, somewhat tedious and not altogether convincing. Not that one would care to argue at any given point. . . . What works against any 'emergent truth' and, finally, against one's enjoyment of this clever book is the tone in which the enterprise is conducted. It is all loftily condescending and relentlessly witty." Robert Brown

New Repub 158:36 My 4 '68 1150w

Reviewed by David Haworth
New Statesman 76:147 Ag 2 '68 310w

Reviewed by C. C. O'Brien
N Y Rev of Books 10:19 Ap 25 '68 2050w

"[Mr. Galbraith's] propositions are, I think, true. . . . The story is dandy, or dandy enough. What is surprising about the book is that in the stuffiest possible way, Mr. Galbraith tells us things we already know. . . . There are occasional traces of aristocratic disdain. . . . [He] is uneasily ribald, the rump rampant being his chief literary enthusiasm. . . . [More-over] the language of the book is a minor irritant." Donald Barthelme

N Y Times Bk p4 Ap 21 '68 850w

New Yorker 44:174 Ap 27 '68 120w

Newsweek 71:103 Ap 22 '68 280w

"[Galbraith] is not, he says, scared of telling the truth about the real world and, consequently, disguising it all as fiction. . . . The fact is that his art functions well if not greatly. . . . One of the attractions of The Triumph is its plushy urbanity. People don't write like that any more. . . . Fables don't have to be all that subtle, and the Galbraith fable is in excellent company in the simplicity of its lines and the obviousness of its moral. . . . None of [the characters] engages our love or hate or sympathy, as in a real novel. . . . I prefer to see [this] as the sort of thing a man of exceptional literary talent, not to mention cerebral power and personal sophistication, might throw off light-heartedly as a relief from what he must consider more important matters." Anthony Burgess

Sat p 51:34 Ap 20 '68 1500w

Time 91:84 Ap 19 '68 190w

TLS p841 Ag 8 '68 370w

Va Q R 44:xcviii summer '68 100w

Reviewed by Jerome Slater
Yale R 57:594 summer '68 1550w

GALIN, SAUL. Skiing in Europe; everything the traveler needs to know about the best European ski resorts. 318p il $8.95 Hawthorn bks.

796.9 Skis and skiing

67-27331

"This factual reference book gives information on nearly 200 ski resorts in Austria, France, Italy, Scandinavia, Switzerland and West Germany. Resorts are listed by country and then by region. There is a short description of each area, including length of season; types of guests by age, nationality, fame, and skiing ability; and other recreation facilities available. The main part of the listing gives directions for getting there by plane, train, or automobile; altitude and snow conditions based on a five-year average; runs and costs; equipment and instruction available; hotels and their prices; other services such as doctors and baby-sitters, and an address to write for further information." (Library J) Glossary.

"[Galín] provides 318 pages of mostly statistics. Room rates are quoted to the last penny ('$4.25 without bath'); . . . even the number of nearby bone specialists are religiously listed. . . . Atmosphere [has] been left out. On the other hand, Mr. Galín catalogues Europe's small resorts, which hasn't been done before on this side of the ocean. . . . The author's treatment of his glamorous subject is dry; the only (unintentional) shred of humor in his skier's Baedeker pops up in the glossary." C. W. Casewit

Book World p12 Ja 7 '68 180w

Reviewed by Barbara Pfrogner
Library J 92:2751 Ag '67 120w

GALLAGHER, J. P. Scarlet Pimpernel of the Vatican. 184p il $4.95 Coward-McCann

B or 92 O'Flaherty, Hugh Joseph. World War, 1939-1945—Underground movements 68-14305

The author tells the story of the way the Irish monsignor, Hugh Joseph O'Flaherty, "aided thousands of Christians and Jews in Rome during the days when that city was occupied by German forces." (Best Sell)

"The reader can imagine the excitement and suspense generated among these fugitives operating in Nazi-occupied Rome, waiting day by day for their deliverance; and, unfortunately, he does have to imagine it. The author's performance is not nearly as good as his material. The book can hardly be called an adequate treatment of either Msgr. O'Flaherty or the situation in Rome at that most interesting time. An episode here and there is recounted reasonably well, but the whole performance lacks any kind of authority or even a reasonable continuity." J. G. Dahms

America 118:648 My 11 '68 300w

"[Monsignor O'Flaherty] stands out today as a one-man refutation of the story in 'The Deputy' [by R. Hochhuth, BRD 1964]. It would be too much to assert, however, that he was universally admired, because some of his colleagues even today say that he was a glory seeker, a mountebank and a 'jumped-up Irish peasant.' The Monsignor's biographer does not share these caustic views, however, and he praises the man excessively. Sometimes this book portrays the Irishman as a combination of Horatio Alger, Leslie Howard, (the cineman Scarlet Pimpernel), James Bond, Matt Dillon, Perry Mason and Saint Patrick. . . . and really, no one can be that good." E. A. Dooley

Best Sell 28:37 Ap 15 '68 700w

"Some of the accounts are breathtaking, and through them an extraordinary human being takes shape for readers of a new generation." Christian Century 85:457 Ap 10 '68 700w

Reviewed by Marian Trahan
Library J 93:1823 Ap 15 '68 80w [YA]

Reviewed by C. J. Schmidt
Library J 93:1999 My 15 '68 230w

"In spite of its romantic title and some tinny dialogue, [this] book is a genuine thriller." Francis Sweeney

N Y Times Bk R p36 My 26 '68 430w

GALLER, DAVID. Leopards in the temple; poems. 90p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

811

63-10813

"The poems in this book were selected by the author from his . . . works of the last eight years. Most have first appeared in The New Yorker, Poetry, The Quarterly Review of Literature, and other publications. Using biblical, classical, and contemporary references, Galler's essential concern is with modern man's moral and spiritual dilemma." (Publisher's note)

"Galler is an erudite man, and his erudition is both an asset and occasionally an impediment. It is an impediment when allusions in a poem call attention to themselves to such a point that the entire poem hinges on their being instantly understood. . . . [Yet he has a] clear eye for right now, right here." Samuel Hazo

Commonweal 89:226 N 8 '68 1150w

"This book should be well received by some professors and the 'flowers' among college youth, but not by the propertied, monied, over-35 'drab and dandified men.' This is not great poetry . . . but it is thinking stuff for the youth to buy safely now to sneer against in the years ahead. Mr. Galler is well read in Hebrew and Greek antiquities, as was Matthew Arnold, but the latter captured the songs of the past; Galler digs up only chards. To paraphrase a line in 'The Suitor,' perhaps he writes poetry only to rid himself of the desire for it." John Delonas

Library J 93:557 F 1 '68 250w

Reviewed by Daryl Hine

Poetry 113:58 O '68 70w

"Galler's second volume of poetry brings together an impressively large number and variety of substantial poems. He writes poetry of solidity, quantity, substance; his poems never suffer from thinness of style, or lack of consequence. Galler is strongest . . . [and] most interesting when his subjects are . . . [obviously tied] to experience. . . . [His] style grows heavy, morose . . . in some of the poems dealing with mythical or classical figures. . . . Galler is a virtuoso technician. He usually creates fresh stanzaic patterns for each subject, and . . . exploits to advantage . . . rhythm and line movement. . . . If he tends to be, at times, an overambitious craftsman, . . . perhaps it is because he must constantly exercise and maintain his technical means at full stretch." Laurence Lieberman

Yale R 58:143 O '68 750w

GALLIN, BERNARD. Hsin Hsing, Taiwan: ■ Chinese village in change. 324p pl maps $8.50 Univ. of Calif. press

301.3 Hsin-hsing, Taiwan. Villages. Taiwan—Social conditions. Social change 66-14734

This monograph concerns "an agricultural community of 657 persons on central Taiwan. The ethnographic research was conducted over a period of sixteen months. . . . The author has traced the changes that have occurred in agricultural production and the accompanying changes in the social system. . . . Lineage organization in a multi-lineage village, the family and the processes of its division, marriage, and adoption are analysed. Non-kin relations . . . are also described. The chapter on the life history of the villager has close connections with the following one on religion and magic. In conclusion [there is] an attempt to abstract from the previous discussion the mechanisms of social change within the community." (Pacific Affairs) Glossary of Chinese names and words. Bibliography. Index.

"The first half of this book is the strongest and of most value. Here, the author discusses the economic base of the community, including traditional problems of land ownership, credit, and irrigation. . . . Except for the section on family and kinship, the remaining chapters are somewhat less successful. There is some interesting material on maternal kin and affines . . . but the sections on life cycle, religion, and magic are sketchy, tenuously tied to the first section of the book, and in places inaccurate. . . . The writing style, which in places is ponderous and redundant . . . detracts from the value of the content. . . . Despite its weaknesses, this book is a . . . useful addition to the body of Chinese community studies, and it presents some new and important material on economic life and modernization of the Chinese peasantry." Norma Diamond

Am Anthropol 70:145 F '68 600w

"A competent and dull farewell to peasantry. . . . Gallin (Cornell) analyzes dissolution of solidarities in a village whose people reach out to kin, markets and urban centers beyond, lack leadership resources, and generate solidarity mainly in the excitement of ritual. . . . It also points up regional variation in Chinese social order, e.g. qualifying [H.] Fei's Peasant Life in China [BRD 1939] on the tsu ('lineage') and [M.] Fried's The Fabric of Chinese Society [BRD 1953] on kan-ch'ing ('structured obligation'), going beyond all sources on the conditioned significance of nonpaternal kin. Index and glossary, with minor defects, are good topical and cultural indicators; the bibliography, a good guide to Chinese community studies. The likely audience lies between anthropology graduate students and technical aid personnel. Recommended for firming up ■ China shelf."

Choice 4:1182 D '67 180w

"The reader of Dr. Gallin's book must be impressed by the very careful work and its extremely readable style. . . . From the methodological point of view this book is very much in the classical Fei Hsiao-tung tradition. [We are] told that ritual is 'entertainment.' . . . This may be true, but at the same time it is a little sad to read such echoes of Malinowski and his faithful disciples, since this book contains extremely rich and exciting material on ritual life, which I think could provide the basis for a discussion which would gain us really new insights into Chinese symbolic structure." Göran Aijmer

Pacific Affairs 40:366 fall-winter '67-'68 600w

GALLOWAY, ALLAN D. Faith in a changing culture. 122p $4.50 Humanities press

261 Christianity

67-111154

"In these Kerr Lectures, delivered at Glasgow University in 1966, Dr. Galloway examines the . . . problem of the relation between faith and culture [from Jesus' time to the present.] . . . [He] shows how much of the cultic tradition of the church has been determined by changing historic circumstances." (Library J)

"Dr. Galloway is an able and original thinker, competent in both history and philosophy, but his book is difficult and its audience will be limited. Recommended for the theological and large general libraries." T. M. Avery

Library J 93:3009 S 1 '68 130w

"A highly perceptive and indeed exciting discussion . . . [of] the modern problem of how . . . faith should be expressed in contemporary terms. . . . [Galloway's analysis of this problem] is always most acute, and perhaps more valuable because he can offer no easy solution. He can see clearly where current solutions go awry. . . . The virtue of his lectures lies in his remarkably sure assessment of the problem. He leaves the reader with the thought that his duty is to make a response which is genuinely his own, 'believing, doubting, interpreting, speaking responsibly out of our own situation and in terms of our own culture'. . . . A most interesting and rewarding course of lectures."

TLS p402 Ap 18 '68 600w

GALTUNG, JOHAN. Theory and methods of social research. (Int. peace res. inst. Basic social science monograph) 534p $10 Columbia univ. press

300.72 Social sciences—Research 67-26343

"The main divisions of the book are two: data collection and data analysis. In the first section are found discussions of the data matrix, units of analysis variables, values, collection of data, and surveys. The second section of the book contains data processing, distributions, patterns, hypotheses, analysis of data, and theories." (Am Pol Sci R) Index.

"Johan Galtung ■ one of the few creative sociologists of the first rank who is also ■ gifted applied mathematician and statistician. This book gives his view of where quantitative sociology is and where it ought to be heading. . . . One argument I have is with the implications of the discussion of levels of measurement. . . . Galtung does not explicitly connect measurement levels with statistical tests, but because the fallacy is common among sociologists, his failure to disavow it is a bad thing. . . . There is a great deal more in Galtung's book—on information concepts as applied to social research, on the relation of theories to data, on the ethics of social research, on the logical delineation of research styles, and many other things. I expect to use his book extensively."

Am J Soc 74:80 J1 '68 950w

GALTUNG, JOHAN—Continued

"[This] is exactly what its title suggests—a book which reflects on doing. It is an excellent work. The reflection is, however, of a particular sort. The author states on page 1 that neither philosophical foundations nor nuts-and-bolts techniques will be discussed in depth. Instead, a middle road of analysis is chosen which ties together a variety of approaches to data collection, data processing, data analysis, and theory formation. It is part of the book's merit that the author does not always succeed in staying on this elusive middle ground. The text runs all the way from discussions of statistical tests to the epistemological status of theories. . . . At the end of the book one is not even sure if there is a middle road. The organization of the book is superb. . . . The book as a whole is probably too much for any but the most advanced undergraduates and graduate students, but anyone with some background in methodology will immediately appreciate the competence and élan with which Galtung has handled his much-discussed subject." F. M. Frohock

Am Pol Sci R 62:617 Je '68 900w

Reviewed by O. D. Duncan

Am Soc R 33:457 Je '68 1100w

"Galtung fails in his attempt to establish the legitimacy of his concept of the 'data matrix' as a means of conceptually organizing his extremely diverse materials dealing with methods of social research. Consequently, his organization seems arbitrary, continual reference to the 'data matrix' becomes a hindrance rather than an aid to understanding, and the work appears to lack the unity of purpose one might expect of a text. . . . The scope of materials collected is encyclopedic, justifying the use of the book as a reference. Careful selection is necessary, however, because the quality of his explanations varies greatly. The level of difficulty of his presentation is also highly varied. . . . Especially disturbing is the authoritarian way in which debatable positions are presented as 'givens.' Because of the wide variety of methods included for discussion and Galtung's attempt to link theory with research, the book is unique and cannot be compared with any previously published works."

Choice 5:379 My '68 170w

GAMARNIKOW, MICHAEL. Economic reforms in Eastern Europe. 204p $8.95 Wayne state univ. press

330.947 Europe, Eastern—Economic policy

68-11485

The author studies "the various aspects of economic reforms [in Eastern Europe] and their impact on the political and economic institutions of orthodox communism. . . . This book is based on a series of articles which were published in [the periodical] East Europe, 1964-67." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] has followed closely the changing economic trends in Eastern Europe for more than 15 years and analyzes them here in a way that the intelligent layman can understand. Mr. Gamarnikow shows the abyss that separates the strictly Marxist party veterans from the more pragmatic and more flexible intellectuals and technocrats of the younger generation behind the Iron Curtain. He indicates the differences in speed with which economic revisionism has gained influence in various countries of the Soviet bloc. . . . An epilogue brings the study to early 1968. A useful book for college and larger public libraries where its appeal will be among informed laymen and scholars generally." F. E. Hirsch

Library J 93:3001 S 1 '68 160w

"Gamarnikow is a British-educated economist who works for Radio Free Europe. His well-written and lucid little book will be especially useful to the non-economist who wants an insight into the problems that are shaking the Marxist superstructure." Francis Pierce

New Repub 159:28 Ag 31 '68 700w

GANN, ERNEST K. Song of the sirens. 318p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

910.4 Voyages and travels. Seafaring life

68-22966

"Reminiscences of the 17 boats he has owned and sailed since boyhood make up this . . .

volume by [the] novelist . . . who has run the gamut from little single-stickers to square-riggers." (Library J)

"The tales of [the author's] various marine loves are well interwoven, not lined up as separate chapters, and he is a handy enough writer to make very good reading indeed out of a rambling series of yarns; one storm at sea in a square-rigger is memorably done. Both seagoing and armchair boatmen will take this enjoyable performance." Karl Nyren

Library J 93:2685 J1 '68 110w

Reviewed by Janet Hellerich

Library J 93:4429 N 15 '68 90w [YA]

"Each reader will have his preference in this wide range of incident and anecdote. The author's epic struggle to master the African Queen (as he called the old-fashioned German diesel that powered the Albatross) is certainly vivid. So are his memories of commercial fishing out of San Francisco and San Diego. His story of a three-day gale off the Oregon coast will be particularly appreciated by stay-at-home sailors. Best of all are his youthful recollections of the kaccoon, a sloop so far gone in years her hull and deck parted company, when a summer wind heeled her over in Vineyard Sound." E. B. Garside

N Y Times Bk R p74 O 27 '68 270w

GANN, L. H. Burden of empire; an appraisal of Western colonialism in Africa south of the Sahara, by L. H. Gann and Peter Duignan. (Stanford univ. Hoover inst. on war, revolution, and peace. Publication) 435p maps $8.50 Praeger

967 Africa, Sub-Saharan—Politics. Imperialism 67-26216

A reassessment of African history and European colonialism. "The first section . . . deals with 'concepts and realities of imperialism,' outlining [and evaluating] various political theories about imperialism in Africa that are current dogma. . . . The second section contains an . . . examination and analysis of colonial developments in sub-Saharan Africa from 1870 to 1960. The authors [seek to] demonstrate that . . . separate patterns of imperialism existed. A third section, surveying the decolonization of Africa, summarizes the authors' views of the good and evil effects of Western imperialism." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"A scholarly but tendentious survey which belongs on library shelves both because it is the only serious synthesis of its kind presently available and because it offers a well reasoned challenge to the prevailing anti-colonial orthodoxy. Gann and Duignan incorporate a vast amount of recent research and thought into their own effort, although their special knowledge of British Africa sometimes leads them to project its characteristics onto the rest of the continent. The generally clear writing and organization suffer from a somewhat repetitious and overly wide-ranging rebuttal of Marxist and African nationalist arguments. . . . The book should prove informative and stimulating to students at all levels."

Choice 5:541 Je '68 110w

"There is no question of the competence of [the authors]. Mr. Gann is a senior staff member of the Hoover Institution at Stanford University and Mr. Duignan is director of the African program there. Their coverage is extensive for Africa south of the Sahara, with references to the northern areas only scattering. They make a considerable study of the effects of Marx and Lenin on the thinking of 19th Century Europe and the effect on African colonization methods and attitudes. The text is readable and certainly will add dimension to the general collection of political science studies of Africa." M. D. Herrick

Library J 92:2932 S 1 '67 260w

"The appraisal of the subtitle is cool. The isms—colonialism, imperialism, Pan-Africanism, neocolonialism, Communism, African socialism—are clearly dissected. African history—precolonial, colonial, and postcolonial—is reviewed without ideological prejudice. It is in short a scholarly book. A dull book, then? Decidedly not." E. B. Meyer

Nat R 20:665 J1 2 '68 130w

GANNON, ROBERT. Time is short and the water rises. See Walsh, J.

GANS, HERBERT J. The Levittowners; ways of life and politics in a new suburban community. 474p $7.95 Pantheon bks.

301.3 Levittown, New Jersey. Suburban life 66-17359

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Robert Boguslaw
Am J Soc 73:357 N '67 900w

Reviewed by S. D. Clark
Am Soc R 33:477 Je '68 600w

Reviewed by E. Z. Friedenberg
N Y Rev of Books 10:28 My 23 '68 200w

Reviewed by W. C. Neely
Social Studies 59:183 Ap '68 200w

GANZEL, DEWEY. Mark Twain abroad; the cruise of the "Quaker City." 330p il $7.95 Univ. of Chicago press

818 Clemens, Samuel Langhorne—The innocents abroad 68-16691

An associate professor at Oberlin College reconstructs the five-month voyage around the world which Mark Twain covered in 1867 as correspondent for the San Francisco Alta California. Ganzel uses 'passengers' correspondence, newspaper accounts, the captain's logbook, and a number of Clemens' unpublished manuscripts, particularly his notebook diary. [The book is a] study of the beginnings of Clemens' real fame as a humorist. It shows how he transformed his experiences aboard the 'Quaker City' into the art of The Innocents Abroad. (Publisher's note) Index.

"What Professor Ganzel has done . . . is to write a sort of synoptic gospel of the Quaker City cruise. Against Mark Twain's quirky comments and inventions he sets the more orthodox narratives of the other passengers, along with chronologies and itineraries, accounts of what the humorist missed out on (bullfights and a visit to Garibaldi, for example), digests of contemporary guidebooks and source materials, and all kinds of documented preconceptions which were as epidemic on board as homesickness. In trying to set the record straight, to tell what actually happened, Ganzel has taken on a thankless task. He is up against a brilliant entertainer. Ganzel's synoptic version may be 'truer' than Mark Twain's, more historical and even-handed, but it is inevitably drabber and less acute." Justin Kaplan

Book World p5 O 6 '68 600w

Christian Century 85:1220 S 25 '68 20w

"More than just Innocents Abroad explained,' this book could prove to be a major contribution toward understanding the Clemens-Twain sensibility. It will be warmly welcomed by Twain critics and scholars and by students of American culture generally. . . . There is here a richness of hitherto unpublished Twain material including 'Fragments of an unfinished play by Samuel Clemens' having to do with the voyage. . . . A most illuminating study, well written and fully documented." W. K. Bottorff

Library J 93:3562 O 1 '68 140w

GARBINI, GIOVANNI. The ancient world. (Landmarks of the world's art) 176p il col il $5.95 McGraw

709.39 Art, Near Eastern. Art, Ancient. Civilization, Ancient 66-19270

The text and "pictures in this work . . . present a survey of 3000 years of Near Eastern civilization in its various stages. . . . [The material] reaches from the Mediterranean to India, and from the Black Sea to Nubia; but the main emphasis is on the Babylonians, Assyrians, Hittites, and, of course, the Egyptians." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"It is difficult to recommend the book as a meaty text for college level students or an easy one for the curious youngster. For instance, there is too much unexplained reference to relative chronology (e.g., Early Dynastic II) and the text tends to oversimplification. There is an index, but what initiate would know what he was looking for under 'Confined animal motif'? . . . The text and the caption paragraphs are well phrased but the total effect is of doses of information rather than unified history of the art of the Ancient World." M. L. Thompson

Class World 61:248 F '68 300w

"[This is first and foremost a] picturebook: at a rough guess the pictures and captions cover three-quarters of the page-space, and the captions are so thorough that, if one feels like it, one can skip the text; which it would be a pity to do, as the author [is] scholarly. . . . Half or more of the illustrations [are coloured]. . . . All in all, very good value for money; just the thing to tempt those who have never thought of buying artbooks for their own pleasure or as presents for the young."

Economist 225:xv D 2 '67 90w

"The excellent color photographs of some of the sites and of the works discovered there reveal the triumphs of modern archeology. Many of these works and monuments are extremely interesting as keys to national character, religion, politics, and life and thought in the distant past. The creations of Egypt, pyramids and temples, statues of gods and portraits, outrank all the rest through their unsurpassed appeal of intense forcefulness, humanized and balanced by grace and beauty. For academic and public libraries." F. M. Wassermann

Library J 92:999 Mr 1 '67 160w

GARCIA, JOHN ALVAREZ, ed. Camilo Torres. See Torres, C.

GARCIA MÁRQUEZ, GABRIEL. No one writes to the colonel, and other stories; tr. from the Spanish by J. S. Bernstein. 170p $5.95 Harper 68-15977

The novella and eight short stories of this collection, all set in the town of Macondo in Colombia, "tell of town and village life in South America, of the . . . poor and . . . rich, of memories and illusions, lost opportunities and present joys." (Publisher's note) Some of the stories were published in Spanish in Colombia and Mexico.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 222:150 O '68 50w

"This volume of short stories is a wordy photograph of life in a very depressing town. . . . The author gives extremely realistic pictures of the alternate cycles of hope and despair, comedy and tragedy that afflict people walking on the hopeless treadmill of perpetual poverty and hunger. . . . The overall impression from the stories is one of sadness and even depression. . . . Certainly the stories give colorful descriptions . . . but the characters seem to be walking always in circles. . . . A reader hurries on and waits for something big to happen. Instead, there is only more misery told with graphic intensity. This is not to criticize the stories. . . . Still, a reader of fiction is not desirous of a vivid documentary on the lives of faceless little people. He wants something to happen, and not merely more of the same, going on and on." E. A. Dooley

Best Sell 28:284 O 15 '68 550w

"[The stories are] told in spare, unpretentious but picturesque prose, compassionate of human frailty, but also rich in wit and irony. The characters are all too human, alternately humorous and tragic, and if they sometimes fail to evince desirable social characteristics, it is the stark poverty of their lives, the corruption of petty bureaucratic powers, and the empty frustrations of their meager existences which are the causes. This novel is not for the reader looking for escape, but is an unusually rewarding one for the reader interested in his fellow man. . . . The book, which is well translated, is recommended for general fiction collections and for libraries with specialized Latin American collections." M. K. Badger

Library J 93:2021 My 15 '68 150w

"The character of the Colonel in the title story . . . is the most fully realized in the collection, and one of the most memorable in Spanish-American fiction. . . . When the stories are read as a whole, . . . the central figure that emerges is not the Colonel, not Big Mama, not the hovering Buendia clan but Macondo itself. . . . One story is linked to another by an event, or a person or merely a mood, and no one story can be fully understood without reading them all. . . . As each linkage is revealed, the effect is that of tumblers falling in place in a combination lock. And the last story, where Big Mama dies, almost gives the combination. . . . [But] the moderate tone of all the preceding stories . . . is changed too abruptly in 'Big Mama's Funeral.' Bitter satire and thinly veiled allegory have replaced irony and realism, and the author's versatility doesn't quite extend so far." O. T. Myers

Nation 207:600 D 11 '68 900w

GARCIA MARQUEZ, GABRIEL—Continued

Reviewed by J. R. Frakes
N Y Times Bk R p56 S 29 '68 210w

Reviewed by R. G. Mead
Sat R 51:26 D 21 '68 750w

GARCILASO DE LA VEGA, el Inca. Royal commentaries of the Incas. See Glubok, S. the fall of the Incas

GARD, ROGER, ed. Henry James: the critical heritage. 566p $11 Barnes & Noble

813 James, Henry [68-121918]

This collection consists "of contemporary reviews of [James'] novels and tales, including many unsigned notices on both sides of the Atlantic . . . [and] quotations from letters to and from James about recently published work, together with occasional comments on wider issues." (TLS)

"[This volume] has been put together with great skill and discretion. Mr Gard has purposefully included some pretty brash reviews as well as the outstandingly perceptive ones; there are anecdotes and parodies, extracts from diaries and letters . . . altogether, a volume that is entertaining as well as genuinely enlightening. People who have to write essays and theses on Henry James will no doubt bless Mr Gard, and the more fortunate people who merely enjoy or are curious about James and his work will join in the benediction."

Economist 228:36 Ag 24 '68 140w

"[This] adequately and compactly illustrates 'the contemporary response' to [James'] novels. . . . Included in the collection are many essays by William James, William Dean Howells, Joseph Conrad, and other critics which will enable the reader to assess Henry James' growth, his reputation, and the tone of Victorian criticism in England and America." W. K. Bortorff

Library J 93:4143 N 1 '68 180w

TLS p1070 S 26 '68 320w

GARDEN, EDWARD. Balakirev; ■ critical study of his life and music. 352p il $12.50 St Martins

780.924 Balakirev, Miliĭ Aleksĭevich 67-18825

"The book is divided into two major sections: Balakirev's Life and Character; . . . Analysis and Criticism of his musical compositions; . . . with an added chapter on Balakirev's style, harmony, form and influences. . . . There are several photographic plates, and, in the chapters of analysis and criticism, many excerpts of his music. Appended [is a] . . . Catalogue of his works and of those works by Glinka edited by Balakirev and Lyapunov." (Best Sell) Chronology. Bibliography. General index and index of Balakirev's works.

"The difficulty with [this] critical study . . . is that this Russian composer and teacher is virtually unknown to most Americans; therefore, there may be little audience for his work. But Balakirev is an important figure in the development of Russian music and his influence upon such composers as Moussorgsky and Rimsky-Korsakoff, as well as his importance as an editor (with S. M. Lyapunov) of Glinka's compositions, is almost inestimable. This study [is] the first serious and well-developed study of Balakirev and his music, (acknowledging the value of Dr. Gerald Abraham's articles), that has been presented to the English-speaking world."

Best Sell 27:421 F 1 '68 200w

"A critically balanced and well documented account. . . . Prior to Garden's fine book, the basic Balakirev literature consisted of scattered and largely unavailable essays in Russian, isolated paragraphs in English language studies of Moussorgsky, Borodin and Rimsky-Korsakov—e.g. Abraham and Calvo-coressi—and the uneven biographical sketches provided as entries in the standard music encyclopedias of all nations. . . . [This comprehensive study] provides a succinct but accurate survey of the Balakirev literature, and the concluding appendices . . . present the basic kind of information vital to any scholarly 'first book.' . . . Several minor reservations: the bibliographical apparatus relative to manuscript sources, editions, etc. is clumsy; the basic information provided in the text could have been more usefully and conveniently collated for easy reference in an appendix."

Choice 5:634 J1 '68 210w

Reviewed by Baird Hastings

Library J 93:2008 My 15 '68 100w

"It is Garden's belief that as a composer, Balakirev is underrated. . . . To prove this point, [he] devotes more than half of his volume to an 'Analysis and Criticism' of Balakirev's complete works. The numerous musical examples are helpful, since the scores are not always readily available. Occasionally Garden appears overly enthusiastic. . . . [But] in general, his analyses are conscientious, perceptive, and fairly detailed. . . . The analytical part of [his] book is stronger than the biographical part. He is a conscientious chronicler, but he does not fully succeed in projecting the rich intellectual life and artistic issues that agitated Russia during the second half of the nineteenth century. Garden's style is somewhat dry and lacks the elegance we have come to expect from British biographers. All in all, the volume is useful and serviceable, but not particularly illuminating or inspiring." Boris Schwarz

Music Lib Assn Notes 25:30 S '68 800w

"Balakirev's is an absorbing personality and Mr. Garden in unfolding his career does not quite measure up to the complexity and fascination of his subject. The second half of the book offers something approaching a catalogue raisonné which presents a good deal of useful information. In general his critical comments are sound, and he rightly points to the weakness of the slow movement of the C major Symphony. . . . His analyses are lavishly illustrated (the music examples number more than 200) and there is a useful set of three chapters entitled Style, Harmony, Form and influences that draws the threads together for those who find the individual analyses too pedestrian."

TLS p523 My 23 '68 650w

Va Q R 44:clxiv autumn '68 60w

GARDNER, BRIAN. The quest for Timbuctoo. 212p il pl maps $5.75 Harcourt

916.62 Timbuktu

68-97451

The author tells of "the passion to be the first modern European to reach Timbuctoo [which] arose in the second half of the eighteenth century. . . . [He describes] the travels and the characters of a number of different explorers . . . [including] the Scot Alexander Gordon Laing, the Frenchman René Caillié, and the German Heinrich Barth." (Economist)

"[This is] the thrilling saga of incredible heroism and endurance, of physical and climatic conditions of intolerable savagery, of murder and intrigue, misunderstanding and confusions, —all ennobled by the highest virtues of human nature. And, in the end, comes the shocking discovery that . . . [Timbuktu] was, after all, but a decaying collection of mean houses and inconsiderable inhabitants. . . . It is the merit of Brian Gardner that he has assimilated the often unsatisfactory sources of information, explored unpublished material, and woven all of it into an engrossing story of mounting excitement. . . . [The reader should appreciate] Gardner's literary skill, colorful presentation, sage appreciation of character and power to handle events, so as to give them their full dramatic appeal." Ambrose Agius

Best Sell 28:268 O 1 '68 550w

"By quoting freely from the explorers' own letters Mr Gardner has wisely allowed them 'freedom to tell their own stories.' For the hardships which they suffered . . . make their correspondence, written in the dignified language of the period, at once vivid and moving. . . . The humanity of some inhabitants of the regions traversed, who helped the travellers at considerable risk to themselves, stands out against the prevailing grim background."

Economist 227:xi Ap 27 '68 350w

"[This] is a fascinating history of Victorian heroism, seemingly undertaken expressly to keep the modern reader begging for more at the end of each chapter. . . . [As Gardner dug] into the dispatches, long-forgotten in the Public Records Office, of Gordon Laing and the other waistcoated lunatics who took off into the void of the Sahara for the fabled Timbuctoo, he must have marvelled at his luck, for, as with Laing, no one had been there before him, and unlike Laing he has lived to amaze us with his discoveries. . . . [The] book could hardly have been boring, but it is finely researched and wittily organized, with maps, charts and pictures galore." Hugo Williams

New Statesman 75:419 Mr 29 '68 470w

Reviewed by John Barkham

N Y Times Bk R p52 O 27 '68 700w

New Yorker 44:242 N 30 '68 230w

Reviewed by Charles Miller

Sat ■ 51:52 N 30 '68 1050w

GARDNER, BRIAN, ed. Up the line to death; the war poets, 1914-1918; an anthology sel. and arr. with an introd. and notes by Brian Gardner; foreword by Edmund Blunden. 184p $4.50 Potter, C.N.

821 European War, 1914-1918—Poetry. English poetry—Collections 67-24606

A "collection of poems written, with few exceptions, by men who served in the trenches. Among those included are such now-famous poets as Robert Graves, Wilfred Owen, and Siegfried Sassoon. . . . [The editor also] includes poems by many . . . who died in the war, . . . [including] C. H. Sorley and Isaac Rosenberg. . . . The collection follows the course of the war in more or less chronological order." (Library J) Biographies of the poets. Index.

"Preferable to [I.M.] Parsons' anthology Men Who March Away; Poems of the First World War [BRD 1966]. Both the latter and Gardner concentrate on British poets but Gardner is more representative. . . . A useful anthology for libraries wanting a good sampling of World War I poetry."

Choice 4:1116 D '67 90w

"Gardner, author of a number of books on World Wars I and II, has brought together . . . a body of war poetry which is fully the equal of any published thus far, not excepting [A. P. W. Wavell's] Other Men's Flowers [BRD 1945]. Short biographies of the poets are given at the back of the book. Highly recommended for pertinent collections." Peter Gellatly

Library J 93:86 Ja 1 '68 110w

GARDNER, DAVID P. The California oath controversy. 329p $6.50 Univ. of Calif. press. 378.1 California. University. Internal security 67-16840

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Louis Joughin

Am Hist R 73:1679 Je '68 950w

Reviewed by W. H. Cowley

Ann Am Acad 337:210 My '68 440w

Choice 5:263 Ap '68 50w

Reviewed by A. A. Morris

J Higher Ed 39:296 My '68 650w

GARDNER, JOHN W. No easy victories; ed. by Helen Rowan. 177p $4.95 Harper. 309.173 U.S.—Social conditions. Education—U.S. 68-19103

The author of Self-renewal (BRD 1964) the former United States Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, and present Chairman of the Urban Coalition "probes those areas of national concern which are his special province. . . . Rejecting violence of thought and deed, he says the middle-of-the-road American is ready for a 'Revolt of Common Sense.' . . . He speaks out particularly about our failures in education. He espouses community involvement, challenging lay readers and universities to guide our society toward enlightenment and fulfillment." (Publishers' Weekly) Index.

Reviewed by J. C. Dougherty

Best Sell 28:200 Ag 15 '68 600w

"This book is a well-selected mosaic of connected passages from [the author's] numerous addresses and papers prepared during the last four crowded years. They are, in a sense, a symposium of aphorisms. . . . Mr. Gardner's aphorisms may seem to the sophisticates to be mere commonplaces. But they are far more than that. They are the distillates of an active mind and human spirit as it tries to cope with a nuclear and urban civilization. They are worth pondering. . . . They should be taken in small doses. They are to be read leisurely after the day's work is over and not hastily gulped at one reading." P. H. Douglas

Book World p22 S 8 '68 470w

"[Mr. Gardner's] essays are marked by the aptly turned phrase, a facile style, and a keen awareness of what present-day psychologists term 'the reality principle.' The title of his book comes from his essay on 'Problem-Solving' in which he points up the contrast between the ability of our society to solve scientific and technical problems and our relatively poor capacity to solve problems involving revision of the social structure. . . . These are Monday morning sermons having the ring of truth. The capable editing makes this book an enjoyable reading experience. [It] should be of interest to a wide audience." William Gibelman

Library J 93:2681 Jl '68 240w

New Yorker 44:119 Ag 24 '68 100w

"One must hope that the businessmen and money-raisers who dominate the administrative offices in most of our major universities will pay good attention to the [author] and will take from him the kind of warning that they have seldom been willing to take (and perhaps never even have been able to hear) when it was pronounced on the lips of their own students. Mr. Gardner is hardly a zealot or a nuckraker, and something less than a passionate author. . . . Frankly, for my own taste he is far too gentle, far too reasonable, far too even-tempered for a man who knows so profoundly the depths of suffering, fear, and desperation in this nation. . . . Thank God, then, that he has at least the concrete awareness that he does of the immediate danger in which America stands." Jonathan Kozol

Sat ■ 51:21 Ag 17 '68 1750w

GARDNER, W. H., ed. The poems of Gerard Manley Hopkins, 4th ed. See Hopkins, G. M.

GARFIELD, JAMES A. The diary of James A. Garfield; ed. with an introd. by Harry James Brown [and] Frederick K. Williams. annot ed 4v v 1-2 496;450p $30 Mich. state univ. press

B or 92

67-12577

"The first two volumes of a projected four-volume edition of Garfield's diary, covering the years from 1848, when Garfield was 16, to 1874 when he was one of the most powerful political leaders in Washington." (Choice) Indexes.

"In some respects the Diary is disappointing. Garfield was less reticent as a young man than in the 1870's when his amanuensis recorded actions far more than thoughts. The Diary analyzes many sermons, but evaluates few politicians. It is sparing in anecdotes and is more restrained than Garfield's correspondence. Nevertheless, [it] is an outstanding source of political and social history, and the editors are to be commended for making the work readily available and for their excellent biographical introduction, illuminating notes, and useful index." Ari Hogenboom

Am Hist R 73:1244 Ap '68 470w

"The diary entries which were made almost daily provide the essential raw materials for reconstructing Garfield's struggle to emerge from obscurity to prominence, the story of a representative self-made man of the 19th century. After his elevation to the House of Representatives, the materials available in these volumes offer an inside picture of the inner struggles and wrangles in the determination of Congressional policy. Garfield was in a position to note, and did so meticulously, the activities of prominent political leaders, military figures during the Civil War, writers, and others. [An] essential work for any student of mid-19th-century America, providing extremely valuable observations on men, politics, and culture."

Choice 4:1312 Ja '68 140w

Reviewed by W. D. Farnham

J Am Hist 55:623 D '68 650w

"The initial volumes of this set contain an outstanding introduction by the editors in which they give the background of the period and set the tone of Garfield's comments. In lieu of any current biography of Garfield, this diary must stand in its place. Recommended for all larger research collections despite the price." Stan Oliner

Library J 92:4404 D 1 '67 110w

GARFIELD, LEON. Mister Corbett's ghost; ll. by Alan E. Cober. 87p $3.50 Pantheon bks.

68-12653

In this story, "young Benjamin Partridge is apprentice to a harsh, relentless apothecary.

GARFIELD, LEON—Continued

On a black and windy New Year's Eve—when he should have been merrymaking at home—Benjamin is sent to deliver some medicine to a mysterious, black-clothed customer. In fury and despair the boy sets forth, willing the death of his detested master with every step he trudges. But long before the night is over, his . . . errand has turned into an . . . adventure with the Devil himself." (Horn Bk) "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"Elements of Dickens' A Christmas Carol combine with something of the style and atmosphere of Poe in a ghostly tale of hate, horror, fear, revenge, and remorse. . . . The story, despite the curiously satisfying ending, is grisly enough; the excessively stark, cadaverous drawings are forced and mannered." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 44:560 O '68 160w

"A tale in the classic tradition of ghost stories—tautly told, macabre in plot and detail, eerie and sinister in tone, with appropriately somber, heavily shadowed drawings. . . . [There is] a neat, speculative conclusion to a fine story, which should engender lively debates on how much of the entire series of events Benjamin dreamed and how much actually happened." Elva Harmon

Library J 93:4403 N 15 '68 200w

"In the line of great ghost stories, [this] is often gripping and terrifying. More often, however, the author tries too hard and gives us a mere statement, rather than an evocation of terror." W. J. Smith

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p8 N 3 '68 170w [YA]

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 51:29 D 21 '68 110w

GARFINKEL, HAROLD. Studies in ethnomethodology. 288p $6.95 Prentice-Hall

301.2 Sociology 67-22565

"The four reprinted papers and the four new collaborative pieces in this volume focus on the methods of 'practical sociological reasoning' used by laymen and other sociologists in their everyday activities. These methods are, in effect, the application of conventional rules of thought which make behavior 'accountable' to actors in society. [The author shows how] ethnomethodological procedures . . . are employed by spouses in conversation, by jurors in rendering the verdict, by transvestites in passing, by sociologists in doing surveys, [and] by psychologists in clinical practice." (Am Soc R)

"Although the first chapter is entitled 'What Is Ethnomethodology?', readers who do not already know may not find a satisfactory answer there or elsewhere in the book. . . . By current operating standards, the book provides a well-developed theory, and Garfinkel includes a good deal of relevant research in support of it. Further, this research is more thoroughly and reasonably connected with the theory than we usually have come to expect, and any sociologist concerned with making this connection less speculative in his own work may profit from these examples. The rub is that these virtues are not all highlighted, and the reader who is short of patience in grasping the sense of the strange, and often anguished, writing will be justifiably tempted to set the book aside prematurely." James Wilkins

Am J Soc 73:642 Mr '68 500w

"Garfinkel's portrait of everyman as practitioner . . . seems to me his main contribution in the book. . . . But I hope that, while clarifying the perspective, Garfinkel will come to see as perhaps unnecessary (and resting on dubious foundations) certain points he now takes as axiomatic. . . . [His] studies are evidence for the existence of practical procedures in everyday life and for the inappropriateness of viewing such procedures as a theoretic undertaking. Once we have shared in his vision—and his studies are an indispensable aid in our education—we can never again see the social world in quite the same way. That is his contribution in this book, and that is more than enough." G. E. Swanson

Am Soc R 33:122 F '68 2200w

Reviewed by A. F. C. Wallace

Am Soc R 33:124 F '68 900w

"One may learn what ethnomethodology is about by reading Chapter 2 of this book. The chapter illustrates the essentials of the approach through a number of projects carried out by Garfinkel's students. . . . This said, it would be fortunate if the reader could leave the book. . . . [The] other chapters constitute unrelated excursions into research, in some cases with disastrous results. . . . [Moreover, Garfinkel] elaborates very greatly points which are so commonplace that they would appear banal if stated in straightforward English. As it is, there is an extraordinarily high ratio of reading time to information transfer, so that the banality is not directly apparent upon a casual reading." J. S. Coleman

Am Soc R 33:126 F '68 3800w

Choice 5:1230 N '68 110w

GARNER, ALAN. The moon of Gomrath. 184p $3.75 Walck, H.Z.

Fairy tales 67-19922

"In this sequel to The Weirdestone, by the author of Elidor [BRD 1967], Colin and Susan continue their adventures in 'the world of Magic.' . . . Colin must pluck by moonlight the Mothan, a rare flower, to restore Susan to consciousness after the Brollachan—a dark and evil spirit—had been exorcised from her. Susan, with the aid of dwarfs and elves, must fight a battle to set free Colin, who has been imprisoned by the witch Morrigan in an old house that materializes only after dark." (Horn Bk) Bibliography. "Grades five to eight." (Library J)

"[This] is such a potpourri of ingredients that the reader may find himself too confused to clean his plate. . . . The array of dwarfs, goblins, gnomes, bodachs, palugs, wizards, and witches eventually sort themselves out for the reader who is capable of the mental gymnastics necessary. Much of the initial perplexity might be avoided if the reader has read The Weirdestone. Even without this background [the book] should suit the taste of the mature child who delights in shuddering." M. D. Hamlin

Christian Science Monitor pB8 My 2 '68 129w

Horn Bk 44:58 F '68 170w

"An original story based on Scandinavian, Celtic, and British mythology, . . . this stands very well on its own. Familiarity with the sources given in the author's note would make the imagery more meaningful, but the incidents have the power to evoke some of the richness of myth and magic." J. C. Ullom

Library J 92:3848 O 15 '67 120w

"Weird characters and ingenious settings have been freely taken from fairy-tale and folklore and updated for moderns. . . . The moon of Gomrath rises over an unmistakably British countryside and over a hidden, ageless underworld of frighteningly evil powers and almost equally fearsome champions of the good. The story jumps abruptly from one Tolkienish shiver to another, but there is a gripping power to these episodes of creeping horror, reminiscent of those in Charles Williams's adult novels of the occult." A. B. Myers

N Y Times Bk R p62 O 22 '67 140w

GARNER, ALAN. The owl service. 202p $4 Walck, H.Z.

68-23885

In this story, by the author of Elidor (BRD 1967) and The Moon of Gomrath (BRD 1968), "Alison and her new stepbrother Roger have come with their parents to the house in a brooding Welsh valley which had belonged to Alison's dead father. Gwyn, the housekeeper's son, finds in the loft a set of dishes decorated with a strange pattern, one which Alison thinks is made up of owls. . . . [This] marks the beginning of a chain of events both inexplicable and disturbing. In this valley the tragic legend of Blodeuwedd, the maiden fashioned out of flowers, and the two men who loved her has been handed down and acted out through the lives of succeeding generations. Alison, Roger and Gwyn find themselves being drawn into the pattern of the old story." (Publisher's note) "Ages ten to thirteen." (Sat R)

Best Sell 28:375 D 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by H. L. Maples

Book World p12 (children's issue) N 3 '68 260w

"A book to be read and re-read, a book to rouse interest, dispute, excitement. Outwardly easy to read, it is hard to interpret, stirring to the emotions and the imagination. In a daring juxtaposition of legend from the Mabinogion, and the complex relationship of two lads and a girl, old loves and hates, are, as it were, re-enacted. Mr. Garner sets his tale in a Welsh valley and touches with pity and terror the mind of the reader who will let himself feel its atmosphere. This is not a book 'for children'; its subtle truth is for anyone who will reach for it." Marjory Fisher

Christian Science Monitor pB6 N 2 '67
100w

Horn Bk 44:563 O '68 200w

Reviewed by M. A. Dorsey
Library J 93:3980 O 15 '68 240w

Reviewed by Naomi Lewis
New Statesman 74:600 N 3 '67 500w
[YA]

Reviewed by W. J. Smith
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p8 N 3 '68 170w
[YA]

"It is hard to write with restraint about Alan Garner's talent, so deftly does he build his story with laminations of bright fantasy and somber Welsh legend, of romantic adventure and acid realism. . . . The relentless developments engulf all the characters and also expose their subtle relationships to the present." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:37 S 21 '68 90w

"Garner has moved away from the world of children's books and has emerged as a writer unconfined by reference to age-groups. . . . This is a novel of love and of jealousy. . . . [although] the word 'love' is never mentioned in the book. The primitive power of jealousy is given a dimension of poetry through the grafting of the story upon the Celtic myth of Blodeuwedd, the flower goddess. . . . [Thosel] familiar with Celtic mythology will find numerous allusions throughout the book that add richness to the texture, but it is not essential to know them, pursue them, or regard the story as a kind of mythologie à clef. . . . This is not a story which 'uses' supernatural aids to induce effects of brooding uneasiness and fear. . . . [It] is a complex of attractions and hostilities between persons, classes, myth and modern day reality."

TLS p1134 N 30 '67 1800w

GARNER, WILLIAM. The deep, deep freeze.
288p $5.95 Putnam

68-12098

This spy story involves "possible infiltration into British Intelligence, a couple of leftover Nazis in strange places, defections from East Germany, a Russian assassin and a Japanese game called Go." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Smoother than Overkill. . . . but with the same violence and neat twists." M. K. Grant
Library J 93:1506 Ap 1 '68 90w

Reviewed by A. J. Hubin
N Y Times Bk R p41 Je 9 '68 50w

"There's plenty of action and abundant geography in an old-school straight-out espionage number, written with verve and zip." Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:33 My 25 '68 20w

TLS p760 Jl 18 '68 40w

GARNETT, DAVID, ed. The White/Garnett letters. See White, T. H.

GARNIER, J. BEAUJEU-. See Beaujeu-Garnier, J.

GARNIER, PIERRE. A medical journey in California; introduced and annot. by Doyce B. Nunis, Jr.; tr. by L. Jay Oliva. 93p $12.50
Zeitlin & Ver Brugge

610 Medicine—History: California—Description and travel 68-27090

A French doctor's "account of his medical observations of gold-rush California. Beginning August 15, 1854, [the] recollections, 'Voyage médicale en Californie' appeared in five installments in the bi-weekly publication, L'Union médicale, the French medical journal. Not long after the final installment appeared, September 5, Garnier reprinted the narrative as a pamphlet." (Intro) Index.

"The editor's commendable introduction and annotations (one third of the book) do not, as claimed, place Garnier's article in its historical context, but the editorial observations do sort out the published work of 'trained physicians' in pioneer California. The complicated bibliographical surgery would have been more successful if some interpretation, some comparative historical analysis, or even some substantial description of contemporary medical writing had been included in the editorial commentary. Garnier's brief essay itself is an excellent primary source for the status of the profession in California during the early American years. And today's Francophobes will be amused by the glaring examples of ethnocentrism in which an intelligent French professional man could engage one hundred years ago." Morgan Sherwood

J Am Hist 55:401 S '68 140w

"Mr. Oliva's excellent translation carries with it the author's scholarly deliberation and lack of pretense, at the same time presenting an absorbing and vivid picture of California of the 1850's. . . . Dr. Garnier neglects few of the elements of the situation. We find brief but intelligent comment on the physical landscape, animal life, climate, and above all, on the various and as yet unintegrated human population. . . . Dr. Garnier has an agreeable way of using medical description with authority and yet with brevity and a minimum of technical language. . . . The reader should find this volume not only a superb and well-documented source book, but also an absorbingly readable one. Recommended for all libraries with an interest in Western as well as in medical history." A. W. Propes

Library J 93:1152 Mr 15 '68 210w

GARRETT, EILEEN J. Many voices; the autobiography of a medium; with an introd. by Allan Angoff. 254p $5.95 Putnam

B or 92 Spiritualism

68-20947

The author of Adventures in the Supernormal (BRD 1949) describes her childhood in County Meath, Ireland, her meetings with writers and scientists "and her founding of the Parapsychology Foundation. [She relates] the results of her experiments with telepathy, trances, controls, poltergeists, ESP, levitation—and her extensive research with drugs." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This book] is a hit-and-run performance. Brief discussions of [psychic phenomena] rapidly follow one upon another, much as if they were excerpts culled from [Mrs. Garrett's] earlier books or from articles which appeared in her magazine, 'Tomorrow', or other publications through which she has reached out, for nearly half a century, to a spirit-hungry public. But the pattern of her life itself, so far as the reader is able to learn from her rambling discourse, has been every bit as erratic and episodic as her narrative. . . . Perhaps her most striking attributes were those of the clairvoyant. . . . Her gifts and what she has experienced frankly puzzle her. Yet her pursuit of them has brought her into most civilized countries throughout the world and found her always ready to pursue life itself with courage and zest." J. J. McAleer
Best Sell 28:165 Jl 15 '68 600w

"I started reading [this book] not only with skepticism but with a clinical eye. What kind of woman claims to be a medium, a clairvoyant? What kind of people can possibly take to such things? And what will such an autobiography tell me about its author's thinking, her state of mind, her personality and, inevitably, her very serious 'problems'? By the last page everything had changed. I was with Eileen Garrett all the way. She had carried me along . . . and entranced me with her stories. Essentially she reminded me that 'there are more things in heaven and earth' than a mind hungry for psychopathology can quite comprehend; or at the very least there is Eileen Garrett. . . . Her vivid mind [is] interesting, and certainly her writing impressively clear and lyrical. And even if we—the hard-working, sober ones of this world—can't go for mediums and mystics, we can enjoy this one's life." Robert Coles
Book World p5 Je 16 '68 850w

"Reputedly the psychic of the century who can be most depended on to produce medium-like ESP. Mrs. Garrett surveys with sanity and astuteness her unique life. She gives matter-of-fact accounts of 'Uvani,' the Oriental 'darnate personality' who possesses her during her trances, with none of the usual self-bemusement sometimes present in tales of the psychic. These accounts are interesting as are her reminiscences of creative persons she has known. . . . her experiences as a member of the Resistance during World War II in France, and as a successful publisher. Mrs.

GARRETT, E. J.—Continued

Garrett has written acutely yet with mellowness, and has chosen her words well. This book is recommended for public and most college libraries." C. D. Lee
Library J 93:1998 My 15 '68 110w

GARRETT, GEORGE. For a bitter season; new and selected poems. 114p $3.50 Univ. of Mo. press

811

67-15067

Some of these poems were published in Abraham's Knife (BRD 1962) and other volumes; others have appeared previously in such publications as Sewanee Review, Janus, and Modern European Poetry.

"Garrett emerges here as the skillful manager of varied humors in varied forms. [He] is especially fresh in his celebrations, with or without self-irony, of women: wife, clutching acquaintance, missed opportunity, movie sexpot. Other poems in which the speaker is father or English professor are, despite the frequency of these roles in recent poetry, memorably grave epiphanies of self-limitation and mortality. A long poem of several sections called 'Rugby Road' is a finely sustained elegy. College libraries should have this."

Choice 5:340 My '68 170w

"A virtuoso of many talents, George Garrett vivifies the interior life of a gallery of offbeat characters in his dramatic monologues. . . . But in longer poems like Salome, his style varies from a memorable and distinctive language . . . to the language of journalistic blandness; from a scissoring just out-of-balance rhythm to rhythms that all seem to run one way, all at the same speed, and often—for my ear—too fast for the pace of his thought. . . . His vivid characterization and talent for satire, strengths evidently acquired in the development of his fiction, carry over best into two storytelling poems, Excursion and Egyptian Gold. Garrett is most brilliant when he sets himself to many tasks at once. Since his style is usually clean and fluent, a complex poem can carry much thematic baggage, and perform on many levels, without growing prolix or heavy-handed." Laurence Liberman

Poetry 112:340 Ag '68 350w

"This gathering of poems presents almost too much variety for an individual to handle and, after repeated readings, a richness that comes as a constant surprise. The best ones, finally, are the long meditations, 'Salome, Rugby Road,' 'Crows at Paestum'—but this is unfair to the briefer protests, the cries of a man tortured by passion, God, and self and willing to mock all three. At times Garrett is trying to reject a kind of secular sainthood or innocent hope with a wisecrack, and in those poems his spare diction may produce lines that are simply flat. But in his most frothy topical poems he demonstrates he can do anything he wants with sounds and rhythms."

Va Q R 44:cv summer '68 100w

GARRETT, GEORGE. Man and the movies. See Robinson, W. R.

GARRIGUE, JEAN. New and selected poems. 168p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

811

67-21247

This collection contains twenty-four new poems, with fifty selections from the poet's five previously published volumes.

"[These poems] impress us . . . with Jean Garrigue's lyrical beauty and deep emotions as she responds to nature, love, and life as it touches her. . . . In her longer poems her verse flows smoothly and succinctly with a graciousness and charm that makes the poetry distinctive. The variety of work included in this volume represents the best of one of our mature, talented poets, and the book is highly recommended for all poetry collections." E. H. Walden

Library J 92:2930 S 1 '67 150w

"Jean Garrigue's [poems] . . . express the highly charged and the spectacular more often than the bleak, the attenuated, and the squalid. . . . [She is] in full sympathy with color and profusion in art and nature; and it is a relief to get into the diversity of [her] scene, after monotonous journeys through regions rimmed with that nether ice of which Dante and a crowd of moderns speak." Louise Bogan

New Yorker 43:137 Mr 30 '68 50w

"Jean Garrigue is endowed with a metaphysical temper of mind. . . . In many of her early poems, the obsessive need of her spirit to keep the upper hand over sensory experience defeats her ear and her eye, while the vigorous sensuousness of her language at its best is dispersed in trance, giving way to the language and dreamy essences. But her later development . . . indicates a steady and valiant strengthening of those elements . . . which can secure a foothold . . . in the world of living forms. . . . A brash new underground personality emerges in several of Miss Garrigue's new poems. . . . There is a hoarse rasping defiance, with no loss of Garrigue's accustomed feminine grace, that results in a toughening of voice." Laurence Liberman

Poetry 112:121 My '68 800w

TLS p388 Ap 18 '68 160w

Reviewed by S. F. Morse

Va Q R 44:507 summer '68 170w

GARRISON, OMAR V. Spy government; the emerging police state in America. 277p $5.95 Stuart, L.

323.44 Privacy, Right of

67-15890

An examination of the "threat by Government to the individual's privacy. . . . Using information obtained from nationwide interviews, Congressional hearings, court transcripts and confidential sources in Washington, the author presents . . . evidence to show that today some Federal agencies seek to penetrate not only our homes, but our minds." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Garrison, former UP and Reuters correspondent, . . . takes up the cudgel against the Government. The work of the Long Committee (somewhat suspect of late) Supreme Court decisions, . . . and CIA revelations are all faithfully and emotionally recorded in this volume. The questions at issue: Are the Government's efforts to gain convictions and friends by devious devices more harmful than allowing criminals to roam the street and anti-democracies to gain propaganda victories? . . . Recommended for public and college libraries and particularly their librarians." E. J. Bander

Library J 92:2799 Ag '67 150w

"While much of this material has also appeared in other media, it is useful to have it assembled in one place. Too much of Garrison's presentation consists of a stringing together of 'items.' . . . And his chapter on government, 'Publicity as Punishment,' makes no reference at all to the publicity exposure system of the Congressional anti-subversive committees. It is perhaps even more curious that there is no discussion of the FBI's political informers in a book on spy government." F. J. Donner

Nation 205:629 D 11 '67 450w

GARRISON, WEBB. Strange facts about the Bible. 304p $4.95 Abingdon

220.02 Bible

68-17446

"This volume is in no sense offered as a scholarly contribution to the understanding of the Bible, its background, and its role in human affairs. Rather, it is a popular treatment of more than four hundred topics which have in common the ingredients of human interest and 'strangeness.' . . . Arrangement of material into subject-matter categories is for the most part rather loose and tentative." (Foreword) Bibliography. Index.

"Don't believe anyone who says this is an important book, but do believe it if someone says it is entertaining. In this age of trivia games, we are glad to see that Dr. Garrison, inveterate scrapbook keeper, has brought together strange biblical items to tantalize and tease those who thought they had noticed everything in the Scriptures. From the sex life of Solomon to the biblical influence on Stalin's speech—it's all here."

Christian Century 85:654 My 15 '68 80w

"There may be some useful information here, obtainable elsewhere only in scattered books, but the abbreviated form in which it is presented—much of it out of context—negates the value of the book." W. S. Sparks

Library J 93:1486 Ap 1 '68 110w

GARVE, ANDREW. The long short cut. 166p $4.95 Harper

68-15982

"Michael Bliss lives well by his wits because he has learned to play almost any role with ease. But not until the night he finds lovely [Corinne] Lake at the Queen of Hearts gambling club does he dare to plan the wildest caper of his career. She is the perfect accomplice in his plans to get £100,000 for arranging the escape of one of England's important financiers awaiting trial for the embezzlement of twice that amount, an escape that will have the complete cooperation of Scotland Yard." (Library J)

Best Sell 28:11 Ap 1 '68 110w

"A tight chase and an unexpected climax."
M. K. Grant

Library J 93:1506 Ap 1 '68 100w

"Garve's last novel, 'A Very Quiet Place' [BRD 1967] dealt ingeniously with the lengths to which the police will go in guarding a witness of a gang killing. . . . Garve pulls a beautiful switch, teaching us how this very police protection can be the essence of a life-long con man's greatest coup. It is exquisitely plotted and written with dry wit and delightful understatement."

N Y Times Bk R p38 Ap 28 '68 70w

New Yorker 44:147 Je 8 '68 90w

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff
Sat R 51:50 Ap 27 '68 30w
TLS p880 Ag 15 '68 20w

GARVIN, RICHARD M. Where they go to die: the tragedy of America's aged [by] Richard M. Garvin and Robert E. Burger. 186p $4.95 Delacorte press

362.6 Aged—Dwellings. Nursing homes
68-23537

This report on the living conditions in nursing homes for the aged in the United States discusses the food, lodging and nursing care provided; the financial costs involved; and the problems of care for the aged as faced by the individuals themselves, their immediate relatives and the general community. Guidelines for selecting a nursing home are included.

"What the aged infirm of the United States need is a Charles Dickens or, at least, a Sinclair Lewis. The authors of the present work have armed themselves with the facts; now we need the social critics with the apposite style of writing. . . . While all this is old hat to sociologists, the reading public will doubtless get an appropriate shock, then proceed to forget this problem until it becomes personal for them. This book should make it clear that the profit-making nursing home lives off the aged, is a fire-trap often, has inadequate staff, and poor food." J. J. Conlin

Best Sell 28:302 N 1 '68 330w

"[This book] is being touted as . . . a broad, comprehensive exposé of an unhealthy cultural phenomenon. It should have been: the subject cries out for such a book. It cries for exhaustive philosophical and psychological considerations that are obviously beyond the ken of the authors. . . . [Garvin and Burger] say: It's never happened before, this kind of generational separation, and it's too early to tell. Therefore, one must speculate. And they do, ignoring almost completely the conclusions of other minds. That the authors did not think to look into the annals of psychotherapy is astonishing, as is the utter lack of direct testimony from the incarcerated oldsters themselves, from rationalizing relatives, disgruntled employees, and calumnious entrepreneurs." Lee Israel

Book World p14 N 17 '68 340w

"[This exposé] has been hastily put together in an attempt to take advantage of public interest in the area of consumer fraud. . . . Garvin, a former reporter, is now with an advertising firm; Burger, formerly with an advertising firm, is now a free-lance reporter; they have raked over old coals, quoted out of context, and are apparently innocent of any knowledge of progress made in standards of care in long-term care facilities in the last six years. The book is . . . full of inaccuracies which could have been checked easily. . . . This is not to say that some of the criticism leveled at some nursing homes may not be warranted, but a sober documentation would be much more to the point, and, in the end, would lend credulity to this catalog of horrors. No constructive criticism is made nor are solutions offered." Marie Ponzio

Library J 93:3113 S 15 '68 220w

Reviewed by Murray Polner
Nation 207:537 N 18 '68 800w

Reviewed by M. J. Crichton
N Y Times Bk R p28 N 10 '68 340w

GARY, ROMAIN. The dance of Genghis Cohn [tr. by Romain Gary with the assistance of Camilla Sykes]. 244p $5 World pub.

68-28113

"A tale of the 'new' Germany in which the protagonist, a murdered Jewish music-hall comedian, Genghis Cohn, becomes a dybbuk and haunts a former S.S. officer [named Schatzl] who has, since his 'denazification,' become a police commissioner deeply enmeshed in solving a series of murders. . . . All the corpses are found with expressions of bliss and fulfillment on their faces. The dybbuk almost drives the commissioner mad in 'helping' in the solution of these crimes." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. D. Gauthier
America 119:264 S 28 '68 700w

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 222:96 Ag '68 20w

"It will help if the reader knows enough German and Yiddish to interpret some of the meaning implicit in the names of the characters and some of the expressions which a third-rate comedian of the Yiddish burlesque circuit would naturally use. . . . It is Cohn himself who tells this outrageous tale, which has some deep if not profound symbolism under its mythic skin. It is a comic novel, but the comedy is cosmic. Some may call it black comedy; some may find it merely as dark as the far side of the moon and funny only at rare intervals. . . . André Malraux is quoted as saying that this novel is 'one of the rare contributions of our time, both to mythology and to great comic literature'. I do not agree completely with M. Malraux, but there is at least something to be said for his opinion." R. F. Grady

Best Sell 28:218 S 1 '68 600w

Christian Science Monitor p17 O 3 '68
250w

"Gary has an almost uncanny ability to weave a story combining black and bittersweet humor with an underlying philosophy which reveals his feelings about man and the world in which he lives and suffers or causes others to suffer. . . . The investigation [of the murders] cleverly brings out Mr. Gary's feelings about the blood-guilt of a generation. The book is almost too easy to read and the reader should not miss what the author has to say between the lines." H. L. Rosofsky

Library J 93:2897 Ag '68 170w

Reviewed by Marian Engel
N Y Times Bk R p5 O 6 '68 750w

"Gary, a former French diplomat and author of such successes as 'The Ski Bum' [BRD 1965], . . . plunges his brilliant verbal scalpel into the tenderest portions of the human condition and removes a slice of twentieth-century life that is witty, disturbing, and, in part, tasteless. As though he were operating a slide projector, Gary parades before his readers a fantastic cast of nonhumans masquerading as real characters in our era. . . . The unsatiable Lily represents, on one level, man's search for the perfect orgasm and, on another, his search for the totally satisfying apocalypse. . . . Florian is himself a symbol of death who, after Lily is repeatedly left unsatisfied by a host of lovers ranging from Christ to Hitler, knifes Lily's unsuccessful lovers in the back at the very height of sexual ecstasy. . . . Out of such fantasies, author Gary builds an incredible carnival of symbolic interplay, cynical historiography and stand-up comedy." T. G. Plate

Newsweek 72:86 Ag 19 '68 440w

Reviewed by M. J. Bandler
Sat R 51:36 Ag 6 '68 950w
Time 92:64 Ag 23 '68 900w

GASCOIGNE, BAMBER. World theatre; an illustrated history. 335p il col il $15 Little

792 Theater—History
68-22899

This volume "begins with the earliest known attempts by man to act out a ritual or entertain an audience, devotes . . . attention to the classical period in Greece and in Rome, explores the theatrical tradition of the East, returns to Europe in the Middle Ages (morality and miracle plays), the Renaissance era, the 'Golden Age' of the late 16th and early 17th centuries in England, France and Italy; discusses the European style of play production and scene design; then moves into the 19th century and on to the Modern Theatre." (Best Sell) Bibliography.

Best Sell 28:349 N 15 '68 140w

GASCOIGNE, BAMBER—Continued

"It would be unfortunate if [this book] were passed over as just another gift item. [Gascoigne's] 'illustrated history' of theater (not of drama) began with his choice of illustrations (31 color plates, 290 monochromes). Having picked the paintings, etchings, drawings, photographs (many of them not easily available) that best indicate the theaters and the productions that filled them, Gascoigne provides a text that points at details within the pictures. . . . [His] prose is neat and clear without descending to textbook flatness, lightened by flashes of personal idiosyncrasy. . . . [However] although he warns that pictorial evidence is a tricky matter, he sometimes seems to over-read his exhibits, particularly when he accepts as fact what current scholarship has begun to question—the Elizabethan inner stage, for instance." Gerald Weales

Book World p5 D 1 '68 370w

GASKELL, T. F., Jr. auth. North Sea oil—the great gamble. See Cooper, B.

GASKING, ELIZABETH B. Investigations into generation, 1651-1828. 192p $6 Johns Hopkins press

574.09 Biology—History. Reproduction

66-16041

A history of scientific investigations into "the origin of new living organisms, chiefly by sexual reproduction. . . . Chapters deal with the concepts of preformation, animalculism, ovism, epigenesis, and their modifications [as well as the work of] Harvey, Maupertuis, Wolff, Haller, Bonnet, Spallanzani, Prévost and Dumas, and von Baer. . . . There is a time chart of significant dates in the development of the concepts discussed." (Science) Bibliography. Index.

"The text is of primary interest to the scientific historian and philosopher. It could be used as an example to illustrate the development of ideas."

Choice 5:986 O '68 120w

"The work receives high marks for bringing its subject up to date for the general scientific reader interested in intelligent historical reconstruction and interpretation. . . . [The chapters] on Harvey and Spallanzani seemed particularly clear and concise; that on Bonnet was perhaps most stimulating in impelling one to go back to the original writings. The brief extracts from von Baer's thought were less well chosen and cogent than I had hoped. . . . [This book] is highly recommended as a pleasantly composed, selective but well-balanced account of its subject, based on patently sympathetic understanding of the original and secondary literature. Particularly for students of developmental biology immersed in laboratory investigations, many of whom are perforce very deficient in historical comprehension and insight, it should make excellent supplementary reading." Dorothea Rudnick

Science 161:877 Ag 30 '68 440w

TLS p1214 D 14 '67 80w

GASS, WILLIAM H. In the heart of the heart of the country, and other stories. 206p $4.95 Harper

68-11820

A collection of two novellas and three short stories. The Pedersen Kid "takes two men and a boy into the heart of a blizzard and correspondingly into the eerie mystery surrounding the discovery of a half-frozen boy. . . . The nameless porch-sitter in 'Mrs. Mean' mocks his neighbors and savors their shortcomings, but finds himself unwittingly drawn into their affairs. Charlie Fender, the lonely bachelor who narrates 'Icicles,' contemplates icicles on the day he loses his job with Pearson's real estate agency. . . . The shortest tale, 'Order of Insects,' reveals a woman's discovery of joy and beauty in the orderliness of the insect world. The title story, set in a small Indiana town, features a poet-narrator 'in retirement from love' who comments about his constricted surroundings and laments his beloved." (Best Sell) These stories originally appeared in somewhat different form in such periodicals as The New American Review and Perspective.

Reviewed by T. L. Vince

Best Sell 28:4 Ap 1 '68 650w

"[The publisher] promises that anyone who has a deep love for the well-made English sentence will find these stories richly rewarding. Perhaps so. But there is every chance that the rest of us—those who prefer to curl up with a good book—will be left gasping with boredom instead. The first story, a novella, starts out interestingly enough. . . . But long before [it] is over, the reader has been thoroughly numbed by the mannered literacy-illiteracy of the boy narrator. . . . In searching for a clue to the uniform unreadability of this volume, a reader is apt to wonder whether Mr. Gass is aware of the pitfalls of first-person storytelling. Mr. Gass [has not surmounted them]." J. L. Herlihy

Book World p15 Ap 7 '68 440w

Reviewed by Irving Malin

Commonweal 88:154 Ap 19 '68 650w

"The real action [in these stories] takes place in the hearts of the narrators. . . . The way Mr. Gass utilizes coldness as a symbol of alienation throughout these narratives is extraordinary. . . . The title story consists of a series of prose poems in which life in the Midwest is the protagonist. The sections of this story have textbook titles, for example, 'Household Apples,' 'The Church,' 'Business,' 'Education,' but these are abstractions with intensely emotional and personal definitions. Placed last in the book, the title story is an experiment in form and Mr. Gass is highly successful in achieving what he attempts, a philosophical exploration of experience. The first four stories are strong mood pieces, reminiscent of Gass's novel, Omensetter's Luck [BRD 1966], but considered as a whole they represent a better piece of sustained writing than the novel. His newest book will be needed in public and academic libraries." R. F. Cayton

Library J 93:203 Ja 15 '68 240w

Reviewed by G. P. Elliott

Nation 206:573 Ap 29 '68 1450w

Reviewed by Richard Howard

New Repub 158:27 My 18 '68 1600w

Reviewed by Jack Richardson

N Y Rev of Books 10:36 Ap 11 '68 750w

Reviewed by Frederic Morton

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ap 21 '68 950w

"Gass's first novel . . . received remarkable acclaim from all shades of the critical spectrum, and Gass immediately became one of the important writers of his generation. This collection . . . serves to focus the distinctive qualities of his sensibility and style. . . . Gass is 'old-fashioned' in his insistence that language is an immediate extension of human feeling and cognition. But what makes him modern is how much he knows—like John Barth, Thomas Pynchon and Walker Percy he is one of the philosopher-novelists who bring a new intellectual power to the basically transcendental American sensibility. It is writing like this that will achieve, if it is at all possible, a saving continuity with tradition as it attempts to save human feeling and individuality for art." Jack Kroll

Newsweek 71:92B Ap 1 '68 350w

Reviewed by Marcus Klein

Reporter 38:36 My 16 '68 1450w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:21 Mr 2 '68 1200w

Va Q R 44:xcviii summer '68 90w

GASSNER, JOHN, ed. Best plays of the early American theatre; from the beginning to 1916; ed. with introductions, by John Gassner, in association with Mollie Gassner. 716p $6.50 Crown

812.08 American drama—Collections 67-6995

Contents: The contrast, by Royall Tyler; Superstition, by J. N. Barker; Charles the Second, by J. H. Payne and Washington Irving; Fashion, by A. C. Mowatt; Uncle Tom's cabin, by G. L. Aiken; The octoroon, by Dion Boucicault; The Count of Monte Cristo, by Charles Fechter; The mouse-trap, by W. D. Howells; Secret service, by William Gillette; The great divide, by W. V. Moody; The New York idea, by Langdon Mitchell; The truth, by Clyde Fitch; The witching hour, by Augustus Thomas; Salvation Nell, by Edward Sheldon; The easiest way, by Eugene Walter; The scarecrow, by Percy MacKaye. Bibliography.

"Gassner has mingled familiar but historically important plays with less well-known pieces, such as Barker's Superstition (1824). With the exception of Salvation Nell (1908), most of the plays included can be found in other collections. . . . Nonetheless, this single volume of representative American plays will be welcomed by the general reader. . . . American theater scholars will find Gassner's general introduction overly simple; the general reader will find it very useful, as he will the short introductions for each play and the selective bibliography."

Choice 4:1129 D '67 200w

"Crown Publishers' 'Best American Plays Series,' as edited by the late John Gassner, has always been a good one. Librarians should not confuse it with Dodd Mead's annual 'Best Plays Series,' a kind of Reader's Digest theater. This volume is one of the best books on the American theater of this year, or any year. The selection of plays (each one complete) is a fine one. . . . In his brilliant introduction Mr. Gassner deals with the undeniable continuity of our theatrical history since its inception, and its emphasis on romance, sentiment, and idealism. . . . This book then, in all reality, constitutes the cornerstone of our national theater. The plays are not often performed, but that is no excuse for not including this book in every library claiming a section on the American theater. It is not only that good, it is that necessary." Irving Wortis

Library J 92:4431 D 1 '67 270w

GASSNER, MOLLIE, jt. ed. Best plays of the early American theatre. See Gassner, J.

GATES, DORIS. The elderberry bush; il. by Lilian Obligado. 160p $3.50; lib bdg $3.37 Viking

67-20958

A story set in northern California in 1912, when nine-year-old Julie and eight-year-old Elizabeth lived with their parents and Cousin Clara on a prune ranch. "Ages eight to ten." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Jean Fritz

Book World p16 N 26 '67 150w

Horn Bk 44:65 F '68 180w

"Miss Gates has based her story on her own childhood spent on . . . a ranch near San Jose in the days when school children carried tobacco-can lunch boxes, went barefoot to school, and the lighted candles on the Christmas tree had to be watched for fear of fire. A trip through the mountains in one of the early automobiles with their fun-loving father is a memorable event for the family. A good book to read aloud for its humor and warm family feeling. The expressive black-and-white sketches complement the text." Gabrielle Waugh

Library J 92:4250 N 15 '67 130w

"Simple incidents compose this anecdotal story about family life in a small California town, incidents that are mildly funny, lightly sentimental or tender, and often permeated with period flavor. A pleasant story, easy and natural in mood, for girls." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:51 F 24 '68 110w

GATES, NATALIE. Hush Hush Johnson. 175p $3.95 Holt

67-12581

"Mindy Johnson, charming and plumply pretty, had flunked out of four ladies' seminars and lost two jobs before landing a classified job in an astroelectronics corporation. The two men in her life are Bennie, a scientist, and Greg, a social worker. Greg's actions quickly arouse suspicion. He has Mindy hide Bennie's briefcase for an April Fool joke, talks her into taking notes on what goes on at work, and gets her to sneak damaged code-tapes out of the building. By this time Greg has accumulated evidence against her, has Mindy abducted and almost sent to Russia." (Library J)

"[This novel] makes the mistake of having as central character a girl who is [too] incredibly naive and plain dumb (or is that supposed to be 'Cute'?) to awaken any interest in either herself or the complications she gets into; and the espionage plot is about as substantial as mayonnaise." Henry Erhart

Best Sell 27:232 S 15 '67 50w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 92:2814 Ag '67 50w

"Good light entertainment for girls." Alberta Hankenson

Library J 92:4273 N 15 '67 110w [YA]

Reviewed by Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p26 O 1 '67 50w

"Everybody who writes or reads spy yarns should go for this delicious bit of spoofery." Sergeant Cuff

Sat M 50:37 O 28 '67 40w

GAULD, ALAN. The founders of psychical research. 387p $10 Schocken

133 Sidgwick, Henry. Gurney, Edmund. Myers, Frederic William Henry. Psychical research

68-13562

This is an "examination of the lives, characters and work of three . . . friends—Henry Sidgwick, F. W. H. Myers, and Edmund Gurney. . . . [who] were the first Englishmen to undertake serious practical investigations into telepathy, apparitions, mediumship and other 'paranormal' phenomena. [The book concentrates on] the progress of Spiritualism in England and the work of the founders of psychical research. . . . Dr. Gauld shows how a number of the persons involved became . . . convinced that their investigations gave them solid empirical grounds for holding that . . . human personality may survive the dissolution of the body." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Some background in the subject is required for one to appreciate the painstaking research which has gone into this work and the careful presentation of facts so that meanings are clear at all times. This is for advanced students and serious researchers so it is recommended chiefly for college libraries and public libraries whose clientele includes such borrowers." E. T. Smith

Library J 93:3569 O 1 '68 170w

Reviewed by Arthur Calder-Marshall

New Statesman 75:516 Ap 19 '68 800w

"Dr. Gauld has written a sympathetic, detailed, accurate account, 'warts and all,' of the Cambridge group who founded psychical research in England. . . . The wide-screen panorama of late Victorian intellectual life, earnest and agonized, is fascinating, as are the details of the separate lives, thoughts, work, mistakes and second thoughts of those concerned. . . . There is no claim that psychical research can prove the existence of God, or demonstrate personal immortality; only a note that its findings illuminate the nature of man."

TLS p938 S 5 '68 360w

GAUQUELIN, MICHEL. The cosmic clocks; from astrology to a modern science; foreword by Frank A. Brown, Jr. 250p $4.95 Regnery

501 Astrology. Biology—Periodicity

67-28492

A study which attempts to "show that the basic contradiction apparently existing between a mystical interpretation of the universe and current scientific thought is not so great as once believed. A new area of scientific investigation is described—the effects of cosmic fluctuations on animals and plants. Experimental biologists have found that plants and animals somehow 'know' the time of day, the tide, the month, and even the year. They react accordingly even when cut off from any of the environmental factors." (Choice) Chronology. Index.

"Gauquelin holds a degree in psychology and statistics from the University of Paris (Sorbonne), and has been studying the relation between cosmic and biological phenomena for over 20 years. Written in easily understood, nontechnical language. Bibliographical references at the end of each chapter. Appendices contain a description of the researcher's methodology, and various tables. Recommended."

Choice 5:806 S '68 130w

"Gauquelin's long interest in the relationship between cosmic and biological phenomena has resulted in this interesting book. . . . Professor Gauquelin traces the history of man's cosmic bond from earliest times to the present, showing the evolution of astrology, the occult explanation of real phenomena, into science. . . . A good book for public and academic libraries." Harold Bloomquist

Library J 92:4012 N 1 '67 150w

GAVIN, JAMES M. Crisis now, by James M. Gavin in collaboration with Arthur T. Hadley. 184p $4.95 Random house

309.173 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- . U.S.—Social conditions

68-14522

General Gavin's thesis is that "America's problems at home and in Vietnam are a result of our inability or refusal to approach social changes in a reasoning, scientific manner. . . . [He proposes several] solutions including combined business-federal programs to use the employed creatively." (Library J)

GAVIN, J. M.—Continued

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney
America 118:608 My 4 '68 50w

"[Gavin's] book is a tightly reasoned but passionate plea for peace, sanity and fresh approaches to the dual crises at home and abroad. If his proposed solutions do not always match the magnitude of the problems, his confidence in the ability of the people to meet these problems is unwavering and, in a way, rather refreshing. . . . In the end Gavin reveals himself as a sort of scientific evangelist, a planner, innovator and dreamer, a systems analyst supremely confident that the scientific revolution, which he feels has created all of man's problems, can also solve them." David Wise
Book World p4 Mr 31 '68 900w

Choice 5:1038 O '68 120w

"James Gavin has written an importunate overview of what he . . . views as America's biggest crisis since the Civil War. . . . The result is an election-year primer for the over 30's who have yet to be clued in. Those who already know and admire General Gavin will be disappointed at the lack of rigorous, thorough exploration of ideas here, especially in the section on Vietnam. The general reader, too, may become somewhat uncomfortable over the presentation of ideas that is more elementary than that usually aimed at him by [various] mass magazines. . . . On the other hand, this style may reach people who have never really thought about the American tragedy of today. . . . And certainly it is these people that General Gavin wishes to reach." Elizabeth Pond
Christian Science Monitor p9 Mr 16 '68 650w

"The articulate, aggressive General Gavin is a practical political philosopher who has done his homework diligently. . . . He deplores our waste of minorities whom we segregate and oppress in our bungled urban planning. We waste even more assets in a futile Vietnam conflict. Our leaders are also blind to the potential for a more prosperous Latin America. . . . This pensive, logical, clearly written book is meant for reflective reading. It is important for public and academic libraries." Marco Thorne

Library J 93:1004 Mr 1 '68 130w

Reviewed by Collin Clark
Library J 93:2741 Jl '68 120w [YA]

Reviewed by N. J. Gallo
Nation 206:613 My 6 '68 100w

"[Gavin's] book is skeletal but comprehensive, a primer of reordered priorities for a society in crisis. And, while much of the volume is taken up with his now familiar positions on Vietnam, Gavin gives equal time to filling out prescriptions for urban ills. [He] sets his proposals for Vietnam in a historical context and . . . discloses some fresh information about the options the Eisenhower Administration was weighing at the time of Dienbienphu. . . . But Gavin considers the problem of Vietnam relatively simple next to the crisis of the American cities. . . . [His] proposals are both modest and radical. . . . For all the logic and persuasiveness of Gavin's urban blueprint, he presents no practical outline for getting it off the drawing board, no fresh counsel on how to galvanize the American people behind the reordering of their society." P. D. Z.

Newsweek 71:105A Mr 18 '68 700w

Reviewed by Frank Altschul
Sat R 51:26 Mr 2 '68 1000w

GAY, PETER. The enlightenment: an interpretation; the rise of modern paganism. 555p $8.95 Knopf

190 Enlightenment, Philosophy, Modern—History. Christianity 66-10740

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by F. L. Ford
Am Hist R 73:768 F '68 1050w

Reviewed by A. J. Bingham
Mod Lang J 52:38 Ja '68 1800w
TLS p924 Ag 29 '68 850w

GAY, PETER. Weimar culture; the outsider inside. 205p pl $5.95 Harper 914.3 Germany—Intellectual life. Germany—History—1918-1933 68-29572

The author of The Enlightenment, an Interpretation (BRD 1966) describes and analyzes the cultural vitality of the German Republic between 1918 and 1933, during which period "Berlin became the cultural capital of Europe. Professor Gay . . . [discusses] the German attainment of that time in architecture, in the visual and the performing arts, and in literature." (Library J) Appendix includes a short political history of the Weimar Republic. Annotated bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Richard Freedman
Book World p7 N 24 '68 750w

Reviewed by M. J. Bandler
Christian Science Monitor p9 D 10 '68 700w

"The two prevailing moods and styles of Expressionism and Neue Sachlichkeit are illustrated by numerous artistic and literary creations . . . representative of contemporary conditions and trends. Mr. Gay sees and explains this cultural creativity against the background of, and in positive or negative interaction with, the political tragedy which . . . was to lead . . . to the nightmare of the Nazi regime. The excellent and extensive bibliography will prove helpful to those interested in further investigation of this timely subject." F. M. Wassermann
Library J 93:3003 S 1 '68 290w

Reviewed by Peter Jacobsohn
New Repub 160:25 Ja 4 '69 1200w

"Mr. Gay's absorbing essay . . . is of considerable topical interest, for 'Weimar culture' anticipated many intellectual trends and fashions now current in the West. The author has tried to portray this fascinating phenomenon without sentimentalizing or sensationalizing. . . . His book has clearly been a labor of love, and despite the difficulties of doing justice to so many disparate trends in various fields, he has succeeded exceedingly well. One could dispute details endlessly. For instance, Mr. Gay hardly deals with the popular culture of the day which, I believe, was of considerable interest. . . . But what matters is the broad outline, and on this count it is difficult to fault Mr. Gay's judgment; he has recaptured the spirit of this exciting decade and he provides a reliable guide to it." Walter Laqueur

N Y Times Bk R p2 N 24 '68 1200w

GAY, THERESSA. James W. Marshall: the discoverer of California gold; a biography. 558p pl $10 Talisman press

B or 92 Marshall, James Wilson 67-26262

An "account of the life of Marshall, the actual discoverer of the gold at Sutter's Mill." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"This oversize book is neither orthodox history nor biography. The author's enthusiasm and tenacity strike the reader at once. Less commendable are tendencies toward adulation of subject, antiquarianism, manufactured imagery, and the insertion of conversations that professional historians would want more closely documented. . . . To cast Marshall in the role of a major figure, as does the author, is to misjudge the importance of the individual in history. Thirty years of painstaking work, nevertheless, went into her book. . . . Clear writing and an indefatigable search for sources, nationally as well as locally, are obvious. In places the torrent of facts concerning Marshall is channeled rewardingly, and with worthwhile thoroughness. In recounting the history that deals only tangentially with her main subject the author could have profited from the services of a first-rate editor." Andrew Rolle

Am Hist R 73:1643 Je '68 400w

"An exhaustive account. . . . [Marshall's] life, both before and after the momentous discovery, is well covered. There is a section of photographs, and over one-fifth of the book is devoted to the author's footnotes and an index. The history of this same period has been well documented in [Oscar] Lewis' Sutter's Fort [BRD 1966] and [R. W.] Paul's The California Gold Discovery [BRD 1966], but those libraries with extensive collections on California history would probably want to acquire this excellent biography." Choice 5:676 Jl '68 100w

"Just about the time that you have convinced yourself that there is no such thing as a 'definitive' biography, one comes along. Such is the case with this hefty new volume.

... [This] is the Talisman Press's most important book, a biography which transcends regionalism because the protagonist ignited a westernizing movement in the United States which is still (alas) very much with us. . . . [Marshall's] career paralleled Sutter's only to a certain extent; Theresa Gay makes clear the differences as well as the similarities in her full treatment of the crusty, eccentric, spiritualist-pioneer who kicked California, accidentally, into modern times about a half century ahead of schedule. . . . [The book] tells us all that is worth knowing about him and sketches in, very nicely, the dramatic backdrop against which he played out his curious role in American history. Recommended for all Americana collections." Richard Dillon
Library J 93:746 F 15 '68 300w

GEAREY, JOHN. Heinrich von Kleist: a study in tragedy and anxiety. (Pa. Univ. Studies in Germanic langs. and lits) 202p $6.95 Univ. of Pa. press

838 Kleist, Heinrich von 67-26224

In this critical study the author emphasizes three major works: Michael Kohlaas, Penthesilea and Prinz Friedrich von Homburg. He also discusses "other works, with equal consideration of the dramas and the novellas . . . [and] deals with parallels in Kleist's letters." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography.

"Gearey probes deeply into the philosophical assumptions underlying both Kleist's life and work. . . . [He] concludes that the concepts of opposites and oppositions form the basic pattern of Kleist's works. Gearey is at his best when he shows how this pattern developed from work to work. . . . In an excellent conclusion he compares and contrasts Kleist's philosophy of life with that of his contemporaries. . . . Gearey's book is for the advanced college student who is already acquainted with Kleist's work and who is interested in literature and philosophy. The German quotations are not translated."
Choice 5:964 O '68 200w

Reviewed by F. M. Wassermann
Library J 93:1899 My 1 '68 140w

GEDULD, HARRY M., ed. Film makers on film making; statements on their art by thirty directors. 302p $6.75 Ind. univ. press

791.43 Moving pictures—Production and direction 67-25134

The majority of these selections derive from published interviews, originally tape recorded. "The points of view vary with each spokesman, who tells how he makes a film; what his films mean; what rules he thinks all directors should follow. The first section, 'Pioneers and Prophets,' begins with a Louis Lumière interview, and takes the reader back to the beginnings of film history with such masters as D. W. Griffith, Charles Chaplin, and Edwin S. Porter. The second section, 'Film Masters and Film Mentors,' brings the reader . . . into the present, surveying the opinions of directors such as Tony Richardson, Jean Cocteau, Federico Fellini, and Kenneth Anger." (Library J)

"Almost all schools [of film-making] are represented—naturalism, realism, nonrealism, new wave, experimental, and 'underground.' Some of the statements are either too brief to be of much value or lengthy but unintelligible. A number are uncommonly incisive and articulate. . . . It should have helped if the compiler had indicated clearly the ground on which certain film makers were included but others were not. . . . The book lacks illustrations, bibliography, index. The latter omissions are inexcusable. Nonetheless, it compares rather favorably with other recently published related works. . . . Recommended with reservations."
Choice 4:1402 F '68 250w

"Much may be learned about the art and craft of film from this anthology. Much may also be learned about the minds of the 30 directors who are discussed here. . . . The editor's selections show that these men, whether wise or not, are certainly highly articulate. Recommended for those whose special interest is the film." G. D. McDonald
Library J 92:3440 O 1 '67 160w

"[This] is a useful book. . . . [The editor] has written a sober introduction combining Anglo-Russian montage principles, an academic apologia for the status of film as an art, and a rather facile reconciliation of Eisenstein, Joyce, Resnais and McLuhan. The most articulate statements in the book are provided by Fritz Lang and Michelangelo Antonioni." Andrew Sarris

N Y Times Bk R p29 D 17 '67 100w

Reviewed by Robert Sklar
Reporter 37:52 D 14 '67 120w

"[It is a rude shock] to open the expensive and pretentious volume . . . and find that its editor either has no scholarly preparation at all or has refused to apply it. . . . The texts collected in this volume have all, with two exceptions, appeared in English before. More important, a number of them . . . do not bear reprinting. Of the non-English texts the most important, Dziga Vertov's 'Kinoki; Perevorod', is presented in an abominable translation which was first published some years ago in Film Culture. . . . Little or no attempt has been made to locate interesting previously untranslated material, to check translations against original texts, or to standardize references throughout the book. . . . Even the presence of a marvellous essay on Hollywood by Sternberg cannot redeem the intolerable slovenliness with which the book has been assembled."
TLS p1080 S 26 '68 370w

GEESINK, ANTON. Go-Kyo principles of judo. 96p il $4.95 Arco

796.8 Judo 68-14356

"The five series of basic throws, the classical judo technique, are outlined by the use of text and photographs." (Library J) Originally published in Dutch under the title Judo Principles—Go-Kyo.

"These 40 techniques are generally considered basic to the study of judo throws, and the text may be found valuable by someone who is just embarking upon the art. However, there is nothing in it which is not already available in other standard texts, and it will add nothing to a library which already contains a representative selection of works on judo."
Choice 5:826 S '68 90w

"Novices will probably find that guidance from an experienced person will be necessary if they plan to base their training on this work. It seems unlikely that a person could perfect many of the techniques without supplementary instruction. Recommended for libraries with a known demand for advanced judo books." Robert Van Benthuyssen
Library J 93:2893 Ag '68 100w

GEESINK, ANTON. My championship judo. 135p il $6.95 Arco

796.8 Judo 66-23114

The 7th Dan judoka "describes the range of techniques which he has stressed in building up his contest arsenal, from the Tsurikomi-goshi, or Lifting-pulling-hip-throw, with which he always begins his standing-work training, down to the Sankaku-waza, or Triangle-techniques, which have a central place in his groundwork. . . . He discusses the throws and holds to which he owes his great successes: Osoto-gari (Major-outer-reaping), . . . Sasae-tsurikomiashi (Lifting-leg-block), . . . Uchimata (Inner Thigh), . . . and finally the 'golden' slip-hold with which he won . . . against the Japanese Akio Kaminaga to become World and Olympic Champion during the Olympic Games in Tokyo in 1964." (Publisher's note)

"Geesink is probably the best-known judoka in the world today. Here he tells something of his career and development as a judo player. The text itself is devoted primarily to explaining how he executes the basic techniques. In some cases he has developed modifications which he at least has found superior to the standard methods. His emphasis on sankaku is unusual. Well written, excellently translated, and profusely illustrated with high quality photographs. Of interest to every active judoka and belongs in every library."
Choice 4:1278 Ja '68 80w

"The value of this book is in the hundreds of illustrations, for the text is somewhat sketchy and rather stiffly translated from the original Dutch. Nonetheless, it is of real value, for Geesink is one of the great champions. . . . Recommended to public and sporting collections." W. C. Allen
Library J 91:6105 D 15 '66 50w

GEIGER, H. KENT. The family in Soviet Russia. (Harvard univ. Russian research center. Study) 381p $11.95 Harvard univ. press

301.42 Family 68-15637

After a "discussion of Marxist theory, historical materialism and family, . . . [the author discusses] the effects on the Russian family of developments during the Stalin and post-Stalin period. . . . He supports his remarks with . . . quotations from interviews with Russian refugees of World War II." (Library J)

"In the last two chapters [Geiger] refers to recent material though even here much originates in the Stalin period; he does not touch on advances of the last few years. An extensive bibliography is included. Probably the most thorough treatment of the subject available in English today, this study will be of interest to large public and academic libraries, particularly those with sociology collections." H. H. Bernt
Library J 93:2683 J1 '68 190w

"[Geiger] accepts some Marxist prejudices without question. He does not use information from modern studies of the working-class and middle-class family. . . . Neither does he bring out the extreme inconsistency of treatment of the proletarian family in comparison with the bourgeois family. . . . Although Geiger assembles a mass of data about developments in the Soviet family in an interesting and readable form, he is insufficiently aware of their shortcomings. . . . He draws on interviews with Soviet refugees . . . hardly a representative cross-section of a population. . . . The function of the extended family in the modern state as an agent of as well as an obstacle to social change is not properly weighed. Lacking a subtle concept of social structure, the book's explanations are therefore unsatisfactory." Peter Townsend
New Statesman 76:840 D 13 '68 950w

"Mr. Geiger has succeeded remarkably well in revealing the problems of the Soviet people in their everyday life. A Westerner cannot but be appalled by the painful tensions caused by lack of privacy in Soviet Russia."

Va Q R 44:c1xxvi autumn '68 120w

GEISS, IMANUEL, ed. July 1914; the outbreak of the first World War: selected documents. 400p $6.95 Scribner

940.3 European War, 1914-1918—Diplomatic history. European War, 1914-1918—Causes 68-11752

"In this volume, based on a two-volume work published in German in 1963 and 1964, Geiss of the University of Bonn . . . places the primary responsibility on [Germany]. . . . [He] has assembled a mass of documentary evidence, drawn primarily from German sources, and introduces each section of documents with an . . . interpretive narrative." (Library J) Translated from the German. Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:1206 N '68 180w

"Concentrating on the mounting crisis in July 1914, [Geiss] presents a powerful case for his major thesis, that German policy contemplated war as a means for achieving position as the continent's greatest power. . . . That this study will end the controversy over the origins of World War I may be doubted, but Mr. Geiss has made a valuable contribution to the continuing debate. His book is recommended for academic and substantial public collections." B. S. Viault
Library J 93:2865 Ag '68 200w

"Dr. Geiss offers no evidence for his statement that the murder at Sarajevo seemed to offer the golden chance for the Reich to become a fully-fledged World Power by establishing herself firmly on the Continent, either by war or by the threat of war. . . . [And, his] documents do not suggest that any calculations other than . . . basically defensive ones affected German policy during the crisis. . . . It still remains to be shown that it was Germany's ambitions rather than her fears that unleashed the First World War."

TLS p186 F 22 '68 600w

GEIST, SIDNEY. Brancusi; a study of the sculpture. 247p il $10 Grossman pubs.

730.924 Brancusi, Constantin 66-26540

An examination of the sculptor's work "preceded by a biographical sketch and followed by a more general discussion of the works. . . . Certain graphic and documentary materials are gathered in the 'Appendixes.' . . . Finally, there is a 'List of the sculptures.' . . . [The list includes] any object of which there is a photograph, if the work is lost. . . . When similar bronzes vary significantly in size or form they are listed separately. . . . In any case I have tried to record all the objects in the sculptural oeuvre." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"The best book written on Brancusi. . . . [It] constitutes a sensible whole, well documented, clearly and sensibly written, and easy enough to read and use. Geist has looked at the sculpture, knows his material well, can write clearly but evocatively; has avoided the exalted mystical speculations so often applied to Brancusi; has clarified the confusions created by Jianou; and offers some excellent critical analysis of individual works, as well as some new information and insights. Not the definitive catalogue raisonné, but the book that every art library should have."

Choice 5:765 S '68 170w

"Geist, a sculptor and teacher, has written his informative and well-researched book about the Romanian sculptor . . . as a 'study' and not as a scholarly work, including pieces now lost and only recorded in photographs. . . . Mr. Geist has seen 80 per cent of the pieces he discusses. . . . He analyzes and includes illustrations of 204. In most cases the illustrations accompany the text. The quality of these illustrations is poor and the size quite reduced. Other works on Brancusi by C. Giedion-Welcker [Constantin Brancusi, BRD 1960] and I. Jianou contain far superior illustrations, but Mr. Geist's text is not repetitious of these earlier studies. In fact he discusses works not mentioned in these other books. The final section of his book is an excellent résumé of the sculptor's style and philosophy. [The work] is generally recommended for art libraries."

Jacqueline Sisson

Library J 93:3124 S 15 '68 150w

Reviewed by Hilton Kramer

NY Times Bk R p6 My 26 '68 1100w

"It is not so much Mr. Geist's mind-ricking interpretation of Brancusi's sculptures which matters here as his lucid and methodically compiled catalogue of them. And he deserves high commendation . . . for having discovered many previously unrecorded (especially early) examples, for having pinned down the date of each work intelligently and with reasonable certainty, and for having assembled invaluable evidence from many hitherto untapped sources, in part old documents and in part people who knew or worked with Brancusi. . . . At last it is possible to see the work of Brancusi in relation to Rodin, to Modigliani, to Arp and to what has come after, with meaningful insight. . . . Mr. Geist's critical exegesis of Brancusi's work is certainly thoughtful and sincere, but it is neither profound nor imaginative . . . [and much of his] descriptive commentary is virtually incomprehensible unless one has at hand the larger and more legible plates of some other monograph."

TLS p936 S 5 '68 1400w

GELDER, GEORGE STUART. See Gelder, S.

GELDER, ROMA, jt. auth. Memories for a Chinese grand-daughter. See Gelder, S.

GELDER, STUART. Memories for a Chinese grand-daughter [by] Stuart and Roma Gelder; with phot. by Stuart Gelder. 286p $6.95 Stein & Day

915.1 China (People's Republic of China)—Description and travel 68-17319

The authors of The Timely Rain; Travels in the New Tibet (BRD 1966) who have known China since the 1940's, traveled throughout the country in 1966 talking with teachers, peasants, university students, statesmen, writers and prisoners. This is their report of what they saw and heard and what life in Communist China is like.

"Again and again Mr. and Mrs. Gelder find a phrase or an anecdote to dissolve a stereotype. Twenty-five years ago they lived in China. Mr. Gelder was the correspondent for a London newspaper. In 1960, they returned for a visit. In 1962, crossed China on their way to Tibet. . . . Detailed knowledge and many levels of friendship built up during the years gave them special entrées. . . . As we see and hear the Gelders' China, the people acquire faces; the Chinese will never seem quite the same anonymous mass again. . . . This book is frank about the cruelties of the regime—the excesses of the Red Guard. . . . But it is the why, as much as the how, of life in China that concerns the Gelders." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ap 25 '68 700w

"[The authors] have dedicated this account . . . to their adopted granddaughter, Siu Kwan Ann. The Gelders are generally disgusted with America's Vietnam policy and her biased reporting on China. Though generally sympathetic toward the Chinese Communists, they are not uncritical. . . . The real value of this travel account is that it brings to life some of the genuine achievements of the Chinese Communists. [The Gelders] are not concerned with abstract public health and industrial statistics. They converse with the Chinese, seeing them as warm and personable rather than as caricatures from a magazine. Although China watchers will not discover anything startling in this book, this reviewer hopes the general reader will learn that China is not an insane dragon waiting to conquer the world."

L. H. Madaras

Library J 93:1141 Mr 15 '68 270w

Reviewed by M. B. Young
Nation 206:602 My 6 '68 650w

"The book is a disappointment: it is less a report on what was happening in China in 1966 than a tedious rehash of the iniquities of Western imperialism, the crimes of Chiang Kai-shek, and the conditions that led to a Communist victory. The authors have taken on themselves a large share of the guilt they ascribe to the West for its behavior in China, but this only encumbers an already plodding narrative. The chief merit of the book is its indignant denunciation of early Red Guard outrages, such as the abuse of elderly European nuns in Peking." Welles Hagen

Sat R 51:28 J1 27 '68 370w

"Despite its diffuseness and pedestrian style, [this book] does more to explain the differences between Chinese and Western attitudes than most non-specialist books about China, as in the attempt to indicate just how the Chinese apply the sayings of Mao to problems of everyday life. The Gelders, with their long experience of the country, are equipped . . . to set the value of the Chinese Communist achievement against its cost in human terms. They found much to disquiet them on their latest visit, notably the growing xenophobia of the children of their Chinese friends."

TLS p551 My 30 '68 270w

GELZER, MATTHIAS. Caesar: politician and statesman; tr. by Peter Needham. 359p il $12.50 Harvard univ. press

937 Caesar, Caius Julius. Rome—History—Republic, 510-30 B.C. 68-4657

This study of Julius Caesar originally appeared in German under the title Cäsar, der Politiker und Staatsmann.

"Though it has been available in German since 1921, only now has an English translation of the sixth edition [of this book] appeared. It is a thorough and detailed study, . . . based on contemporary sources and modern scholarship, handled with competence and authority. It is also as much a study in the failure of the constitution and government of republican Rome during its last days as the biography of one of the most effective political geniuses and statesmen the world has known. . . . The translation retains some of the complex German construction, though this is a work for perusal rather than rapid reading. All college and university libraries without exception must purchase this book."

Choice 5:665 J1 '68 200w

"One may reject much of the evidence that Gelzer accepts. One may wish to interpret much of the acceptable evidence differently. But, even so, few persons of sense will reach conclusions far different from his. Nobody will have a better understanding of the political opposition to Caesar, for that understanding would not be possible for anybody without the background of Gelzer's Das Nobilität. . . . Nor will any one of sense dissent from Gelzer's general picture of Caesar himself. . . . This, in translation, is the book which students of Roman history in this country, particularly those who can read Greek and Latin but who cannot read German . . . have needed desperately for a long time, a book which at every point gives access to the ancient sources. It is a wise book, written by one of the wisest of living Roman historians."

TLS p458 My 2 '68 1300w

GEMMING, ELIZABETH. Huckleberry Hill; child life in old New England. 147p il $4.95 Crowell

917.4 New England—Juvenile literature. Children in the U.S.—Juvenile literature 68-21602

This is a season-by-season account of "the hazards and hardships of life in a New England country village of the early 19th Century. . . . [Topics discussed include] farm chores, quilting bees, the smoky and cold schoolhouse, storm-bound farms, Thanksgiving feasts, the dreary Sunday meeting house, and . . . death beds." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index. "Age ten and up." (Book World)

"This serene, vivid, loving account of country life 150 years ago is packed with details for each of our senses. Readers as young as nine or ten (and their parents and grandparents) will almost feel the splinters of the rough log benches in the cold schoolroom. . . . And they'll certainly grow in understanding the endless work it took to keep a family's home going in a day when almost everything had to be produced at home. The book offers rich experiences. Mrs. Gemming has written direct, clear, uncluttered sentences to point up her wealth of detail."

Jean Baron

Book World p33 (children's issue) N 3 '68 210w

Reviewed by B. L. MacDuffie

Library J 93:4414 N 15 '68 120w

"The book is lavishly illustrated with reproductions of all manner of paintings and drawings both primitive and classical, as well as with pictures of craft works and everyday objects now unrecognizably obsolete. . . . Many of these illustrative gems are from private collections and are here reproduced for the first time. Unfortunately, in this age of Living Color the entire book is printed in black and white. . . . This is Sturbridge Village and much more, all rolled into one painless pellet. And the ending is a little sad." Richard Bissell

NY Times Bk R pt 2, p6 N 3 '68 340w

GENTRY, CURT. The killer mountains; a search for the legendary Lost Dutchman mine. 212p pl maps $5.50 New Am. lib; for sale by World pub.

917.91 Buried treasure. Mines and mineral resources—Arizona 68-21365

This is the story of "Glenn Magill, a private investigator in Oklahoma City, [who] set out to prove that the legend of fabulous wealth buried in a mine lode . . . was erroneous, and then became obsessed with the idea of finding it. With the aid of some hundred-year-old Mexican maps, . . . [he and five men made the search] in 1955." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This account] is poorly organized and not very well written. The basic problem arises from the fact that there is no really interesting conclusion to the story Gentry sets out to tell. The mine Magill discovered was, in all probability, not the Lost Dutchman and it did not contain any valuable ore. The second problem stems from the author's attempt to cover up the weaknesses of his basic story by adding elements of the mysterious and preternatural. This large part of the subject matter simply fails to carry credibility." J. W. Hattman

Best Sell 28:284 O 15 '68 380w

"[Magill] used clues from old maps, documents, newspapers, books, and interviews with descendants of previous explorers. Where others sometimes met mysterious deaths in the Superstition [Mountains of Arizona], Magill's party escaped with their lives after unexplained dynamitings, landslides, and rifle fire. . . . It is not conclusive that the mine . . . was found. Final words in the book include hints for those anxious, or crazy enough, to continue the search. This is a very readable account about a subject always in demand by fans of Western adventure. It will be useful in public and academic libraries because of Curt Gentry's extensive research. Weekend prospectors and young people are among those to whom it will appeal." Marco Thorne

Library J 93:2656 J1 '68 180w

GENTRY, CURT. The last days of the late, great state of California. 384p $6.95 Putnam 979.4 California—History 68-8613

This history of California during the mid-1960's, based on the author's supposition that the state and most of its inhabitants were destroyed in a 1969 earthquake, examines the state's pre-earthquake political, economic, and social situation and shows "how much the rest of the United States would lose in population, foodstuffs, and so on were [the state to disappear]." (Library J) Index.

"Mr. Gentry writes from a point in time some two years after [the] disaster. The stance he takes is a de-mythologizing of the California literature that has sprung up. . . . [He] has written a Drew Pearson style commentary on modern California, one that is really too good to miss. If you live anywhere outside of California, this book will tell you more than you've ever heard before. If you live in the country that is 'future America' you will certainly find something to make your blood boil. Beyond all the facts and statistics and in true Bill Mauldin cartoon style, Gentry has a vital message to pass on: California is a state of mind that foretells the future, the near future, for the rest of the United States." Charles Dollen
Best Sell 28:368 D 1 '68 460w

"[Gentry] succeeds fairly well with his quake. . . . The volume's weakness is its 3½-ring circus arrangement; it is segmented, flashbacked, and incohesive. But it is interesting and informative. . . . [Gentry] makes statistics suprisingly palatable. But, to me, he is best with a sociopolitical theme which runs throughout the narrative. . . . He is blunt and outspoken, at times ribald in his comments on this fortune-kooky state, and not excessively unbiased. His point of view is decidedly liberal and César Chávez comes off better than, say, Max Rafferty. . . . Yet, Mr. Gentry is basically fair. . . . This book is recommended to any library curious about the 34th State, but more for its author's solid reportorial virtues and incisive criticism than for his satire or occasional penetrating insights" R. H. Dillon
Library J 93:3792 O 15 '68 390w

GEOGRAPHICAL PROJECTS. Hammond panoramic world atlas. 205p il col il $8.95 Hammond

912 Atlases

Map66-32

The relief maps of each continent "are followed by maps of climate, politics, soils, land use, power, religion, and people." (Choice) Index.

"The relief maps of each continent are attractively presented. . . . The historical maps will be extremely valuable (four for each country). Relief maps of important areas in each continent (Canada, U.S., and Mexico for North America) make the atlas exceedingly usable. There are maps in ochre and blue of smaller areas, but the printing on the ochre is difficult to discern. The special maps of oceans, exploration, civilization, and world population are commendable. The index could be improved, for only through the table of contents may excellent maps on the Indian and Pacific oceans be located. The volume size is excellent for portability. Recommended in multiple copies for any college reference or reserve library, much to be preferred over the Hammond International World Atlas [BRD 1967] and well worth the additional cost."

Choice 4:1363 F '68 150w

"The maps, brilliantly colored, are spectacular, being photographs of actual models. . . . But the picturesque and the physical seem to have outweighed the practical: The number of cities shown is skimpy compared with other atlases in the same price range. U.S. state maps are omitted, and a 1967 publication should indicate that Léopoldville is now Kinshasa." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 50:39 N 18 '67 70w

GEORGE III, King of Great Britain. The later correspondence of George III; pub. by authority of her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II; ed. by A. Aspinall; 5v; v3, January 1798 to December 1801; v4, January 1802 to December 1807. 671;704p v3, $27.50; v4, $22.50 Cambridge 942.07 Great Britain—History—1714-1837 —Sources [62-52516]

Each of these two further volumes in the series contains a general introduction giving the background to the period covered in the volume, as well as lists of the ministries, the Irish government and the King's household. Index. For volume one see BRD 1963, for volume two, BRD 1964.

"Aspinall's editing is meticulous, his editorial notes are extensive and helpful, and his introductions are authoritative essays and the political history of the period. Despite the decline in the King's health and political power the correspondence is still important, since the King insisted on being kept informed on major political questions and was personally involved in the political crisis of the period. Any library which offers or contemplates research in British history in this period should acquire all volumes of this magnificent edition."

Choice 5:670 J1 '68 120w (Review of v4)

"This third volume . . . [is] edited by Professor Aspinall with his customary care and meticulous scholarship; his voluminous notes are often at least as interesting as the text if not more so, and they always greatly increase the reader's appreciation of the letters. Perhaps the most important, as well as the most fascinating, aspect of this correspondence, is the picture it gives of the quite small group of the ruling Establishment, who with Pitt (and later Addington) at their head, and the king at their centre, waged war against revolutionary France; contended with the rebellious Irish and generally kept the machinery of government (such as it was) ticking over at home. . . . What does emerge clearly is the acknowledged importance of the king and the weight attached to his views."

Economist 226:51 Ja 20 '68 650w (Review of v3)

Economist 228:50 J1 20 '68 240w (Review of v4)

"Professor Aspinall's labours on the correspondence of George III assume considerable importance [in this] third volume [which] . . . is edited with his usual patient and monumental scholarship. One sees in it, admittedly, a king still immensely, even pathetically active. But the signs of a decline in authority are all too clear."

TLS p145 F 15 '68 500w (Review of v3)

"Professor Aspinall's introduction is mainly concerned with the strictly political history of the period, and these forty pages, added to their predecessors in the first three volumes, are gradually accumulating into an account of Westminster politics in these years on a scale, and in a depth, not previously equalled. . . . So far as the correspondence is concerned—653 pages of it in this instalment—the letters to or about the king are now noticeably more important than his replies. . . . Besides the rise and fall of political fortunes, which can be closely followed in the letters and notes of political meetings, an astonishing amount of routine work concerned with patronage, military affairs, and foreign business still passed across the royal desk. Reading between the lines of this gives a grim picture of the times. . . . There is much in these pages for the social, as well as the political, historian."

TLS p807 J1 25 '68 550w (Review of v4)

GEORGE, ALEXANDER L. The Chinese communist army in action; the Korean War and its aftermath. 255p il $6.95 Columbia univ. press

355 China (People's Republic of China). Army. Korean War, 1950-1953 67-12659

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Martin Blumenson

Am Hist R 73:879 F '68 130w

Reviewed by Franz Schurmann

Am Soc R 33:652 Ag '68 1150w

Choice 4:1302 Ja '68 100w

Reviewed by John Gittings

Pacific Affairs 40:358 fall-winter '67-'68 800w

GEORGE, JEAN CRAIGHEAD. The moon of the bears; the thirteen moons; il. by Mac Shepard. 38p $3.25 Crowell

599 Bears—Juvenile literature 67-18515

Set in the Smoky Mountains of Tennessee, this story tells "how the female bear digs her den, awaits her cubs, and then begins another summer." (Christian Science Monitor) "Ages eight to ten." (Book World)

"I wonder whether the author can know whether a black bear is 'frightened' when she gives birth to her cubs. Little vignettes of robins, mourning doves and raccoons divert one from the main story. And surprisingly enough, for a science book, one does not learn much about bears." M. E. Selsam

Book World p10 Ja 7 '68 150w

"[This story] is told with Mrs. George's usual sensitivity and understanding." Marian Sorenson
Christian Science Monitor pB11 N 2 '67 40w

"A careful reporter has devised a clever approach to the study of wild creatures. [This book, together with Moon of the Owls and Moon of the Salamanders, both BRD 1968, the first] of a projected series of thirteen 'Moons' [is] both economically and lyrically written." M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 87:180 N 10 '67 30w

Reviewed by Della Thomas
Library J 93:868 F 15 '68 80w

Reviewed by H. B. Kane
N Y Times Bk R p30 Mr 3 '68 70w

GEORGE, JEAN CRAIGHEAD. The moon of the owls; the thirteen moons; il. by Jean Zallinger. 40p $3.25 Crowell

598 Owls—Juvenile literature 67-18514

"When the January moon lights up the Catskill Mountains in New York, the great horned owl awakens from his sleep and tours his domain. . . . [This is a] description of the owl's nocturnal journey." (Publisher's note) "Ages eight to ten." (Book World)

"There is an incorrect assumption that an owl would vaguely remember the 'two white eggs that had lain here [in the nest] last February.' Birds respond to changes in their hormonal balance and as a result mate and nest. They do not 'remember' anything. Neither does an owl get 'bored.' Other animals in the forest enter the story a bit too strongly and divert attention from the doings of the owl. Young readers will nevertheless get a sense of the beauty of a January night in the mountains, and the illustrations . . . beautifully complement the text." M. E. Selsam
Book World p10 Ja 7 '68 130w

"The great horned owl is put into his natural setting with vivid descriptions of the animals which live in the woods with him." Marian Sorenson
Christian Science Monitor pB11 N 2 '67 40w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 87:180 N 10 '67 10w

"The sentences are short, almost staccato, yet produce with telling effect at times a lyrical quality and a feeling of the inevitability of natural forces. Taken individually, the volumes are more impressive than when read as a series, since the concept and style are so similar in all three. . . . [This book, together with The Moon of the Bears and The Moon of the Salamanders] presents basic concepts of nature in a readable, appealing, and unusual form." Della Thomas
Library J 93:868 F 15 '68 80w

Reviewed by H. B. Kane
N Y Times Bk R p30 Mr 3 '68 70w

GEORGE, JEAN CRAIGHEAD. The moon of the salamanders; the thirteen moons; il. by John Kaufmann. 39p $3.25 Crowell 597 Salamanders—Juvenile literature 67-18516

"The old male salamander moves out from under his log and inches toward the spring pond in the Michigan forest. On this one night of the year, during the first spring rain of the March moon, he prepares for a mating dance exactly like the one his ancestors performed three million years before." (Publisher's note) "Ages eight to ten." (Book World)

"Some attempts should have been made to explain why these salamanders move towards ponds on one night of the year. . . . Saying that 'instinct' guides them explains nothing. I doubt too whether 'some ancient sense' told the salamanders that this pond would dry. Rather, salamander eggs survive and grow to maturity in this pond because, as the author herself remarks, no fish are present to eat the young. In spite of the incorrect formulations the book has a certain charm." M. E. Selsam
Book World p10 Ja 7 '68 80w

Reviewed by Marian Sorenson
Christian Science Monitor pB11 N 2 '67 40w

Reviewed by M. L. Birmingham
Commonweal 87:180 N 10 '67 10w

Reviewed by Della Thomas
Library J 93:868 F 15 '68 80w

"Mrs. George's writing often achieves a lyric quality, and she is careful of her facts. One might wonder how she learned that the mating dance of the salamanders has been unchanged for 300-million years—but this may be a minor point. And it could just be correct. The illustrators' styles vary so that each book [this book, together with The Moon of the Bears and The Moon of the Owls] has its own individuality." H. B. Kane
N Y Times Bk R p30 Mr 3 '68 70w

GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY COLLOQUIUM ON THE CHURCH IN THE MODERN WORLD. 1966. The church in the world; ed. by Charles P. O'Donnell. 173p $5.95 Bruce pub.

261 Church and state. Church and social problems. Vatican Council, 2d 67-28888

A collection of "addresses presented at a Colloquium [whose] object was to study the documents of Vatican Council II, especially those which dealt with the 'Constitution on the Church in the Modern World.' In the first chapter, Bishop John J. Wright discusses the thrust of the Council in general; [then the book] seeks to discover the development of doctrine which took place at the Council and the direction toward which the Church has been pointed. . . . Topics include the family, Christian culture and education, peace and war." (Library J)

Commonweal 87:390 D 22 '67 40w

"The shortest and easily the best of the papers in this collection is called 'The Christian Commitment in the Modern World': . . . Father F. X. Murphy, C.S.S.R., has written gracefully and with a grasp of the significance of Vatican II that makes a reader wish he had written the entire book. . . . [There] is a long, scholarly paper by the late Father [Courtney] Murray on 'The Issues of Church and State at Vatican Council II.' That this paper by one of Vatican II's key figures is of great value to the serious student there can be no doubt. But the average reader will find it difficult if not tedious. . . . In 'War, Deterrence and International Law,' Dr. William V. O'Brien has contributed a useful resume of the things that the Council did and did not say on this subject. . . . [This book has] some things of value but the mystery of who will buy [it] is someone else's secret." R. E. Burns
Critic 26:78 F '68 350w

"The book is excellent as a history and criticism of the Council text, but unfortunately it adds little to the present discussion." Richard Walz
Library J 92:2930 S 1 '67 180w

GÉRARD, ALBERT S. English romantic poetry; ethos, structure, and symbol in Coleridge, Wordsworth, Shelley, and Keats. 284p $7.50 Univ. of Calif. press

821 English poetry—History and criticism. Romanticism 68-13248

An attempt to define the theories of four nineteenth-century poets concerning nature, knowledge and art, through an examination of some of their works. "The poems discussed fall into two groups or belong to two phases of each poet's development. Those in the first group may be termed 'poems of perplexity'; written during an early phase, they exemplify the poet's puzzlement and/or anguish as he becomes aware of the contradiction between his youthful idealism and reality. The second group of poems may be called 'poems of reconciliation,' for in these the poet . . . reconciles the antinomies of expectation and experience into a positive synthesis." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Gérard examines each poem as a poetic expression, not as philosophy, and in this sense he is an exciting critic, one whom students should read. The book does not provide a definition of each of the poets, . . . but a series of essays in critical and historical method, which prompts the reader to reexamine other poems by the four authors. . . . An exciting and exemplary volume in scholarly criticism." Choice 5:1130 N '68 140w

"In an extremely perceptive and scholarly study of particular poems, . . . Gérard has written a worthy successor to his 12-year-old

GERARD, A. S.—Continued

L'Idée Romantique de la Poesie en Angleterre.
... Recommended for libraries serving scholarly students of literature." J. A. Phillips
Library J 93:3787 O 15 '68 70w

"Professor Gérard's main thesis is familiar: Romantic poetry rejected eighteenth-century dichotomies of spirit and matter, subject and object, content and form, and aspired towards wholeness and organic unity; and the poets apprehended this wholeness, a fusion of the particular and the universal, by means of the romantic symbol. It is in working out and illustrating this thesis that Professor Gérard is original: his book is notable in its clear and patient exposition, its careful handling of evidence, and its intelligent reasonableness. ... [He] is particularly good on Wordsworth, giving an almost wholly satisfactory account of that great poem 'The Thorn'. On Shelley he suggests a new perspective on 'Alastor' ('a dialectic poem, the purpose of which is exploration rather than statement'), and brings order to our understanding of the 'Ode to the West Wind'—apparently so simple but actually such a complex poem. ... [His] scholarship is pertinent and sometimes unobtrusively striking."

TLS p1304 N 21 '68 700w

GERASSI, JOHN, ed. Venceremos! See Guevara, E.

GERBER, ALBERT B. Bashful billionaire; the story of Howard Hughes. 384p $5.95 Stuart, L.

B or 92 Hughes, Howard Robard 67-15884

A biography of the American billionaire of RKO, Northeast Airlines, Hughes Tool Company, TWA and Hughes Aircraft.

"[This] is the second trivial and crashingly dull biography of Howard Hughes in two years. There are only two things that could justify another book about Hughes: new facts or some perceptive character analysis. Sad to say, Mr. Gerber, a Philadelphia lawyer, breaks no new ground in Hughes scholarship. He murders Hughes with legend and then, like a gushing taxidermist, stuffs his corpse with gossip-column pulp." John Thackray

Book World p4 Ja 21 '68 1050w

"Gerber's 'unauthorized' biography is detailed and well researched—although documentation is lacking—and jam-packed with fascinating incidents. If Gerber had eschewed a complicated nonchronological technique, the book would have been far more readable. Nevertheless, [it] is well worth adding to any business history shelf, although far from the definitive work that the nearly incredible and historically significant Hughes story needs."

Choice 5:528 Je '68 130w

"After reading 400 pages of repetitious verbiage, the reader of this book is left with the inescapable conclusion that while there may one day be a readable, factual biography of the enigmatic Howard Hughes this certainly is not it. ... [The author] has collected most of the legends, reports, rumors, and so on which are common gossip whenever the name of this famous billionaire is mentioned. Only toward the end of the book does the reader get the feeling that Mr. Gerber has done some recent research and not just taken pieces from various newspaper and periodical articles. ... His confusing arrangement of chapters further detracts from the book's readability. The first chapter starts when Mr. Hughes is 61 years old, the second when he is 41, and from there on they slip backward and forward, eventually covering Mr. Hughes's birth and his recent purchase of two Las Vegas hotels. Chapter headings, incidentally, read like a listing of Tom Swift or Rover Boys books." Sylvia Mechanic

Library J 92:4146 N 15 '67 200w

Reviewed by Mitchel Levitas

N Y Times Bk R p10 F 25 '68 650w

GERBER, WILLIAM, ed. The mind of India; ed. with an introd, notes and bibliography by William Gerber. 256p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

181.4 Philosophy, Indic

67-13639

This volume presents fifty works of Indian thought in English translation. It covers the period from 2000 B.C. to the present and contains selections from "the Vedic hymns, the Upanishads, the Buddhist and Jain discourses, the Bhagavad Gita, the 'Sentences' of the six systems, the laws of Manu, the Sikh psalms, the spiritual teachings of Ramakrishna—and a representation of modern Hindu philosophical writings by such thinkers as Gandhi, Tagore, Radhakrishnan, Krishnamurti, and Coomaraswamy." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"The critical apparatus—introduction, introductory notes to the various sections, and bibliography—is minimal and extremely elementary. Surprisingly, it gives a wider coverage of 20th-century philosophers—10 in all—than do the other available anthologies. This is the only claim that could be made for acquisition of the book by a college library, however. The 18 theses of the introduction, designed to present the basic characteristics of Indian thought, are too cursory, giving a misleading impression of the Indian tradition, while too much attention is given to comparisons and contrasts with European tradition. The result is more confusing than clear."

Choice 5:184 Ap '68 240w

"Mr. Gerber, associate professor of philosophy at the University of Maryland has represented the major systems of philosophy with pieces he considers particularly pertinent to Western readers. He has tried to make his coverage broad enough to reveal the 'substance' of the school it represents. Each piece is prefaced with a brief explanatory introduction including help with pronunciation, definition of Sanskrit terms, and identification of historical references. Written for the nonspecialist, this book is suggested for libraries not already possessing collections in the field."

R. S. Dillion

Library J 92:1628 Ap 15 '67 150w

GERBRANDS, ADRIAN A., ed. The Asmat of New Guinea. See Rockefeller, M. C.

GERHOLM, TOR RAGNAR. Physics and man; an invitation to modern physics. 362p $10 Bedminster press

530 Physics

64-13769

Following an "introduction in which he reflects on the importance of physics to society, Gerholm, a practising physicist, examines in its historical context each of the major physical discoveries of the century, from general relativity to quantum mechanics and the elementary particles." (Library J) Index.

"Gerholm's expressed goal for the book is to stimulate an interest in modern physics among young people and provide some useful knowledge in this area for the intelligent layman. Unfortunately, his rambling discursive style and fragmented, uneven approach to the subject prevent him from reaching these goals. ... The general level of the book is descriptive and nonmathematical. ... A great deal of basic physics knowledge is tacitly assumed and used without explanation or definition. No identifiable student audience group exists for this book."

Choice 5:650 Jl '68 300w

"[The author's] aim is twofold. First, he wishes to describe the essence of the theories in terms comprehensible to an intelligent layman (Professor Gerholm is an ardent opponent of the 'two cultures' thesis). In this he succeeds only partially, for despite his uncommonly helpful imagery he cannot avoid some technical language which might baffle a beginner. His second aim is to emphasize how established patterns of thought must be abandoned before real scientific progress can be made, and how creative science, like creative art, is a work of the imagination founded on experience. Here his success is complete. This book will stimulate specialist and layman alike, and should find a place in public and university libraries." T. J. Pedley

Library J 93:1910 My 1 '68 200w

GERIN, WINIFRED. Charlotte Brontë; the evolution of genius. 617p $12.50 Oxford

B or 92 Brontë, Charlotte

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Choice 4:1241 Ja '68 120w

Reviewed by Malsie Ward

Commonweal 87:625 F 23 '68 310w

Reviewed by Sarel Eimerl

Reporter 38:48 F 22 '68 2350w

GERMINO, DANTE. Beyond ideology; the revival of political theory. 254p $5 Harper

320.5 Political science 67-25976

This book "deals with the nature of political theory and the attacks made upon it by the ideologists and the positivists. . . . [It] surveys the contribution to political theory made by political philosophers Oakeshott, Arendt, Jouvanel, Strauss, and Voegelin . . . and examines the defects of behavioralist political science." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[The author] proposes a society inspired by a new or theocentric liberalism and, as such, open to the 'experience of transcendence.' (In terms of conventional political labels the author turns out to be a liberal rather than a conservative, although conservatives are more likely to be attracted to this . . . approach to political theory.) With the exception of a platitudinous last chapter, . . . the author has given us a sophisticated, eloquent, and erudite account of a position which deserves attention even from those who, like this reviewer, are unable to share his commitment to an ontologically grounded theory of politics which fails to reckon with the insights of evolutionary naturalism." Harry Girvetz

Am Pol Sci R 62:958 S '68 2150w

"[Germino's] analysis of elite theory [is excellent]. . . . This book is of a different genus from the contemporary 'systematic and empirical' political theory but is extremely worthwhile for both undergraduate and graduate students." Choice 5:120 Mr '68 190w

GERSH, HARRY. The sacred books of the Jews. 256p $8.95 Stein & Day

296.1 Religious literature. Jewish literature 68-17320

This "account of the books which form the basis of the Jewish tradition . . . traces the development of Judaism through the Talmud, Midrash, Responsa literature and the Codes, as well as the Kabbalah and Siddur. . . . Mr. Gersh discusses the origin, growth, and contents of each selection." (Library J) Index.

"This book is an ambitious undertaking, perhaps too broad in scope, but it does give the interested layman a fine appreciation of the major books of Judaism and will be a useful addition for public libraries." C. R. Glatt

Library J 93:2663 J1 '68 180w

"It is something of a tour de force to have compressed within 250 pages nearly thirty centuries of a complex [literature]. . . . Moreover, there are valuable insights throughout the book, and the author's love for the literature he is describing is infectious. . . . Gersh is at his best in his literary appreciation of the works he discusses. . . . Some reservations, however, are in order. . . . The author makes dogmatic and at times doubtful assertions. . . . Other statements are either imprecise or totally mistaken. . . . Gersh's treatment of post-Biblical literature suffers less from these weaknesses. . . . In addition, the author's use of copious quotations . . . helps to give the modern reader some feeling for the flavor of this antique literature." Robert Gordis

N Y Times Bk R p58 O 27 '68 950w

GERSON, LOUIS F. John Foster Dulles. See Bemis, S. F. The American secretaries of state and their diplomacy. v17

GERSTL, JOEL E., Jr. ed. On education—sociological perspectives. See Hansen, D. A.

GERTEINY, ALFRED G. Mauritania. 243p $6 Praeger

916.6 Mauritania 67-23574

"The book deals with the geography of the region, the historical background, Moorish society, customs, beliefs, religion, and culture. The epoch of French colonialism and the period of decolonisation are also treated, [and finally] political and economic structure and international relations." (Choice) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"In presenting his data in a generally readable fashion, Gerteiny has performed a real service to the student of contemporary African affairs. It is the student of Mauritania's history who is less well served by this book. Gerteiny presents comprehensive chapters only for those periods which French scholars have already carefully researched. Thus there is an excellent summary of the origins and development of Moorish society. There are good accounts of early European contacts, French penetration in the nineteenth century and conquest in the twentieth. But one learns almost nothing about the period 1912-1946, for which Gerteiny gives but a few paragraphs. For the period 1946-1961 the author discusses only the political evolution, treating it within a narrowly territorial context that largely neglects the influences arising from Mauritania's inclusion in the Fourth French Republic and the federation of French West Africa. Gerteiny's bibliography omits the French literature on these subjects." D. E. Gardinier

Am Hist R 73:1592 Je '68 380w

"Gerteiny shows considerable authority in dealing with a subject that is practically unknown in the U.S. Mauritania is designed to fill a gap in English language publications about an area that has been the exclusive concern of French scholars. . . . The work seems to have been hastily edited. The style is turgid and replete with Arabic words and phrases. Its best use would be for high school or college students who wanted to do research, particularly on some aspect of Mauritania's society or contemporary history. . . . [The book] fills a definite need for more information upon a relatively unknown part of the world and is recommended." Choice 5:665 J1 '68 170w [YA]

"Much of the book is devoted to the political, economic, and diplomatic problems of the new nation. The study is based on published and unpublished sources and personal visits and interviews. Its value is in bringing together a mass of factual material. Although some of the chapters are too condensed, this book is a welcome addition to the literature on Africa." David Shavit

Library J 92:1926 My 15 '67 200w

GERVASI, FRANK. The case for Israel; foreword by Abba Eban. 258p $5.50; pa $1.95 Viking

956.94 Israel—History 67-29992

The author of To Whom Palestine (BRD 1946) traces the growth of Israel from its founding to the present, and considers the social and political implications of the conflict between the Arabs and the Jews. He presents a record of Arab aggression, documents Israel's search for peace and describes her attempts to deal with the settlement of Arab refugees. Bibliography. Index.

"[If Gervasi] had intended to make a meaningful contribution to the understanding of the Arab-Israeli conflict, a reviewer would be obliged to point out that his book falls far short of such works as [Christopher] Sykes' Crossroads to Israel [BRD 1965], which is a balanced, dispassionate analysis of the events which produced, and have maintained, the conflict. But such was not Gervasi's intention . . . therefore, the book belongs in the category of polemics."

Choice 5:406 My '68 140w

"Mr. Gervasi, longtime foreign correspondent . . . goes all the way back to biblical times to prove his case—Israel's unsuccessful striving for peace because of the Arab aggression against it. The documents which are appended, especially the captured Arab battle orders and operational plans, support Mr. Gervasi's case. He reviews objectively Israel's relations with its Arab neighbors, but the picture he draws of Israel's internal developments is a little too rosy. . . . Recommended only [to public libraries]." David Shavit

Library J 93:195 Ja 15 '68 150w

GESNER, KONRAD. Historia animalium. See Topsell, E. The history of four-footed beasts and serpents and insects, v 1, 2

GESSNER, ROBERT. The moving image; a guide to cinematic literacy. 444p il $8.95 Dutton

791.43 Moving picture plays—History and criticism. Moving pictures—Production and direction 68-17287

A "study of the film script and its several techniques. Through . . . analyses of several outstanding motion pictures, Professor Gessner illustrates how effects are produced both in the film writing and in the technical processes. Stills and diagrams are used to illustrate the text." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

GESSNER, ROBERT—Continued

"Maintaining that 'the key that can unlock most of the secrets of cinema is the shooting script,' Mr. Gessner systematically studies cinema as a story-telling art form. Focusing on 'conflict,' he elaborates his thesis in the first six chapters by using the salient features of the shooting script. The remaining seven chapters also contribute immeasurably to give the reader guidelines to evolve seeing into perceiving. This 'shot-awareness' of a film is necessary for any appreciative understanding of 'the ninth art.' . . . A knowledgeable, practical, enlightening, readable book. [this] is a major contribution to the film as art." J. J. Quinn
Best Sell 28:169 J1 15 '68 320w

"[This book should arouse enthusiasm] among students of the cinema. . . . [It contains] a fine cinema bibliography, . . . tests and evaluation charts and . . . is highly recommended for performing arts collections." Paul Myers
Library J 93:3575 O 1 '68 120w

GETTLEMAN, MARVIN E., ed. The great society reader; the failure of American liberalism; ed. by Marvin E. Gettleman and David Mermelstein. 551p $8.95 Random house

973 U.S.—Politics and government—1963—Liberalism 67-22629

The editors are assistant professors at the Polytechnic Institute of Brooklyn. They present articles by L. B. Johnson, Sargent Shriver, W. W. Rostow, Paul Goodman, A. M. Schlesinger, Jr., Bayard Rustin, and others. The book seeks to illustrate "the interconnections between domestic and foreign policy. The [articles] . . . deal with such subjects as welfare policy and the war on poverty, the civil rights movement and black power, the Dominican Republic and Vietnam." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by E. V. Schaefer
Bul Atomic Sci 24:36 N '68 950w

"The editors hold the belief that American liberalism is in grave danger of being smothered by President Johnson's consensus politics, and that much of the widely proclaimed great society is a hollow sham. They are far from being neutral, and they allow for no active debate among the contributors. . . . They frequently take some of their own contributors severely to task for fallacious reasoning, factual inaccuracy or irrelevance. This book was designed to be used as a college reader, but it can be read profitably by anyone who is ready to embark on the 'higher criticism' of the Johnson administration. Recommended for public and academic libraries." R. A. Gray
Library J 92:3647 O 15 '67 210w

"The two editors, . . . themselves convinced radical critics of the society, have assembled one of the most exciting anthologies I can recall. In form it is a series of confrontations between the Administration and a variegated group of assailants. On issue after issue—the economy, foreign policy, poverty, and race—Gettleman and Mermelstein start with a strongly worded expression of their own position, follow it with a statement, often by the President, of the Great Society position, and complete the section with a series of testimonies to the shortcomings and inadequacies of Administration efforts. . . . The Great Society's critics come from both the old and the New Left. Different varieties of Marxists vie with black-power advocates and devotees of participatory democracy. . . . The two editors deserve general thanks for their revelations of the narrow limits of the Great Society and their achievement in constructing an anthology that can be read straight through as an emotional as well as an intellectual experience." Robert Lekachman

N Y Times Bk R p3 Ja 7 '68 1150w

GETTY, J. PAUL. The golden age. 220p $5 Trident press
131.3 Success. Happiness 68-18319

"One of the world's richest men . . . here expounds some of his philosophy and gives a series of prescriptions . . . [for] a richer, more varied, more satisfying routine [of living], especially in the later years." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 221:124 Je '68 60w

Reviewed by W. H. Archer
Best Sell 28:109 Je 1 '68 480w

"[Mr. Getty] is undoubtedly a man of broad intellectual and cultural interests, of boundless energy and enthusiasm. His book . . . reflects his exuberance and joie de vivre. Those readers who can transmute his enthusiasms into their own lives, and he gives guidelines as to how this may be done, will find The Golden Age very rewarding. Mr. Getty urges constructive attitudes toward retirement. From his own vast experience in business he gives sound advice, especially on essential financial matters, and stresses the investment of one's time in worthwhile contributions to society, all designed to enable a retiree to 'savor life, to qualify as and be a connoisseur of the art of living.' Recommended for public libraries." R. W. Henderson
Library J 93:1134 Mr 15 '68 110w

GHOSE, ZULFIKAR. Jets from orange; poems. 59p $3.75 Dufour

821 67-28020

This is the Pakistan-born author's "second collection of poems. The subject-matter extends from European landscapes to memories of the Punjab, from love to the behaviour of school-children. . . . [The poems] have been published in magazines in Britain, Australia, Pakistan, Canada and the USA." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Jerome Cushman
Library J 93:2881 Ag '68 20w

"Nice gentle soft-centred poems mostly about failures of communication (language, race, air travel which links yet divides)." Julian Symons
New Statesman 74:780 D 1 '67 30w

"The debate in Ghose's poems is one between the sense of movement and the sense of roots—having them or needing them. . . . In 'One Chooses a Language,' he is aware of his rootlessness, his continual sense of being foreign. Seasons and landscapes (in France, England, India, Pakistan) are the settings of many of his poems with the restless movement of jets above giving him an image not only of his own feeling of transit but also a more universal one of transitoriness. These are honest, tentative poems. . . . The language is not always sharp enough to catch and fix effectively the persistent cloudiness of mood. The title-poem is fine, altogether more in focus than many of the others."

TLs p1059 N 9 '67 150w

GHOSH, SUDHIR. Gandhi's emissary. 351p pl $6 Houghton

954.04 Gandhi, Mohandas Karamchand, India—History 67-22477

An "autobiographical memoir concerning two periods in Ghosh's life: first ■ Mahatma Gandhi's informal agent to the British government during 1945-48; and second as an official and unofficial participant during 1948-66 in community development, India's steel industry, and relations between the Indian and American governments. . . . [The last third of the book] includes critical recommendations on Indian community development, contrasts Soviet and American aid to India's steel industry, and clarifies Indo-American diplomacy concerning the Sino-Indian war of 1962 and the Kashmir dispute." (Choice)

"The book's first two-thirds concerns the negotiations leading to Indian and Pakistani independence and deserves a place beside P. V. Nair's Mahatma Gandhi: The Last Phase for its personal reminiscences of Gandhi's troubled last years. As Ghosh's views are weighted toward the Indian side of the partition issue, his account bears comparing with various Pakistani accounts of the period. Typical of memoirs is the author's prominent place in his story, but it is clear that he contributed significantly to decisions made by both Indian and British leaders. Especially notable are his criticisms of Nehru's character and actions."

Choice 5:542 Je '68 190w

Reviewed by V. G. Kiernan
New Statesman 73:765 Je 2 '67 750w

Reviewed by Herbert Heidenreich
Pacific Affairs 41:313 summer '68 350w

"There is nothing here perhaps that will prove any major review of the necessarily tentative conclusions that students of modern Indian history have reached; but the hitherto unpublished letters and the near-verbatim conversations tell us much about the ways in which the minds of the various protagonists, Indian and British were working. . . . As documentation, Part I . . . is of first-rate interest. It is also, like the remainder, clear, well arranged and crisply written. Any annoyance that may be provoked by Mr. Ghosh's determination to present himself in all circumstances, in the best possible light . . . is soon overlaid by admiration for the vigour with which he propels a narrative of such great historical importance. The second part, entitled 'The Nehru Era', is less of an anti-climax than might have been expected. Mr. Ghosh is not here attempting to sit in judgment on post-independence India: he is still telling his own story."

TLS p479 Je 1 '67 1000w

GIANNELLI, GIULIO, ed. The world of ancient Rome; text by Vincenzo Arangio Ruiz (and others). 300p il col il maps $25 Putnam

913.37 Civilization, Roman. Rome (City)—Antiquities 67-15663

A "survey of Roman civilization in its material and spiritual aspects. . . . Essays and pictures are complemented by representative passages from Roman poets and writers. [The] scope of this book enables the reader to participate in the daily life of the various social classes at home and in public, working and enjoying life in the thermae, the circus, and the theater. . . . In addition to the city itself he sees the farms and the roads leading to all parts of the Empire [and] . . . learns about the political, legal, religious, and military institutions." (Library J) Index. Chronology. First published in Italy as Tutto su Roma Antica.

"The authors who joined Professor Giannelli in writing the individual chapters, usually dealing with their own field of specialization, include some of the great names of classical scholarship in Italy, France, and England. . . . These first-rate scholars have written a text without the cumbersome paraphernalia that can be read only by specialists; it is accompanied by several hundred significant illustrations of Roman architecture, portraiture, and all the implements of daily life in a civilized society, revealing the life and thought of Rome at the height of the Augustan Empire. . . . Both text and pictures make this book a welcome companion to all studies in the history, language, and literature of Rome." F. W. Wassermann

Library J 92:4410 D 1 '67 300w

Reviewed by J. H. Plumb

Sat R 50:36 N 25 '67 50w

GIAP, VO NGUYEN. See Vo nguyen Giap

GIBBONS, EUELL. Euell Gibbons' Beachcomber's handbook; with drawings by Robert Mowry. 230p $5.50 McKay

919.69 Hawaiian Islands—Description and travel. Outdoor life. Cookery, Hawaiian 67-24913

The author describes how he was able to provide 90% of his food for three years on Oahu from fishing, hunting, and gathering native fruits and plants. He gives advice on how to be a beachcomber. Index.

"Gibbons is already known as author of . . . 'Stalking the Wild Asparagus' [BRD 1962] . . . and 'Stalking the Heathful Herbs' [BRD 1966]—a series to equip the wanderer to life 'off the land and sea.' . . . Obviously, this [volume] is for the adventurer who plans on traveling to our 50th State to take up life in a beachside shack; but it is fun to read and informative."

Best Sell 27:387 Ja 1 '68 90w

"An engaging narrative, with few recipes, this volume seems less practical than its popular predecessor, Stalking the Blue-Eyed Scallop [BRD 1964]." Gloria Levitas

Book World p6 D 17 '67 50w

"[This is] a handbook for beachcombers, but not for lazy bums; a nice addition to a gourmet's library, but not a cookbook. An angler or a nimrod will enjoy it, but it is not a guide to hunting or fishing. It is biographical, yet contains little personal data. . . . Contrary to popular opinion, a successful beachcomber must work hard to live well with little money, maintain health, and enjoy the bounties of nature. Locating, gathering and preparing food was a major part of Euell Gibbons's life of freedom and pleasure. All phases fit together well—boating for pleasure while fishing for food, exploring for pleasure while gathering wild fruits, nuts, and vegetables for food. The non-beachcomber can combine pleasure and earning a livelihood by adapting many of the ideas given here." C. F. Clotfelter

Library J 92:2917 S 1 '67 170w

GIBSON, DERLYNE. How fast can it go? il. by Dag Carlin. unp $3.50 Reilly & Lee

591.1 Animal locomotion—Juvenile literature 67-20636

Various "animals are categorized by speed. . . . The information is punctured by a small boy's questions and remarks. The book includes a chart of approximate speeds of animals, ranging from oysters (that 'find a good spot and stay right there'), through grasshoppers and gazelles, to the fastest of them all, the swift. . . . Grades two to three." (Library J)

"Every animal with legs (and some without) crawls, walks, hops, or runs. But how long does it take to get from here to there? Gibson compares the speed of some of the earth's movers. . . . [and she] tells the story delightfully in rhyme and drawings. For the preschooler and up." M. S.

Christian Science Monitor p11 D 21 '67 60w

"An amusing introduction to animal life for primary grades. . . . Dag Carlin's animal drawings and Miss Gibson's verses provide an interesting way to show how animals move." J. L. Sher

Library J 92:3839 O 15 '67 90w

GIBSON, JAMES J. The senses considered as perceptual systems. 335p il $7.50 Houghton

152.1 Perception. Senses and sensation 66-7132

"A distinction is made between imposed stimulation and obtained or 'sought after' stimulation. The latter type is used as a framework in which to discuss the sensory processes as they function in perception to provide continuous and stable information leading to successful adaptation. Within such a framework the processes of orientation, touch, taste, smell, and vision are discussed in terms of modes of attention, receptive units, anatomy, organ activity, adequate stimulation, and obtained external information. Additional problems discussed are: innate or acquired processes, role of learning in adults, expectancies, illusions, effect of language on perception, and the process of information pickup." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"A treatment of the basic sensory processes that deemphasizes psychophysics, quantitative findings about thresholds, anatomy and physiology of receptors. . . . Good illustrations and bibliography. . . . Stimulating work for seniors and graduate students who have had a background in a more conventional treatment of sensory processes."

Choice 4:1321 Ja '68 170w

"[The book's] style is deceptively simple. [It] is entirely lucid. However, it is written in the manner of an introductory text. The redundancy characteristic of this style of writing would probably annoy the more sophisticated reader. Yet it is the latter person who should read it, not the neophyte who could not appreciate the meaning of the book. There is also much that Gibson says with which I cannot agree. . . . There are many conjectures in the book which need further support before they can be accepted. But it is this feature of the book that makes it most valuable. . . . It succeeds in upsetting modes of thought which have become traditional over the past 150 years." Lloyd Kaufman

Science 155:1232 Mr 10 '67 1150w

GIBSON, WILLIAM. A mass for the dead. 431p $7.95 Atheneum pubs.

B or 92

67-25481

In this autobiography, the author of the plays Two for the Seesaw (BRD 1959) and The

GIBSON, WILLIAM—Continued

Miracle Worker (BRD 1957) "is preoccupied with those who are dead, and recounts [in prose and poetry] . . . the years and last days of his deceased family." (America)

Reviewed by D. G. O'Shea
America 118:509 Ap 13 '68 440w

Reviewed by J. S. Phillipson
Best Sell 28:73 My 15 '68 800w

Reviewed by Harding LeMay
Book World p18 Je 2 '68 550w
Choice 5:776 S '68 150w

"[This] is that most irritating kind of reading, a moving book that demands emotion not because it springs naturally from the writing but because the author booby-traps the reader into it, relying on automatic responses to his own emotion. . . . The structure of the book is skeletal, and artificial. Each section laces back and forth between his parents and himself, as seen in his children. Most are introduced by what may be intended as hymns, misty memorial poems to life in general or to his own or his parents' particular lives. Occasionally in his poems he uses clichés in an angular, arresting way, but for the most part the poems seem unfinished." Sandra Schmidt

Christian Science Monitor p19 Ap 4 '68 650w

Reviewed by Terence Dewsnap
Commonweal 88:337 My 31 '68 850w

Reviewed by J. P. Boegel
Library J 93:1133 Mr 15 '68 140w

Reviewed by Edmund White
New Repub 158:30 My 4 '68 1500w

Reviewed by Jack Richardson
N Y Rev of Books 11:29 O 10 '68 850w

"Using the simple clay of everyday life and ordinary people, Mr. Gibson has written nothing less than a tragedy of man. His prose is so deceptively simple, his approach so unpretentious, his thought so clear, that critics may not treat 'A Mass for the Dead' as an important work; perhaps it is not. It is most surely a work of art. . . . I came to this work suspicious of the author's success in the theater, cold to his Latin chapter headings, antagonistic to his very title. I mention it only to persuade readers with similar prejudices that it is to their profit to read 'A Mass for the Dead.' In his seeking for redemption as a son, as a parent, as an artist, Mr. Gibson has performed the perfect act of contrition. He has written a beautiful book." Mario Puzo

N Y Times Bk R p1 Ap 14 '68 1250w

Reviewed by R. A. Sokolov
Newsweek 71:92 Ap 1 '68 280w

"[This] is not so much a study of [Gibson's] family as it is a record of his discovery of that family. It was only after he had two sons of his own that he began to understand his mother and father. . . . The sections of the book are named for portions of the mass, and, though he broke long ago with his mother's Catholicism, the work is a sustained meditation in a spirit that can only be called religious on life and love and death. . . . Although Gibson describes his [New York lower class youth in the twenties and thirties] in some detail, the emphasis is usually on his parents. . . . As I read, I was more than once reminded of Frank O'Connor's An Only Child [BRD 1961]. I called that a beautiful book, and this is beautiful too, though its style is sometimes craggy and never so graceful as O'Connor's. It is a strong book, written . . . out of compunction, love, and hope." Granville Hicks

Sat R 51:35 Mr 23 '68 1400w

GIDDINGS, ROBERT. The tradition of Smollett. 215p pl $5.50 Barnes & Noble

823 Smollett, Tobias George. Fiction—History and criticism 67-83107

The author "examines the picaresque tradition . . . turns to a brief comparison of Fielding and Smollett, and devotes most of the remainder of his book to a consideration of Smollett's novels, with special emphasis on Peregrine Pickle. A concluding chapter surveys the picaresque novel up to Mr. John Barth's The Sot-Weed Factor [BRD 1961]." (TLS) Bibliography.

"Despite Giddings' preposterously bad prose, he manages to employ a thorough acquaintance with the picaresque tradition in a warmly partisan defense of Smollett, especially of Peregrine Pickle, "his masterpiece." The study is repetitive, far from impartial, often circular in argument. Giddings does not even apply consistently the highly restricted definition of the picaresque novel upon which he loudly insists. . . . But to a library that already owns a more balanced study, such as Bruce's Radical Dr. Smollett [BRD 1965], Giddings' book could be a valuable addition. Undergraduates will doubtless enjoy the chapter 'From Humphry Clinker to the Sot Weed Factor,' though in it Giddings unfortunately must trace the nondevelopment of the picaresque novel. Unselective bibliography."

Choice 4:1380 F '68 110w

"The author has performed his job under severe limitations. In the first place, he gives no evidence of any acquaintance with the language in which Lazarillo de Tormes and Guzmán de Alfarache are written, and in his analyses he employs the Elizabethan translations of these works. As for the picaresque tale in France, Mr. Giddings leaves it almost entirely alone. . . . Also distressing is [his] evident ignorance of important work on Smollett himself. . . . Finally [this book] contains a number of errors [in spelling] that undermine confidence."

TLS p576 Je 29 '67 380w

GIFFORD, PROSSER, ed. Britain and Germany in Africa: imperial rivalry and colonial rule; ed. by Prosser Gifford and Wm. Roger Louis, with the assistance of Alison Smith. 825p $17.50 Yale univ. press

325.6 British in Africa. Germans in Africa. Africa—History 67-24500

"Half of 24 essays in this symposium deal with Anglo-German aspects of the 'scramble' for Africa; the remaining half discuss Germany's four African colonies and their subsequent administration as British mandates." (Choice) Annotated bibliography.

"Most of the chapters are monographs by younger scholars based on fresh archival research and containing much important new material. A broader perspective is provided in four general essays by the editors and their senior collaborators, Jean Stengers and J. D. Fage. A final bibliographical essay also breaks new ground in the historiography of German colonialism and related British themes. While individual contributions are inevitably uneven, the book as a whole is a must for any serious African or colonial collection."

Choice 5:248 Ap '68 110w

Economist 227:xi Ap 27 '68 70w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Barraclough
N Y Rev of Books 11:14 O 24 '68 1000w

GILBERT, ANTHONY. The visitor. 182p $4.50 Random house

67-22677

Arthur Crook is the "ginger-haired private detective-lawyer [in this story set in London] . . . in which a blackmailer [Alfred Samson] is murdered and a grass-widow free-lance writer is involved because her son, on scholarship at the University, has written some ardent letters to the murdered man's wife. Told in first-person by the mother, Margaret Ross." (Best Sell)

"There is a good deal of tension, some hysteria, and considerable plausible action. Good reading, even for the jaded mystery fan."

Best Sell 27:477 Mr 15 '68 70w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 92:2945 S 1 '67 50w

"I keep saying that Anthony Gilbert gives us too little of her great solicitor-detective Arthur Crook; but maybe she is being clever. Always leave them asking for more. . . . Crook is on stage [here] for only one-sixth of the length; but the remaining five-sixths are fine in themselves: a forceful and convincing picture of a woman's battle against a blackmailer, whose inevitable murder provides not only a puzzle but a moral dilemma." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p75 N 26 '67 70w

New Yorker 43:248 D '67 130w

GILBERT, BENTLEY B. Britain since 1918. 206p $5.95 Harper

942.082 Great Britain—History—20th century 68-24709

The author "concentrates on the critical events of [the] period and examines the main movements of reform and reaction in Britain's domestic and foreign policy." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[This is] an extremely short and limited survey. . . . I find little . . . critical discrimination. . . . Nonpolitical matters—culture, social development, public opinion—are largely ignored. Libraries would do better to acquire [A. J. P.] Taylor's English History, 1914-1945 [BRD 1965, 1966] or Medlicott's Contemporary England, 1914-1964. . . . For student use—for which the present volume is intended—Havighurst's Twentieth-Century Britain will fill the bill as would [L. C. B.] Seaman's Post-Victorian Britain: 1902-1951 [BRD 1967]." H. I. Steck

Library J 93:3783 O 15 '68 150w

"Gilbert's criticism . . . of contemporary Britain] mounts no pulpit, emerging for the most part implicitly in the course of a well-organized narrative. . . . The author's avoidance of nagging serves to sharpen such direct comment as he does choose to make. It is as pleasant as it is unusual to be reminded, in the first place, that the basic causes of [Britain's] loss of wealth and power are entirely honourable. But a versatile society can turn misfortune and even disaster to advantage, and . . . failure in that respect is one of the points made in [this book]. . . . Gilbert does allow that Britain is 'a pleasant place to live in'. Whether it can make itself a rewarding place to work in he regards as another matter."

TLS p1203 D 14 '67 330w

GILBERT, BENTLEY B. The evolution of national insurance in Great Britain; the origins of the welfare state. 497p $13.50 Humanities press

368.4 Insurance, Social. Great Britain—Social policy [66-77297]

A "history of the social legislation of 1906-1911 and its background. . . . [The heart of the book] is the account of the coming of the School Meals Act, the medical inspection and treatment of school children, old-age pensions, labor exchanges and unemployment insurance, and finally, national health insurance." (Am Hist R) Bibliography.

"[This] is a work of great importance, as much for its questions as its answers. It is thoroughly researched, using the cabinet papers, Gilbert being the first to profit in print from their recent opening, departmental archives, private papers such as Asquith's, Beveridge's, and Braithwaite's, and also contemporary books and the mass of periodical literature. . . . Only the index is disappointing. . . . In his first two chapters Gilbert admirably traces the movement of ideas about social questions from the 1880's. . . . In his account of the struggle for the National Insurance Act he emphasizes the work of the lobbies (the doctors, friendly societies, and industrial insurance companies) and shows how Lloyd George used them to get his bill passed, though it was completely transformed in the process. It is only at the end, when he speculates on the decline of the Liberal party, that Gilbert falters." C. L. Mowat

Am Hist R 72:981 Ap '67 600w

"Gilbert has oversimplified the historian's task of explaining the origins of the welfare state by narrowly defining social legislation. . . . Even though one rejects [his] definition, one may still concede that [he] has selected the most important period, men, and measures for an understanding of the origins of the welfare state. The student of social welfare will certainly be grateful to Professor Gilbert for his careful and exhaustive study." R. G. Cowherd

Ann Am Acad 372:146 Jl '67 500w

"An authoritative book that should be of interest to students of early 20th-century British social history. . . . But the footnotes are so voluminous with explanations and quotations occupying more than half of some of the pages, that they tend to overshadow the narrative in places. A more selective use of such material, as well as shorter chapters, would have improved the format, if not the readability. . . . In general, Gilbert's evaluation of the origin and significance of these laws is sound. It is doubtful, however, that he has broken much new ground."

Choice 5:652 Jl '68 200w

"So commanding is the mastery [this history] displays that the nonhistorian will appreciate its qualities to a degree only marginally less [than the historian]. . . . The felicities of Professor Gilbert's art are many. High among them is his sardonic turn of humour. . . . Many important things are made clear. Perhaps the most important is the almost total dependence of the Liberal government for the shape and contours of its social policy on Lloyd George, Churchill and Masterman. . . . If there is a weakness in the book it is its exclusion of the financial dimension. But compensations abound. Not the least of them is the gratification of seeing the Webbs, hitherto bunked and debunked, put clearly and fairly into focus at last. And especially Professor Gilbert must be commended for his analysis of the politics of the medical world. . . . Lastly, the bibliography is a valuable study in itself."

Economist 222:232 Ja 21 '67 800w

Reviewed by Asa Briggs

Pol Sci Q 82:657 D '67 700w

GILBERT, CHARLES E. Popular government in America. See Hyneman, C. S.

GILBERT, JAMES BURKHART. Writers and partisans: a history of literary radicalism in America. 303p $6.95 Wiley

810.9 U.S.—Intellectual life. Partisan review. American literature. Radicals and radicalism. Authors, American 68-18485

"A history of assumptions about literature and the role of the intellectual seen through an important institution, the little magazine. . . . In my study of the Partisan Review I have examined the beginnings of literary radicalism in the twentieth century through the 1920s. . . . The discussion ends at two dates: at 1945 insofar as the editorial staff is concerned and at about 1952 regarding important intellectual trends." (Pref) Index.

Reviewed by Michael Harrington

Commentary 46:116 N '68 1800w

Reviewed by R. L. Tyler

J Am Hist 55:419 S '68 440w

"In an almost painstaking analytical study of literary radicalism in America, Gilbert digests and reduces to convenient size the ebb and flow of criticism from the founding of the Masses in 1911 to the disillusionment of the second World War. He gives a blow-by-blow account of the effects upon writing and criticism of socialism, bohemianism, expatriation, Communism, Trotskyism, patriotism, pacifism, McCarthyism and every other ism, literary or political, recognized in this century. . . . [This book] will be valuable for serious students of modern American writing, including informed laymen, young adults as well as specialists." F. N. Jones

Library J 93:2658 Jl '68 160w [YA]

Reviewed by H. R. Wolf

Nation 206:834 Je 24 '68 500w

Reviewed by Christopher Lasch

N Y Rev of Books 11:20 S 12 '68 2700w

"[His] concentration on Partisan Review involves Mr. Gilbert in studying the changing ideas of William Phillips, Philip Rahy, and other editors under considerable magnification, though they were Jefferson and Madison, with disastrous and often ludicrous results."

New Yorker 44:146 Je 8 '68 140w

"Professor Gilbert is a remarkably informative and illuminating guide. As a history of twenty years of The Partisan Review his book can hardly be faulted, except in so far as he all along pays rather more attention to the explicitly political statements of the magazine than to the larger mass of its literary and broadly cultural contents—a bias perhaps inevitably dictated by the terms of his inquiry. For the rest, any disappointment resides only in the extent to which the large claims hinted at in the sub-title are never quite fulfilled. . . . But all in all, the author is to be congratulated on a considerable achievement. Writers and Partisans is an invaluable contribution to twentieth-century American literary, cultural and intellectual history."

TLS p1078 S 26 '68 2400w

GILBERT, MARTIN. Winston Churchill. 112p $3.25 Dial press

B or 92 Churchill, Sir Winston Leonard Spencer 67-22253

This volume discusses the highlights of Churchill's career. Bibliography.

"Because of brevity the volume might present some difficulties for young readers without sufficient background. But it will still serve as an introductory study of the man and the course of the British Empire through the first half of this century."

GILBERT, MARTIN—Continued

Best Sell 27:430 F 1 '68 70w [YA]

"With the exception of minor additions . . . this is the exact text of the Oxford University Press publication of 1966. . . . The illustrations are also the same as the Oxford edition. The bibliography is rearranged but the lists are unchanged. Larger print and a hard cover will not convert this adult biography into a juvenile. Similar and better material is available for juvenile readers." M. B. Long

Library J 92:4622 D 15 '67 150w [YA]

GILBERT, MICHAEL. Overdrive; a novel. 245p $4.95 Harper 67-28825

The story of twenty years in the life of a businessman with a tremendous overdrive for success. "Oliver Nugent developed his great talent for seeking ends without bothering about the means during his wartime tank drive [with the British Army] up the Italian boot. He employs the same ruthlessness to move [the drug and cosmetic company], Quinn and Nicholson, into big business after he persuades his fellow tank man Dumbo Nicholson to give him a seat on the board." (Library J)

Reviewed by T. M. Garrett

Best Sell 27:441 F 15 '68 140w

"As perceptive and vivid a portrayal of the business world and its ramifications as The Crack in the Teacup [BRD 1966] was of the political maelstrom." M. K. Grant

Library J 92:4030 N 1 '67 90w

"You may read [this] as a straight novel utilizing certain techniques of suspense or as a suspense novel of unusual substance. The point is that you should read it. Gilbert is as vigorously readable as ever, he probes a little deeper into some of his characters, and he has a story to tell which makes its own commentary on our contemporary world." Anthony Boucher

N Y Times Bk R p34 F 25 '68 120w

"From time to time, readers with some firsthand experience of business may be reminded that the development of successful enterprises in the twentieth century is really not much like life at the front. Mr. Gilbert, however, is a gifted writer of thrillers, and he banishes such doubts by pushing his entertainment along at a headlong pace, hustling the reader into a more than willing suspension of disbelief."

New Yorker 44:174 Ap 6 '68 120w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:33 Je 15 '68 150w [YA]

GILBERT, W. S. Gilbert before Sullivan; six comic plays; ed. and with an introd. by Jane W. Stedman. 270p pl $6.95 Univ. of Chicago press

822 Musical revues, comedies, etc. 67-16778

This volume contains the texts of six one-act plays, originally written for The German Reed Entertainments. Contents: No cards; Ages ago (including piano-vocal score by Frederic Clay); Our island home; A sensation novel; Happy Arcadia; and Eyes and no eyes. Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

Choice 5:213 Ap '68 220w

Christian Century 84:1135 S 6 '67 50w

"Miss Stedman obtained her six texts from several manuscripts, and in an appendix notes variations found in different versions. . . . The book will be helpful in drama and Victoriana collections." W. K. Beatty

Library J 92:2174 Je 1 '67 150w

"The 'six comic plays' in this volume were staged between 1869 and 1875; all of them are pleasant harbingers of the magical collaboration to come. [Jane Stedman] has added a long essay on her subject's place in the mid-Victorian theater that is a delightful blend of scholarship and charm. All of these musical meringues are highly proper echoes of the then popular Bouffes Parisiens—and the average reader of today will find their antic posturings as dated as Elsie Dinsmore (who would have enjoyed them thoroughly). Savoyards in search of origins will find the whole book a must. It deserves a place on the addict's shelf between the 'Bab Ballads' and the collected G&S oeuvre."

N Y Times Bk R p38 O 1 '67 160w

GILBERT, W. S. W. S. Gilbert's A song to sing. Ol' from The yeomen of the guard by W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan; set to pictures by Rosemary Wells. unp $3.95 Macmillan (N Y)

782.8

68-11003

"Cartoon-like drawings interpret the song from The Yeomen of the Guard as the courtship of a proud white bird—the 'merrymaid' for whom the 'merrymen, moping mum' sighs. The merrymen is a downcast, devoted, dull-gray bird whose rival is a lordly popinjay. . . . Complete lyrics and music are included. . . . Grade five and up." (Library J)

"Gilbert and Sullivan buffs will appreciate Rosemary Wells' witty picturization of [this] sophisticated nonsensical song. . . . Almost any adult will chuckle at the deadpan poses of Merryman, Merrymaid and Popinjay, three birds involved in the courtship 'sung to the moon by a lovelorn loon.' Young children, for whom the small picture book seems to be designed, may be the first to feel lost and wander to other games." M. B. King

Book World p12 Ag 11 '68 100w

"The most appreciative audience for this attractive picture book will be adults and older children among the Gilbert and Sullivan buffs. [The drawings are] humorous [and] sophisticated. . . . The strong rhymes could be good aural training for younger children who would unfortunately, not be as likely to understand the story." M. L. Gardin

Library J 93:1309 Mr 15 '68 100w

"[This song] has been illustrated with genius by Rosemary Wells, on her first try at a children's book. The three antic birds involved in the round of love made me laugh the rare laugh of joy and recognition. The brilliant color (whole pages bright blue or red impose a mood) should delight any child. Someone will want to go to sleep with this treasure under his pillow." May Sarton

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p6 My 5 '68 160w

GILBOA, YEHOASHUA A. Confess! confess! eight years in Soviet prisons; tr. from the Hebrew by Dov Ben Aba. 304p $6.95 Little

365 World War, 1939-1945—Prisoners and prisons. Prisons—Russia 68-29085

"The author of this autobiographical account was a young Polish Zionist who was arrested trying to cross a border early in World War II and who spent the next eight years in the Soviet Union, mostly in prison camps in North and in Central Asia. After his release he made his way back to Poland and later became an Israeli journalist. This book contains . . . descriptions of [his] interrogations and of prison life." (Library J)

"The account is related without bitterness; in fact, the author manifests a certain compassion for his persecutors and in this well-written book gives us a feeling of what it was like to survive a Russian prison camp. . . . [He has the] ability to hold you with his story of the greatness and misery of man." W. H. Schweder

Best Sell 28:343 N 15 '68 550w

"[This is] not a gloomy book, however, nothing significant is added to the reader's knowledge of Soviet prisons. We know by now that the Arctic is cold and that prisoners try to find enough food to stay alive. And most people accept the point of view that the Russian government was as anti-Zionist 25 years ago as it is now." John Neufeld

Library J 93:4132 N 1 '68 120w

GILLIATT, MARY. English style in interior decoration [by] Mary Gilliatt [and] Michael Boys. (A Studio bk) 144p il col il $17.50 Viking

747.2 Interior decoration. Decoration and ornament, English 67-28280

This volume presents examples of "the eclectic look known as English Style, associated with the art of mixing periods and nationalities of furniture, painting, sculpture, materials, and objects in a modern way." (Publisher's note)

"The English have always had a flair for creating rooms where style and comfort meet. . . . Their forte is to take those standard ingredients which project the 'contemporary look' and give them a twirl. . . . Whether the designers are Purists in retreat, or New Wavers, or Fantasists, or Renewers, they can certainly be said, on the basis of the expertly revealing and concealing photographs presented here, to project a distinctive and agreeable British image. There are so many ideas and approaches to be appropriated that it would take the most resistant householder not to heed some. Like clever and unashamed magpies, the British have raided Italy past and present, the Orient, France, Germany, and now America for their special synthesis." Bowden Broadwater

Book World p6 D 10 '67 150w

"A survey, beautifully—indeed lushly—illustrated, of 'what has happened in domestic interior design during the last two decades.' 'England' is not where most of the English live, but the home of the cultivated middle classes, and here for us to look at are their houses. . . . Delightful, sometimes mouth-watering, [this eclecticism] can be, involving great sensibility and charm and a light touch with the past that can amount to a genius for pastiche. At its worst, it becomes a philosophy of 'anything goes, and anything goes with anything.' . . . In a curious way, in this 'skilful juxtaposition' of new and antique the essence of objects leaks away."

Economist 225:xiv D 2 '67 550w

"Fashion photographer Michael Boys' photographs, which include many in color, are obviously of rooms, not of decorators' sets. His subjects range from the apartments of Princess Margaret and the Earl of Snowden in Kensington Palace to a flat off the Strand in London; he also includes country houses. Mary Gilliatt, an interior design consultant, may not prove her basic premise: that an English style is evolving; but she has presented sound decorating ideas and examples of accomplishment. This picture book has an awkward format (11" x 14 1/2"). However, libraries with collections in the field will wish to acquire it."

Paul von Khrum
Library J 92:4143 N 15 '67 130w

GILLIATT, PENELOPE. A state of change.
221p $4.95 Random house

68-14501

"The interweaving lives and changing relationships of three people are the subject of this . . . novel. Kasia Grabowska is 23 years of age when she decides to flee Poland to go to London in 1949. After a lonely winter she meets Don Clancy, an argumentative young man 'in television,' and his friend Harry Clapton, a doctor. Don and Kasia begin a relationship which ends four-and-one-half years later when she encounters Harry on a train bound for Rome. Despite the complication of Harry's marriage, they begin living together in a country cottage with Don as a frequent visitor. The friendships endure through Don's disastrous love affair with Christabel and Harry's imprisonment for performing an abortion." (Library J)

"Brilliant dialogue and vivid characterizations make up for a narrative that spends chapters on trivia and sentences on turning points." Barbara Pfrogner
Library J 93:1161 Mr 15 '68 160w

Reviewed by Desmond MacNamara.
New Statesman 73:657 My 12 '67 200w

"It is life rather than dramatic contrivance, scene-setting, the resolution of complications, that is Miss Gilliatt's concern. Concern is the operative word. She is concerned about people. . . . Most of all she is concerned about what they say to each other, though much of what they say is phatic—communication for its own sake. . . . But because Miss Gilliatt's characters are intelligent, there is a good deal of wit, and there is a certain amount of scoring off people who are obtuse. Yet there is never any sense of deliberate satire, nor—with so many ideas flashing about—is there any flavor of the didactic, the author dealing to her audience opinions she considers valuable. These ideas, anyway, are so much of our own time, so derived from the ephemeral, that they're hardly separable from their fictional context." Anthony Burgess
N Y Times Bk R p5 Ap 7 '68 850w

"Gilliatt's concern here, as in her first novel [One by One, BRD 1965] is with the failings of the English social conscience. . . . [Here] the examination is conducted with less melodrama. . . . A State of Change is a short chronicle of English moods and it stretches from 1949 to 1966; in conception not unlike a Briefing guide to postwar trends. The central relationship between Kasia and the two men provides a neat framework for their intellectual discussions and for the succession of modish figures who flash upon the narrative, are argued with then dropped; but one has very little sense of the day-to-day quality of their lives, and their emotional development seems to have been planned out in advance. Yet what the novel lacks in imaginative substance it makes up for in journalistic sophistication."

TLS p433 My 25 '67 430w

GILLIS, FRANK, comp. Ethnomusicology and folk music: an international bibliography of dissertations and theses; comp. and annot. by Frank Gillis and Alan P. Merriam; pub. for the Soc. for ethnomusicology 148p $7.50
Wesleyan univ. press

016.7817 Ethnomusicology—Bibliography

66-23459

"This bibliography is an outgrowth of two earlier listings that appeared in the pages of Ethnomusicology. The first [in 1960] included 180 papers; the second [in 1962 was] a supplement of 197 titles. . . . The present volume contains all the original entries plus several hundred more; the total here is 873. In every case the name of the author is given, with the date and title of the work, the university and department in which it was prepared, and the degree granted. Most of the entries bear notations by the editors, together with the places of publication if any, references to listings in Dissertation Abstracts, and sources from which copies may be had." (Publisher's note) Indexes of institutions and of subjects.

"The subject matter is broad: there are titles in folk music, jazz, the education of children in non-Western music, the sociology and psychology of music, as well as the use of computers in musical research. Most of the culture areas of the world are represented, with numerous listings for African, American Negro, North American Indian, and Japanese studies; additional bibliographies are also cited for these areas. The entries cover a time period, roughly, from the turn of the century to the present. . . . The appearance of this bibliography is a welcome sign. Far too few anthropologists have given consideration to music as a significant component of culture. . . . [This] should help to stimulate further interest in this area, as well as serve as a useful source for those already involved in ethnomusicology." R. A. Black

Am Anthropol 70:180 F '68 270w

"The breadth of the compilers' interests contributes greatly to the value of the book, and the annotations generally are informative. Recommended for large collections." Baird Hastings

Library J 91:4958 O 15 '66 60w

"Ethnomusicology by definition attracts scholars from many different disciplines. Thus a look at the standard musicological or anthropological bibliographies of theses can not be taken as a thorough view of this ambiguous but important area of research. . . . [This] book was created specifically to overcome this problem. The compilers have included 'titles from a number of fields in the humanities and social sciences, as well as some from other areas of science.' [The] international coverage is of particular value in a field like ethnomusicology which simply cannot afford to be provincial. . . . A valuable reference tool which should be in every library." W. P. Malm

Music Lib Assn Notes 24:499 Mr '68 410w

GILSON, ÉTIENNE. Forms and substances in the arts; tr. from the French by Salvator Attanasio. 282p $4.95 Scribner

701 Art—Philosophy. Composition (Art)

66-24495

In this work the conclusions developed in The Arts of the Beautiful (BRD 1965) "are put to test by [a] . . . consideration of the major arts—architecture, sculpture, painting, music, dance, poetry, and theater." (Choice) Originally published in 1964 as Matières et Formes.

"A decade ago Gilson published Painting and Reality [BRD 1958], which was followed by The Arts of the Beautiful. Now we have the third and, so we are told, the last book devoted to the philosophy of art by this distinguished philosopher. . . . Gilson's reflections on the philosophy of art are deserving of serious attention both from within and from without the neo-Thomistic tradition with which they are associated."

Choice 4:1253 Ja '68 110w

"Complete in exposition of basic fact, tedious in style, this book . . . nevertheless achieves a panoramic view of the conditions governing the existence of fine art. . . . A distinct philosophical reserve pervades the work, and very little praise is meted out for contemporary art: always it is the complaint that the new materials have not found an esthetic form. . . . This is a grand philosophical essay, and as such refers more to the problems of philosophical classification in the arts than it does to the arts themselves." Richard Beale

GILSON, ÉTIENNE—Continued

Library J 91:5624 N 15 '66 180w

GIMPEL, HERBERT J. Napoleon: man of destiny. 245p maps $2.95 Watts, F.

B or 92 Napoléon I. Emperor of the French
—Juvenile literature 68-17854

This biography begins in "1786, when the future Emperor was 17 [and continues] to his reburial in Paris 54 years later." (N Y Times Bk R) "Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"Although the author has obviously researched his subject thoroughly, he gets bogged down with a raft of details and fails generally to draw his narrative of facts into a cohesive, meaningful whole. For all the wealth of information, we fail to see Napoleon as a real man, nor do we more than seldom understand his motivations or those of the people around him." F. A.

Christian Science Monitor pB13 N 7 '68 110w

"Although the book accurately follows the incidents of Napoleon's life from birth to death, the chronicle lacks vitality despite the use of letters and fictionalized conversation to flesh out character impressions. The effect is both contrived and confusing. M. Komroff's Napoleon [BRD 1954], though fictionalized, is still more interesting reading for junior high students." Linda Crowe

Library J 93:4731 D 15 '68 70w

"Gimpel retells the Napoleonic saga simply and lucidly . . . illustrating his theme with quotations used as chapter headings. It is an effective way—for, while the author never loses his factual thread, he brings to his writing an immediacy that is rare in a book of this kind. It is recommended to all young people who think of Napoleon as a cockhatted cartoon figure instead of what he was, one of the most salutary history-makers in the story of mankind." R. F. Delderfield

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p30 N 3 '68 310w
[YA]

GINGLEND, DAVID R., Jr. auth. Recreation for retarded teenagers and young adults. See Carlson, B. W.

GINSBURG, ALLEN. T.V. baby poems. unpub il $4; pa $2.50 Grossman pubs.
811 68-15647

These poems "are social commentary penned between 1961 and 1966, representative of [the author's] travels." (Library J)

"In so many ways Allen Ginsberg is Walt Whitman returning to ask, 'How goes it with America?' . . . And like Whitman, Ginsberg can be—in the same poem—the most powerful poet of his age and one of the most banal. Again, like Whitman, he appears uncertain whether to specialize in being a guru or a poet. It is a special joy to see him back in book-length print, even if [this] is a slender volume indeed. It is good Ginsberg, strident like Howl, but less shrill, more compassionate, blessed with more flashes of the humor that reconciles saint and sinner. Many poets have tried to imitate his way with language, but Ginsberg remains the poetic master." Chad Walsh

Book World p4 J1 28 '68 160w

Reviewed by Mary Keyes
Canadian Forum 48:182 N '68 200w

"[Ginsberg speaks] to modern man in the modern voice. . . . [Here he has] the good fortune of being published by [a] distinguished press. . . . He is of major importance, particularly for the young of age and spirit." Bill Katz
Library J 93:2882 Ag '68 80w

Reviewed by Julian Symons
New Statesman 74:595 N 1 '67 110w

GINSBURG, MIRRA, tr. The master and Margarita. See Bulgakov, M.

GINSBURG, NORTON, ed. An historical atlas of China [new ed]. See Herrmann, A.

GINTER, DONALD E., ed. Whig organization in the general election of 1790: selections from the Blair Adam papers. 276p $8 Univ. of Calif. press

942.07 Whig party (Great Britain). Great Britain—Politics and government. Adam, William 67-13999

The editor seeks to "demonstrate that the origins of modern British electoral organization and political parties can be dated at about the end of the American War. The papers of William Adam at Blair Adam reveal that the tone and techniques of opposition politics began to undergo a fundamental change during the 1780s. . . . By 1790 British general elections were no longer contested exclusively by individuals. . . . [William] Adam, the party's political manager, in collaboration with the Duke of Portland, directed the general election campaign of 1790. . . . The present volume [is an attempt to show] . . . the extent and quality of the electoral organization of the Whig Opposition." (Publisher's note) General index. Constituency index.

"[The editor] has delved deeply into the papers of William Adam, 'the most important man of business within the Portland and Foxite Oppositions during the last two decades of the eighteenth century'; and with selections from these documents offers a revised interpretation of the history of party. . . . The selections, which Ginter has edited in the most illuminating scholarly style, sustain his thesis well. Though the evidence is fragmentary, Portland and Adam are to be clearly discerned as leader and manager of a rudimentary but resourceful political machine. . . . Further research will fill up gaps in the evidence, but, as it stands, historians of party must now take full account of [this] carefully presented thesis." A. S. Foord

Am Hist R 73:478 D '67 430w

"Although the author's excellent 57-page introductory essay and copious explanatory notes throughout forcefully argue for the beginning of English political parties after the American Revolution . . . this represents only a beginning of needed research in this area and should be considered in light of the History of Parliament: The House of Commons, 1754-1790, edited by Sir Lewis Namier and John Brooke [BRD 1964]. Ginter is a must only for the more advanced scholarly libraries."

Choice 5:397 My '68 150w

TLS p145 F 15 '68 1200w

GINZBERG, ELI. Manpower strategy for the metropolis, by Eli Ginzberg and the Conservation of human resources staff, Columbia university. 321p $7.50 Columbia univ. press

331.1 Labor supply. New York (City)—Economic conditions 68-27290

"This three-part study outlines how metropolitan economies can keep themselves viable; describes the manpower problems associated with the hard-to-employ; and finally discusses the future of the metropolis and the conditions necessary for its continued growth. Part I contains discussions of the impact of the new technology, the role of producer services and of the expanding health industry. Part II is concerned with the implications of changing educational requirements for employment and the role of young workers. . . . Part III deals with the potential of educated women, the role of higher education, the possible conflict between economic growth and the creation of job opportunities as goals, and includes a summary of findings." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"A valuable summary of research on metropolitan problems. An introductory chapter by Ginzberg, project director, provides an insightful overview of New York City's manpower situation and a summary of the following chapters. [His] concluding chapter places current problems in historical perspective and proposes policy innovations for Federal and municipal governments. T. M. Stanback discusses the problem of the 'mature' city, the structure of employment and unemployment, and urban-suburban economic relationships. A wide-ranging essay on technological change by Yavitz projects future impacts and assesses historic and current developments. . . . Racial and other characteristics of the 'peripheral worker' are surveyed by D. W. Morse. . . . Highly recommended."

Choice 5:1174 N '68 200w

"A particularly interesting chapter examines European experience with the hard-to-employ for possible guidance to local policy making. . . . This is a wide-ranging overview from a number of different vantage points that may confuse the Planning Commission even as it enlightens them. . . . For public and academic libraries." William Gibelman
Library J 93:2483 Je 15 '68 270w

GINZBURG, EUGENIA SEMYONOVNA. Journey into the whirlwind [Eng title: Into the whirlwind]; tr. by Paul Stevenson and Max Hayward. 418p $6.95 Harcourt

365 Prisons—Russia 67-26000
For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Jacques Levesque
Canadian Forum 47:285 Mr '68 1100w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson
Harper 236:79 Ja '68 250w

Reviewed by Helen Yglesias
Nation 206:121 Ja 22 '68 500w

Reviewed by S. S. Rosenfeld
Sat R 51:29 F 3 '68 550w

GIPE, GEORGE A. Copyright and the machine nearer to the dust; with a foreword by Felix Morley. 290p $4.95 Williams & Wilkins 655.6 Copyright. Fair use (Copyright) 67-26090

The author provides an "explanation of the background of the copyright/photocopying hassle. Its point of view is that copying will be the death of commercial publishing, and will lead to government publishing and eventually government control of information distribution." (Library J)

"The only real excuse for this hastily, sloppily written book is that other available discussions of the copyright problem are turgid and giggling. It does express the problem in a free-running style easy to read, but the chips fall freely and make the reader wonder whether the author had ever really heard of some of the things he cites. . . . Most chapters can be summed up in single sentences. The book is a popular and padded explanation [of the issue]. . . . Gipe seems to imply in the book, written in April 1967, that passage of the revised Copyright Act through the Congress was a foregone conclusion; it has since run into stumbling blocks which make a few sentences odd reading. But the carelessness in his references to well-known bibliographic entities and even to the names and the titles of persons make his accuracy questionable and spoil the whole tenor of his argument." D. A. Redmond
Library J 92:4389 D 1 '67 750w

"These are days of dangerous technological change for those who publish and are published. . . . Lately the affected interests have been laying down a barrage of small arms fire against a paper enemy, the computerized card and the xerographic copy. Now a larger gun has been brought to the front. . . . Gipe's book is a remarkably clear examination of the clash between the new technology and traditional ways of spreading knowledge, namely by book, journal, and magazine. It makes a persuasive case for copyright reform." S. W. Little
Sat R 50:63 Jl 8 '67 650w

GIPSON, LAWRENCE HENRY. The British empire before the American revolution; v13. The triumphant empire; pt. 1. The empire beyond the storm, 1770-1776; pt. 2. A summary of the series; pt. 3. Historiography. 454p $10 Knopf 942.07 Great Britain—History—1714-1837.

U.S.—History—Colonial period. Great Britain—Colonies. Historiography (58-9670)

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by W. F. Craven
Am Hist 73:815 F '68 500w

Reviewed by V. J. Puryear
Ann Am Acad 375:214 Ja '68 390w

Choice 4:1427 F '68 190w

Reviewed by M. G. Kammen
New Eng Q 41:133 Mr '68 850w

GIRAUDOUX, JEAN. Plays; Amphitryon, Intermezzo, Ondine; tr. by Roger Gellert. 273p $5.75 Oxford

842

63-6000

Amphitryon is a "classical comedy based on the story of Jupiter and Alcmena, in which. . . Alcmena meets Jupiter's test of human fidelity by remaining faithful to her husband Amphitryon, for she possesses the human qualities of loyalty and devotion which the gods cannot control. Intermezzo is a comedy of provincial France which . . . mingles the poetry of phantasy and the poetry of everyday life, as seen in the . . . dilemma of the young schoolteacher Isabelle and the townsfolk. Ondine tells the story of a fairy . . . who is a misfit in the human world of pride, hypocrisy, jealousy, and flattery, as symbolized by the court where her knight-errant husband, Hans, takes her." (Publisher's note)

"Gellert has provided highly readable translations that beautifully illustrate the wit of Giraudoux, his interesting treatment of the world of fantasy, and his well-aimed darts that puncture the balloon of human foibles. Because of the special effects required, the plays of Giraudoux are difficult to stage. But these problems are minuscule in the greatest of all theaters, the reader's mind." B. J. McGurl
Best Sell 27:91 Je 1 '67 550w

"Despite some distressingly trite and erroneous jacket commentary, this volume contains three major works, translated, although not for the first time, with admirable concern for preserving the texture and linguistic complexities of the originals. . . . Gellert strives here to render into English, however contrived the result, just what Giraudoux contrived in French. He has most successfully avoided the assumption that Giraudoux's style is 'easy' or 'normal' French, and consequently the dangerous conclusion that an English translation must be 'natural' sounding. These translations are academically sound and are singularly free of the gross errors in meaning which plague certain previous efforts."

Choice 4:842 O '67 130w

GITTINGS, JOHN. The role of the Chinese army; issued under the auspices of the Royal inst. of int. affairs. 331p $8.50 Oxford

355.3 China (People's Republic of China). Army [67-80303]

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by Martin Blumenson
Am Hist R 73:879 F '68 130w

Choice 6:130 Mr '68 100w

Reviewed by R. M. Pfeffer
Pacific Affairs 40:361 fall-winter '67-'68 600w

TLS p55 Ja 18 '68 700w

GITTINGS, ROBERT. John Keats. 469p 11 $8.95 Little

B or 92 Keats, John

[68-91153]

The author of The Mask of Keats (BRD 1956) has researched "into the roots of Keats's life and works in England, and into his surviving manuscripts and letters, most of which are now in the United States. As a result, this book differs in many ways from previously accepted accounts and also contains much that has not appeared before on such matters as Keats's family background, his apprenticeship in medicine, his own probable experience of venereal disease, his financial settlement with his brother George, and his relationship with Fanny Brawne. Every poem is dated and interpreted in the light of the day-to-day events of Keats's life and experience. . . . The drama of the poet's life is . . . conveyed as it was played out against the background of his period, his family, and his circle of friends." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by Sister Mary William
Best Sell 28:302 N 1 '68 250w

Reviewed by Paul West
Book World p1 Jl 28 '68 1200w

Choice 5:1130 N '68 200w

Reviewed by Barbara Gelpi
Christian Science Monitor p5 Jl 25 '68 500w

"[Mr Gittings'] brilliant reconstruction of how the poet spent 1819, the most fertile year of his life, 'John Keats: the Living Year' [BRD 1954], gave us a foretaste of this massive work. 'With no other poet are the life and the works so closely linked,' says Mr. Gittings, expanding the statement by pointing out Keats's extraordinary power of transmuting into poetry almost any impression from his day-to-day life. It is this interrelation of experience with artefact that justifies a minute attention to every incident, . . . every intellectual or emotional stimulus, that has been recorded by Keats or by those who knew him. What emerges from Mr Gittings's scrutiny is not simply a work of scholarship, it is the best kind of literary biography. It enables us to appreciate how Keats's poetry came to be what it is, through our awareness of the events affecting him as a person. . . . An extraordinarily convincing figure emerges. . . . It is because [Mr Gittings] is at least as interested in the poetry as in the man who wrote it that this biography is so thoroughly satisfactory."

GITTINGS, ROBERT—Continued

Economist 227:xvi Ap 27 '68 240w

"Gittings, an established British scholar, now offers his 'own attempt at the first fully comprehensive English biography.' He has made the most of the biographical facts painstakingly garnered and now assembled, but his book inevitably suffers in comparison with two recent, splendid American studies—Aleen Ward's John Keats: The Making of a Poet [BRD 1963] and Walter Jackson Bate's John Keats [BRD 1963]. Mr. Gittings's small details often correct earlier hypotheses, but the corrections interrupt the narrative and are frequently simply tedious. This book is of interest mainly to the specialist in English Romanticism and thus to academic and large public collections." J. R. Willingham

Library J 93:2853 Ag '68 140w

Reviewed by Harold Bloom
New Repub 159:29 S 7 '68 1250w

Reviewed by Graham Hough
New Statesman 73:382 Mr 22 '68 1900w

Reviewed by G. M. Matthews
N Y Rev of Books 11:28 N 7 '68 1800w

"Mr. Gittings is at his best when he is concerned with . . . literary detection. . . . As for the poet's life, Mr. Gittings has shown a healthy mistrust of the printed word; he has gone wherever possible to sources. He has stripped the layers of dust and varnish off the accepted figure; and, reading his biography, we feel that we are seeing the cleaned picture for the first time. . . . Yet in several ways the book is unsatisfactory. It is not remarkably well written. . . . Besides, though Mr. Gittings has corrected the work of other scholars, he has not himself produced any new material of the first importance. He has not given us a bibliography (a strange omission in a 'definitive' book). Nor has he answered a number of minor but persistent questions that the Keats specialist is eager to have answered." Joanna Richardson

N Y Times Bk R p4 S 1 '68 1350w

Reviewed by Louise Bogan
New Yorker 44:62 D 28 '68 800w

"[The author] has achieved a complete and richly detailed biography, in which the reader is enabled to live with Keats from month to month, almost from hour to hour, his short and strenuous life of joy and suffering, of poetic and creative thought and writing, and finally of absorption in an agonizing love that ravaged his spirit because the disease that was destroying his body would not allow its fulfilment. . . . Mr. Gittings's book is a real biography because it gives a great deal more than the 'factual basis' for the events of Keats's life. It follows, by patient study and deep imaginative insight, the 'symbolic biography' of Keats himself as it is concealed in his great poems. 'Endymion,' 'Hyperion' and 'La Belle Dame sans Merci,' and given its crowning glory in the Odes, which Mr. Gittings rightly regards as a sequence."

TLS p372 Ap 11 '68 2600w

GITTLEMAN, EDWIN. Jones Very: the effective years, 1833-1840. 436p $12.50 Columbia Univ. press

B or 92 Very, Jones 67-16202

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Reviewed by W. E. Bezanson
Am Hist R 73:1242 Ap '68 500w

Reviewed by E. H. Emerson
Am Lit 40:89 Mr '68 400w
Choice 5:340 My '68 300w

Reviewed by R. F. Lucid
New Eng Q 41:297 Je '68 750w
Va Q R 44:cxviii summer '68 170w

GIUSEPPI, JOHN. The bank of England; a history from its foundation in 1694; foreword by the Earl of Cromer. 224p $7.50 Regnery

332.1 Bank of England 66-25844

The author "traces the evolution of the Bank over 270 years, from its inception as a financial experiment, . . . to provide the funds for England to pay for the Continental wars of William III. . . . He carries the story through the Bank's early years of competition in the fields of both commercial banking and banking for the State, to its emergence at the end of the 18th century as a national institution, and its ultimate development into England's publicly owned Central Bank. . . . The book concludes with a summary of the varied functions of the Bank of England at the present day, and of its position in the world of international finance." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Giuseppi, a Bank of England archivist, . . . has written a readable, factual account, interspersed with anecdotes concerning the architecture and buildings, traditions, folklore, old Bank customs, and personalities. It would make good undergraduate survey reading. Money and banking scholars will prefer more pedantic and more detailed material as well as more theory and interpretation. . . . Recommended."

Choice 4:1142 D '67 170w

"[This is] a 'popular' work, in the most unfortunate sense of the word. The almost stylised way it approaches the past . . . is quite unrepresentative of the new spirit and the new men who are increasingly making their mark in Threadneedle Street. . . . The early history is succinctly written. But to the outsider this is frankly a house history, reverential to the point of caricature for everything after the Cunliffe episodes of the first world war and applying little critical assessment to the major issues in the development of the Bank before that. On more recent history, one sometimes wonders whether Mr Giuseppi is writing with tongue in cheek."

Economist 220:45 Jl 2 '66 500w

GLAAB, CHARLES N. A history of urban America. [by] Charles N. Glaab [and] A. Theodore Brown. 328p $6.95; pa $2.95 Macmillan (N Y)

301.3 Cities and towns—U.S. 67-15198

Utilizing a topical framework, the authors state that their central theme is: "From the beginning the tensions and impulses of America's cities had given direction to the growth of the nation." The first two chapters treat the establishment and early growth of American cities to 1830, and the next several discuss to 1920 such topics as 'the urban network,' social and economic structures, city promotion and rivalry, the city in American thought, urban planning, political organization, and (urban reform)." (J Am Hist) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[The authors] make use of most of the available scholarly sources within the scope of their interests, yet the rigor with which they endeavor to exclude other variables sometimes obscures opportunities to apply their urban synthesis. . . . In their last chapter, however, . . . [they] take note of three vital aspects of recent urban history: the development of a matrix of metropolitan regions, the replacement of immigrants by Negroes as the key to urban community well-being, and the awakening of urban-federal relationships. Much remains to be said about these historic trends, but a synthesis that encompasses them has merit. And this informative book has other merits, including its demonstration that cities have not only 'webs' and 'milieus' but also inhabitants, some with wills of their own. The 'Suggestions for Further Reading' are fairly adequate." Blake McKelvey

Am Hist R 73:581 D '67 700w

"The book includes a brief, but excellent, bibliography. . . . Although the authors are competent in organization and structure, they write in commonplace fashion. Despite this handicap, the book is quite suitable for graduate and undergraduate readers. Recommended for library purchase."

Choice 4:904 O '67 100w

"[This] is the first meaningful synthesis of American urban history, which should prove to be a landmark in American historiography. . . . Unhappily, though understandably, the authors end their study with World War II. . . . Each of the ten chapters fairly bristles with new and stimulating interpretations, which are firmly grounded in the relevant historical literature; imaginative use of novels, demographic data, and a large body of heretofore unused primary materials adds a new dimension to an understanding of the processes of urbanization. The value of this carefully written book transcends that of urban history, and it will have to be consulted by all serious students of American history." R. O. Davies

J Am Hist 54:623 D '67 250w

GLACKEN, CLARENCE J. Traces on the Rhodian shore: nature and culture in Western thought from ancient times to the end of the eighteenth century. 763p il $15 Univ. of Calif. press

901.9 Civilization, Occidental. Nature. Nature in literature 67-10970

The author "presents parallel histories, from classical times to the end of the eighteenth century, of three ideas whose roots lie in the vast literature of Western civilization concerned with the relationship between man and nature, a literature which ranges from theology to landscape painting. Mr. Glacken has chosen three interlocking themes: the idea of an earth created by design, the influence of environment on man, and the influence of man on his environment." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Specialists may, will, and perhaps should carp at some sections of this book. My advice to them, however, is to read it, for I believe it can help them, as it helped me, to see new ways of structuring ideas about nature, and possibly to impart some new insights even inside the borders they so assiduously patrol. The author has not been content to consult other people's books; he has read widely in the original sources to form his own views." F. L. Baumer

Am Hist R 73:1471 Je '68 500w

"The second part of the title describes this work well. It is a history of ideas on a previously neglected level. Through a highly interdisciplinary framework, Glacken relates social and natural phenomena to the supposed dichotomy of man and nature. Environmental influences on culture and vice versa are discussed from an original point of view; it is a very timely subject. Containing a wealth of data and new approaches to the story of the development of human society, the account is absorbing and thought provoking for men in all areas as well as the educated layman. Excellent for any college library."

Choice 4:1370 F '68 150w

"Two poets immediately suggest themselves on almost every page of this encyclopedic effort: St. John Perse and Marianne Moore. Such an effect is a measure of the scope of this study. . . . This is not to say that the cosmic is not at all times present. Sounding like St. John Perse (or Teilhard de Chardin describing China), Glacken can focus marvelously on the evolutionary process of ideas. . . . Similarly, the chapters that deal with physico-theology are probably the clearest and certainly provide one of the best sources for the history of the artisan deity from Plato to Kant. But again it is the interrelationships of thinkers . . . that seem to interest Glacken, not the metaphysical possibilities of their thought. . . . Such weaknesses are minor if one follows Glacken's own emphasis and abandons himself to the book with some of the pleasure that the medieval or Renaissance reader had in reading the encyclopedia of his day. [This fine network] is too often disturbed by the sloppy editing." William Sessions

Mod Lang J 52:325 My '68 1300w

"An immense amount of solid, firsthand work has gone into this book; it is full of extremely interesting material; apart from a few lapses, it is clearly and intelligently written; and on the whole, unlike some historians of scientific ideas, the author is not contemptuous of now obsolete theories. On the other hand, long stretches of it are very tedious to read and the whole book gives an impression of shapelessness. Not only is it a very big book, but it is much bigger than it need be." D. P. Walker

N Y Rev of Books 9:36 D 21 '67 1550w

GLANVILLE, BRIAN. The artist type. 191p $4.50 Coward-McCann

68-11871

"Geoffrey Barnes is a free-lance advertising copywriter, hung up on [three] London birds, Jane, [Audrey and Rosemary]. . . . Geoff has been working on a play and a children's book, and is a frustrated actor. Audrey leaves for six months, and . . . Geoff permits Jane to move in with him. After a mammoth fight she leaves, and wanting her back at any cost now, Geoff consents to marriage. His children's book is a success and is made into a cartoon strip; his play is a failure, his marriage mediocre. There is one last fling with Audrey and then, as Jane forgives and comforts him, a grudging acceptance of his lot." (Publishers' Weekly)

Reviewed by Elizabeth Nelson

Library J 93:1500 Ap 1 '68 120w

Reviewed by Sara Blackburn

Nation 206:676 My 20 '68 150w

"The artist type' are not to be envied. [Such men] yearn with no possibility of satisfaction, and our particular society nourishes them. . . . What makes their condition so particularly painful is that their creative longings are no weaker than in artists proper, but they are permanently frustrated. Brian Glanville writes, in the first person, about an artist type . . . [who] sublimates his unfulfilled passions in a conquerable area. He plays around with women as an artist might dally with ideas. Perhaps because Mr. Glanville writes such effortlessly readable books—which is a compliment—his central idea which is very pertinent to contemporary London life might be overlooked, and the book thought to be just a story of a philandering man. In fact it is such an accurate observation of facile and predictable behaviour that the author's perception is not so immediately apparent as, for example, in his last novel, A Roman Marriage [BRD 1967]." Gillian Freeman

New Statesman 74:685 N 17 '67 270w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p40 F 25 '68 200w

"The only thing that can be said of this lightweight mish-mash is that in its effort to be urbane, sexual, and entertaining it sometimes succeeds, unintentionally, in being quaintly, nostalgically old-fashioned. Geoff's carnal overnight trips are pretty small potatoes compared to the vast sexual Odysseys embarked upon by today's suppliers of literary lubricity. Even in bed Geoff succeeds only in being boring and often bathetic. If The Artist Type is bread-and-butter fiction, the bread is stale and the butter oleomargarine. I suggest you wait for the inevitable paperback." Edwin Fadiman

Sat R 51:43 Mr 30 '68 320w

Time 91:98B Ap 12 '68 160w

"Copulation thrives in [this novel]. . . . anywhere and pretty well non-stop Geoff is at it. . . . [He] manages to rub along, and indeed by the end (improbably one feels) manages to contrive some financial success for himself by collaborating in a strip cartoon featuring a camel. Mr. Glanville insinuates himself neatly into the skin of this slick, smart-alecky good-looker, and the unedifying tale of his letdowns and boozesups, his soft options . . . is narrated in a nicely calculated causal manner that displays the writer's brisk professional competence. Geoff and the awful world he inhabits are held up close under your nose so that you get the full whiff of them, and the writing often has a nicely caustic bite."

TLS p1005 O 26 '67 280w

GLASER, BARNEY G. The discovery of grounded theory; strategies for qualitative research [by] Barney G. Glaser and Anselm L. Strauss. 271p $6.75 Aldine pub.

301.01 Sociology—Research 66-28314

"Conceived as a handbook on qualitative research for the purpose of building 'grounded' theory, this book applies conventional ideas in quantitative research to develop strategies for qualitative research. . . . Grounded theory is theory arrived at by empirical induction from the data or facts by the sociologist in the process of his research. The strategy is entirely inductive; sociologists are urged to shed all preconceived notions, received theories, and propensities to logical deduction, and to expose themselves to the data." (Am J Soc)

"Taken as a whole, the book is a strange mixture of polemic for a certain type of approach, cookbook prescriptions of how-to-do-it yourself, and an attempt to present to and share with colleagues a strategy which the authors have found useful in their own research. The polemical part of the book would have formed a provocative periodical article. . . . As a handbook for qualitative research, it is too close to the level of the elementary textbook on methodology to be addressed to colleagues. . . . Qualitative methodology will nevertheless benefit from this attempt to outline and formalize detailed strategies for qualitative research. Researchers adopting these strategies would do well, however, to consider their weaknesses more carefully than was done here. . . . The impact of this book would have been greater if the limitations of both the approach and the type of theory advocated were faced squarely, and the legitimacy and usefulness of other approaches recognized with less equivocation." J. J. Loubser

GLASER, B. G.—Continued

Am J Soc 73:773 My '68 850w

"Glaser and Strauss set scientific sociology back 100 years with their essentially phenomenological reconciliation of theory with data. . . . They introduce new concepts, e.g. grounded theory, theoretical sampling, etc., which do not make new distinctions. In turn, they create distinctions, where they do not exist. There are internal contradictions in their work. Especially disconcerting is their revelatory style of presentation which is not buttressed with convincing arguments; the reader is left with the impression that it is necessary for him to share the same phenomenologically mystical experience before he can 'turn on' to what the authors are saying. This book is not recommended to the reader unsophisticated in the techniques of scientific methodology."

Choice 5:564 Je '68 170w

GLASFURD, ALEC. The antipope (Peter de Luna, 1342-1423) a study in obstinacy. 287p il $6.95 Roy pubs.

B or 92 Papacy. Benedict XIII (Pedro de Luna) antipope 66-21800

"From 1378 to 1417 two Popes ruled simultaneously, one in Rome, the other in Avignon. . . . [The author of this biography] follows the career of Peter de Luna, who, as Benedict XIII, refused to quit the papacy [at Avignon] when deposed. (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"Written in delightful reportorial style, this work offers a sympathetic but not fond interpretation of the most estimable of the antipopes during the great schism. Since Peter is set in context, the book offers also a history of the schism from 1373 to 1429. Glasfurd is acquainted with the primary sources, but this is largely a reinterpretation of the many European works dealing with this period; he remains well within the general consensus in most matters. . . . The work may be recommended to undergraduates for its humane and readable revelation of what lies back of the vast generalizations of the textbooks."

Choice 4:1255 Ja '68 120w

"This is not a formal biography but rather a well-written, partially imaginative portrayal. No other detailed treatment of Peter de Luna has appeared in English, and this short biography is recommended for large libraries."

R. E. Stevens

Library J 91:5606 N 15 '66 170w

GLATZER, NAHUM N., ed. On Judaism. See Buber, M.

GLAUS, OTTO, jr. auth. Highrise building and urban design. See Aregger, H.

GLECKNER, ROBERT F. Byron and the ruins of paradise. 365p $8.95 Johns Hopkins press
821 Byron, George Gordon Noël Byron, 6th Baron 67-25071

The author analyzes "Byron's early minor poems, the tales, and Childe Harold. . . . [He believes that] Byron's poetry . . . must be studied without reference to the poet's life . . . [and] that critics have failed to notice the important experimentation that occurs in all of the Eastern tales. . . . Dr. Gleckner finds running through Byron's verse a remarkably consistent vision of man and the human condition. This coherent vision is founded on the poet's conviction that mankind had an idyllic past which modern man has corrupted and destroyed, thus creating 'the ruins of paradise.'" (Library J) Index.

Choice 5:776 S '68 160w

"An important and scholarly book that should be in all but the smallest literature collections." P. F. Moran

Library J 92:4417 D 1 '67 140w

"Gleckner has isolated the strand of genuine gloom in Byron's outlook, and by following it single-mindedly throughout the work, demonstrates a continuity and coherence that have generally been overlooked. He is especially helpful on the romantic tales. As he pursues his case, however, one's actual experience of the poetry eventually ceases to correspond to the pattern hypothesized for it. I don't believe any reader really feels that the comedy of Don Juan is only the despair of Childe Harold in a sophisticated disguise. . . . And it is noticeable that Gleckner's commentary gets steadily thinner and less rewarding; he has nothing much to say about that neglected masterpiece Beppo, and on The Vision of Judgement . . . he is silent altogether. The diagnosis was too simple." G. M. Matthews

N Y Rev of Books 10:23 My 23 '68 700w

TLS p949 S 5 '68 1100w

"Although deeply steeped in the best of Byron scholarship . . . [this] does not significantly advance that scholarship and seems more concerned with plugging (or exploiting) the chinks in other writers than with creating a substantial critical fabric of its own. Mr. Gleckner's intention is laudable. . . . [He] attempts to distinguish between the different voices of Byron's poetry . . . but the distinction . . . leaves the reader confusedly wondering if perhaps the voice in question is not Byron's at all, but rather of Gleckner's own making. The book does rescue . . . Byron's early verse from the critical Tartarus whither it is usually consigned, yet this does not counterbalance the derivativeness of much of the rest."

Va Q R 44:cxiv summer '68 230w

"[This] is a book which requires and rewards study without repelling selective reading. From an attempt to differentiate between Byron's stance in his letters and in his poetry . . . to a final crisp assay of Don Juan and The Island, it offers continual grounds for reflection and revision, with Byron no less than students of Byron coming out with an advantage."

Yale R 57:XXXI Mr '68 900w

GLEDITSCH, NILS PETTER. Disarmament and world economic interdependence. See Benoit, E.

GLENNY, MICHAEL, tr. The master and Margarita. See Bulgakov, M.

GLICK, EDWARD BERNARD. Peaceful conflict; the non-military use of the military. 223p il $6.50 Stackpole co.

355.03 Military policy. Economic assistance 67-21675

An associate professor of political science at Temple University discusses the use of the military for dealing with unrest in developing countries and for economic assistance to such countries, such as engineering, scientific, agricultural, educational and medical purposes. He points out the problems involved. Bibliography. Index.

"Glick's study of action is pretty standard fare. . . . Much detail is presented in the . . . chapters on American civic action organization and activity abroad; some of it is fascinating, much of it trivial. . . . This a disappointing book, given the extensive sources available to the author, many presumably direct from Defense Department agencies. The real problem is that the author never moves out from the source documents. His own descriptions read much like the charts and primary documents he cites: a listing of directions and projects. He has not been able to take the ad hoc activities of armed forces engaged in civic action and encompass them in a set of propositions about armed forces in developing areas. [He] admits that objective criteria and empirical evaluation are needed. This book might have provided these; it does not." Henry Bienen

Bul Atomic Sci 24:29 Ap '68 1150w

"[The book is] factual, authoritative, and suitable for reference and should find wide utility for anyone concerned with civic action, resettlement for veterans, vocational training and rehabilitation. Excellent bibliography."

Choice 5:1038 O '68 120w

"Glick throws much light on this highly important and bitterly disputed subject. . . . [He deals with civic action] on our own continent . . . [as well as] in Latin America, the Middle East, and the Far East. . . . He presents [his material] clearly and well, with a welcome absence of polemic. Without dismissing the institutional, political, and personal difficulties that can beset civic action programs, he sees in them great promise for human betterment in many parts of the world (not excluding our own republic). Recommended for general and school libraries everywhere." E. V. Sutherland

Library J 92:2788 Ag '67 320w

GLINES, C. V. From the Wright brothers to the astronauts. See Foulois, B. D.

GLOCK, CHARLES Y., jt. auth. American piety: the nature of religious commitment. See Stark, R.

GLOCK, CHARLES Y. To comfort and to challenge; a dilemma of the contemporary church, by Charles Y. Glock, Benjamin B. Ringer, [and] Earl R. Babbie; a jt. contribution from the Survey res. center, Univ. of Calif, Berkeley, and the Bur. of applied social res. Columbia university. 268p $5.75 Univ. of Calif. press

261 Sociology, Christian. U.S.—Religion 67-15560

"An examination by three . . . sociologists of the sources and consequences of church involvement (as defined by church members). Based on data from national survey of Episcopalians in 1952 . . . the church's dilemma is seen to arise from two central but often incompatible functions: to comfort and to challenge. The authors contend that hope for the church lies in seeking a greater balance between the functions." (Choice) Index.

"Since social class was negatively associated with church involvement . . . it was concluded that church involvement 'is seen as a means of achieving high social status.' However, imputing motivations for church involvement merely on the basis of attributes of persons who are involved in the church seems too big a jump of inference. . . . All three measures of church involvement—ritual, organizational, and intellectual . . . comprise indicators that fall under Glock's 'ritualistic' dimension of religiosity. . . . The high interrelations between these three scores may be at least partly because they are measures of the same basic dimension. However, the titles of these scores will mislead casual readers to think of them as if they represent two or possibly three considerably different components of Glock's significant dimensions of religiosity. Numerous stimulating ideas for future research are stated or implied." D. O. Moberg

Am Soc R 33:309 Ap '68 850w

"Conclusions are probably applicable generally to the church-at-large now. . . . By providing much empirical evidence (93 tables included), this book is a valuable supplement to current critiques of the church (Peter Berger, Harvey Cox, Gibson Winter, Martin Marty, et al) and offers a basis for testing many of their theoretical contentions. Of interest to sociologists of religion and all concerned with renewal of the church (students and scholars). Little practical guidance, . . . but provides illuminating perspective with many concrete implications. Readable."

Choice 5:208 Ap '68 180w

Christian Century 84:815 Je 21 '67 70w

GLUBB, SIR JOHN. The lost centuries; from the Muslim empires to the renaissance of Europe, 1145-1453. 511p 11 maps $10.50 Prentice-Hall

953 Arabs—History 67-22280

The author of The Great Arab Conquests (BRD 1964), The Empire of the Arabs (BRD 1965, 1966), and The Course of Empire (BRD 1967) here "describes a period of decline. The unified Arabic empire has split, and no overall loyalty can rally all Muslims against the attacks by Christians from the West and Mongols from the East." (New Yorker)

Choice 5:537 Je '68 170w

"Though by no means dull of nature or intelligence, Sir John Glubb is certainly a bit tradition-bound as a historian. History as he presents it, is a great—and often terrible—panorama of dynasties and battles. He is concerned with events rather than with explanations—a chronicler who compiles past chronicles. Hence he is sometimes rather dull. This is the fourth volume of his quadrilogy dealing with the history of the Muslim world down to the fall of Byzantium. For the very ignorant, like myself, for whom this book is intended, even such an old-fashioned . . . kind of chronicle has its uses." Thomas Hodgkins

New Statesman 74:910 D 29 '67 100w

"Sir John may be too great a partisan of Islamic culture, for his defense of its political failure—none of its kingdoms arrived at a stable succession, and none invented any mechanism for consulting the people or their representatives—is to argue unpersuasively that it was not a failure at all. But on his main point—the greatness of Arab civilization in its palmy days—he is, as always, convincing."

New Yorker 43:133 Mr 30 '68 190w

TLS p853 Ag 8 '68 750w

GLUBOK, SHIRLEY. The art of ancient Mexico; designed by Gerard Nook; special photography by Alfred H. Tamarin. 41p $4.50; to libs & schools $4.11 Harper

970.6 Indians of Mexico—Art—Juvenile literature. Mexico—Antiquities—Juvenile literature 68-14921

"The temples, religious objects, decorative ornaments, jewelry, weapons, and painted books shown here present the varied cultures, Aztec, Mixtec, Toltec, Olmec, Zapotec, of the ancient Mexicans." (Publisher's note) "Grades four to six." (Library J)

Book World p16 Ag 25 '68 110w

Horn Bk 44:442 Ag '68 20w

"In the familiar format of this well-known, widely recommended series, religious and secular art in stone, clay, and metal introduce the Aztec and pre-Aztec world. Fierce gods and warriors abound in photos surging with the spirit of a bellicose and bloodthirsty people; a lighter touch prevails in artifacts depicting the common man at work or play. . . . The book's pictorial value suggests use as enrichment or introduction despite the blandness and thinness of the text." Priscilla Moxom

Library J 93:2538 Je 15 '68 170w

"The author, who conducts gallery talks for children at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, follows the format of her other books on the art and artifacts of ancient peoples. . . . Here the objects are either curious or beautiful enough to provide a varied and interesting picture of the intricacy and craftsmanship of several cultures, although the text is rather choppy." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:43 Ag 24 '68 80w

GLUBOK, SHIRLEY. The art of the Etruscans; designed by Gerard Nook; special photography by Alfred H. Tamarin. 40p $4.50 Harper

709.37 Art, Etruscan—Juvenile literature 67-14066

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1967.

Book World p14 Ap 7 '68 130w

Horn Bk 44:78 F '68 20w

N Y Times Bk R p26 Ja 21 '68 40w

GLUBOK, SHIRLEY. Discovering Tut-ankh-Amen's tomb; foreword by Eric Young; designed by Gerard Nook. 143p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

913.32 Tutenkhamûn. King of Egypt—Juvenile literature. Egypt—Antiquities—Juvenile literature 68-12069

This is adapted from the three-volume work The Tomb of Tut-ankh-Amen, by Howard Carter, the archaeologist who discovered the tomb, and A. C. Mace. In addition to the story of the discovery and excavation, descriptions of the major sculptures and furnishings are included along with explanation of their uses. For volume one of The Tomb of Tut-ankh-Amen see BRD 1923; for volume two, BRD 1927. "Grades five to eight." (Library J)

GLUBOK, SHIRLEY—Continued

"This is not . . . a child's book; it is still intended for the same general readership as was Carter's original work. Since the original publication is no longer obtainable, this is by far the best account of the tomb's discovery currently available. Although the illustrations are not as numerous as those in [C.] Desroches-Noblecourt's Tutankhamen [BRD 1963] and there are no color plates, the plates in the book were made from the original photographs of Harry Burton, the photographer whom the Metropolitan Museum of Art had placed at Carter's disposal, and these have not yet been improved upon. The book's text is far superior to the parallel sections of Desroches-Noblecourt, as well as to the plethora of popular accounts which have been written at second hand. . . . Highly recommended."

Choice 5:1196 N '68 190w

Reviewed by Marsha Shapiro
Library J 93:3304 S 15 '68 120w

"[This] is a dramatic story. The suspense of the adventure into the unknown mounts with each new clue disclosed, with doubt at the threshold of discovery. It comes to a magnificent climax with the revelation of unbelievable treasure. Shirley Glubok's abridgment and adaptation . . . is excellent, and the photographs are informative and beautiful."

Henry Gilfond
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p24 My 5 '68 260w

GLUBOK, SHIRLEY. The fall of the Incas; designed by Gerard Nook. 112p $5.95 Macmillan (N Y)

980.3 Incas—Juvenile literature. Peru—History—Juvenile literature 67-19674

The author "has abridged and adapted two sixteenth century documents, one by the Inca Garcilaso de la Vega, who was the son of a Spanish conquistador and an Inca princess [Royal Commentaries of the Incas and General History of Peru, BRD 1967], and the other by an eyewitness to the conquest [Pedro Pizarro, Relation of the Discovery and Conquest of the Kingdoms of Peru]. . . . [The drawings] are by Felipe Huaman Poma de Ayala, an Indian who lived in Peru not long after the conquest." (Publisher's note) "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

Horn Bk 44:193 Ap '68 300w

"Nicely arranged and decorated, the oversized book, similar in format to Miss Glubok's The Fall of the Aztecs [BRD 1966], is important source material, even to the drawings of a contemporary artist reproduced on backgrounds of red and yellow, and will be excellent for students' introduction to source material. The book's appeal lies in the immediacy of the firsthand accounts and the distinctive presentation." M. H. Edmonds

Library J 93:291 Ja 15 '68 90w

"[Garcilaso de la Vega] records the oral history known to himself and other Incas, a record of changing rulers, marching, fighting and expansion, but also of the customs and peacetime accomplishments of the Incas, and an account of the flora and fauna of their land. This story of Inca civilization and its setting is the most readable and interesting part of the narrative; the battle scenes have a certain formality and repetitiousness. . . . The numerous and striking illustrations . . . add immensely to the appeal and atmosphere of the volume." N. K. Burger

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p52 N 5 '67 270w

"This history of the Spanish conquest in Peru is distinguished by a stark and primitive simplicity that is most effective. . . . The major events of the conquest are familiar; the particular charm of this account is the vigor and color it gains from the small additions that only an eyewitness can contribute." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 51:51 F 24 '68 100w

GLUCK, IRVIN D. It's all done with mirrors; il. by James McCormack. 200p $4.95 Doubleday

535 Optics. Mirrors 67-15349

"Tracing the use of mirrors from those made out of glass and bronze materials by the ancient Greeks and Phoenicians, [the author] brings us up to present-day techniques such as the grinding of high polished mirror lenses and their applications in telescopes and orbiting observatories. The reader is introduced to the solar cell and the laser . . . [and there is a chapter on] silvering and the treatment of mirrors." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Interesting and well conceived. . . . [However,] too many errors of scientific or historical fact appear. . . . Nonmathematical and rather rambling in style. Explanations are brief, and students who want clarity should refer to standard high school or college texts of physics (optics) and astronomy. . . . List of suppliers of optical materials. Not recommended for college libraries."

Choice 5:832 S '68 160w

"A section which young people may find exciting is the one on the use of mirrors in experiments and magic tricks. It seems as if the author did not omit anything about his subject in this popular treatise. Excellent drawings enhance the readable text. This book is highly recommended for all popular collections." Walter Wolff

Library J 92:4166 N 15 '67 170w [YA]

Reviewed by Philip Morrison
Sci Am 219:126 D '68 130w

GODDEN, RUMER. Gone; a thread of stories. 213p $4.95 Viking

68-16632

In her Preface the author writes: "'I have named this small collection of short stories and studies Gone because each is founded on a moment of experience, felt or seen or touched, that has long since gone, but that has left a small sediment or shape behind.' These stories [gathered from her writing of the past quarter century] mostly with English background, are prefaced with notes in which Miss Godden describes the incidents or experiences which led to her writing the stories and some of her novels." (Library J)

"I know of no author who can treat of the tender, fleeting, often unnoticed incidents in life better than Rumer Godden who never once treads over into mawkishness or sentimentality. She has a sense of the past which is much more lasting than that of Eliot or James because it is much more human. These stories are small showpieces of the superb craftsmanship of a writer who, perhaps because her style is considered passé, has never been given the real academic attention she deserves." W. J. Lynch

Best Sell 28:180 Ag 1 '68 350w

Reviewed by K. G. Jackson
Harper 236:90 My '68 150w

"Included are a young girl who unwittingly gives her uncle a book of erotica as a Christmas gift, another girl who doggedly resists family pressure and becomes a nun, and an American boy who dies because he believes in Indians. Beyond pain and unspeakable savagery, forgiveness and love, Miss Godden powerfully leads the reader into unfamiliar surroundings, moves him on an unpredictable path, then wakens him to the surprises, the strengths, and the wisdom in people." Jane Manthorne

Horn Bk 44:449 Ag '68 140w

Reviewed by S. L. Steen

Library J 93:2020 My 15 '68 150w

"Miss Godden—a writer who long ago inherited the mantle of Katherine Mansfield for her poignant tales of children in a shifting adult world, . . . for her lovers, for her sensitivity to nature and the seasons—has also written movingly of her Indian childhood and of the fictional world of nuns and their devotions. . . . These well-remembered worlds are evoked again with descriptive passages of beauty and tenderness. Yet it is possible to question the author's device here of prefacing each story with further facts about her own life, of which we are already well informed. . . . In the highly charged 'No More Indians,' the over-simplified explanation that Miss Godden herself could not get over a fear of Red Indians, detracts more than it adds to one's acceptance of this tale as a small, self-sustained miracle of the imagination." Hallie Burnett

N Y Times Bk R p37 Je 30 '68 850w

GODDEN, RUMER. The kitchen Madonna; il. by Carol Barker. 89p $3.75 Viking

67-24858

"In this novella [the protagonist is Gregory] a shy withdrawn boy who comes out of his shell when he decides to get for Marta, their Ukrainian maid, a little shrine for her kitchen such as the one she had had in her European home. Miss Godden's plot is slight: Gregory at first tries to buy a shrine; when that fails, he uses his ingenuity to make one." (Library J) This story appeared in The Ladies' Home Journal with different illustrations.

Best Sell 27:367 D 15 '67 260w
Horn Bk 44:176 Ap '68 100w

"As she has shown in her other novels, it is Miss Godden's ability to understand a child's mind and his developing concern for others that makes the book rewarding. Written with the same charm as her earlier books, this is for all fiction and Young Adult collections." S. L. Steen

Library J 92:4027 N 1 '67 110w [YA]

Reviewed by Jean MacGibbon

New Statesman 74:606 N 3 '67 30w

"[Rumer Godden's] new book is short and not a major work, but the narration is vigorous, and no time is wasted getting to the point. . . . [The] explanation about Greg's [aloofness] is given with admirable economy and restraint. . . . Greg has many difficulties to overcome before he can give Marta an icon, but you must read of them yourself to get the full force of creative energy released as the boy persists in his determination. Other characters are caught up in the stream of helpfulness and generosity, adding to the charm, humor and pathos of the tale." Aileen Pippett

N Y Times Bk R p38 Ja 7 '68 550w

"The humour of the characterization of nine-year-old Gregory will appeal less to his contemporaries than to those who delightedly recognize in him younger brothers and sisters. He is a sensitive withdrawn child with a disconcertingly adult understanding of situations. His mother's despair with this apparently unnatural child is amusingly real; so is the small sister who says loudly what she thinks wherever she may be, to Gregory's chagrin. . . . The quest type of plot and the illustrations will appeal also to younger children, and the accurate recounting of small detail at which Miss Godden is so good in her more specifically 'young' books. The ending is delightfully realistic."

TLS p158 N 30 '67 360w

GODDEN, RUMER, ed. Mrs Manders' cook book. See Manders, O. S.

GODSEY, EDWIN. Cabin fever. 46p $3.75; pa $1.85 Univ. of N.C. press
811 67-27157

This collection of poems is grouped in five sections: "poems about art and the artist, about religion, about social issues, poems of a personal nature, and, finally, those employing the metaphor of teaching." (Publisher's note) Some of these poems have previously appeared in such publications as The Antioch Review, The Carleton Miscellany and The Southwest Review.

"This poet, whose accidental death in 1965 cut short a promising literary career, wrote a deceptively simple, declarative poetry which, like a dark corridor suddenly turning into a wider, mirror-lined hall, sends back surprising images. His skillful way of introducing archaic or arcane words, an ironic literary reference, or a sudden switch in imagery—a technique that can degenerate into a mechanical reaction—provides the key to his private world. That his private world is not so different from the public world is revealed in such gently satiric poems as 'Hoppy,' a poem ostensibly about Hopalong Cassidy, but really about something entirely different. Read it and find out. Recommended for all poetry collections." John Demos
Library J 92:3427 O 1 '67 120w

"[Godsey] gets down to what life is about as if it had never occurred to him that he might be creating seascapes. He gives us lines we read again not because we haven't understood them, but because we have." Miller Williams
Sat R 51:33 Mr 9 '68 100w

Reviewed by S. F. Morse

Va Q R 44:507 summer '68 170w

GODWIN, JOHN. This baffling world; picture res: Marion Geisinger. 412p maps $6.95 Hart
001.9 Curiosities 68-14998

The author, "an Australian journalist living in New York, during his world travels gathered the materials for this book. . . . [He] includes accounts of the Hoodoo Sea, that area where aircraft and ships have disappeared mysteriously: Nostradamus; UFOs; firewalkers; the unknown snowman; those who ride bicycles through traffic while blindfolded; and inextricable treasure caches." (Library J) Index.

"Godwin has done an excellent job here in compiling a thoroughly documented collection of some of the most stubborn mysteries of recent history. The reader will find enigmas to please every taste for the occult. . . . [This volume] is a welcome addition to any library. It is very readable, . . . illustrated profusely, and entertaining immensely." H. T. Anderson
Best Sell 28:170 J1 15 '68 200w

"Much of [this material] is old hat and could have been found in various magazines which carry an occasional article on mysterious occurrences, but possibly the subject has never before been given so unpretentious and fresh a treatment. . . . [Godwin] treats his subjects with a basic concern for their inexplicable nature ■ a final worthy answer in itself. From this honest and therefore fresh view emerges an above-average style and a simple organization. Youngsters and middlebrows who haven't heard about these things before will find the book a good diversion." C. D. Lee

Library J 93:2671 J1 '68 200w [YA]

Reviewed by Sergeant Cuff

Sat R 51:34 J1 27 '68 50w

GOEDICKE, PATRICIA. Between oceans; poems. 69p $4.50 Harcourt 811 68-12573

Several of the poems in this volume have previously appeared in such periodicals ■ The Antioch Review, Poetry Northwest, and Wormwood Review.

"The wit, ironic humor, and the stark intensity of some of the best poems make this an outstanding first volume. Sometimes the reader's enjoyment is one of discovering a flash of a familiar poet—Frost, Eliot, or Dickinson—but most of the poems reveal a freshness of perception, a rare strength, and even a macabre strangeness that is Patricia Goedicke's own. Should she find a sustained subject worthy of her talents, she might well emerge as a major poet. This book should be popular in most library collections of modern poetry." Elizabeth Nelson

Library J 93:86 Ja 1 '68 100w

"[Here] is a new poet of real skill and substance; [this] is her first book and it gives us hope for a bright and productive future. Her language is fresh and controlled, with ■ diction that may too often remind ■ of the fifties but with a clean new curve of ear and eye. Her range is wide. . . . Hers is not a poetry of strong mind or venturesous imagination, but rather one of the day and each passing hour."

Va Q R 44:ch summer '68 150w

GOEPPER, ROGER, jt. auth. The Oriental world. See Auboyer, J.

GOFFART, WALTER. The Le Mans forgeries; a chapter from the history of church property in the ninth century. 382p $8 Harvard univ. press

274.4 Le Mans—Church history—Sources
66-18246

"These forgeries include biographies of the bishops of Le Mans to 840, poems about Bishop Aldric (832-57), lives of several saints from the Le Mans region, with 86 spurious and genuine charters incorporated in the episcopal biographies. Against earlier scholars' views, which he discusses . . . [the author proposes] the collection's essential unity of authorship and purpose, and dates the composition largely between 857 and 863. [He contends that] by appeal to Le Mans' history and with documentary support from the charters, the forger's principal aim was to justify the bishopric's claims to church property throughout the diocese, and especially to assert its rights of ownership over the monastery of St. Calais." (Choice) Index of passages. General index.

"This closely reasoned volume offers a detailed analysis of [this] famous set of forgeries. . . . Elaborate appendixes survey the charters and saints' lives of the collection and give the Latin texts for the long quotations used throughout the work. In general, the author seems to have substantiated his major conclusions." C. E. Smith

Am Hist ■ 73:452 D '67 260w

GOFFART, WALTER—Continued

"The book is gracefully written, and outfitted with generous indices and a selective bibliography. Though the most severely technical analyses are reserved for long appendices, the argument is extremely intricate, presupposing substantial knowledge of Carolingian political, legal, and ecclesiastical institutions. Only unusually advanced undergraduates will read it with profit. For graduate students and scholars familiar with the standard studies on this subject, however, Goffart has made a durable contribution."

Choice 4:895 O '67 180w

GOGOL, NIKOLAI. Letters of Nikolai Gogol; sel. and ed. by Carl R. Proffer; tr. by Carl R. Proffer in collaboration with Vera Krivoshein. 247p $8 Univ. of Mich. press

B or 92 Gogol', Nikolai Vasil'evich 67-25343

